At Hanover, Germany, on the 12th of September, 1850, Mr. Frickey was united in marriage to Miss Christina Cordes, the ceremony being performed by Pastor Jacobi, the first Methodist missionary in Germany. Mrs. Frickey's mother was left a widow in early life with five children and had the misfortune to be defrauded of a comfortable estate by unscrupulous administrators. Despite the hardships this entailed upon her and her children, she reared them all to be noble men and women who were a credit to themselves and her and proved useful members of society. On the 30th of August, 1905, Mr. Frickey was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife, who had been his constant companion and helpmate for almost fifty-five years. His own health then began to decline and on the 27th of December, 1907 he sustained a stroke of paralysis that resulted in his death on the 12th of January, 1908. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Frickey numbered seven. William F., who is engaged in the breeding and raising of thoroughbred horses at Fossil, Oregon, is married and have one son, Frank, who is bookkeeper for Ladd & Bush, bankers, and one daughter, Mrs. Minnie Maley of Corvallis, Oregon. Christian, who passed away as result of an accident at Plateau, California, in February, 1906, married Eva Perin, who was a member of a long-lived pioneer family living in the vicinity of Waldo Hills. She died at the birth of their son Royal E. Frickey, who was reared by his grandparents. The lad was educated in the public schools of Salem, following which he pursued a course in electrical engineering at Berkley University, being graduated from that institution in 1905. He took a prominent part in all college affairs and was very popular both with the students and his professors and manifested unusual ability and mechanical skill. Although he is very young he has invented a wrecking machine that has caused him to become recognized as one of the most promising members of his profession. This machine makes it possible to cut away by means of electricity the tangled masses of steel construction with a great saving of time and labor and without entailing any likelihood of serious accidents. In connection with the construction of great furnaces for the smelting of iron by means of electricity in Shasta, California. Royal

Frickey has achieved recognition for his services in useful inventions. After recovering from a serious accident resulting from an explosion during experiments with the new furnaces, he is continuing his constructions and the run of the big electric furnace beginning February 1, 1912, turned out thirty-six tons of pig-iron, the greatest day's run in its history or in the history of iron smelting by electricity in this or any country. The installation of three more furnaces, now proposed, would bring the output up to one hundred and fifty tons a day and cement Shasta's name as "The Pittsburg of the Pacific." His career promises to be a most brilliant one, as he is a close student and indefatigable worker. After leaving college he spent a year as an electrical engineer in Honolulu and he is now employed in the same capacity with the Northern California Power Company, one of the largest enterprises of the kind in the west. The third in order of birth of the Frickey family is Henry, who is now deceased. The next is a daughter, Christina, who married F. Grieder, of Fossil, Oregon. Mary married E. G. Casebere, who for three years was superintendent of the farm at the state asylum, but was engaged in the operation of his ranch near Salem at the time of his death, which occurred in 1892. To them were born three children; of whom Cordes is employed in the National Bank at Portland. Nellie is a kindergarten teacher in the Lucy Webb Hayes National Training School and is greatly interested in missionary work. Emily married Professor Thomas C. Jory of Salem, who for ten years held the chair of mathematics in Willamette University and is a member of one of the old pioneer families of Oregon. Mrs. Jory was educated at Willamette and there she also pursued a musical course and for six years prior to her marriage was a teacher. Their oldest son, Raymond, is a bookkeeper in Bishop's Woolen Mill at Pendleton and Constance and Harold are pursuing college courses at Willamette University.

The youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Christian Frickey is a daughter, Minna, who is a well known missionary and religious worker in the northwest. She was graduated from the Willamette University with the class of 1891, and during the succeeding year taught in Lafayette Seminary. At the expiration of that time she went abroad to perfect her knowledge of German and French, and upon her return a year later became the teacher of these two languages in her alma mater. She retained this position for five years and during that time she also had a class in Bible study. Feeling strongly called to enter the mission field, she resigned her position and went to Chicago, where she spent a year in missionary training and Bible study at Moody Institute. She then returned to the coast and became a teacher in the Deaconess Training School at San Francisco. At the end of her year's teaching there she became an active worker in the mission field, and spent three years in the states of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and Montana. She next went to Tennessee and worked among the American highlanders in the eastern part of that state with Chattanooga as her headquarters. She withdrew from the work there to become Bible teacher in the Lucy Webb Hayes National Training School for Missionaries and Deaconess, and has ever since been connected with this institution. In April, 1909, she obtained leave of absence and went abroad for five months, and during that time she visited every country in Europe with the exception of Spain for purpose of studying conditions and needs of mission work and also made a trip through the Holy Land. Upon her return she resumed her duties at the Lucy Webb Hayes Training School and also took up some field work, giving stereopticon lectures in connection with evangelistic work in Pennsylvania and other states.

Mr. and Mrs. Frickey were active members of the Methodist Episcopal church and reared all of their family in the faith of that denomination. They have all developed into noble men and women, and are useful and helpful members of society, and highly creditable representatives of an honored pioneer family.

L. H. HAZARD is cashier of the First National Bank of Coquille and is doing able and intelligent work in this capacity. He is a practical business man with a talent for making his ability effective and has brought the enterprise with which he is connected to a gratifying degree of success. He has been a resident of Oregon since he was seventeen years of age and was born in Johnson county, Iowa, on the 3d of November, 1867. His parents were Silas H. and Margaret Hazard, the former a native of Louisiana and the latter of Iowa. The father came to Oregon, settling in Empire city in 1873. In the same year he was again married, his second wife being a Miss Watson, a native of Douglas county and a daughter of one of the pioneers of Oregon. In 1876 the second Mrs. Hazard passed away and the father later wedded Miss Fannie McKnight, also a native of Oregon and the daughter of an early settler. She is still living in Marshfield, Oregon. The subject of this sketch was the only child born to his father's first union. By his second marriage Silas H. Hazard had two children, both of whom died in infancy. He was a prominent attorney at law for some years, practicing in all the courts of the state of Oregon, and he followed his profession until his death, which occurred in July, 1901.

L. H. Hazard received his education in Madison county, Iowa, and in 1885 came to Oregon, settling in Empire city, where he accepted a position as clerk for the Southern Oregon Company. He was active in this capacity for several years, resigning in order to become connected with the commissary department of the United States government while instituting harbor improvements in this section of Oregon. For three years he was active in this work and then went to Marshfield, Oregon, where he obtained a position as bookkeeper in the store of Henry Senstaeken. After three years he was appointed deputy county clerk and at the end of a similar period of time was elected county clerk, serving for two terms. His banking career began at the end of that time, when he entered the First National Bank of Coquille as cashier, in which capacity he has served since that time. The bank was organized on the 5th of August, 1903, to succeed the Coquille Valley Bank. The officers are: A. J. Sherwood, president; R. E. Shine, vice president; L. H. Hazard, cashier; and O. C. Sanford, assistant cashier. The bank was organized with a capital stock of twenty-five thousand dollars, which in 1910 was increased to fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. Hazard was united in marriage to Miss Ellen Mabel Hacker, a native of Coos county and a daughter of Isaiah and Addie G. Hacker, natives of Maine, who came to Oregon in the late '60s. They had two children: the wife of our subject; and one child who died in infancy. The parents are still living and make their home in Coos county. To Mr. and Mrs. Hazard have been born three children: Austin H., who was born in June, 1897, and who is now attending a military academy at San Rafael, California; Alice M., who was born May 17, 1902, and is attending school; and Adrienne, born April 20, 1905. The family affiliate with the Episcopal church and they have many friends in Coquille.

Mr. Hazard is interested in the future of the city in which he resides and is always eager to invest in local enterprises. He is an officer and director in the Bandon Water Company and vice president of the Coquille Lumber Company. He has invested extensively in city property and has also real estate near Empire city, on Coos bay. He owns his own home in Coquille and has made it a pleasant meeting place for his many friends. He gives his allegiance to the democratic party but never seeks public office, preferring to concentrate his attention upon the affairs under his charge. He is well known in the Masonic order, holding membership in the lodge, and has been through all the chairs of that organization and is holding the office of treasurer at the present time. He is a successful banker because he has had personal experience in the various aspects of that occupation and because he is conservative and systematic as a financier. He is a valued citizen of Coos county by reason of his industry, practical methods and intelligent skill, which have made him personally successful and which have been factors in the growth of the various important business enterprises with which he is connected.

WILLIAM GORDON EVANS, who has been a resident of Waconda since his retirement from his farm, seven miles southwest of Gervais, was born in Tennessee, January 21, 1833. He is a son of William and Rebecca (Keaton) Evans, the former a native of Tennessee, and the latter, whose death occurred when William G. Evans was a young boy, a native of Virginia. Shortly after the mother's death the family removed to Kentucky and in 1843 they went to Arkansas, where the father died at the age of sixty years, leaving the eight children to manage the farm.

When twenty-four years old William G. Evans left home to come to California and began life on his own account. He made the trip across the plains, helping to drive a five hundred head herd of cattle and arrived in California in 1857. Until 1865 he accepted various kinds of employment, mainly farming and mining, but in that year he settled near Brooks and for four years worked on farms.

Mr. Evans was married to Letitia Savage on November 21, 1870. Mrs. Evans was born November 3, 1852, and is a daughter of John and Rhoda (Presley) Savage. The former, although a native of Ohio, born September 16, 1826, resided in Michigan until he crossed the plains and came to Oregon in 1846. In 1849 he went to California for one year. Upon his return to Oregon, in 1850, he was married to Rhoda Presley and a year later took up a donation land claim of six hundred and forty acres, holding part of it for his younger brother. After farming this for a time he went to Idaho and worked in the mines for three years. He also served in the Indian war on the Pacific coast and his wife still draws a pension from the government. He died in 1908, at the age of eighty-two, at his home near Salem. He had accumulated considerable property and left an estate valued at seventy-five thousand dollars, which did not include all the property he had given to his children. Mr. and Mrs. Savage were the parents of the following children: Morgan L., deceased; Mrs. Evans; Mrs. Eliza Keppinger, who is a resident of Gervais; George O., who resides in Salem, Oregon; Hannah, deceased; Mrs. Ella Byrne, who is the wife of Prince Byrne, of Salem; Mrs. Alice Martin, deceased, who was the mother of four children and resided at Salem; and Mrs. Etta Gleason, residing in Gervais, Oregon, who is the wife of Louis P. Gleason. Mrs. Evans had kept house for her father since her mother's death, in 1865, having reared her younger sisters and brothers, and after her marriage she continued living there for one year, but at that time she and Mr. Evans settled on the farm of three hundred and six acres on French prairie, near Wacounda, which has since been their home, although at the present time it is divided among four of their children, with the exception of eighty acres, upon which Mr. Evans lives retired.

Mr. and Mrs. Evans have become the parents of seven children. H. Clifton, the eldest, is an agriculturist and resides in Lostine, Oregon. Mrs. Nellie Dodge died February 22, 1901. She is survived by one daughter, Grace Dodge, born July 5, 1899, whom Mr. and Mrs. Evans are rearing. Mrs. Teresa Fruit is the wife of James Fruit, of Brooks, Oregon. Louis Franklin is a resident of Lostine, Oregon. Mrs. Minnie Nusom died April 19, 1903. Lena died August 9, 1908. John C. has been a physician at the State Asylum at Salem for the past five years.

In politics Mr. Evans is an adherent of the progressive republican party, and in religious faith he is an interested member of the Evangelical church. He has always been an enthusiastic supporter of any measure which tends to promote the welfare of his community and has frequently accepted offices in which he could further his plans for general improvement, among these offices being justice of the peace, road supervisor and clerk of schools. He is looked upon as one of the representatives of the social and political circles of his district and has justly won that distinction by his energetic and persistent efforts in aiding whatever tends to aid development.

JOSEPH D. REGNER, who is living retired in Gresham, is one of the highly esteemed pioneer settlers of Multnomah county, where he has resided for over thirty-five years. He was born in the district of Three Rivers, Canada, on July 15, 1837, and is a son of Joseph and Mary (Garrett) Regner, likewise natives of Canada. The families are both of German origin, however, the grandparents in both lines having been born in the Rhine Province, Germany. The father who was a contractor and builder passed away at the old home in Canada at the age of seventy-eight years, but the mother was only forty-five at the time of her death. Joseph Regner was one of three children, born to his parents, and Mrs. Regner was the youngest member of a family of five, the others being Peter, David, Baptiste and Sarah, all of whom are deceased. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Regner numbered four, our subject being the youngest. In order of birth the others are Mary, Sophie and Philomine, all of whom are living in Canada.

The boyhood and youth of Joseph D. Regner contained little of the joy and none of the advantages that distinguish the early years of the average individual. Born in a family of limited circumstances he received but meager schooling, the greater part of his education having been self-acquired after attaining his maturity. At the age of seven years he was apprenticed to a shoemaker, being continuously employed at this trade until he was thirteen, when he left home of his own accord and started out to make his own way in the world. He worked his way to the United States, settling in Vermont, and as he was entirely unfamiliar with the language and was among strangers in order to provide himself with the necessities of life he contracted to give his services to a harness maker until he was twenty-one. After the expiration of his period of service he continued to follow this trade in Vermont until 1870, with the exception of three years when he was in the army. He enlisted as regimental bugler in the Eleventh Vermont Volunteer Infantry and served under both General Grant and General Sheridan. In 1870 with his wife and family he removed to Iowa, where he bought a farm and engaged in agricultural pursuits for six years. At the end of that time he disposed of his property and again started westward, Oregon being his destination on this occasion. They made the journey to San Francisco by rail, taking the boat from there to Portland, whence they came directly to Gresham. Upon his arrival in Multnomah county, Mr. Regner filed on one hundred and sixty acres of land, a soldier's claim, devoting his entire time and attention to its cultivation with constantly increasing success until 1902. In the latter year he disposed of his ranch and coming into Gresham bought some land and erected his present residence; here he also engaged in the boot and shoe business until his retirement in 1909. Mr. Regner has acquired quite extensive property interests since coming here, and has some valuable holdings in both the residence and business portions of the town.

In Montpelier, Vermont, on the 29th of December, 1858, Mr. Regner was united in marriage to Miss Julia Louizell, who was born in St. Marys, province of Ontario, Canada, in May, 1839. She is a daughter of Gregorie and Julia (Vegent) Louizell, who were likewise natives of Canada, whence they migrated to Vermont, settling in Montpelier, where Mr. and Mrs. Regner met and were subsequently married. Her parents passed the remainder of their lives in Vermont where the father engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death. Mr. and Mrs. Regner have been the parents of five children, as follows: Frederick, who is deceased; Hattie, the widow of Edwin Cotrell of San Francisco, California, by whom she had one child, Laura; Arthur, who is engaged in contracting and building in Gresham; Frank, who is also deceased; and Mary, who died in infancy. The children were all given the advantages of a good common-school education.

Mr. Regner has never identified himself with any religious denomination, but he is a man of high ideals regarding the conduct of our daily lives and has adopted for his own guiding principle the Golden Rule, the philosophy of which he has always striven to follow. His political allegiance he gives to the republican party, but although he takes an active interest in all matters pertaining to the community welfare he has never participated in local governmental affairs. He is a man of genial, kindly nature, broad in his views and charitable in his judgments, who recognizes the strong bond of human brotherhood. Such qualities always attract the finest natures and Mr. Regner has many friends, whose intense loyalty has been won and retained through the admirable traits of character he has manifested during the long period of his residence in the county.

PETER LOGGIE is one of the enterprising business men of North Bend, Oregon, where he is engaged in the general real-estate business. He was born in New Brunswick, Canada, on June 9, 1847, and is a son of Alexander and Georgina Loggie, both of whom were of Scotch descent and natives of New Brunswick. The father followed farming and fishing for a livelihood and in his native country he continued to live until the time of his death, which occurred in 1900. The mother died in 1897. They were the parents of seven children, six of whom are living. Peter is the subject of this review. Andrew, who is engaged in the general wholesale and retail merchandising business and is also interested as owner of a fish cannery and sawmill, resides in New Brunswick, Canada. George, who is a member of the firm of Watcom Falls Mill Company, maintains his home in Bellingham, Washington. Robert is the next in order of birth. James is also a member of the firm of Watcom Falls Mill Company and resides in Bellingham, Washington. Frank, who completes the family, is a partner in the firm of A. & R. Loggie.

Peter Loggie was reared in his parents' home and received his early education in the public schools of New Brunswick and later was graduated from one of the colleges at New Brunswick. In early life he was engaged in the sawmill business, operating at the same time a sash and door factory. He later removed to Boston, Massachusetts, where he was employed as a carpenter and where he continued for some time. In 1890 he removed to Seattle, Washington, and was there engaged in the contracting business for one year after which he came to Coos county where he built the Coos Bay life saving station for the government and was afterward engaged in various occupations in the Coos Bay district. In 1904 he took up work with the Simpson Lumber Company and built the ship Mareoni for Mr. Simpson. He was later commissioned by the Simpson Lumber Company to travel throughout the state to obtain signatures to a petition for the deep water ways improvement of Coos Bay. Mr. Loggie was extraordinarily successful in obtaining the best of indorsement for the success of the petition and in 1908 went to Washington to have a special bill put through congress to provide for a government dredge to be sent to Coos Bay to dredge out the harbor. In this he was entirely successful and the dredge Oregon is now at work in Coos Bay deepening the channel. Too much credit cannot be given to Mr. Loggie for the completion of this work both before the people of the state of Oregon and also in getting his bill through the various committees in congress and finally through congress, so that it could become a law. In the course of his duties he attended the various deep water congress assemblies in various parts of the United States, among them being the congress at Boise, Idaho, and at Kansas City, Missouri. During that period Hon. George E. Chamberlain was the governor of Oregon and Mr. Loggie received from Mr. Chamberlain eight different appointments, each of which were directly related to his work as an agent for the promotion of deep water ways at Coos Bay. He was a member of the Mississippi Commercial Congress during this time and was also president of the North Bend

PETER LOGGIE

Chamber of Commerce. In 1909 he discontinued his services with the Simpson Lumber Company and engaged in the real-estate business in North Bend and has since continued to give his attention to that work. He is also a dealer in all kinds of building material. He is the owner of a number of valuable properties at North Bend and at Bandon and has property at Ten Mile Lake in Coos county.

Mr. Loggie was united in marriage in 1871 to Miss Elizabeth T. Williston, a native of New Brunswick, and they are the parents of five children. Annie is the wife of Hilary Sheets, a resident of New York. She is a college graduate and taught school until the time of her marriage. Stymest is the deceased wife of Charles Bradway of Monson, Massachusetts. Lina D. is employed as a stenographer in Boston, Massachusetts. Allison married Arthur Elsworth Stevens, a resident of Somerville, Massachusetts. George W., the youngest of the family, is married and engaged in business in Boston. Mr. Loggie is affiliated with the republican party and has served on the city council of North Bend and was president of that body during his last term. He is a member of the Masonic lodge, being a Royal Arch Mason, of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of Pythias. Peter Loggie is one of the well known, enterprising men of North Bend and a man who is held in high esteem by the citizens of his county and state.

THOMAS CONDON. There was a limestone quarry near the home of Mr. Condon's childhood that must have made a deep impression upon his thoughtful mind and shed the affectionate glamor of early association over his study of the rocks, for his interest in geology began with his childhood.

Fortunately for him his family left the old home in Southern Ireland and crossing the Atlantic made their home in the city of New York. Here we find the future scientist an active wide-awake boy, full of life and with a strong appetite for knowledge. Some of his leisure hours were utilized in exploring the old Revolutionary fortifications near the city. And occasionally he spent a half holiday hunting rabbits in the wilds of what is now Central Park. A few years ago, in speaking of those days of his boyhood, he referred to his study of algebra and then said: "But when I took up geometry it lifted me to the clouds. I drank it in as a mental food." It seemed to be the pure, beautiful logic, the perfect chain of reasoning, that appealed to his mind.

At about eighteen years of age, he was working, studying, and teaching in Camillus, Skaneateles, and other places in central New York, where he finally entered the Theological Seminary at Auburn while teaching in the evening school at Auburn State's Prison.

But he had heard of the Whitman Mission in the Far West and had made up his mind to go as a home missionary to the Oregon country, and in 1852, with his young bride, he sailed in a clipper ship around Cape Horn for San Francisco. After a long and eventful voyage they found themselves in the newly settled and unexplored Oregon. Trappers had long known it as a land of furs; miners had known it as a land of gold; the early pioneer had found it a country with rich and fertile soil; but its scientific resources were still undiscovered. The questions that had dawned dimly upon his mind as he played by the stone quarry of his childhood, the questions that were kindled into life as he studied the fossils of central New York, the questions of the how and wherefore of creation must have come to him with new force as he looked out upon the fertile valleys, grand mountains, and noble rivers of his new home.

But the activity of these first years left but little time for scientific research; for new homes must be built, land cleared, crops planted, schools started, churches organized, and hostile Indians subdued, and there were but few of these labors of pioneer life in which he did not take an active part.

After ten years of life in western Oregon Mr. Condon, wishing for a more needy field, moved his family to The Dalles, then the head of navigation on the Columbia, the gateway through which all the rough, reckless mining population must pass on their way to the newly discovered gold fields of eastern Oregon. Here, too, was an army post from which men and supplies were sent to all parts of the Northwest.

An army officer returning from an expedition against hostile Indians brought Mr. Condon his first eastern Oregon fossils from the Crooked river country. These fossils aroused the keen interest of the student of nature and in 1862 or '63 he obtained permission to accompany a party of cavalry carrying supplies to Harney valley. They returned by way of old Camp Watson, on the John Day river, and here Mr. Condon found his first fossils in the now famous John Day valley.

These glimpses of this fossil field only served to make him eager for more, and as soon as the Indians had been subdued and it was safe to venture among those hills and ravines without an army escort, Mr. Condon spent his vacations exploring in the John Day country. On one of these trips he found and named Turtle Cove, which has since proved to be one of the richest fossil beds in the valley. He employed young men to spend their summers collecting the fossils exposed by the wear of winter storms. He made friends with the rough teamsters who drove the great government freight wagons from Fort Dalles to the army posts in the wilderness. As these teamsters returned with empty wagons they often brought a few rocks or a fine box of fossils for their new friend at The Dalles. In a few years Mr. Condon found in his possession a large quantity of valuable material that must be classified and described. But he was without scientific books, was thousands of miles from the great libraries and museums of the east, and far from other scientists with whom to confer.

Fortunately at this time the United States Government was making its famous geological survey of the fortieth parallel, embracing a strip of land one hundred miles in width, and connecting the geology of the great plains east of the Rocky mountains with that of California and the Pacific coast. One evening as this great work was nearing completion, Mr. Condon was delighted to learn that Clarence King, the leader of the survey, had reached The Dalles, and he lost no time before meeting this distinguished geologist. Mr. King was deeply interested in the pioneer discoverer's account of Oregon geology and the next day found him in the Condon home studying the unique collection.

Not later than the spring of 1867 Mr. Blake, an eastern geologist, visited the cabinet at The Dalles, and on his return voyage carried with him a few specimens of fossil leaves originally from Bridge creek in the John Day valley. These were perhaps the first Oregon specimens to find their way to the Atlantic coast. They soon fell into the hands of Dr. Newberry of Columbia College, New York, who, being a specialist in fossil botany, longed earnestly for more. After talking with Clarence King in Washington, and learning from him more of the Oregon geologist and his country, Dr. Newberry wrote Mr. Condon in 1869 and received in response a box of fossils of which he writes: "I received your two letters with great pleasure. Since then the box has safely come to hand and that has given me still greater satisfaction, for I found it full of new and beautiful things which fully justified the high anticipation I had formed judging from your letters and the specimens brought by Mr. Blake."

In the autumn of 1870 Arnold Hague, also connected with the geological survey of the fortieth parallel, spent a month in Oregon, part of the time being at The Dalles in discussion over the geological problems of the Columbia river region. That this visit was a source of mutual pleasure is shown by a subsequent letter in which Mr. Hague refers to his "month in Oregon in 1870 as one of the pleasant memories of the past."

But a new era was dawning for "the Oregon country." The first transeontinental railroad had touched the Pacific and with it came many large parties of cultured tourists who, wishing to look upon the grand scenery of the Columbia, found themselves obliged to spend the night in The Dalles. In this way it often happened that late in the afternoon a party of fifteen or twenty ladies and gentlemen would gather at the home of the Oregon geologist and spend a pleasant hour studying the life of past ages.

In 1870 Mr. Condon shipped his first boxes of specimens to the Smithsonian Institute at Washington, and from there they were sent to Dr. Leidy of Philadelphia Academy of Sciences for expert examination. The National Museum was glad to receive these new fossils from the Pacific coast and promised its official assistance in every way possible.

A few months later of this same year Professor Marsh of Yale College wrote from San Francisco as follows: "I have heard for several years a great deal of the good work you are doing in geology and of the interesting collection of vertebrate fossils you have made, and I intended during my present visit to the Pacific coast to come to Oregon and make your acquaintance personally and examine your fossil treasures which my friends, Professor George Davidson, Clarence King, Mr. Raymond, and others had often wished me to see." And a little later Professor Marsh writes urging that all fossils of extinct mammals be sent to Yale to be used by him in a work on paleontology gotten out by the United States Government in connection with the survey of the fortieth parallel.

During these years many Oregon fossils found their way to the educational centers of the east. If they were fossil leaves they were sent to Dr. Newberry of Columbia College; if shells, to Dr. Dall of the American Museum of Natural History; if fossil mammals, to the Smithsonian, or to Marsh of Yale or Cope of Philadelphia. A few of these were sold, some of them were sent in exchange for eastern fossils, but most of them were simply lent in order that they might be classified and described by scientific experts.

In May, 1871, Mr. Condon published in the Overland Monthly his paper on "The Rocks of the John Day Valley." And in November of that year his article entitled "The Willamette Sound" appeared in the same magazine. The latter was perhaps his favorite of all his geological writings. He felt that "The Rocks of the John Day Valley" might need revising after a more thorough exploration but that "The Willamette Sound" would endure. Both of these papers are given in "The Two Islands," published in 1902.

Mr. Diller of the United States Geological Survey has virtually accepted "The Willamette Sound" and incorporated its substance in his report of the geology of northwestern Oregon, his only criticism being the suggestion that the waters of the sound were probably even higher than noted in the original publication. These two papers fairly represent Mr. Condon's strength as a constructive geological worker. They indicate his ability to begin at ocean level and by means of mountain upheavals, marine and like sediments, fossil leaves and bones, and volcanic outflows, to reconstruct and make wonderfully vivid the geological part of a new country.

From this time on, the sense of lonely isolation that had so hampered him in his work, gave place to the most cordial intercourse between the Oregon pioneer and distinguished scientists of the United States and Canada. In 1871 Mr. Condon had the pleasure of showing Professor Marsh and a large party from Yale College through this new fossil field, and a little later Professor LeConte of the University of California was introduced into the same John Day valley. The latest scientific publications began to find their way into Mr. Condon's library in exchange for information and material freely given to eastern workers. The stimulus of all this stirring intercourse by exchange, correspondence, or personal conversation with some of the most learned men of the age, was a great boon. Life in the strength of his manhood was full of buoyancy and joy, a grand opportunity for usefulness.

It gave Mr. Condon real pleasure to sit down beside a rough block of sandstone with only the corner of one glistening tooth in sight, to pick and chip and chisel until another tooth and part of the jaw were seen, to continue with careful skill until the beautiful agatized molars were laid bare, to work patiently on until there stood before him, no longer the shapeless mass of stone, but a fine fossil head to add its testimony to the record of the past. But it gave him greater pleasure still, to work with rough, unpolished human character and discover the glint of gold hidden under the rough exterior. The book of nature was indeed fascinating but did not appeal to him as did the work with men. He had the artist's eye for seeing the beautiful in character and the enthusiasm of a sculptor for shaping rough, faulty human nature until its beauty reflected the divine.

To many minds, these two lines of interest, the development of character and the study of nature, would seem incongruous, but to him they were both God's truth, the one the preparation, the other the culmination of God's work. And yet strange and unusual as is this combination of geologist and minister, it seemed exactly what was needed to equip one for usefulness thirty or forty years ago. For these were years of great stir in the scientific world.

The author of "The Origin of Species" and "The Descent of Man" had given his theory of evolution to the world. The grand truths developed by that galaxy of brilliant English writers, Spencer, Huxley, Tyndall, and others, had been seized by materialists who were calling upon all thinkers to discard the Bible as out of date because not in harmony with scientific thought. Christian ministers were not scientists and the principles of "Higher Criticism," if thought of at all, were considered dangerous heresies against which to warn their people. To Mr. Condon the theory of evolution presented to the human mind a wider conception of God than the world had ever known. It involved a plan of unthinkable grandeur: beginning with the smallest, simplest things, gradually unfolding into more complex life, often interrupted by some great upturning of nature, but never losing the continuity of purpose, the steady progress toward the culminating glory of all: the spiritual life of man.

To have all this new wealth of spiritual vision appropriated by materialists was a source of deepest sorrow. The storm, starting on the intellectual heights of Europe, was slowly traveling westward. A little later magazines were full of the subject and materialism was creeping into college life with the claim that evolution was antagonistic to religion. The young men who studied science found few leaders so endowed as to interpret the beautiful adaptation of the doctrine of evolution to the spiritual life.

Mr. Condon saw that the old ramparts erected by theologians were no longer a safe retreat; that the church must be defended even by science itself and he longed to help unfurl the Christian banner over this newly discovered realm of truth. He felt his most effective work could be done with his cabinet in shaping the immature minds of Oregon's sons and daughters. This, with the growing educational needs of his family, finally led him in 1873 to take his place with the faculty of Pacific University at Forest Grove and later in 1876 to accept the chair of Geology and Natural History in the State University.

In 1876, shortly after reaching Eugene, Mr. Condon, in company with a son of ex-Governor Whiteaker, made a trip to the Silver Lake country in southeastern Oregon. Here they gathered a fine collection of beautifully preserved fossil bird bones, which were sent east to be described but seemed too rare and valuable to be returned, for, in spite of many efforts to recover them they were finally lost to the rightful owner. Fortunately, they had been previously examined and described by Dr. Shufeldt, an expert in the study of fossil birds, and to him we are indebted for much interesting knowledge of the ancient life of the region. This same locality has also yielded some of the finest specimens of fossil mammals in the state.

By this time Oregon had passed out of its pioneer stage and was looking to a broader expansion of statehood, with all its hidden possibilities of industrial development. Men were asking, "Have we coal in Oregon?" "How shall we utilize our gold-bearing black sands?" "Have we the right geological formation for artesian water?" "Have we cement rock, copper, or limestone?" Letters on all of these and many other problems kept coming to Mr. Condon from near and from far. These questions and the investigation necessary for their answers resulted in his acquiring an extensive knowledge of the industrial problems of the state. If any one wished to bore for artesian water his advice was asked. The discoverer of a fresh prospect for coal, copper, asbestos or marble, must send him a sample specimen and ask his opinion of its value, and he was always ready with a word of advice, a bit of encouragement or a needed caution.

All these years he had been glad to share his rapidly increasing knowledge with the people of the northwest. The old river steamers and slow moving trains of early Oregon often carried him to fill lecture engagements, and he was usually cumbered with many heavy packages of specimens and choice fossils to illustrate his subject. Sometimes the lecture would be before a cultured Portland audience; sometimes it was a course of lectures for some growing young college or perhaps a talk to the farmers at the State Fair upon the formation and composition of soil. But as the years passed, most of his time and strength were given to his teaching at the University, while his summer vacations were spent with his family at his Nye Brook Cottage by the Sea.

Here his life was almost unique, but it again brought him into the most friendly relations with many classes of people from all parts of the northwest. Sometimes there were formal lectures before a summer school, but more often there was an informal announcement that "Professor Condon would lecture on the beach," perhaps near Jump-off Joe. And here his audience would gather around him in the shelter of the bluff or headland, some standing, some sitting on the rocks, others perched upon the piles of weather-bleached driftwood, while the children sat "Turk fashion" upon the dry, glistening sand. And he, with his tall alpine stalk in his hand, his broad hat and loose raglan coat made a picturesque figure standing in their midst. Perhaps he talked of the three beaches, the one upon which they stood and the two old geological beaches so plainly visible in the ocean bluff behind them. The banker, the college president, the physician from a distant part of the state, the young city clerk, the carpenter, the teacher of the country school, the farmer and his family taking an outing by the sea, even the high-school boy, and the children, all listened with interest. And when the talk was over and all their questions had been answered, the motley gathering strolled leisurely away. But the rolling breakers at their feet, the hurrying sand and the blue summer sky, all had a new significance as they pondered on the mystery of creation.

Or perhaps a geological picnic was planned up the beach to Otter Rocks. After a brisk ride of a few miles over the hills and along the beach, Mr. Condon's carriage would stop, the other vehicles would group themselves around near by, and, standing in his conveyance, he would give a short talk on the geological formation of the particular cove or headland with its base of old sandstone full of fossil shells. Then the company would move on, and after a few more miles of delightful beach ride upon the hard sand near the breakers, they would leave their carriages, gather their picks, hammers, and chisels and spend an hour chipping fossils from the bluff or from the large boulders at its base. The next stop would be to lunch near Otter Rocks and explore the unique Devil's Calderon or Punchbowl and the interesting beach beyond.

But the most common picture, the one that must make the Condon Cottage at Nye Beach an almost sacred spot for some, was the party strolling homeward from a morning on the beach—especially at low tide. They always stopped beside his cottage door to show their treasures to Mr. Condon. There were baskets, tin pails, and all sorts of packages filled with curios gathered on the morning walk: one had a rare shell-fish, another an unusual fossil, some had sea moss, others only a group of bright pebbles, while a few proudly exhibited their water agates. All had their eager question and his kindly, helpful interest never failed; for if some child but left his cottage door with eyes large and shining with a new joy because it had caught a glimpse of the beauty of knowledge, he was content. And so his summers passed.

Meanwhile he had been carrying on his original research work by taking trips to the southwestern part of the state and was slowly filling out his geological map of Oregon.

Mr. Condon's love for knowledge was not confined to natural science, for his interests were broad as the universe. To him, human history began with the men of preglacial age, and he sought eagerly for every ray of light that archaeological research could throw upon the old Cave Dwellers of prehistoric times. He studied all primitive peoples, their religion, industries, and social development, and endeavored to trace their relationship to common ancestry. There were but few obscure nations of the world in which he was not deeply interested; he knew their past history, their present political condition and struggles for liberty. He prized the history of our Aryan ancestors and treasured their old Vedic hymns as among the first bright glimpses of the human soul in reaching out for its Creator. The religion, art, and literature of the Egyptians, Arabians, Persians and Greeks were to him a source of great pleasure. He followed the lives of noted statesmen and was most enthusiastic in his admiration for the world's true heroes. All great religious movements, including the higher criticism and the relation of science to religion were matters of absorbing interest. And yet there were but few who knew and loved Oregon's trees, shrubs, and wild flowers so well as he.

In 1902, after passing his eightieth birthday, Mr. Condon published his "The Two Islands," a popular work on the geology of Oregon, which, aside from its scientific value, will be prized for its clearness and simplicity of style and the subtle charm of his own personality as constantly revealed in its pages. It was not written for technical scientists but for the larger circle of readers who love to catch such glimpses of the progress of creation. No, Mr. Condon was not a specialist, either by nature, inclination or education. And it was well for the early development of Oregon that he was a true pioneer with a large appetite for all knowledge, a keen pleasure in imparting that knowledge to others, and a broad, sympathetic outlook into the needs of the northwest. If he had been a specialist he might have received more technical credit in the scientific world, for he discovered many new fossils and named but few. But what is the naming of a few fossils more or less, when compared with the grandeur of such a broad sweep of knowledge, permeated by such a beautiful spirit of helpfulness?

The pioneer work in this new and unexplored state, so remote from the great centers of learning, required just his type of mind; just his habit of first sketching in the broad outlines and then filling in the details with all their picturesque beauty. For as the artist works, he worked. A colleague who wrought by his side has said of him, that instead of beginning with the minute details and progressing toward the large facts of life, he always began with the broad outlines, the great principles of any subject, and worked down to its details.

After this active, eager life had passed and failing health gave him ample time for retrospective meditation, he realized that he had lived through a grand period of pioneer history and remarked, as he looked forward into the future in store for the rising generation, "I do not know that I would exchange the rich chapters of my own life for all the future opportunities of these young men."

For he was the pioneer geologist who, by his own original research, caught the first glimpse of Oregon's oldest land as it rose from the ocean bed; he saw the seashells upon her oldest beaches; watched the development of her grand forests; saw her first strange mammals feeding upon her old lake shores; he listened in imagination to the cannonading of her first volcanoes and traced the showers of ashes and great floods of lava. He followed the creation of Oregon step by step all through her long geological history and then entered with enthusiasm into the industrial and educational development of her present life.

But above all, infinitely above all, he prized and labored for the noble character of her sons and daughters. Is it any wonder that his heart was full of gratitude to God for having guided him into such a rich heritage of life?

JOHN BROWN, who has but recently become a resident of Gresham, was for twenty-one years actively identified with the commercial interests of Rockwood, Oregon, and was one of the prominent factors in the up-building and development of that town. He is a native of the province of Ontario, Canada, his birth having occurred on the 19th of May, 1867, and is a son of George and Mary (Mitchell) Brown. The father was a native of Scotland and the eldest of six children born to his parents. In order of birth they are as follows: George, William, John, Margaret, Alexander and Alison. The mother, who was born and reared in Canada, was of Scotch parentage and a member of a family of eight children, of whom George, who has five children, is now a resident of Washington. Charles, of Ontario, Canada, is likewise the father of five children. Robert, also of Ontario, has three children. John, a resident of Tacoma, has also three children. Mary and Annie are both deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Brown were married in Canada on the 1st of August, 1866, and to them were born nine children, of whom our subject is the eldest. Alison, who is the eldest daughter, is the widow of George Prettyman of Portland, by whom she had four children, Merrill, Bernice, Bessie and Maggie. James A., who lives in Kernville, Oregon, has five children. Mary, Lucy, Garland, David and James. David, who is a resident of Heppner, Oregon, has four children. George II., who is the next in order of birth is unmarried and makes his home in Portland. The father engaged in agricultural pursuits in Canada until 1886, when together with his wife and family he crossed the border into the United States, first locating in Walla Walla, Washington. They remained there but a brief period and then went to Oregon and here the father filed on a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres in the vicinity of Heppner. He energetically applied himself to the cultivation of his land until his death in 1893. The mother survived him for nearly two decades, her death occurring on the 2d of September, 1911.

John Brown was reared and educated in his native province, and at the age of twelve years he became self-supporting. When he first began earning his living he was employed by the government in the capacity of mail carrier, continuing to discharge the duties of this position for four years. At the expiration of that time he returned to the home farm, in the operation of which he assisted his father until he was eighteen. In 1886, he accompanied his people on their removal to the United States and subsequently purchased a portion of a tract of land in the vicinity of his father's claim and preempted one hundred and sixty acres. Later he disposed of this and removed to Washington, locating near Walla Walla, where he engaged in farming. From there he went to Medical Lake, that state, and turned his attention to contracting and building for about eighteen years. His next removal was to Rockwood, Oregon, where he engaged in the insurance business and later established a general mercantile store. He met there with unusual success in the development of his various undertakings. He disposed of his store at the end of six years, but continued in the insurance business until he removed to Gresham. Mr. Brown was one of the very early pioneers of Rockwood, where he erected the first residence in 1893. During the long period of his residence in this section of the state he has acquired some valuable property and is the owner of one hundred and thirty-five acres of fine timber land. He has erected a sawmill on this land and is engaged in clearing it and upon the completion of this operation will own one of the finest tracts of land in the grain belt. In addition to this he has two valuable lots in Astoria, and has just completed the most expensive residence in Gresham, which is thoroughly modern in all its appointments, and is located on Main street near the Mount Hood station.

For his wife Mr. Brown chose Miss Minnie A. Smith and to them have been born five children, as follows: Miriam, who was born in 1895, now attending high school; J. Ross, whose birth occurred in 1897, also going to high school; Frank II., whose natal year was 1898, attending grammar school; Walter R., who was born in August, 1900; and Charles E., whose birth occurred in March, 1903.

The family manifest their religious belief through their affiliation with the Presbyterian church, and fraternally Mr. Brown is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is now district deputy of this organization with which he has been connected for twenty-three years. He is also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and while living in Rockwood he organized the first fraternal society established there, which was the Maccabees. Mr. Brown is a very progressive and enterprising man and always takes an active interest in all municipal affairs, giving his support to the republican party, but has never been an office seeker. He has high standards of citizenship and the duties involved therewith and always gives his indorsement and cooperation to every movement which he deems at all likely to promote the general welfare of the community.

WILLIAM DEWAR is the owner of Bone island, comprising one hundred and fifty-seven acres about a mile south of Gardiner, Oregon, and thereon is engaged in raising, beside buying and selling horses and cattle for the market. He was born in Middlesex county, Ontario, October 23, 1846, a son of Duncan and Ann (Webb) Dewar. The father was born in Scotland, August 12, 1819, and died August 3, 1892, while the mother, a native of Genesee valley, New York, was born September 21, 1815, and died January 3, 1895. The father on leaving the land of hills and heather went to Canada in company with his parents, being then about ten years of age. He became a pioneer settler of Middlesex county, as did his wife, who was four or five years old when her parents removed from the Empire state to Canada. Throughout the period of his manhood Duncan Dewar followed the occupation of farming. In 1860 he removed to Wisconsin with his family of ten children, five sons and five daughters.

In Wisconsin William Dewar, who had begun his education in the schools of his native county, continued his studies in the public schools of Lawrence. In early manhood he engaged in farming in Minnesota and in logging in Oregon. He removed from Wisconsin to the former state in 1868 and there resided for about seven years. In 1875 he went to California where he carried on agricultural pursuits for a year and then removed to Oregon, settling on Scofield creek about twelve miles south of Gardiner. There he purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres from John McIsaac and engaged in raising stock and general farming for about twenty-two years, when he disposed of the property and became the owner of Bone island. He thus acquired one hundred and fifty-seven acres a mile south of Gardiner. Here he farms to some extent, having about one hundred acres which is not only arable but also very fertile. In addition to cultivating his land he raises horses and cattle and also buys and sells live stock, his interests along that line proving profitable. While often requested to accept county offices he has always refused to become a candidate, preferring to devote all of his time to his business pursuits which, carefully and intelligently directed, have won for him a place among the substantial residents of his county.

On the 14th of November, 1866, Mr. Dewar was united in marriage at Westfield, Wisconsin, to Miss Lucyna S. Peck, who was born September 1, 1849, on Howe island, one of the Thousand islands of Canada. Her parents were Alexander H. and Laura (Cooper) Peck. The Pecks were an old New England family, the first ancestors probably coming to America on the Mayflower or about that time. Alexander H. Peck was born in Jefferson county, New York, and his wife was a native of Canada, born in the vicinity of Kingston. They were married July 8, 1847, and after living for two or three years in Canada removed to Jefferson county, New York, where they remained for about two years, and then took up their abode near Fond du Lac, Wisconsin. Two more years passed and they then removed to Marquette county, Wisconsin, where the mother died, November 28, 1862. The following year the father married Melissa Brown, and there were ten children born by that marriage. Four children were born of the first marriage of whom Mrs. Dewar was the eldest. The others were: Cecelia Loretta, who was born July 25, 1853, and is the wife of F. D. Joy, living near Los Angeles, California; William R., born August 26, 1855, who is living in Elgin, Oregon; and Wilbert F., born March 8, 1859. The last named married Anna O'Brien, and resides on Smith river in this state. To Mr. and Mrs. Dewar have been born five children. Laura Ann, who was born September 28, 1868, was married October 24, 1887, to John M. Dolan, who died January 8, 1908, leaving three children: William Eugene, born September 28, 1888; Terance Edwin, born April 23, 1891; and Zoe Ellen, January 11, 1897. Mrs. Dolan was married in 1909 to Harmon Smithgall, of Marsfield, Oregon. Jennie D. Dewar, born May 3, 1870, was married July 3, 1889, to William C. Chamberlain and they reside near Gardiner. They have four children: Majorie L., born July 27, 1891; Algie Merle, born September 19, 1893; Barbara L., April 4, 1895; and Laura Doane, March 24, 1896. Gertrude A. Dewar, born September 20, 1872, is mentioned at greater length on another page of this work. John Algie Dewar, born August 3, 1882, was married September 20, 1903, to Bessie A. Gentry and they have two children: John Stanley, born March 11, 1905; and Algie Elgin, born April 17, 1907. William Theodore Dewar, born July 16, 1887, was married September 7, 1905, to Marie Cooper, and they have two children: Leroy T., born June 9, 1906; and Dexter Dale, born January 29, 1909.

William Dewar is a democrat and keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day. His fraternal relations are with Gardiner Lodge, No. 132, I. O. O. F. Both he and his wife are members of the Baptist church, in the work of which they are actively and helpfully interested. Mr. Dewar prefers home life to club interests and is devoted to the welfare of his family, in whose interests he is putting forth earnest effort along business lines that he may provide them not only with the necessities but many of the comforts of life.

CAPTAIN EDWARD D. HAGEN is a native of New York city, born March 9, 1845, the only son of John and Louisa (Lenoir) Hagen. The parents moved to California in 1849 by way of Cape Horn and settled in Sonora, Tuolumne county. Edward Hagen, at the age of fourteen years, went to the territory of Nevada. During the Civil war he enlisted for service in Company F, First Nevada Volunteer Cavalry. At the close of the war he enlisted, at Benicia, California, in the United States army and was assigned to the ordnance department, in which he served for three years. Subsequently he reenlisted and served in Battery F, Second United States Artillery, being discharged therefrom at Raleigh, North Carolina. Returning to California, he was elected captain in the National Guard at Sacramento. He was especially adapted for the duties of this position on account of his previous, varied military experience. In 1879 he came to Portland, Oregon, and for the next twelve years was an employe on the railroad running between Portland and Brownsville, Linn county. In 1894 he removed to Josephine county, where he owned one hundred and sixty acres of land, upon which he established his home and has since continued to reside. His ranch is in the mineral zone of this state and he has been fortunate enough to locate a very promising mine on his property. During the years of his residence upon the ranch he has given some of his time and attention to mining interests in various parts of the mineral belt of Oregon.

Captain Hagen has been twice married. His first wife, Eliza Stout, deceased, was the mother of two children: Zomi; and Tiny, deceased. In 1894 he married Mrs. Malinda (Jones) Hyzer, and they are the parents of two children, Esther and Ruth, at home. Captain Hagen is a loyal member of the republican party, following the standards of that great political organization in all of its national and state campaigns. He is one of the well known and highly respected citizens of Oregon, where for many years he has been successfully engaged in the development of his fine ranch property.

JOHN FRANKLIN LOVELACE, one of the highly successful business men of Estacada, where he engages in the flour and feed business, was born in Missouri on the 12th of November, 1861. He is a son of Alfred M. and Elizabeth M. (Caton) Lovelace, likewise natives of Missouri, whence they crossed the plains in 1863 to Idaho. They first located in Idaho City, but in 1864 they came to Oregon and the following year the father filed on a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres in the vicinity of Damascus. This property has greatly increased in value of recent years and has been divided into small tracts and sold. The father was one of seven children born to his parents, as follows: James, David, Lucy, Thomas, Alfred, Elizabeth and William. Mr. and Mrs. Alfred M. Lovelace were married on the old Caton homestead in the vicinity of Sedalia, Missouri, and they became the parents of ten children, of whom our subject is the eldest. Alice and Ella, the two oldest daughters, are both deceased. Anna became the wife of Edward Bateman of Portland by whom she has had one son, Clarence. Ada married William English, of Banks, Oregon. Fred and William, the next two in order of birth, are deceased. Lillian married Robert Board, of Alaska and they have three children: Argie, Forest and Robert. Robert, who is a resident of Damascus, is married and has four children: Alton, Thomas, Vivian and Ada. Pearl, the youngest member of the family, is deceased.

John Franklin Lovelace, who was only a child of two years when his parents crossed the plains and three when they removed to Oregon, has practically always lived in this state. He was given a limited education, terminating his student days at the age of fourteen, when he became a wage earner. His first position was in a dairy where he received fifteen dollars per month for his services for six months. At the expiration of that time he severed his connection with the latter enterprise and during the succeeding eight years he followed various occupations. Desiring to have a business of his own he applied himself energetically to anything he undertook and having accumulated sufficient capital he opened a general mercantile establishment in Damascus which he operated with a fair degree of success for two years. Selling his store at the end of that time he went to Portland and worked on a salary for seven years. From there he went to Springwater and established a general mercantile store, but four years later he disposed of this also and once more became a resident of Portland. He remained there for five years and at the end of that period again engaged in business in Springwater. Eighteen months later he sold his establishment and in 1905 he came to Estacada and opened a general mercantile store which he operated for two years, selling the first goods ever sold in Estacada, Oregon. He then sold out and went into the flour and feed business. This has proven to be a very lucrative undertaking and he has built up a fine trade, not only in the town but among the farming people in the surrounding country. Mr. Lovelace has invested and traded in local property and owns some very valuable business and residence lots in the town, the value of which is rapidly increasing, and he is considered to be one of Estacada's most wealthy business men.

Mr. Lovelace has been married twice. His first union was with Miss Ellie Deardorff, the event being celebrated in 1886. She was a daughter of David Deardorff, of Damascus, a well known pioneer of that section who came to Oregon in 1852. Two children were born of this marriage, Smiley H., who was born on January 10, 1888, in Portland, Oregon, and was given the advantages of a high-school education, is now engaged in business with his father. He married Miss Ollie Jones, a daughter of Jerry Jones, and they have one son, Leslie L., whose birth occurred on October 29, 1911. Ava W. was born September 5, 1890, in Springwater, Oregon, and received a college education. She became the wife of Neil Bronson, of Estacada, and they have one son, Harold, born September 19, 1908, in Portland, Oregon. For his second wife Mr. Lovelace chose Miss Mabel Commons, who was born in Newton, Kansas, on the 24th of December, 1877, and is a daughter of Nathan and Emma Commons. Nathan Commons, who was an old Grand Army of the Republic man, was through all of the Civil war, is now deceased. Mrs. Lovelace is a member of a family of nine, four of whom besides herself are living, as follows: Robert, of Portland; Della, also a resident of Portland; Daisy, the wife of Arthur Walker, of Newton, Kansas; and Bion, a resident of Portland, who is married and has a family. Mr. and Mrs. Lovelace were married on October 1, 1899, and they have two sons: Raymond, born in Viola, Oregon, October 17, 1901; and Arnold, born in Portland, Oregon, October 11, 1904.

Mr. Lovelace takes an active interest in all municipal affairs and is independent in politics. He is highly regarded in the community and his fellow townsmen have several times called him to public office. He served as alderman for four years, and during that time was chairman of the finance committee, and was then known and popularly called the watch dog of the treasury. He also served on the street and alley committee and was on the fire and water board. In addition to the duties here involved, Mr. Lovelace was the first clerk of school district No. 108 in Estacada and held this office for three years. He is held in high esteem and has many friends here, as in the discharge of both his public and private duties he has always manifested those qualities which command respect.

JOHN TUNELL. One of the best improved ranches in the vicinity of Creswell is that of John Tunell, who owns thirty-two acres located two miles south of town on the Willamette river. He was born in Cook county, Illinois, on the 15th of October, 1851, the eldest child and only son of John and Mary (Balkey) Tunell. Of their two daughters, the elder, Minnie, married William Lane, a ranchman at Cottage Grove; and Louisa became the wife of George Gilfry of Creswell. The father was born in the kingdom of Hanover, Germany, on the 8th of January, 1821, and there he was reared and married. In 1849 he emigrated with his wife to the United States, first locating in Cook county, Illinois. From there they went to Bremer county, Iowa, and two years later they became residents of Freeborn county, Minnesota, where the father bought a quarter section of land, that he cultivated for seventeen years. In 1873 he came to Oregon, settling in Douglas county and four years later came to Lane county and bought five acres of land in the vicinity of Creswell on the Willamette river, where he passed away on the 11th of March, 1911. Mr. Tunell was one of five brothers to come to the United States, of which he became a citizen in 1871 in Freeborn county, Minnesota. His political support he accorded to the republican party. The mother was also a native of Hanover, where her birth occurred on the 17th of September, 1813, and she died at Creswell on the 1st of August, 1891.

The boyhood and youth of John Tunell were passed on the home farm in Minnesota, where he received his agricultural training under the supervision of his father, while pursuing his studies in the district schools. After coming to Lane county he and his father erected a gristmill on their ranch on the Willamette river which they operated until 1909, in connection with the cultivation of their land. They then discontinued the operation of the mill and converted the building into a power plant, which supplies the town of Creswell with electric light. Mr. Tunell has extended the boundaries of his ranch by the purchase of an adjoining tract of twenty-seven acres, all of which he has brought under high cultivation. Twenty acres he devotes to the raising of grain and the remainder is used for pasture, orchard and general farming, in connection with which he also raises such stock as he needs for operating his place and household use. He is a man of practical ideas, clear judgment and tireless energy and is meeting with excellent success in his undertakings. He values his place at twenty-five thousand dollars, as it is well improved, thoroughly equipped and the land is very fertile and in excellent condition. Besides its advantages agriculturally, Mr. Tunell has a monopoly on the water rights and as Creswell is a rapidly growing and thriving town, has every reason to feel assured that ultimately this privilege will also net him a handsome revenue.

Mr. Tunell has never married, lives with his two nephews, John Lindsay and James Lane. He is a Lutheran in faith and fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic order, as a member of the lodge at Creswell. His political allegiance is given to the republican party. Mr. Tunell has always led a quiet, unobtrusive life as one of the foremost agriculturists in his community, where he is meeting with that success which invariably crowns intelligent and capably directed effort.

Z. G. HARRIS has leased and is operating the Harvey ranch of thirteen hundred acres at the south end of Summer lake. He was born in Iron county, Missouri, November 3, 1874, and about 1884 became a resident of the Goose Lake valley in Modoc county, California, having journeyed westward with his father, S. B. Harris. His mother, Statia (De Guire) Harris, died in Missouri when her son was but three years of age, after which the father married Lizzie Sutton and both died in Modoc county, California, the latter in the spring of 1889, while Mr. Harris passed away in the fall of the same year. In the family were four children, Z. G. Harris being the only one born of the father's first marriage. The others are: Lottie, the wife of

Wayman Withers, of Summer Lake valley; Minnie, the wife of Charles Hill, of Portland; and Ada, the wife of Fred Jacobsen, of Portland.

Z. G. Harris remained at home until his father's death and then came to Summer Lake valley, and resided with his uncle for about three years. Starting out in life on his own account he worked for wages for about four years, during which period he carefully saved his earnings until he was able to make investment in three hundred and sixty acres of land at the north end of Summer lake. He operated that for a time and also leased a place known as the Lane ranch of sixteen hundred acres on Silver lake. There he remained for three years, after which he returned to the old home place and lived thereon for three years. On the expiration of that period he leased the Harvey ranch at the south end of Summer lake, comprising thirteen hundred acres upon which he now makes his home. It is devoted to the raising of hay, grain and stock, and he has one hundred acres planted to grain, while each year he puts up about four hundred tons of hay. He also keeps about four hundred head of cattle and horses, the extensive ranch affording ample range for his stock. His own place is leased and adds materially to his income.

In 1895 Mr. Harris was married to Miss Alice Sullivan, who was engaged as a school teacher on Summer lake and was born on Davis creek, in the Goose Lake valley, Modoc county, California, July 7, 1876. She is a daughter of Calvin Luther and Elizabeth (Pettross) Sullivan, the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of Illinois. Both died at Goose Lake. Mr. and Mrs. Harris have four children, Beatrice, Bernice, Theta and Thelma. In politics Mr. Harris is an independent democrat, for while he usually holds to the principles of the party he does not consider himself bound by party ties and when his judgment dictates does not hesitate to support candidates of other parties. Fraternally he is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and with the Woodmen of the World.

WILLIAM D. ROBINETT is the owner of a grain and fruit farm of one hundred acres on Summer lake and the improvements upon his place indicate him to be one of the progressive agriculturists and fruit growers of Lake county. Like many another successful citizen of this part of the state he is a native son of Oregon, having been born in Lane county, March 8, 1879, his parents being William M. and Isabel G. (Bristow) Robinett, who were natives of Illinois and Oregon respectively. In his childhood days the father came to this state with his parents, James and Femima (Shield) Robinett, the former of whom died in Lane county while the latter is residing in Creswell. The death of William M. Robinett occurred in 1898, when he was forty-three years of age. He had followed ranching and merchandising and was held in high regard in the community in which he lived. Mrs. Isabel Robinett resides at Pleasant Hill, Lane county, which is also the home of her daughter, Irene, who is the wife of Ed Higgins. Her two sons, older than the daughter, are William D. and Truman D., the latter a resident of Davenport, Washington.

William D. Robinett spent his youthful days with his parents and learned the lesson that industry is the basis of all honorable success and when supplemented by sound judgment always produces gratifying results. When he left home in 1900 he came to Lake county and for three or four years conducted a blacksmith shop at Silver Lake. He then purchased his present place, having one hundred acres upon which are found some of the best improvements to be seen in the Summer Lake valley. His land is devoted to the cultivation of grain and fruit and large crops are annually gathered. His orchards yield an abundant harvest. His interests are conducted along scientific lines and his labors are meeting with their logical outcome.

In 1902 Mr. Robinett was married to Miss Etta Sult, who was born in the Summer Lake valley and is a daughter of Michael Sult, mentioned elsewhere in this work. Mr. and Mrs. Robinett have three children, Theresa, Dell and Clarice.

ALFRED R. LAND has since 1907 been local agent for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at Creswell, Oregon, and previous to settling there had been employed by the company for a number of years. He owns a forty acre farm in Illinois and a fine home and other property in Creswell. Mr. Land was born in White county, Illinois, July 2, 1876, a son of William and Margarette (McElheren) Land. The father was born in Illinois while the mother is a native of South Carolina. They were married in the former state and made it their home. Mr. Land died July 31, 1905, but his wife is still living on the old homestead. In their family were the following children: John D., of Illinois; Richard E. and Edward, also residents of that state; Anna, who married J. H. Prince, of Illinois, and who is now deceased; Clara, the wife of William Russell, of Illinois; Louisa, the deceased wife of Dr. C. M. Qualls, of Illinois; Byrd A., also residing in that state; Fannie, who passed away at the age of three years; Alfred R., of this review; and Newton C., of Illinois.

Alfred R. Land received his education in the common schools of Illinois, remaining at home with his parents and assisting his father on the farm during the periods of vacation, until he attained the age of twenty-two years, when he was married and began active life on his own account. His first work was at farming but shortly afterward he removed to Oregon, where he entered the employ of the Booth-Kelly Lumber Company at Saginaw, Oregon. He remained with that concern for one year and then was employed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at various points as relief agent. He continued in that connection until August 19, 1905, when he was given the position of night agent at Cottage Grove, where he remained for six months. He was then transferred to Saginaw, Oregon, as agent of the Southern Pacific, where he remained for two years, after which he was given charge of the station at Creswell, at which place he has been the Southern Pacific agent and local representative since. Mr. Land is the proprietor of a forty-acre farm in Illinois, owns his own nicely appointed home in Creswell and other vacant property in that city. His wife is interested in the general feed and grain business in Creswell.

Mr. Land was married, March 19, 1899, to Miss Addie Fields, who was born in White county, Illinois, January 17, 1879, a daughter of A. S. and Ellen (Boster) Fields. The wife's parents were both natives of Illinois, where they were married, and the father is still living on his homestead, having always been a farmer. The mother passed away in 1891. Mrs. Land is the eldest of five children born to her parents, the others being: Mackie, who passed away at the age of seven years; Ella, the wife of Henry Crouch, of White county, Illinois; Shannon S., living on the old homestead with his father; and Vernon N., a railroad operator of Cottage Grove, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Land were born five children of whom three are now living, namely: Charlie N., born October 19, 1903; Lucille, born March 16, 1906; and Leona, born December 3, 1908. Those deceased are: Russell, who died at the age of one and a half years; and one who passed away in infancy.

Mr. Land is an adherent of the principles and policies advocated by the republican party and is a member of the city council of Creswell. He belongs to the Railroad Telegraphers' Union. Both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church, being actively engaged in the work of that denomination. Both have a high-school education and since coming to Creswell have become popular in business, social and church circles, being greatly esteemed in the community. Mr. Land is a loyal employee of his company who at the same time endeavors to the best of his ability to safeguard the interests of all who have transactions with the railroad by which he is employed. His business is transacted with a high degree of efficiency and his duties are so well performed that he is popular both with the officials of the Southern Pacific and the business men of the city.

WILLIAM KERR. One of the best cultivated and most attractive ranches located on Pacific highway is that of William Kerr, which contains one hundred and seventy-five acres and is located four miles northwest of Eugene. He has resided there for ten years and during that time has diligently and perseveringly applied himself not only to the improvement of his own place but to the development of the entire country through his able assistance in promoting the various public utilities.

He was born in Scotland in 1848 and is a son of Daniel and Mary (Walker) Kerr, both of Scottish birth. The parents emigrated to the United States in 1848 and located in Geneva, Illinois, whence they removed to Houston county, Minnesota. The mother is now living in Nobles county, that state, but the father passed away in 1886. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kerr, of whom our subject was the second in order of birth. The others are as follows: Jessie, who is deceased; Bryce, who lives in Rochester, Minnesota; Marion and Mary Jane, both of whom are deceased; Dora, the wife of Martin Stephens, of Pansford, Minnesota; Margaret, the wife of George Mitchell, of Rushmore, Minnesota; John, who is deceased; Bell, the wife of Angus McKinzie, of Canton, Ohio; and Daniel, who lives in Toronto, Canada.

William Kerr was in his infancy when his parents removed to the United States, and was in his early childhood when they located in Minnesota. The greater part of his boyhood and youth were passed on a farm, his education being acquired in the district schools. He was an ambitious, enterprising youth and made the best of every opportunity afforded him. In common with all lads reared in the country, at that period, he early began to assist with the work of the fields and care of the stock, laying the foundation for an agricultural career. Upon attaining his majority he left home and began working for himself. Having been trained in habits of thrift and industry from childhood, he applied himself diligently and saved the greater portion of his earnings.

In early manhood Mr. Kerr was united in marriage and soon thereafter he homesteaded eighty acres of land in Minnesota and began farming for himself. His efforts were well remunerated and he subsequently increased his holdings by the purchase of another three hundred and twenty acres. He continued to reside in Minnesota engaging in diversified farming and stock-raising until 1902. Selling his farm and other interests, he then removed to Oregon, locating at Eugene, at that time a town of about four thousand inhabitants. He immediately bought one hundred and seventy-five acres of the James Davis donation claim, thirty acres of this being planted to prunes and twenty to apples. Ninety acres of his ranch, Mr. Kerr devotes to general farming and he also engages in dairying and makes a specialty of the breeding and raising of high-grade cattle and hogs for the market. He is a man of good judgment and practical ideas and is meeting with success in his various undertakings. Progressive and enterprising, he has erected some good buildings on his place, and he was the first ranchman on Pacific highway between there and Junction City to build a wire fence around his land. He now owns one of the best improved and most thoroughly equipped ranches in that vicinity and is numbered among the most successful and capable agriculturists.

In Minnesota, in 1872, Mr. Kerr was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Thom, a daughter of Franeis and Margaret (Craigie) Thom. Mrs. Kerr is a native of Scotland as were likewise her parents who emigrated to the United States in 1856. They first settled in Wisconsin but two years later they removed to Minnesota, locating in Steele county. There the father passed away in 1882 and the mother in 1892. Twelve children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Thom; Hannah and William, who are deceased; George, who is a resident of Hutchinson, Minnesota; Elizabeth, deceased; James, of Vernadale, Minnesota; John, of Brownton, Minnesota; Daniel, a missionary of the Congregational church, located at Mardin, Turkey; Robert, of Owatonna, Minnesota; Mrs. Kerr; Francis, of Junction City, Oregon; Alexander, of Omaha, Nebraska; and Mary, the wife of W. J. Case of Duluth, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Kerr are the parents of eight children. Daniel was born in 1872 and educated in Worthington, Minnesota. He went to the front during the Spanish-American war as a member of the Thirteenth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry and is now a locomotive engineer in the service of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. He is married and has three children: George, Leigh and Frederick. Robert F. was born in 1874 and given the advantages of a collegiate education. He owns a farm in Minnesota and engages in agricultural pursuits. Helen, who was born in 1876, after graduating from high school engaged in teaching in Minnesota and later in Oregon. She married W. H. Maxham and lives in Eugene. Jessie, whose birth occurred in 1878, also engaged in teaching in both Minnesota and Oregon until her marriage to S. J. Gray, by whom she has had two children, Raymond and Virginia. They are also residents of Eugene. Winifred was born in 1881 and is a graduate of the University of Oregon. She is now pursuing a course in domestic science at Simmons College. Frederick, a twin brother of Winifred, is a graduate of the University of Oregon and also of Yale. He is now in the United States forestry service at Roseburg, Oregon. Raymond, whose birth occurred in 1884, also graduated from the University of Oregon and is now in his last year at the Naval Academy at Annapolis. Bryce, the youngest member of the family, was born in 1892 and since finishing his high-school course has remained at home, assisting his father with the operation of the ranch.

The family affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church. His political allegiance Mr. Kerr gives to the republican party, although his views on the temperance question coincide with the prohibitionists. He is a public-spirited man and takes an active and helpful interest in all things pertaining to the community welfare. While living in Minnesota he served for twelve years on the school board and he was also town clerk at one time. He is progressive and enterprising in whatever he undertakes and in the discharge of his duties as a citizen or public official manifests the same qualities that characterize him in his business transactions. When he first removed to his ranch the roads in that section were in a very bad condition and he was one of the citizens who spared neither time nor labor in assisting to bring about an improvement. He has also contributed substantially toward promoting the development of various other public utilities, and can always be depended upon to champion every movement inaugurated for the betterment of local conditions or to advance the intellectual, moral, social or financial status of the community. Mr. Kerr possesses the sterling and substantial qualities that characterize the Scotch people, and during the period of his residence in Lane county has made many staunch friends.

ELSIE BOYD, who for the past several years has been the proprietor and manager of a hotel in Creswell, is an efficient and successful landlord and now has under construction a three-story modern, concrete hostelry of about forty rooms. He was born in Indiana, in 1858, a son of William E. and Elizabeth (Adamson) Boyd, being one of seven children in his parents' family, the others being: Addison and Susan, both deceased; Lincoln, a resident of Halsey, Oregon; Emma, the wife of S. M. Ray, of Dalles, Polk county, Oregon; Mathew, deceased; and Thomas, residing in Oakland, Oregon.

Elsie Boyd spent the period of his boyhood and youth on the home farm in Indiana, remaining with his parents until he attained the age of twenty years, when he started out in life for himself. Removing to Kansas, in 1877, he remained there until 1885, employed at different vocations. He then removed to Oregon where he worked along different lines until 1892, when he left the farm which he had owned and embarked in the grocery business in Junction City. He remained in that business and in that city about one year and then worked as a carpenter for about four years, after which he removed to Pleasant Hill and later to Halsey. In the latter city he was employed by the railroad company, conducting a railroad hotel and restaurant. After two years thus employed he went to work for the Southern Pacific Railroad, remaining an employe of that company for three years, and then returned to the hotel business, settling in Coburg, where he remained for two years. He then once more engaged in the grocery business for a time, afterward selling out and removing to Creswell. Here he purchased a hotel which he has since operated in a most satisfactory manner. He is now engaged in the construction of a new concrete hotel building which will have about forty rooms and which is being built along modern lines in every respect. In addition to his hotel property he owns two lots and since taking charge of his present business has improved it to the extent of about one thousand dollars. Mr. Boyd is also interested as stockholder in the Creswell Canning Company.

Mr. Boyd was married, January 30, 1884, to Miss Emma Loretta Mulkey, a daughter of Willis J. and Mary E. (Davis) Mulkey. She was the third in order of birth in a family of eleven children, the others being as follows: Ensley and Dennis, deceased; S.

Howard, of Canada; Martha B., the wife of W. F. Reed, of Eugene; Lucy, who married J. R. Liles, of Pleasant Hill; Kate, the wife of Amos Walker, of Medford, Oregon; Sadie, who wedded Joseph Elmherst, of Canada; Allen and Babe, both of whom have passed away; and Alta, residing with her parents and attending the Eugene Business College. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Boyd have been born four children, namely: William, an engineer, who was born in December, 1884, and died on the 22d of January, 1906; Alphens, born January 21, 1888, who is at home with his parents and attending college at Dallas, Oregon; Leeta, who was born June 21, 1893, and died April 28, 1900; and Thelma, born August 4, 1904, who is also attending school.

Mr. Boyd is independent in his political views, supporting such candidates as seem best fitted for the position to which they aspire, irrespective of party affiliation. Fraternally he belongs to the United Artisans, in which organization he is active and he is a member of the Creswell Commercial Club. He belongs to the Christian church and assists to the extent of his ability in making that organization effective for good in the community. He is well known and popular in business and social circles and is much respected by his large number of acquaintances. In his hotel business, which he has successfully and satisfactorily conducted, he has been of service to the city of his adoption and as a landlord he has a long list of warm personal friends. In the building of his new hotel he exhibits a commendable amount of enterprise as well as abundant faith in the future of the community.

ROBERT CHAMBERS, an enterprising farmer of Marion county, residing four and one-half miles southwest of Salem, was born in Ashtabula county, Ohio, April 11, 1848, and is a son of William and Dorcas (Jones) Chambers. The great-great-grandfather was a native of Ireland. The father, William Chambers, was born in Cayuga county, New York and moved to Ohio in 1836, where he resided until 1890, when he came to Oregon and spent the remainder of his days with his son Robert Chambers, of this review. He died in 1898 and was buried in Salem. He was a farmer by occupation and served three years in the Civil war in the Twenty-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He fought in nine battles and several skirmishes. His father, the grandfather of Robert Chambers, was in the war of 1812. Dorcas Chambers, the mother of our subject, who was a native of Pennsylvania, was married there and died in Ohio in 1909. In their family were six children: John, who served in the Sixth Ohio Cavalry for one and a half years and died while in service; Robert, of this review; James and Joseph, both of whom are deceased; Anna, who is the wife of John F. Thomas, the postmaster at Pratt City, Alabama; and Starr, who is a railroad engineer at Akron, Ohio.

Robert Chambers was educated in the common schools in Ohio and remained under the parental roof until 1864, when he enlisted in the army, joining Company A, Forty-first Ohio Infantry, and was enrolled for three years but was discharged in 1865, in Murfreesboro, Tennessee. He was with Sherman in the famous march to the sea; was in the battle of Buzzard's Roost, in Altona Mountain and many other engagements. At Altona Mountain he received a slight wound in the arm. At the close of the war he returned to Ohio and remained there until 1884, when he came to Oregon, settling in Marion county, where he first rented land and later bought a farm five miles south of Salem. After improving that farm he sold it and purchased his present tract of land, which is situated four and one-half miles southwest of Salem. He has improved this place until it is one of the best in the locality, having there twenty-six acres in a high state of cultivation. Mr. Chambers has never married and his aunt, Laura Chambers, keeps house for him.

Mr. Chambers gives his political allegiance to the democratic party but has never desired office. He is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic, belonging to the Sedgwick Post at Salem. All through life he has made good use of his time and justly merits the prosperity which has come to him and the high regard in which he is held throughout the community.

ALBERT E. IMBLER. A log cabin at Dufur, about fifteen miles south of The Dalles, was the birthplace of Albert E. Imbler, and his natal day was April 2, 1867. Today he is the owner of a ranch of two hundred and twenty acres pleasantly situated on Summer lake and there is not another tract of similar size in the county which pays better, yielding more ready and profitable returns for the care and labor bestowed upon it. It presents an attractive appearance, manifesting the careful supervision and progressive methods of the owner, who has been a lifelong resident of Oregon and is a son of Jesse and Esther (Masiker) Imbler. The father was born in Kentucky, May 22, 1843, and the mother's birth occurred in Illinois on land now included within the limits of Chicago but at that time about twenty miles from the heart of that city. Her natal day was November 2, 1850, and she was about three years of age when brought to Oregon, while Jesse Imbler arrived here when a youth of eleven. They were married at The Dalles, where they remained for six or seven years, and then removed to the town of Imbler, in Union county, named in their honor. The father homesteaded a claim there upon which he resided for thirty years, when he removed to Hood River and later to Ashland, Oregon, where he died, December 17, 1909, and his wife passed away on the 13th of January, 1912. As one of the pioneer ranchmen of the state he took an active part in its early development. He journeyed to the northwest after the primitive manner of the times, driving ox teams across the plains, and Fort Laramie and a trading post of the Hudson's Bay Company at La Grande were the only houses which he saw between Omaha and the Willamette valley. He was one of a family of three sons and six daughters, all of whom lived and married in Oregon. Thus the family took active part in the development and upbuilding of the state. The only surviving son is E. W. Imbler, of Oregon City, while the living daughters are: Mrs. Anna Courtney and Mrs. Susan McCauley, both of Dayton, Washington; Mrs. Fannie Root, of Asotin, Washington; and Mrs. Nancy Hall, of Linton, Oregon. The four children in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Imbler were: Albert E.; Ellis A., living in Paisley, Oregon; Lillie, the wife of Dr. R. H. Greene, of Emmett, Idaho; and Ray, of Hood River.

Albert E. Imbler resided with his parents until he attained majority and met the usual experiences of ranch life on the frontier. When twenty-four years of age he began running stock for himself in Wallowa county, where he remained for five years, when he removed to Tillamook, Oregon, where he engaged in merchandising for seven years. He was afterward an orchardist of Rogue river for seven years and in 1909 came to his present ranch of two hundred and twenty acres which is located on Summer lake. He has irrigated one slope and always raises a crop regardless of weather conditions. His ditches are from four to six feet in width and the water for them is supplied by an artesian well one hundred and forty-seven feet in depth. He raises fruit of every variety adapted to climatic conditions here and all kinds of grain and has a well improved farm. His fields produce several crops of alfalfa each year and there is no better improved farm of similar size in southern Oregon. In addition to his agricultural and horticultural interests he has mining investments in Curry county, Oregon.

In 1890 Mr. Imbler was married to Miss Mattie Dishman, who was born in Missouri in 1866 but was reared in Wallowa county, whither she went with her parents, William S. and Elizabeth Dishman. The father died at Whittier, California, September 13, 1911, and the mother now makes her home with her children. Mr. and Mrs. Imbler have two children: Elsie, twenty-one years of age; and Hazel, aged sixteen years. The parents are members of the Christian church and although they have resided in the Summer lake valley for but a comparatively brief period of time they have become well known here and have won many friends. That Mr. Imbler's efforts are of a practical as well as of a progressive character is indicated by the excellent results which have crowned his labors as an agriculturist and as a horticulturist. Sound judgment enables him to readily determine the value of any plan or method which promotes improvement and his ranch interests are conducted along scientific lines.

JOHN F. VAN LEUVEN is one of the enterprising young farmers of Coos county. Here he was born in 1881, a son of W. H. and Rosella (Flam) Van Leuven, the former a native of New York and the latter of Germany. The father died when his son John was but two years of age, leaving five children. He had come to Oregon from New York in 1870. At different times he had lived in various places and had been employed at various occupations. On taking up his abode in Coos county he purchased a farm near Coquille but after a brief period sold that and purchased the place upon which his son John now resides, comprising about sixty acres of land. This he cleared and developed, being engaged in the work of further improvement upon the place at the time of his death in 1883. His widow survives, makes her home in Bandon, and with her son John owns the old homestead. There were three daughters and two sons in her family: Mary Alice, the wife of Arthur Coats, of Bandon; Laura, who is the wife of Bert McDuffy, of Bandon; Horace J., of Bandon; John F.; and Rosella, the wife of Elbert Clinton, of Coquille.

John F. Van Leuven spent his boyhood with his mother and with her, owns the old home place on which he is engaging in dairying on an extensive scale, keeping a large herd of good cows for that purpose. He also carries on general farming and the success which is coming to him is the legitimate outcome of earnest, persistent labor. His place is pleasantly situated about five and a half miles from Bandon, on the Bear Creek road.

On the 28th of March, 1903, Mr. Van Leuven was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Haga, a daughter of Joseph Floyd Haga. They have become parents of two children: Rose Elizabeth, born October 10, 1907; and Willis, born May 22, 1910. Mr. Van Leuven is liberal in his political views but his fellow townsmen, appreciative of his loyalty and progressiveness in community affairs, have called him to office. He has served as road supervisor, has been school director and clerk for several terms. At all times he is a stalwart champion of the cause of education. Fraternally he is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, seeing much beauty in its teachings, which he regards as good standards to follow in life.

JUDGE BERNARD DALY, M. D. It is a matter of common opinion that the man in professional life is seldom a successful business man and yet Dr. Bernard Daly has given evidence of the fact that his sagacity, sound judgment and enterprise can be used as effectively in promoting commercial enterprises as in the practice of medicine or of law. He has proven his strength in both those departments of professional life and there stands to his credit an excellent record as county judge of Lake county and as one of the most capable practitioners of medicine. He was born in Ireland in 1858 but in early youth was brought to America and reared in the south. He supplemented a thorough preliminary education by a course in the Ohio Northern University, from which he was graduated in the class of 1886. He had in the meantime begun the study of medicine and next entered the medical department of the University of Louisville (Ky.), and was graduated therefrom in 1887. Coming at once to Lakeview he entered into active practice. Before the supreme court of Oregon he was admitted to the bar and his work in the courts has won wide recognition and high commendation, yet it has been but one feature of an active career that has also established him as one of the foremost physicians of southern Oregon. He has been a close and discriminating student of the science of medicine and has enjoyed an immense practice, covering a radius of two hundred miles over this new but rapidly developing country. He is now limiting his practice, however, responding to no night calls and engaging more largely in consultation practice. The public's recognition of his ability as a lawyer found expression in 1902 in his election to the office of county judge, and he is still serving on the bench, having for ten years continued in this judicial position, his course being characterized by a masterful grasp of every problem presented for solution, combined with intimate knowledge of the principles of law and correct application thereof to the points in litigation. Other honors of an official character have been conferred upon him in recognition of his fitness for leadership in matters relative to the welfare of state and nation. In 1892 he was elected a member of the house of representatives and in 1896 was chosen a member of the state senate. In 1900 he was democratic candidate for congress and ran ahead of his ticket more than six thousand votes—a fact which is plainly indicative of his popularity and the confidence reposed in him by his fellow townsmen. That his interest in education is of a practical and beneficial character is indicated in his service as a regent of the Oregon State Agricultural College and as a member of the board of education for the public schools and high school of Lakeview through the past twenty-four years.

Other interests, too, of a strictly business character, claim his attention. He assisted in the organization of the Bank of Lakeview and has continuously been its president. He organized the Lake County Land and Live Stock Company, of which he is also president, and which has many thousand head of cattle upon its extensive ranch of twelve thousand acres. Still other business activities of a varied nature claim his time and energies and all profit by his experience, sound judgment and cooperation.

IVY MORRIS is among the well known, respected and successful farmers and fishermen of Lane county, this state. He was born in the state of Missouri, July 19, 1864, and is a son of William and Nancy (Wood) Morris. His father was a native of Iowa and his mother of Kentucky and he is one of nine children born to his parents. A more extended review of the family of William and Nancy (Wood) Morris is published farther on in this work.

Ivy Morris was reared at home and educated in the public schools of the district in which he lived. During his early years in life he was engaged in farming and remained with his parents until he was twenty-eight years of age. In 1880, in company with his parents, he removed to this state and settled on the north fork of the Siuslaw river, where he remained for two years and then tiled upon a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres located on Mercer lake, six and one-half miles north of Florence, where he continued to live until the time of his marriage, when he removed to his wife's home, where he has since been engaged in general farming and fishing.

Mr. Morris was united in marriage to Mrs. Ellen Nelson, the widow of John Nelson, whose home was located on the lower Siuslaw river. By her first marriage Mrs. Morris was the mother of a son, now deceased, his death having occurred by accidental drowning on December 26, 1911. This sad event forms one of the deep shadows of sorrow in the history of Mrs. Morris, her greatly beloved son having been removed from her fireside by death at a time when he was in the midst of his public-school years, a boy of rare promise and excellent traits of character and habits. Mr. Nelson, the father, passed away in 1886. Mrs. Morris is a daughter of Henry and Nellie (Baker) Tronson, the former of whom was born in Missouri and the latter in Umpqua, Oregon. In 1887 the parents removed to Point Terrace on the Siuslaw river and there they reared their family of five children, namely: Matilda, the wife of William Thomas, of Portland; Mrs. Morris, the wife of Ivy Morris, of this review; Katherine, who became the wife of Ralph Amoth, of Portland, and is now deceased; Robert, who resides on the Siletz reservation in Oregon; and James, of Portland. To Mr. and Mrs. Morris four children have been born: Matilda Lee, born May 15, 1889, who is the wife of John Perry, of the Umpqua river district; William I. and Edwin E., both of whom reside at home with their parents; and Vera M., who was born April 15, 1903, and is a pupil in the public schools.

Mr. Morris is affiliated with the republican party and a loyal adherent of that political organization. He has, however, never been a candidate for political preferment of any kind. The highly developed and beautiful farm of Mr. and Mrs. Morris is located at Point Terrace on the Siuslaw river, south of Mapleton, and contains a total acreage of one hundred and seven acres. Mr. Morris is one of the highly respected and much esteemed citizens of Lane county, of which he has been a resident since 1880. He is regarded by his friends and associates as a most trustworthy and reliable man and is interested in any issue seeking the advancement and improvement of the community in which he lives.

MICHAEL SULT. Early in his business career Michael Sult realized that "there is no royal road to wealth" but he determined that he would gain prosperity if it could be won by honest, persistent labor. Throughout the greater part of his life he has lived in the Sumner Lake valley and has proven an active factor in the development and upbuilding of this section, while at the same time he has furthered his own interests and has become the owner of a valuable and well improved property. He was born in Marion county, Ohio, July 1, 1847. His parents, John and Eve (Jacoby) Sult, were also natives of that state and were there married, after which they removed to Marshall county, Indiana, when their son Michael was but six weeks old. Their remaining days were there passed, the father following farming. In their family were six sons and four daughters of whom only two daughters and Michael Sult, the youngest child, are living. His sisters are: Margaret, the widow of John Travis, of Marshall county, Indiana; and Eliza Ann, the wife of Jacob Huff, of Lincoln, Nebraska. One brother, William, served for three years in an Indiana regiment in defense of the Union during the Civil war, and for seven years he was a successful school teacher.

Michael Sult was reared in Indiana, where he remained until he attained his majority. He spent one year in Iowa and Missouri, working as a farm hand, and in 1869 he came to Oregon with Lane county as his destination, there joining a sister, Mrs. Mary Cruzan, who had crossed the plains in 1852 and who spent her last days at Pleasant Hill, Lane county. After coming to the northwest Mr. Sult worked as a farm hand in Lane county until 1872, when he went to Lake county. He had previously visited the district in 1871, at which time there was no one in the valley. In 1872 he located on a claim and has since resided on Summer lake, where he expects to remain until death calls him. He thinks this valley cannot be excelled in the production of fruit, grain and alfalfa in Oregon and he here owns three hundred and sixty-five acres of rich land upon which he has made excellent improvements. He has a good orchard of five acres, constituting an attractive feature of his place, and containing the finest varieties of fruits. For about thirty years he ran cattle on his ranch, having from five to six hundred head. While on the whole he has been successful, his business career has not been free from reverses, for during the severe winter of 1889-90 he lost four hundred head of cattle. He now engages in the raising of grain and in general farming, feeling that he is too old to ride after stock. His brand for cattle is the capital letter S placed on the right shoulder at an angle of about forty-five degrees, and he has branded as high as one hundred and fifty calves in a year. In 1881 Mr. Sult was married in Lane county, Oregon, to Miss Laura Belle Conrad, who was born in that county October 8, 1861, a daughter of David and Maria (Cruzan) Conrad, who crossed the plains in 1852. The father was of German birth and died in Lane county, where his widow still makes her home. To Mr. and Mrs. Sult have been born seven children: Etta, the wife of William Robinett, who is living on a farm near her father's property; Ivan, who died at the age of two months; Della, a bookkeeper of Los Angeles, California; Frances, the wife of Clyde Kiger, of Silver Lake valley, Lake county; Pearl, the wife of John Hanan, of Warm Springs, Oregon; Michael C., a student in the State Agricultural College at Corvallis; and David Earl, at home. All of the children were born in the Summer Lake valley.

Mr. Sult is independent in politics and has only held school and road offices, preferring not to take an active part in political affairs but rather to give undivided attention to his business interests, which have brought to him gratifying prosperity. He has worked earnestly and persistently year by year, knowing that close application to duties is the basis of all honorable success. He deserves much credit for what he has accomplished and his example is one well worthy of emulation, showing that in the individual and not in his environment is found the opportunity for advancement.

DOANE B. COLCORD, M. D. The career of Dr. Doane B. Colcord has been an unusually active and useful one. He was a Union soldier, then studied engineering and medicine and, entering upon the work of his dual profession, distinguished himself by holding many important positions. He was born in Bucksport, Maine, in 1841, a son of Rev. David and Hannah (Doane) Colcord. The father, who was both a minister and sea captain, was born at Prospect, Maine, while the mother was born at Bucksport, in which city she was reared and educated. The father was a cousin of John N. Colcord, the adventurer, who started out when a young man on a voyage from Sanford, Maine, and was captured by the British navy and impressed into its service, being kept there until during the War of 1812 when the ship on which he was serving was captured by the Americans, after which he served the American cause until the close of the war. In 1838, in Maine, Rev. David Colcord married Hannah Doane and there resided until his death in 1858. The mother later moved to West Liberty, Iowa, where she lived for a time, later going to Chicago, Illinois, and thence to Topeka, Kansas, where she passed away in 1901, at the age of ninety-five years. She was well educated and taught school for some years previous to her marriage. In her family were ten children, the subject of this review being the only one now living.

Doane B. Colcord remained at home with his parents until he attained the age of twenty years, when he enlisted in Company G, of the Eighteenth Infantry, for service in the Civil war. His regiment was later changed to the First Heavy Artillery and Dr. Colcord was afterward transferred to the signal corps and served as leader of the post band at Georgetown, D. C., until the close of the war, being discharged from the United States service in June, 1865. After he was mustered out of the army he entered the Dartmouth College at Hanover, New Hampshire, from which he was graduated in 1867, completing a four years' course in two years. He took a course in civil engineering and after his graduation went to Burlington, Iowa, as a surveyor for the Burlington Cedar Rapids & Northern Railroad, remaining with that company until 1874. During his service with that company he was given promotions from time to time until he became chief engineer and has a record of surveying one thousand miles of railroad which were afterward built.

He then went to New York city for the purpose of studying medicine in Bellevue Hospital Medical College, from which he was graduated in 1875. He entered upon the practice of his profession in Waymart, Pennsylvania, but at the end of a year removed to Cedar Falls, Iowa, where he practiced for three years, and later followed his profession for two years in Burlington. He then spent two years engineering and later became chief engineer at Burlington for the Burlington & Northwestern Railroad, which position he filled for one year. He was then placed in charge of branch line construction work for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad and served in that capacity for two years, after which he went to Missouri and took charge of a line from Chillicothe to Kansas City for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. After completing his work for this company he returned to Cedar Falls, Iowa, where he practiced medicine for two years and then was appointed assistant chief engineer for the Chicago, Burlington & Northern Railroad for one year. In 1885 he took charge of location and construction work for the Rock Island Railroad in Kansas, remaining in the employ of that company until 1892. He then again returned to the practice of medicine, settling in Topeka, Kansas, where he pursued his professional duties until 1899, when he became surgeon for the Mount Carmel Coal Company, a position which he filled for one year. During the time of his residence in Topeka Dr. Colcord was elected professor of chemistry of the Kansas Medical College, a position which he held with distinction. In the spring of 1900 he was tendered the position of consulting engineer of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company at Pueblo, Colorado, and was placed in charge of the water supply. He continued in that position until 1902, when he became chief engineer for the Colorado & Northwestern Railroad Company, but remained in this connection for only a few months, when he became locating engineer for the Denver & Northwestern Railroad Company, surveying over two ranges of mountains. In February, 1903, he returned to Denver, becoming office assistant in the final location of the line between Denver and Steamboat Springs. After completing his duties in this connection he became a consulting engineer in hydraulic work and later in the same year removed to Oregon. On coming to this state he was appointed chief engineer of the Bonta Short Line, running from Baker City to Prairie City, Oregon. He was then employed as consulting engineer of the Sumpter Valley Railroad Company and had charge of locating and constructing the line between Tipton and Prairie City, Oregon, and also of the construction of the Mount Hood Railroad Switch Pack Line, between the Hood river and Dee. Dr. Colcord's wife died suddenly in 1903 and in 1904 he removed to Portland and was there employed by the Oregon Short Line Railway Company in locating a double track between Green River and Granger and in the location and construction of the Willow Creek branch of the Oregon Short Line in Wyoming. In December, 1907, he settled in Creswell and has since been successfully engaged in the practice of medicine in that city.

In 1872 Dr. Colcord was united in marriage to Miss Luella Spencer and to this union four children were born, two of whom are deceased. Those living are: Elenora, who married Guy A. Armitage and resides at Creswell, Oregon; and Doane L., assistant engineer of the Portland Water Department.

Dr. Colcord gives his political allegiance to the republican party, having cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic Lodge, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Order of the Eastern Star, the Royal Neighbors and the Degree of Honor of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. The long, honorable, successful professional career of Dr. Colcord is a most exceptional one. In his young manhood he gave several years of the best part of his life to the service of his country and then preparing for the practice of medicine and civil engineering, he succeeded in performing a large amount of work in engineering and surveying, much larger in fact than is usually accomplished in the lifetime of a man giving his entire time to that work. As a medical practitioner he has been uniformly successful, his education in that line having been liberal, his experience broad and his adaptation to the profession most excellent. Dr. Colcord has always been a man of decided temperance principles. He is the author of the Colcord Genealogy, published in 1908, and has contributed several articles on medical and scientific subjects which have been published in the Annual of Universal Medical Sciences and in various medical journals. Dr. Colcord is one of the most distinguished and valuable citizens of Creswell, where he is widely known and universally respected.

FRANK M. LANGLOIS is living retired in the village of Langlois, named in his honor, for aside from handling a real-estate business on a small scale he has definitely abandoned business life. He is a native of Oregon and a son of one of the earliest pioneers in the state and his career has been identified with an important period of development and evolution. He has been active in business and agricultural circles and has earned his retirement by diligence and industry in the past. He was born near Salem, Marion county, Oregon, August 21, 1850, a son of William V. and Mary A. Langlois, the former a native of the isle of Guernsey, England, and the latter of King county, Missouri. His mother crossed the plains to Oregon about the year 1846 and his father came to this state about the same time. Their marriage occurred in Oregon and immediately after William V. Langlois took up a claim on the site where the city of Portland now stands and raised one crop of potatoes upon his ranch before he abandoned it considering it of no value. Leaving his family in Oregon he went to California, joining the gold rush of 1849. One year later, however, he returned and again took up land, locating his claim near Salem, where he engaged in general farming for some time, adding to his activities the manufacture of shingles. The farm which he developed he later sold for three thousand dollars, taking payment in greenbacks which at that time were worth only fifty cents on the dollar. The sale thus netted him only fifteen hundred dollars. He came to Curry county, settling at Port Orford and here he conducted a general store for a short time, abandoning this field of activity eventually and locating one and one-half miles from the site where the village of Langlois is now located. Here he proved up a donation and a homestead claim which he began to improve and develop. He added to his holdings from time to time seeing the opportunities which the newly opened country offered and adhering always to a policy of expansion and progress. At the time of his death he owned a thousand acres of land in Curry county, partly improved and intelligently developed and was one of the extensive owners of farm lands in the section. He died when he was sixty-six years of age, his wife passing away when she was sixty-four. To their union were born eight children, of whom seven are living; William, who met death by drowning; James, of Cape Blanco, Oregon; Frank M., the subject of this review; John N., who resides in Bandon; Thomas Orford, who was the first white child born at Port Orford, and who now resides in Bandon; and Charles E., Mrs. Ella Nelson and Mrs. Mary Gallier, all of whom reside in Bandon.

All the education Mr. Langlois ever obtained consisted of eighteen months of instruction in the district schools of Curry county. When he was seventeen years of age he began earning his own livelihood, working at various occupations for fifteen years. At the end of that time he took up several land claims and also purchased a number of acres all of which he later sold. After the death of his father he formed a partnership with his brother in the operation of a dairy upon the homestead which he continued to conduct until the property was sold. Then Mr. Langlois established himself in the general merchandize business, locating his store at Langlois postoffice, which was named in his honor because he was appointed first postmaster of the village. He conducted his mercantile enterprise in company with Mr. Thrift and after fifteen years of successful partnership he bought out his companion's interests and continued in the store independently for five years. At the end of that time he disposed of his business and moved upon his ranch of eighty acres in Curry county upon which he carried on extensive sheep-raising, handling the finest animals in this section. He imported his stock from England and gained a reputation throughout the state as a successful sheep-breeder. In 1910 he retired from active life although he still handles real estate in Langlois. He has a comfortable home in the village and forty acres of platted land within its limits.

In 1886 Mr. Langlois was united in marriage to Miss Georgia E. Hormen, a native of Missouri, and a daughter of Thomas H. and Sarah Hormen, the former a native of Ireland, and the latter of Missouri. Her father has passed away but her mother is still living and makes her home at Belgrade, Montana. In their family were five children, two of whom have passed away. Those living are: Georgia, the wife of our subject; James, who is engaged as a teacher in Montana; and John. Mr. and Mrs. Langlois have one daughter, Ivy N., who was born on the 28th of July, 1892. She is a graduate of the Curry high school and is an accomplished musician.

Mr. Langlois is independent in his political views and does not affiliate with any party. He is interested in the progress and welfare of his section and has served as county assessor for one term. He is in his sixty-third year and now enjoys a well earned rest after useful labor. He has practically seen all of the development of Oregon and has successfully participated therein as an important factor in its growth, and the upright methods and principles to which he has adhered have been forces in raising commercial standards in the state.

ORRIN BENNETT. One of the most attractive small ranches in the vicinity of Eugene is that of Orrin Bennett, who owns twelve acres on Pacific highway, two miles northwest of the city. It is highly improved and well kept up and the entire acreage is devoted to fruit-raising. He was born in Indiana in 1846, and is a son of E. H. and Frances (Winchell) Bennett. The father was born in Massachusetts and the mother in Kentucky, but they passed the early years of their domestic life in Indiana. They subsequently crossed the prairies of Illinois to Iowa, and there the father devoted his energies to agricultural pursuits during the remainder of his active life. Our subject is the youngest of the five children born to his parents, the others being as follows: Sylvanus, who is deceased; Cordelia, the widow of R. K. Kegley, of the state of Washington; Melissa, who is deceased; and Caroline, the widow of C. E. Phipps, of Iowa.

The boyhood and youth of Orrin Bennett were passed on his father's farm in Iowa, where he received his early agricultural training and acquired his education. At the age of fifteen years he became self-supporting and worked for his father and other farmers in that vicinity. In common with other youths he was strongly attracted to the west with its glamour of romance and adventure, so when he was nineteen he left home and went to Colorado. He worked in the mines and on the railroad and followed various other pursuits during the succeeding two and a half years and before he had attained his majority had traveled quite extensively for that period. Returning to Iowa, he resumed his agricultural pursuits until 1874, when he crossed the plains to Oregon. Upon his arrival in this state he first located in Linn county, engaging in general farming and stock-raising for ten years, but he did not invest in land until he came to Lane county. Here he filed upon a homestead in 1888, located in the foothills west of Junction City, continuing to live there for nineteen years. He cultivated a portion of his land, but his energies were almost entirely devoted to the raising of cattle, in which he met with very good success. In 1907, he left his cattle ranch and coming to Eugene purchased the place where he now lives. He has planted this entirely in orchard and has further improved his property by the erection of a pleasant modern residence and good barns and outbuildings. Mr. Bennett takes great pride in his little ranch and under his capable and careful supervision it is developing in a most gratifying manner and is one of the very attractive homesteads in that vicinity.

Mr. Bennett has been twice married. His first union was with Miss Margaret Cadwallader, a daughter of Joseph and Jane (Luers) Cadwallader. They were married in Iowa but soon thereafter came to Oregon and here Mrs. Bennett died in 1874. One child was born to them, Charles C., in 1872. He was given a common-school education and is now engaged in ranching near Springfield, Oregon. For his wife he chose Miss Jennie Hull of Iowa and they have three children: Bernice, Helen and John. The two first named are attending school. Mr. Bennett was married to his present wife August 24, 1906. Mrs. Bennett, who is a native of West Virginia, was the widow of S. E. McClure. She had two children by this marriage: Walter R. McClure, nineteen years of age, who will graduate from the University of Oregon in the class of 1913; and Nellie McClure, sixteen years of age, attending high school. The maiden name of Mrs. Bennett was Martha Rayburn and she is of Scotch and German extraction and a daughter of J. B. and Sarah F. (Frazier) Rayburn. They were natives of West Virginia and came to Oregon in 1888, settling near Irving, where they remained for about eight years, when they removed to Hatton, Washington. The father was engaged along agricultural lines until his death, which occurred in 1902, and the mother is now living on the home ranch in Washington. Mrs. Bennett is an educator of note and for twenty-two years has taught school and teaches at present in the Konipp school near her home. She is the second in order of birth in a family of twelve, the others being as follows: George, who is a resident of Missouri; Joseph, who is deceased; Virginia, the wife of B. F. Mulkey, of Eugene, Oregon; John, of Grand Junction, Colorado; Earl, of Pocatello, Idaho; Andrew Mack, of Hatton, Washington; Maggie, the wife of B. F. Keeney, of Soldier, Idaho; Charles C., of Puyallup, Washington; Orville E., of Post Falls, Idaho; Maude, the wife of Mr. Roberston, of Walla Walla, Washington; and Wilbur L., who is living in Idaho.

Mr. and Mrs. Bennett are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. He votes the republican ticket and served in either the capacity of school director or road supervisor ever since he came to Oregon, until he removed to Eugene. He has witnessed the progress and development of Oregon for thirty-eight years, seeing its forests and prairies transformed into fertile fields and beautiful orchards, while thriving commercial centers have sprung up, where there was not a sign of habitation when he first settled in the northwest. Mr. Bennett is an enthusiastic admirer of the state and never lets an opportunity escape to laud its resources and wonderful possibilities.

C. C. HARRIS. A beautiful home is that of C. C. Harris. A residence containing twelve rooms, built in 1911, overlooks Summer lake, furnishing a view which covers fifty miles on a clear day. In the rear of the building tower lofty mountains three thousand feet higher than his home, although the valley itself has an altitude of forty-four hundred feet. Across the front of the house extends a broad veranda and the lawn is shaded by fine box elder, poplar and locust trees. Altogether it is a beautiful country property and he has his own electric light works and water plant, pumping mountain-spring water into the house. This attractive home is a visible evidence of the well spent life of C. C. Harris, whose success is the merited reward of earnest labor intelligently directed.

C. C. Harris is a native of Iron county, Missouri, born May 16, 1860, and is a son of Zed G. and Malissa (Pease) Harris. The father was born in Kentucky in 1825 and the mother in Connecticut in 1827. They were married in Missouri, January 6, 1848, and Zed G. Harris died in that state in 1880. He had devoted his entire life to farming. The mother, not long after her husband's death, came to Lake county, Oregon, with her children and there passed away in 1900. Three of the children died in Missouri and one remained in that state at the time when four of the sons and three of the daughters accompanied their mother to the west. They located first at Willow ranch in the Goose Lake valley of California, there remaining until 1888, when they came to the Summer Lake valley, locating on the west bank of the lake. Of the children, the eldest is Mrs. Flavia McDowell, while the others who reached adult age are: S. B., who died in Goose Lake valley of Modoc county, California; Farnum E., of Lakeview, Oregon; Mrs. Della Fisher, of Ashland, Oregon; Clarence C., living on Summer Lake; Martin E., of Chehalis county, Washington; Frank M., mentioned elsewhere in this work; and Mrs. Florence Wakefield, of Elma, Washington.

In taking up the personal history of Clarence C. Harris we present to our readers the record of one who is widely and favorably known in Lake county and southern Oregon. About the time when he attained his majority the family came to the northwest and since 1888 he has resided continuously at the place of his present residence on Summer lake. He owns four hundred acres of land, nearly all of which is under cultivation, and is devoted to general farming and stock raising. He cultivates hay as well as cereals of various kinds, also raises a variety of fruit and has a fine garden in which is produced almost every known vegetable. Everything seems to grow well here and his place is improved to an exceptional degree. He has provided ample buildings for the shelter of grain and stock and in 1911 erected his present fine residence already described. It is attractively located, commanding a fine view of the scenic features of the district, and that hospitality is one of its features is indicated by the readiness with which their many friends visit this home. Mr. Harris runs about one hundred head of horses and mules on the range and has about fifty head of cattle. A circle enclosing the letter J on the right stifle is the brand used by Mr. Harris for his cattle. His horses are branded on the right shoulder with a figure four and a capital letter H. He raises Percheron horses and Durham cattle and is doing much to improve the grade of stock common in southern Oregon. In addition to his agricultural and stock-raising interests he is connected with a drug store in Lakeview and is also a shareholder in the Windy Hollow mines near Paisley.

In 1896 Mr. Harris was married to Miss Hattie J. Colvin, who was born in California in 1872 and is a daughter of S. T. Colvin, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Harris have three children: Hildred, Sidney and Reta. They have many friends in the county, enjoy an enviable social position, and Mr. Harris has a creditable reputation as a progressive business man and public-spirited citizen.

OLIVER W. JOHNSON. Among the business men of Springfield, who have been dominant factors in promoting the development of the city's commercial interests must be numbered Oliver W. Johnson, who has been successfully conducting a hardware store here for the past five years. He was born in Monona county, Iowa, in 1879, and is a son of Albert and Barbara T. (Thompson) Johnson, natives of Norway. The parents are both deceased, the father having passed away in South Dakota, while the mother's death occurred in Iowa on the 10th of July, 1901. Oliver W. Johnson is the only child born of this union but has one half-sister living, Aminda, the wife of Frank T. Jennewein of Iowa.

The boyhood and youth of Oliver W. Johnson contained little of the brightness and joy that rightfully belong to childhood. At the age of ten years he was compelled to lay aside his text-books and assist in the support of his mother and the family. During the succeeding nine years he worked continuously, carrying many of the responsibilities and oftentimes doing the work of a man. When he was nineteen, he was able to return to school for ten days, but this completed his education. He remained on the farm with his mother until 1896, the year prior to his marriage, when he left home and worked out for sixteen dollars per month.

After his marriage he rented two hundred acres of land and began his independent career as an agriculturist. He continued to engage in farming in his native state until 1902, meeting with a goodly measure of success, as he applied himself tirelessly and intelligently to the development of his interests. Believing that the west afforded better possibilities and greater advantages he disposed of his interests in the Hawkeye state and in 1902 came to Oregon, locating in Lane county. Upon his arrival here he purchased the McKinzie stock farm, located three miles east of Springfield. He operated this for two years, and then renting it removed to Eugene. Afterward he sold the farm and took a position with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. At the end of a year he resigned and came to Springfield and engaged in contracting and hauling, following this business for a similar period. He next bought a small stock of hardware and opened the first store of this kind in the town. He began in a very small way, and although he had had no previous experience in commercial activities, readily grasped the essential factors in the successful development of an enterprise of this kind. In the selection of his stock he used good judgment and made it a point to always carry a brand of goods that he could recommend as to quality, while his prices were reasonable. From the first he adopted a policy that commended him to the confidence of all who accorded him their patronage, and he was always accommodating, realizing that the best medium of advertising is well satisfied customers. During the intervening years he has developed his business in a most remarkable way and his stock now invoices about thirty-seven thousand dollars. He enjoys an excellent patronage, especially among the country people, and has every reason to feel highly gratified with his success. In addition to his fine stock of merchandise he owns the building where he is located. This is a modern two-story building, twenty-eight by one hundred and twenty feet, located on Main street. He has also acquired quite extensive interests in local residence property, having five houses and sixteen lots, and he is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Springfield.

Whiting, Iowa, was the scene of Mr. Johnson's marriage on the 27th of September, 1897, to Miss Lottie M. Keller, a daughter of Jacob and Louisa M. Keller. The father was born and reared in Switzerland to the age of nineteen years, at which time he emigrated to the United States. He subsequently located in Illinois and there he met and married the mother, who was a native of Pennsylvania. The father died in Eugene, November 29, 1909, and Mrs. Keller is living in Eugene. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, as follows: Lloyd, who was born on the 9th of July, 1901, now attending school; and Walter, who died at the age of three years.

In political matters, Mr. Johnson is a republican, but while he is not at all remiss in matters of citizenship, he has always declined to serve in an official position. Since residing her he has been nominated to the town council, but refused to accept the office. Nevertheless, he is one of the most public-spirited and progressive citizens of the town and can always be depended upon to assist in promoting any movement that he feels will benefit the community. He is one of the enthusiastic members of the Springfield Commercial Club and champions its various efforts to advance the development of the public utilities and the different local activities. Mr. Johnson deserves high commendation for the intelligent manner in which he has adapted his inherent abilities to the best utilization of his opportunities. He is in every sense of the word a self-made man, his advancement in life having been achieved by following well defined plans of action, rather than through the assistance of friends or by favorable circumstances. He possesses much determination of purpose and never yields a point that can be won through honorable, persistent effort, and as a result he is able to dominate conditions and is generally recognized by all who know him as an efficient and capable business man.

HON. BINGER HERMANN is one of the foremost men in Roseburg at the present time. He has served his city, state and country in many different capacities. He is a brilliant lawyer, a sound and discriminating judge, a loyal statesman and an upright and honorable man.

He was born in Maryland, February 19, 1843. His father, Dr. Henry Hermann, was a native of Germany, in which country his birth occurred May 18, 1812, and where he became professor in the University of Marburg. He came to America in 1831 and engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in the city of Baltimore, and later in western Maryland, and then removing to the Pacific coast, with a colony of Marylanders, he became the founder of the first permanent settlement of the Coquille valley. He reached this section of the Oregon Territory with a number of Baltimore people in October, 1858, and like the rest of his associates, took up a public land claim under the preemption law. He was one of the first early pioneer physicians along the southern coast of Oregon, and his death occurred in the Coquille river valley on December 16, 1869. His wife, Elizabeth (Hopkins) Hermann, was a native of Wales born March 1, 1821. She survived him many years and died April 2, 1900. Of the family, eight children grew to maturity and all but one are now residents of the state of Oregon.

Binger Hermann received his early education in the public schools of western Maryland and supplemented this by an academic course in Irving College, near Baltimore city. He came to Oregon with his parents in 1859, just after its admission as a state, and engaged for several years in teaching school, having been one of the first two teachers of a public school in Coos county and then in Douglas county. He then determined to make the law his life profession and at Roseburg entered the office of Judge Chadwick, who afterward became governor of Oregon. He still later continued his law studies in San Francisco in the office of Hon. John B. Felton, a distinguished member of the San Francisco bar. He was admitted to the bar of the supreme court of Oregon in October, 1866, and entered upon the active practice of his profession in Roseburg, Oregon, where he continued except when engaged in the public service. Just prior to his admission to the bar and before the close of the Civil war, Mr. Hermann assisted in recruiting a company of volunteers under the last call of President Abraham Lincoln for troops. He was to have been commissioned as first lieutenant. However, owing to the close of the war in 1865, and before the full company was completed, it was consolidated with other fractional companies and this ambition was not realized.

Mr. Hermann, however, devoted himself to his chosen profession and soon proved himself to be an active, able and successful lawyer. His reputation grew and his attainments led him to be recognized as a valuable asset to the political life of Oregon. He was elected to the legislature for his home county in 1866 and two years later he was made state senator for the three counties of Douglas, Coos and Curry. He also served during this time as deputy collector of internal revenue for the state of Oregon, and later, under the administration of Governor Z. F. Moody, was appointed judge advocate with the title of colonel of the Oregon militia.

In 1884 he was elected to the United States congress as the single representative for the entire state of Oregon, and began a political career which in its success and long duration has rarely been equalled in the history of the Pacific Coast states. He served for eight years as representative from the whole state and upon its division into two congressional districts, was continued as representative of the first district for four years more, making a continuous service of twelve years. He served under the two administrations of President Cleveland, and continued through that of President Harrison. One of his associates during this service was William McKinley of Ohio, who when he became president, selected Mr. Hermann as commissioner of the general land office, in which he had supervision of all the public domain. He served in this capacity for six years first under the administration of President McKinley, and a portion of the time under that of President Roosevelt. After his service in this capacity for six years, he resigned and three months afterward was again reelected to congress from Oregon, as representative of his former congressional district. He served one term and was then reelected to another, thus making a record of sixteen years as a member of the United States congress. After the expiration of his last term, Mr. Hermann engaged in several tours throughout Europe and the Oriental nations, and returning to his old home at Roseburg, he resumed the practice of his profession, in which he is still engaged. He has gained a reputation during these years of official and professional service for ability and integrity in everything relating to his public and private life. During his official service as commissioner of the general land office, he became the author of an interesting volume on the Louisiana Purchase, now in the Congressional Library at Washington, D. C., which showed a breadth of view and a detailed study of his subject which led to a change in the United States cession maps, which no longer exhibited that purchase as extending to the Pacific ocean and which excluded Oregon from that claim. This claim had been made by Calhoun as secretary of state when presenting to Great Britain our claims to the Oregon territory. Official maps and school histories had also maintained this contention for many years.

Mr. Hermann was united in marriage to Miss Flora A. Tibbetts, a native of Indiana and a daughter of Rev. Jonathan Tibbetts, an old pioneer missionary and preacher in the Methodist Episcopal church. The four surviving children of Mr. Hermann and his wife, are: Schiller B., a graduate of Washington and Lee University of Lexington, Virginia, who has served for several terms as a member of the Oregon legislature, and who now resides in Portland, Oregon; Agnes, the wife of Dr. K. L. Miller, a practicing physician of Roseburg, Oregon; Maybelle, the wife of H. Prescott Gately, a prominent lawyer of Washington, D. C.; and Elbert B., a student of the law department of the George Washington University of that city, and who is now associated with his father in the practice of law. He is also the city attorney of Roseburg.

Mr. Hermann has been an adherent of the principles of the republican party from the time of the Civil war. During his public career he was intimately associated with the inauguration by the government of numerous public enterprises in the state of Oregon. He aided in the passage of many river and harbor appropriations for Oregon and for the establishment of lighthouse and life-saving stations along the coast. He was the author of the act of congress, known as the Indian Depredation law, which provided payment for the damages committed by hostile Indians upon the property of settlers during the Indian wars.

Fraternally, Mr. Hermann is a Knight Templar Mason and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. He is also prominent in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and belongs to the Encampment. He is at present Exalted Ruler of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of the Umpqua valley.

He possesses a clear mind, uniting as it does the capacity for detail required in his legal practice, with the broad liberal statesmanship which has always marked his public career. He is of the Western American tradition, cool and resourceful in an emergency, devoted to his country and to its interests and welfare, and is mentally and morally an example of the shrewd, indefatigable and resourceful American type, which in politics and in industry, in commerce and finance, in the conquest of a vast continent and in the upbuilding of a rich, powerful and strenuous nation, has proved itself one of the most potent among the tribes of men.

EDWARD C. MORTON is a well known landowner and a prominent citizen residing just outside the city limits of Creswell. He was born in Ohio in 1849, a son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Banard) Morton. The father was a native of Pennsylvania and the grandfather was born in Ireland. In 1855 the father and mother removed to Zanesville, Ohio, to Iowa, where the father became a farmer, following that occupation until the time of his death, August 8, 1902. In his family were six children: Thomas, of Mason City, Iowa; John B., of Shelby, Iowa; Mary A., the wife of J. D. Caughran, of Tacoma, Washington; Willamine, the wife of Levi Dickerson, of Altoona, Iowa; Charles, of Missouri; and Edward C.

The subject of this review began earning his own living when he was twelve years of age by working for a man who had the beef contracts for the army during the Civil war and for four years was thus employed. He then learned the horseshoeing trade in Iowa, after which he purchased a livery barn and conducted it in a very successful manner for sixteen years. He then removed to Norfolk, Nebraska, and purchased a farm of two hundred and eighty acres in that vicinity. Upon this farm he lived and labored for thirteen years, when, selling out his holdings in Nebraska, he removed to Oregon in 1904, locating near Creswell, where he purchased one hundred and eighty acres of land and later bought ten acres of timber. He still owns one hundred and eighty acres and has one hundred and twenty acres of his farm under a good state of cultivation, and is engaged in growing wheat, oats, potatoes and hay. He built the second house of any consequence in Creswell when he erected his present large residence, which is situated just outside the city limits. He also owns the business property where his harness shop is located and another five-room residence on Front street.

On January 11, 1874, Mr. Morton was married to Miss Louisa R. Smith, a daughter of David and Elizabeth (Locker) Smith, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Smith were the parents of the following children: Agnes, deceased; Frances, the wife of John Hedgner, of Fremont, Nebraska, and the mother of two children, Mamie and Guy; Louisa R., now Mrs. Edward C. Morton; Annie, the wife of Oscar McCollum, of Nebraska; George, deceased, who was married to Laura Wyatt, by whom he had two children, Laura and Jessie; Ernest; Everett; Ella, who is the wife of Ed Fitzgerald, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and the mother of five children, Ed, Ella, Geraldine, Ellsworth and Bertha; Jessie, the wife of James Melligan, of Missouri; and Etta, the wife of John Lay, of Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Morton are the parents of six children: Charles W., of Norfolk, Nebraska, who is married and has eight children, Hattie, Edna, Lee, David, Lenora, Dallas, Clarence and Grace; David of Creswell, who is married and has one child, Earl E.; Frank, who is married and resides in Goldendale, Washington; Emma, the wife of William Holterman, of Creswell and the mother of two children, Gladys and Henry; Troy H., who is a harness maker and resides at home; and Nellie, also residing at home.

In his political views Mr. Morton is independent, preferring to cast his vote for the candidate who is best fitted for the office regardless of party affiliation. He has never been an office seeker, having given all his attention to other matters. He is well known in Creswell, where he ranks as one of its best citizens and where he is universally respected.

CAPTAIN ELIPHALET FOLLETT. While New Pine Creek is one of the recently established towns of Lake county its citizenship includes Captain Eliphalet Follett, one of the venerable residents of this part of the state. He was born in what was Lake county but is now Geauga county, Ohio, February 2, 1828, a son of Ashley and Diantha (Montgomery) Follett, the former born in Massachusetts in 1798 and the latter in New York in 1808. They were pioneer residents of northeastern Ohio, living in the reserve, where they were married. The father was a millwright by trade and followed his chosen occupation when eastern Ohio was almost an unbroken wilderness. About 1835 the family removed to southwestern Michigan, settling at Port Sheldon, where Mr. Follett built a mill, establishing the town not far from Michigan City. He afterward removed to Chicago, Illinois, and later to Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin. He subsequently resided in Iowa and in 1838 went to Chippewa, Wisconsin, then he removed once more to the Menominee river and then back to Clayton county, Iowa. Again, however, he took up his abode in Wisconsin in 1844, remaining for four years, after which he returned to Iowa. There he secured a tract of wild land and became actively engaged in farming. The mother became a widow in 1847.

Captain Eliphalet Follett was the second of seven children and as the oldest son was away from home, the care of the family devolved upon him and he continued to work on the old homestead until he attained his majority, when he married. He afterward entered the field of general merchandising at Elkader, Clayton county, Iowa, but eventually removed to Elgin, Fayette county, that state, where he conducted a store from 1853 until 1862. Following the outbreak of the Civil war his patriotic spirit was aroused and, feeling that his first duty was to his country, he enlisted on the 23d of July, 1862, as captain of Company H, Thirty-eighth Iowa Infantry. He served with that command until January 1, 1865, when he was honorably discharged by reason of the consolidation of his regiment with the Thirty-fourth of Iowa. He was on duty with the Thirteenth Army Corps but was detached and served on the Mississippi until the surrender of Vicksburg. He was then sent to the convalescent camp at Carrollton, Louisiana, but later participated in the capture of Brownsville, Texas, where the troops remained for nine months as an army of observation. At the close of that period they returned to New Orleans and were ordered to Mobile bay, seventeen days being spent in the capture of Fort Morgan. From that point the troops proceeded to Morganza, Louisiana, and to Florida and participated in the battle of Fort Blakely. They also assisted in the capture of the steamer Alabama and later went to Houston, Texas. The most important battle of the war in which Captain Follett participated was that at Vicksburg.

When the war was over he returned to Iowa, and engaged in railroading for more than two years, but he also owned a farm of two hundred and seventy acres there and gave some of his time to its supervision. In 1876 he went to Yolo county, California, and in 1879 removed to Willowbranch, Modoc county, that state, seven miles south of New Pine Creek, Oregon. In 1881 he suffered a stroke of paralysis and since that time has engaged in merchandising, being identified with business interests in New Pine Creek since 1893. He has a well appointed store and he remains a factor in business circles although many men of his years have long since put aside commercial or industrial cares to spend the evening of life quietly and without any business activities to claim their attention.

Captain Follett has been married twice. On the 7th of February, 1847, in Iowa, he wedded Christenia Downie, a native of Canada, who was born June 7, 1833, and died in New Pine Creek in November, 1904. Their children were seven in number: John A., living in Lyon county, Iowa; Blanch, who is the widow of Columbus Cannon and resides in New Pine Creek; Josephine, who is the widow of L. C. Button and makes her home in Sacramento, California; A. E., of New Pine Creek; Ernest B., of Benton county, Oregon; E. W. G., of New Pine Creek; and Sadie L., the wife of Joseph L. Hampton of Paisley, Oregon. On the 17th of June, 1910, Captain Follett was married to Mrs. Jane L. (Worthington) Mulkey, who had been a widow for fourteen years. She was born in Davidson county, North Carolina, April 29, 1835, and when five years of age came to Missouri with her parents, Brooks and Hannah (Green) Worthington, who were natives of North Carolina but died in Missouri, where her father followed farming. In early womanhood Jane Worthington became the wife of Johnson Mulkey and they removed to California, where the latter's death occurred April 21, 1895, when he had reached the age of sixty-five years, two months and eight days. They were the parents of four sons and four daughters, of whom six are living.

For many years Captain Follett has been a stalwart republican but his first vote was cast in 1849 in support of democratic candidates. He voted in 1856 for Fremont and for each presidential candidate of the republican party since that time. He has served as justice of the peace and in other local offices and for seven years was postmaster of New Pine Creek. For thirty-five years he has been a Master Mason and since 1855 has been an Odd Fellow, having in that year joined the lodge at West Union, Fayette county, Iowa. At the time of the Civil war every one of its members enlisted for service at the front, whereby the lodge was broken up, and after the war he aided in organizing another lodge at Elgin, Iowa. He was at one time commander of the Grand Army post at New Pine Creek but there is no organization here now, as there are not enough members to support it. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church. Captain Follett is remarkably active for one of his years, for, although he has passed the eighty-fourth milestone on life's journey, he is in business and in spirit and interest seems many years younger. He keeps in touch with the progress of the world and throughout his life has actively figured in projects and movements which were of value in matters of citizenship and as factors in the attainment of material success. He has ever been as true and loyal to the old flag as when he followed the stars and stripes upon southern battlefields.

WILLIAM MORRIS is one of the highly respected citizens of Florence, this state, where he lives retired. He was born in Indiana, June 27, 1835, the son of Ivy and Abigail (Steward) Morris. The father was a native of Virginia, his birth having occurred in the vicinity of Norfolk, and the mother was born in Bourbon county, Kentucky. They were united in wedlock in Kentucky and in that state continued to live until 1853, at which time they removed to Switzerland county, Indiana, where Mr. Morris was engaged in farming until 1850. In that year he removed with his family to Lee county, Iowa, and later, in 1857, he moved to Livingston county, Missouri, remaining there until 1876, when he removed to California, where he continued to live during the remaining years of his life. His wife, who became the mother of William Morris, died in Iowa in 1855, while Mr. Morris' death occurred in California in 1881, when he was eighty-one years of age. They were the parents of nine children: Phoebe, who resides in southern Kansas; Joseph E., of Florence, Oregon; Amy, who passed away in Meigs county, Ohio; William, of this review; Anias, a resident of Bandon, Oregon; Martha A., who makes her home in the eastern part of this state; Mary E., of Oakland, California; and Jacob and Jesse, both of whom are deceased.

William Morris was reared at home and received his education in the public schools. He left the paternal roof at the age of twenty years and started in life for himself. After leaving his father's home he spent some time in traveling through various portions of the eastern and middle states and immediately following his marriage, which occurred in his twenty-third year, he established himself as a farmer upon his own farm of eighty acres, which was located in the state of Missouri. While engaged as a farmer he enlisted in the Civil war in 1864, joining Company G, Forty-fourth Missouri Volunteer Infantry. During the period of his enlistment he was engaged in two pitched battles and had the good fortune to pass through the fire and field of death unharmed and was mustered out of service in 1865. Immediately after the close of the war he returned to his home in Missouri, where he continued to live until 1866, at which time he disposed of his eighty acres and purchased a farm of forty-one acres located near Chillicothe, Missouri, upon which he maintained his residence and continued to be engaged in general farming for a period of twenty years. He then sold his place and removed to Montague county in northern Texas, where he purchased a fine body of land and was there engaged in agricultural pursuits for six years. On selling his real-estate interests in Texas he removed to Lane county, this state, and was engaged in farming for thirteen years. At the close of that period he disposed of his farm, which contained one hundred and sixty acres, and also a smaller piece of ranch land containing sixty-four acres and removed to Florence, where he now lives a retired life in the comfortable residence of which he is the owner.

In 1857 Mr. Morris was united in marriage to Miss Nancy J. Wood, a native of Shelby county, Kentucky, and a daughter of James Wood, of Virginia. Both of her parents are now deceased, having died many years ago. In their family were fourteen children, of whom Mrs. Morris was the only one to settle in this state. To Mr. and Mrs. Morris nine children were born: Sarah, the wife of M. E. Perry, who is engaged in farming in Oklahoma; Mary W., the wife of William Carleton, a ranchman of Monroe, this state; Ivy, who is engaged in ranching at Point Terrace; Amy, the wife of Marion Morris of Florence; James, a blacksmith of Florence; Joseph L., who resides near Elmira; Dolly, the wife of Welcome Warren, of Blaine, Washington; Mattie Lee, of Acme, Oregon; and a child who died in infancy. The mother of this family passed to her reward beyond in 1905.

William Morris after a long and active business life is in the well earned enjoyment of a competency which is sufficient to provide him with comfort for the remaining years of his earthly pilgrimage. He is a man highly respected and one of the solid and valued resident citizens of Lane county, this state, in which he has spent many years of his active life.

GEORGE L. GILFRY. Among the pioneers of Creswell is George L. Gilfry, the first mayor of the town, vice president and a director of the Fruit Growers Bank, which he helped to organize, a retired merchant and a capable public official. He was born in Illinois, March 10, 1841, a son of John T. and Delila C. (Bristow) Gilfry. The father was born in Pennsylvania and the mother in Kentucky, but the grandparents on both sides were pioneers in Oregon, their emigration to that state dating back to 1848. To John T. and Delila (Bristow) Gilfry six children were born: George L.; Henry H., who has filled the position of chief clerk of the United States senate in Washington, D. C., for the past thirty years; William R., a farmer in Lane county; John E. and Susan E., both of whom are deceased; and Sarah F., the wife of Ira Petty, a mine owner of Seattle, Washington.

George L. Gilfry was given a common-school education in the schools of Lane county, to which place his parents removed when he was seven years of age. When twenty years of age he started to learn the milling business in his father's mill and later bought an interest in the same. He was subsequently placed in charge of the mill, which he conducted for seventeen years. The father also operated a store at Cloverdale, where he was a successful business man. At the end of seventeen years George L. Gilfry sold his interest in his father's mill and hauled the first lumber into Creswell, with which he erected the first building in that town. This structure was for general merchandising purposes and into it he removed the goods from his father's store at Cloverdale. Both the father and son removed to Creswell and engaged in business there together, being the first merchants of the town. The store was afterward burned and they replaced it with a brick building and continued together in the merchandise business for seventeen years. The father was the first postmaster, the first express agent and the first railroad agent in Creswell and, with the exception of his position as postmaster, he held these offices for the entire period of seventeen years in which he remained in active life. At the end of that time he sold out his business interests and retired, making his home with his daughter until the time of his death, which occurred May 25, 1899, at the age of seventy-eight years, six months and seven days. When the store in Creswell was sold George L. Gilfry removed to eastern Oregon, where he engaged in the cattle business. He became a prominent man in his district and was elected county commissioner and school director in Lake county, but after being there for a time he decided to return to Cloverdale and resigned his official positions. On returning to Cloverdale he made his residence in the old home until 1907, when he came to Creswell, where he lived retired in his town residence. During the early years of his mercantile career, from 1854 to 1864, Mr. Gilfry hauled all of his merchandise from Portland with ox teams during the summer seasons, as the roads were impassable in winter. It was his custom to make five trips each summer, which was sufficient to keep the store stocked with merchandise. Mr. Gilfry helped to organize the first bank in Creswell and is now vice president and a director of the same.

On March 25, 1862, Mr. Gilfry was united in marriage to Miss Amanda Hazleton, a daughter of R. H. Hazleton, of Cottage Grove. Her parents were pioneers in Oregon, having emigrated to this state in 1852. In their family were the following children: Thomas P., Frances M. and Mary J., all of whom are deceased; Amanda, who became Mrs. Gilfry; William T., deceased; Harrison H., of Alturas, California; John W., of Seattle, Washington; and James H. and L. H., both of Spokane, Washington. To Mr. and Mrs. Gilfry was born a daughter, Nellie M., who received a business college education and later was a student in the University of Oregon at Eugene. She married A. W. Irvin, who is the proprietor of a cafe at Salem, Oregon. Mrs. Gilfry passed away on the 22d of August, 1883, and on August 24, 1889, Mr. Gilfry wedded Mrs. Louisa M. Cooley, the widow of William Cooley, and a daughter of John and Mary (Balkey) Tunell. Mr. and Mrs. Tunell had a family of five children: Mary and Henry, both deceased; John, of Creswell; Minnie, the wife of William Lane, of Creswell; and Louisa M., now Mrs. Gilfry.

Although democratic in his political views Mr. Gilfry is popular with men of every political faith and has always taken an active part in public affairs. Both he and his father were charter members of the first Odd Fellows lodge, which was organized in Creswell, July 1, 1903, the lodge being named in honor of the father. Mr. Gilfry is active in educational affairs, having been school director and clerk in his home district for a number of years and he also helped to organize the first public school in Creswell. He has long since been recognized as one of the leading citizens of Creswell and Lane county.

JACOB BEUSCH. For thirty-one years Jacob Beusch was a resident of Oregon and throughout his life he manifested many of the sterling traits of the Swiss people, whose loyalty, courage and honesty have won for them the admiration and esteem of the world. He was born in Switzerland in 1822 and was reared in the faith of the Calvin Baptist church, his parents being very strict church people. When a young man he left the land of the Alps and came to the United States, settling first in Wisconsin. He afterward brought his parents to this country and their last days were spent in Minnesota, in which state he resided for some time.

Jacob Beusch was married in Minnesota, in 1850, to Miss Marie Catharine Elizabeth Splitter, who was born in Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Germany, July 7, 1831, and at the age of fifteen years came to the new world, joining her father in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. She was a daughter of William and Sophia Splitter, who afterward removed with their family to Minnesota, where their last days were passed. In the old country her father had been a Lutheran school teacher but in Minnesota he purchased land and engaged in farming, becoming one of the respected and representative agriculturists of his district. In his family were three children: Mrs. Beusch; William, of Kansas; and Caroline, deceased.

Mr. and Mrs. Beusch began their domestic life in Minnesota, where they remained for fifteen years after their marriage and then came to Oregon by way of the Isthmus route. They were shipwrecked on the island of Jamaica and sailed from Panama on the America, which was later shipwrecked. They were just one ship ahead of the Juniper, which was sunk. They thus seemed to have marvelous escapes, for they reached their destination in safety and at length settled in Portland. Mr. Beusch afterward became proprietor of a store at Columbia City and later removed to Beaver valley, where he engaged in farming until the time of his death, which occurred on the 17th of April, 1896. His widow continued to reside upon the farm for two years and then removed to Paisley.

To Mr. and Mrs. Beusch were born six children: Jacob, deceased; William, residing in Columbia county, Oregon; Wilhelmina, who was a twin of William and died at the age of eleven years and seven months; Minnie, the wife of Dr. A. A. Whitam, of California; Mary, who died at the age of one year; and Catharine, who died when twenty-eight years of age. Mrs. Beusch is today the oldest lady residing in Paisley. For thirty years she has been a Spiritualist, which was also the belief of her husband. They were in perfect harmony in their religious views as well as in other matters, and theirs was a congenial and happy marital relationship. Mr. Beusch had reached the age of seventy-five years when called to his final rest and his death was deeply deplored not only by his family but also by many friends.

THOMAS B. STEWART, who was a farmer of broad experience later became a prominent citizen of Springfield, Oregon, and a wealthy land owner, bearing a most excellent reputation in the community. He was born in Vermont, March 22, 1851, a son of James and Mary (Rouark) Stewart. The father was a native of Scotland and the mother was born in Ireland. They were married in Vermont. In their family were ten children, as follows: William, an attorney of Fairfield, Vermont; Thomas B., of this review; James, a farmer of Salem, Oregon; Frances, deceased; Henry, residing in Kansas City, Kansas; Nicholas, of St. Albans, Vermont; John, also of that city; Dora, who passed away in infancy; another daughter whose death also occurred in infancy; and Mary, the wife of Henry Stoltz, of Minnesota.

Thomas B. Stewart received his education in his native state where he remained until he attained the age of twenty years, when he and his brother James removed to Wisconsin. He began to make his own way in the world at the age of eleven years when he left home and began working for various farmers of the neighborhood. He was industrious and saved the money he made so that at the age of twenty-four, when he was married, he could buy eighty acres of land in Wisconsin, upon which he lived, cultivating the soil and improving the farm, for five years. He then sold that property and removed to the northern part of Minnesota, where he took up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres. He later sold his Minnesota homestead and was given charge of a very large railroad farm in another part of the same state, which he managed for five years. He then followed teaming as a business for one year and then selling his teaming business, again purchased land in southern Minnesota and after living on that farm for some time sold out and removed to Wisconsin, remaining there for one year. He then removed to South Dakota, where he purchased two hundred acres of land upon which he lived one and a half years, when he sold out and went back to southern Minnesota and bought two hundred acres of land, upon which he lived for ten years. This farm he cultivated in an industrious and able manner, placing upon it needed improvements and making of it a fine agricultural property. At the end of ten years he sold his farm in southern Minnesota and removed to Oregon in October, 1902, where he purchased one hundred and sixty acres a short distance east of Springfield. A little later he purchased fifty-eight acres adjoining. This land he improved with his usual enterprise and skill, bringing his place under a good state of cultivation and making of it a valuable property. The growth of Springfield a little after he purchased his land justified him in subdividing sixty acres lying nearest the city and a large portion of that subdivision he sold before his death. Since his demise his widow who still owns one hundred and five acres of the original one hundred and sixty acres purchased by her husband, has sold a goodly portion of the subdivided land. The land which she retains adjoins the city limits of Springfield and is worth about five hundred dollars an acre.

Mr. Stewart was married, in Hudson, Wisconsin, the 7th of May, 1874, to Miss Harriet Cooper, a native of New York, but as her parents, William and Maria (Chapman) Cooper, removed to Wisconsin soon after her birth she was reared and educated in the latter state. Her father was a native of Canada while her mother was born in the Empire state. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Cooper were born five children as follows: Mary, the wife of Constantine McLaughlin, of California; Dora and Lucy, both deceased; Mrs. Stewart; and Laura, who married Elias Taylor, of Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart became the parents of the following children: George, a resident of Goshen, who was born in 1875, is married and has two children, Harold and Lucille; Robert, who was born in 1879, has one son, Robert, and is employed by the city of Portland, Oregon; Tillie, the wife of Willis Warner, of Springfield, and the mother of three children, Sidney, Madge and Donna; Alice, the wife of John Seavey, of Springfield, by whom she has one daughter, Hazel; Jessie, who married Fred Larison, of Portland, and has two children, Harry and Stewart; Francis, of Springfield, who is married and has one son, Irwin; Fred, who resides on the homestead with his mother and is a member of the Second Company, Oregon Coast Guards; Irl and Allen, both at home and pupils of the high school.

Mr. Stewart in his political views was a socialist. He was public-spirited and always took an active interest in the upbuilding of the communities and neighborhoods in which he lived during his lifetime. He was a man of intelligence, energy and ability and was without exception a leader in the various communities in which he resided. He was an active member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Grange, and took great interest in the affairs of those organizations. By his death, which occurred on the 18th of June, 1909, Springfield lost one of its most valuable, best beloved and most prominent citizens. To the widow who survives him is left the responsibility of caring for a large and valuable estate and in the management of it she is measuring up to the demands placed upon her.

DR. J. A. CHASTAIN is living retired, having reached the age of seventy-eight years. At the present time he has put aside business cares of every nature and is enjoying a well earned rest. His life has been in many respects a serviceable factor in the world's work, for he has ever ably performed the duties that have devolved upon him. He was born in Meigs county, Tennessee, April 3, 1834, his parents being William and Mary Ann (Frie) Chastain. The father's birth occurred in Simpson county, Kentucky, February 11, 1809, and the mother was born in Blount county, Alabama, October 16, 1814. A portion of the parents' youth was passed in Meigs county, Tennessee, where they were married, and in October, 1839, they removed to Lawrence county, Missouri, where they reared their family. At length they sold their interests there and went to Howell county, Missouri, where Mr. Chastain passed away January 24, 1866. His widow afterward established her home in Baxter county, Arkansas, where she died at the age of sixty-seven years. The father had always followed farming and blacksmithing and had thus provided for the support of his family, numbering six children, namely: J. A.; Martha J., deceased; Joseph J., who is living in Norfolk, Arkansas; Elijah L., who died at the age of three years; Mary Katharine, who has passed away; and Elizabeth, living in Baxter county, Arkansas.

J. A. Chastain resided with his parents until twenty-two years of age, at which time he turned his attention to merchandising with a partner at the Grandy lead mines near Joplin, Missouri, where he remained for two years. There he engaged in the drug business and also studied medicine at Sherwood, Missouri. He afterward became postmaster of Sherwood, which position he occupied for three years. At length his medical studies prepared him for practice and for thirty years he was an active representative of the profession. At different times, however, other activities have also claimed a part of his time and energies. He was engaged in newspaper publication as proprietor of the Boone County (Ark.) Record for about six years but at length disposed of his property at Bedford and in 1875 made the journey to Oregon with ox teams, using five and a half months in crossing the plains and mountains that lay between his old home in the Mississippi valley and his new home upon the Pacific coast. At length he located in Jackson county, Oregon, where he entered upon the practice of medicine and in 1888 he established his office in Bonanza, where he successfully followed his profession until about twelve years ago, when he retired. His practice called him into various sections of Klamath county and his ability was evidenced in the excellent results which followed his labors. He was very careful in the diagnosis of his cases and his judgment concerning the outcome of disease was rarely if ever at fault. He also conducted a hotel and feed barn at Bonanza for a number of years and likewise had a homestead claim but has since disposed of all of his invested interests save his home.

On the 4th of March, 1861, in Carthage, Missouri, Dr. Chastain married Miss Sarah T. Boyd, who died at Sarcoxie, Missouri, August 30, 1862, leaving a son, William S., who is living in Farmington, New Mexico. On the 1st of March, 1866, Dr. Chastain was again married, his second union being with Mary J. King. Their children are ten in number: Charles, who died at the age of two years; George, of Klamath Falls, Oregon; Cora and Price, both deceased, who died at the age of nine and sixteen months respectively; Ada, who passed away at the age of eight years; Ann, the wife of Arthur Langell, of Bonanza; Etta M., the widow of Roy I. Kilgore, of Bonanza; Claude, of Klamath Falls, who is assistant cashier of the American Bank & Trust Company; Sarah J., the wife of Robert Goss, of Bonanza; and John K., who resides at Bonanza.

Dr. Chastain votes with the democratic party and has held some local offices. He served for one term as deputy sheriff of Jasper county, Missouri, was the first city recorder of Bonanza, which position he filled for six years, and for a number of years was justice of the peace, in which connection he discharged his duties in a prompt and able manner, his decisions being fair and impartial. For over a half century he has been a member of the Baptist church and his earnest, consistent Christian life has gained for him the high regard and the veneration which should ever be accorded one of his years.

JOSEPH W. STEWART. One of the most prominent and influential business men of Springfield was the late Joseph W. Stewart, who for forty years was identified with the commercial interests of the city. He was a man of much energy and determination of purpose and achieved success in his undertakings through following a well defined line of action. As he always conducted his business in accordance with a policy that commended him to the confidence of the people he built up a large patronage and was one of the best known pioneer merchants of Lane county.

He was born in Macoupin county, Illinois, on the 13th of September, 1835, and was a son of Elias and Elizabeth (England) Stewart, the father of Scotch-Irish and the mother of English extraction. Elias Stewart was a native of Virginia, whence he removed to Macoupin county, Illinois, where he met and married Miss England, who had been born and reared in that county, and there they passed the early years of their domestic life. They subsequently decided upon removal to the northwest, being influenced by the better opportunities it afforded and, disposing of their interests in Illinois, they joined together with their six children an emigrant train and started to Oregon with an ox team. The journey was fraught with sadness, as the mother succumbed to cholera when they were crossing the plains and was laid to rest on the western prairies. Upon their arrival in this state the father filed on a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres on the Willamette river, located between Springfield and Eugene. Later he traded his holding to Charles Mulligan for a tract of the same size, upon a large portion of which the town of Eugene is now located. The first college built in Lane county was erected on this ranch, the site subsequently becoming known as College Hill. It was a denominational institution and was under the control of the Presbyterian church. There were eight children born to Mr. and Mrs. Stewart, our subject being the eldest of the family.

The early education of Joseph W. Stewart was acquired in the common schools of his native state and completed in the college that stood on his father's ranch at Eugene. He was early trained to agricultural pursuits and remained on the home place, assisting his father with its operation until he was twenty-two. Five years later the father presented him and his brother John with two mules and they went to Boise, Idaho, and prospected in the mines for a year. During that time Mr. Stewart cleared up about eighteen hundred dollars, which was the first money he had ever earned for himself. Upon his return to Eugene he engaged as clerk in the general mercantile store of Meyer Rosenblatt, and after a few months together with his brother and Mr. Rosenblatt engaged in business. They came to Springfield and, on the 5th of November, 1863, purchased the mercantile establishment belonging to the late Frank B. Dunn. They were associated in the conduct of this enterprise until 1873, when Mr. Stewart bought out the interest of his partners and continued the business alone. He was an alert, enterprising man, possessing much foresight and sagacity and met with success in the development of his interests. His close application, earnest effort and honorable methods of conducting his transactions brought him well merited success, and upon his retirement in 1902 he controlled practically all of the business of this section on the east side of the Willamette. He was one of the representative pioneer merchants of the county and one of the most substantial citizens.

Mr. Stewart was married twice. His first union was with Miss Julia Walker, a native of Greene county, Missouri, who came to Oregon with her parents in 1854. They located in Eugene and there Mr. Stewart met and married the daughter. She passed away on August 16, 1874, at the age of twenty-seven years, leaving two children: Henry W., of Eugene; and Hattie, the wife of O. A. Wheeler of Portland, whose father formerly owned and operated a saw and grist mill at Springfield. On the 2d of December, 1875, Mr. Stewart was married to Miss Elizabeth M. Evans, who was born in Baltimore, Maryland, March 17, 1852. She is a daughter of Francis B. and Mary Ann Evans, the father a native of Charleston, South Carolina, and the mother of Baltimore. The parents both passed the entire period of their domestic life in the latter city and there the mother died in 1858, and the father in 1859. He was a member of the Episcopal church and a master in the Masonic fraternity and he also belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. After the death of her parents, Mrs. Stewart came to Oregon and lived with her brother, James H. Evans, who was a surveyor in the employ of the government. At that time he was located in the land office at Eugene but was subsequently transferred to Lakeview, this state, assuming his duties there in 1878. He was registrar in the office at that point until his death, which occurred in 1880. Mr. Evans was a Mason and was the first member of the fraternity in Oregon to become a Knight Templar, having been admitted to this branch of the order in Portland, this state, in 1876. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Francis B. Evans, of whom Mrs. Stewart is the only one now living. To Mr. and Mrs. Stewart there were born three children. James E., who was born on January 5, 1877, is an employe of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at Springfield. He married Miss Hazel Walling, a native of Michigan, and they have one child, Louis. Mary Ethel married James L. Clark, who is engaged in the real-estate business in Springfield, and they also have one son, Joseph E. Harry M., the youngest member of the family, is engaged in the mercantile business in this city. For his wife he chose Miss Elsie C. Boutin of Payfield, Wisconsin, and they have one daughter, Charlotte Elizabeth.

Mr. Stewart was not identified with any religious organization, although as a child he attended the Methodist Episcopal church in which his mother held membership. Politically he was a democrat and held various local offices. For many years he served as a school director and he represented his district in the state legislature for two terms, while he had the unusual distinction of serving as postmaster under both a republican and democratic administration. His office was never inspected until he resigned, after eight years service, and his accounts were then short only two cents. The postoffice was robbed once while he was in charge and his store was robbed on seven different occasions. He was a most estimable man and was widely known throughout this section of the state, where he had many friends of long years' standing. Public-spirited in matters of citizenship, honorable and upright in all business transactions and thoroughly reliable and faithful to every trust imposed in him, he well merited the respect and esteem he was generally accorded by all who knew him. His death was a calamity to the entire community as his loss was deeply felt not only in his immediate family but in the social and business circles of the town.

DR. B. A. OWENS-ADAIR (Autobiographical). I was born February 7, 1840, in Van Buren county, Missouri, second daughter of Thomas and Sarah Damron Owens. My father and mother crossed the plains with the first emigrant wagons of 1843, and settled on Clatsop plains, Clatsop county, Oregon, near the mouth of the great Columbia "River of the West," within the ceaseless roar of the mighty Pacific. I was then very small and delicate in stature and of a highly nervous sensitive nature and yet I possessed a strong and vigorous constitution, and a most wonderful endurance and recuperative powers. These qualities were inherited not only from my parents but my grandparents as well. My grandfather Owens was a man of exceptional financial ability. He owned a large plantation in Kentucky and had many slaves and many stores throughout the state. He was a grandson of Sir Thomas Owens, of Wales, of historic fame and my grandmother was of German descent. Small in stature but executive, she took full charge of the plantation in my grandfather's absence which was most of the time. She was the head of her household as well. Everything came under her capable control. She was the mother of twelve children. All grew to maturity, married and went on giving vigorous sons and daughters to the young and growing republic.

My grandfather Damron was of equal worth. He was a noted Indian fighter. He was employed by the government as a scout and spy during the wars with the Shawnees and Delawares. He performed many deeds of bravery and daring. He killed that noted Indian terror "Big Foot." He shot him in "Cumberland Pass;" but the most daring feat of bravery was his rescue of a mother and her five children from a band of Shawnees. For this the government presented him with a silver mounted rifle valued at three hundred dollars. Grandmother Damron was of Irish descent and noted for her great beauty.

My father was a tall, athletic Kentuckian, served as sheriff of Pike county for many years, was appointed as deputy at sixteen. It was said of him, "Tom Owens was not afraid of man or devil." Mother was of slight build but of perfect form. She weighed ninety-six when married at sixteen. Mother inherited her father's courage and bravery. She was the mother of twelve children and lived to have passed her four score years and ten (ninety). Brother Flem was my constant companion. He grew rapidly and soon overtook me in size; but I was tough and active. Not until I was twelve did he ever succeed in throwing me. One day he came in with a broad grin on his good-natured face and said, "Pop' told me to go to the barn for two bundles of oats for the horses. Now the first one down will go for the oats." Instantly the dish cloth was dropped and we clinched. I had noticed for some time that he had been gaining on me but I could not take a "dair" and he had not yet thrown me. Round and round the room we went, bending and swaying like two young saplings, till seeing his chance he put out his foot and tripped me. I fell and my mouth struck on the post of a chair which broke off a piece of one of my front teeth. Poor brother picked up the fragment of tooth, burst out crying and ran off for the oats. He had just learned this new accomplishment in wrestling which he had kept secret from me to his life-long regret, for in those times and parts dentistry was almost an unknown art. It was eighteen years before I could find a dentist who could repair the injury. Dr. Hatch, of Portland, did the work for ten dollars. I was more than glad to have the ugly gap filled with shining gold. It remained for thirty-five years and was perfect when extracted. I have saved it for a souvenir in remembrance of that particular tussle with my good brother, not the last by any means. We were constant companions and I was a veritable "tom-boy" and gloried in the fact.

It was the regret of my life up to the age of thirty-five years that I was not born a boy, for I realized early in life that a girl was hampered and hemmed in on all sides, simply by the accident of sex. Brother and I were always trying our muscular strength, and while in my thirteenth year I bet him I could carry four sacks of flour, two hundred pounds. We placed two sacks on a table and two on a box and I stood between. Brother placed a sack on each of my shoulders and then I managed to get the remaining sacks, one under each arm. Then while he steadied the two on my shoulders, I walked off triumphantly with the four sacks.

In the year 1847, after the Whitman massacre, my father was preparing to go with the Clatsop volunteers to fight the Indians. When all was ready and father stood in the midst of his weeping wife and children, a Mr. McDonald, who was working for father, stepped forward and said, "Mr. Owens, I am a simple man! I have no one to care for me but I am poor. Give me your outfit and money for my expenses and I will go in your place." Yielding at last to the entreaties of his family, father finally consented and Mr. McDonald went in his place, but he never returned. He was killed. We have always remembered him gratefully, believing he might have saved our father's life. At least he gave his own freely.

B. A. Owens-Adair

I was the family nurse and it was seldom I did not have a child in my arms and more clinging to me, when there was a baby every two years. There was no end to nursing, especially when mother's time was occupied from early dawn till late at night with inside and outside work, she seldom had time to devote to baby except to give it the breast. When the weather was fine we fairly lived outdoors, I hauling baby in its rude little sled or cart, which bumped along and often bumped baby out but which seldom seriously hurt and never killed. With a two-year-old on my hip and a four-year-old clinging to me to keep up or more often on brother Flem's back we went playing here and working there during all the pleasant weather. When it rained we ran to the barn where we could swing, play hide-and-seek and slide down the hay mow. Many times I have carried the children to the top and with baby in my arms and the other two clinging to me we would slide to the bottom, to the great delight of all.

I was fond of hunting hens' nests and usually found them. One afternoon I crawled under the barn. I knew there were eggs there. The ground was hard and smooth, and near the barn floor, about the center, I found a nest full of eggs. I squeezed under so I could reach and gather them in my apron. I could not turn around so I began to slide out backwards, when passing a sleeper a knot caught between the waistband of my dress and the first button. Try as best I might I could not get loose. Brother was waiting outside and when he found I could not extricate myself he ran for mother. Father was away from home and mother knew the only way to release me was to break the button hole. Lying there on my face, wedged in, I could not reach the button or break the button hole. The big barn was full of hay which would have taken several men at least a day or more to get down to the middle of the barn and to have tunnelled under would have taken as much time. Mother told me to push myself forwards, sideways and backwards, with all my force. After a long time I succeeded in tearing out the buttonhole. As soon as I got clear of the sleeper I reached back and unbuttoned all my buttons to make sure I did not get hung up again. Now being free, I soon backed out to freedom, bringing my eggs with me. That was not the last time I crawled under the barn for eggs; but, I had learned a lesson and I never went into a tight place like that again without preparing myself to leave all my clothes behind, in case I got hung up on a knot or peg.

When I was twelve years old, a teacher came to teach a three months school for our neighborhood. His name was Beaufort. School-books were very scarce. Sometimes whole families were taught from one book. All children over four attended school. Children did not remain babies long in those days, when other children came so fast to crowd them out of the cradle. Boys and girls of fourteen and fifteen were expected to do a full day's work on the farm or in the house, and the younger ones were taught to be helpful and to take care of themselves. The teacher was a fine, handsome young man. He kept himself clean and neat and trim and did not seek the company of the young men of his age, and they naturally disliked him. He boarded at our house and we children walked two miles to school with him daily. He was very kind to the children and they were all very fond of him. He would often take two or three little tots or as many as could hold on to him and then run races with the larger ones, to the great delight of the youngsters who thought they had won the race. I simply worshiped my handsome teacher who taught me so many things. He taught me to run, to jump, to lasso and to spring upon the horses backs, all of which I greatly appreciated.

One time there was a picnic at our house, it being the largest and best house on Clatsop. The young men began to joke and guy our teacher about his white hands. He took it good-naturedly, but finally said, "I will bet you two-hundred in cash, my watch and chain and all I have against one hundred and whatever you can put up, that I can dig, measure, and stack more potatoes than any man on Clatsop. This stirred their blood and touched their pride and they accepted his challenge. He was to dig, measure and stack, sixty bushels of potatoes in three stacks in ten hours, he to select the ground. My father said to Lagrand Hill who was then working for him and whom I married two years later, "My boy, take my advice and don't fool your summer's work away! I have been watching that young man for three months. He is as strong as a bear and as active as a cat;" but like the others, he needed no advice. He bet his watch and two hundred sheaves of oats on the issue. Mr. Beaufort selected Mr. Jewett's potato patch, near the county road. The day before he staked off the ground and smoothed off the spots on which to pile his potatoes. The day was bright and beautiful. Everybody was there, including Indians. It was a genuine picnic. Everybody came provided to stay all day and see the fun. The hour being near at hand, the teacher removed his coat, vest and long blue handsome Spanish silk scarf and hung them on the fence. Suspenders were unknown in those days. He then loosened his leather belt and taking off his boots he encaised his feet in a pair of handsome headed moccasins, then drawing on a pair of soft buckskin gloves over his soft white hands, he picked up the new hoe from which he had sawed off about half the handle and stepped to the middle of the plot. When the time keeper called the hour, he took off his hat and made a graceful bow, and stepping across a potato hill, with a foot on each side of it, with two or three strokes of the hoe he laid bare the potatoes and with both hands scooped them into the half bushel measure. It did not require more than two or three hills to fill the measure. Then with two or three elastic leaps he emptied it on one of the places. For two or three hours he kept the tellers busy, then he took it easy and laughed and joked as he worked, and finished long before night. That was a red letter day for our handsome teacher. He had raked in watches, rings, scarf-pins and about all the spare money the young men and some of the old ones had. After he had finished he turned several hand springs and when he reached the fence, he put his hands on the top rail and sprang over and that was a revolution in potato digging on Clatsop. All the whites dug with a long-handled hoe and the Indians used a stick or their hands, crawling along on their hands and knees. That was a good lesson to the Clatsopites. He left in a few days and we never heard of him again, but his memory is always fresh in my mind.

He was in my young, crude and barren life, a green, flower-strewn oasis, with a fountain of cool water in its midst. I was but twelve years old, small, perfect in form, health and vigor. Brother Flem towered far above me and sister Diana, "The Clatsop beauty," was taller than our mother. My love of my handsome teacher knew no bounds. Sister Diana said I was always tagging him around and mother scolded me saying, "You ought to know that he must get tired of you and the children sometimes." But I found many opportunities of being in his society and I always improved them, especially as mother was so over-worked and she was glad to be relieved of the care of the baby and two younger ones. Taking my brood, I would seek out my friend who invariably met us with a welcoming smile for he had learned to love the two tiny girls and the big fat baby, who returned his affection. He would catch up one of the older ones, toss her above his head in such a way that she would rest across his shoulders with little arms around his head and then he would take baby and hug her up, and taking the other tot under his arm we would be off for a race and how we did enjoy it. The children would scream with delight and my own happiness was no less deep. Often we went to the field where father was cultivating or ploughing, and many times did he lift me lightly to the back of the near horse and, handing me the baby and seating one of the others behind me, with one on this shoulder he would walk beside with his hand upon us to keep us from falling. Father liked him too, and was always glad to have him with us. It was a sad day when he left us. First he bade father and mother good-bye and then the children. He snatched up the baby from the floor, tossed her up and kissed her. I was trying to keep back my tears. He smiled down on me with his handsome blue eyes and said to mother, "I guess I'll take this one with me!" Mother said, "All right, she is such a tom-boy, I can never make a girl of her anyway." He took my little hand in his and I went some distance down the road with him. Then he said, "Now little one, you must go back. You are a nice little girl. Some day you will make a fine woman; but you must remember and study your book hard and when you get to be a woman everybody will love you, and don't forget your teacher, will you?" He gathered me up in his arms smiling and kissed me and then set me down with my face toward home. I ran back and seeing the children on the fence looking, I ran around back of the house in the garden and hid and cried a long time. Of course they all laughed at me and oftentimes when I was rebellious and wayward, which was frequent, I would be confronted with, "I wish the teacher had taken you with him," to which I never failed to answer promptly and fervently, "I wish he had too."

About this time a Mr. and Mrs. McCrary moved in on the adjoining farm. Their little home was just beyond a pretty little grassy hill, not more than a quarter of a mile away. I did not like the man but I fell in love with his tall splendid wife. She was older than my mother and very different from her. She was tall and fair but not pretty in form or face; but she was one of the most beautiful and admirable characters I ever met. To me she was beautiful, for I loved her always. No child could have loved a mother more than I loved this pure, noble woman. It is said that love begets love, and surely it did in this case for she returned my love with a true mother love. She was not blessed with children of her own. This affection remained unbroken through her long, subsequent life of nearly fifty years, and now looking back I can realize that the lovely example of her beautiful life has had much in molding my own and I doubt not that of many of the characters of those around her. They had but two small rooms, scantily furnished, but everything was immaculate and she with her hair combed smoothly back, her white kerchief pinned smoothly over her bosom and with her kind words, sweet smiles and sweet and winning ways, was a fitting and charming mistress of her spotless, little home. My mother was a neat and tasteful woman; but she said Mrs. McCrary always looked like she came out of a bandbox.

I always managed to visit my friend once a day and often several times. Whatever might be my task, I would finish it as soon as possible that I might slip off and fly to Mrs. McCrary's. It did seem like flying for my feet scarcely touched the ground as I ran. I received many scoldings for running off, and was told that grown up people did not want to be bothered with children; but unless I was positively forbidden, I went. She always seemed so glad to see me and had so many pretty and pleasant things to say to me that it was no wonder I loved her. She seldom visited and never gossiped. She was a reader, but books and papers were scarce in those days. She always treated me as if I was a little lady. She would say, "Your visits are just like bright, sparkling, refreshing sunbeams to me." If a button was gone from my dress or apron, a pin went in and she would say, "Now that looks so much nicer." Sometimes she would say, "I am going to comb out those lovely braids of yours." She would take down my hair, which came half-way to the floor, and then the little glass from the wall, holding it that I might see how pretty it looked, waving over my shoulders, saying, "We will just wait a while, it makes you look so like a fairy." Sometimes she told me fairy stories while she taught me to knit, crochet and sew, all this time talking and drawing me out, correcting my mistakes, with such delicacy, that my super-sensitive nature was never wounded. She infused such a charm into everything she did and said, that I was not only interested, but anxious to learn. She impressed upon my mind in the most positive language just how the things should be done and showing me by example, and having me assist when possible and always excusing my blunders. If she was making biscuits, she would have me stand by while she showed me every step. "Now you take so many cups of flour, so many cups of milk, so much butter, so much salt and sugar for so many persons and when you knead the biscuits, be sure and do not get the flour too near the edge of the board or it will get on the floor and you must stand a little back, or you will soil your apron. Do you know I have seen women who would wear an apron all the week and then it would not be as mussed as that of some women would be in one day. Some women have a place for everything and keep them in place while some women keep their things haphazard and never know where anything is. They make themselves a great deal of work, and have a harder time. You will never be that kind of a person, for your mother is a good house-keeper." Was it any wonder that I loved that wise, good woman? I was as wax in her hands. Could I have been under her influence till I reached maturity instead of one year. I could and would have escaped many hardships and sorrows of my life.

After many years I returned to Clatsop and heard that Mr. McCrary was dead and Mrs. McCrary was spending the winter in Astoria. I went at once to see her. Oh, what a joyful meeting was ours and with what interest and emotion did we recall and rehearse the past. She was the same grand woman. Hardships and griefs of which she had suffered many, seemed to have made her more lovely and saintly. She said, "Well, I am getting old and you are young and fresh with the bloom and beauty of womanhood upon you; but I can see much to remind me of the little barefooted girl who brought me so much pleasure the year I lived near your fathers," and she laughed heartily. Again we parted and years came and went. I became a physician, married, and went to live on my "Sunnymead" farm, on Clatsop. One dark night a messenger came with a lantern saying, "Mrs. McCrary is suffering dreadfully with an abscess. Would I go?" "Yes, by every fond recollection, by every tie of gratitude and affection, yes, I will go." A walk of a mile and a half over the rough roadless tide land brought us to the Lewis and Clark river where horses were awaiting us, then a three mile ride brought us to our destination. I administered an opiate and lanced the ulcer, applied a hot poultice and hot water bag and she was soon comfortable. Then she said, "How good God is to send you to me in my troubles. I do not regret my suffering so that it brought you to me. Now I want you to get right in bed with me. I am ashamed to be so selfish not to let you sleep in another room after such a hard trip; but if you had given me a bushel of opiates, I could not sleep. I am so hungry for a good long talk." "Do not think you are depriving me of anything, for I am as anxious as you for such a talk," and we did talk from 2 A. M. to breakfast time, living over much of our past lives from my early childhood. A few years later she came to Clatsop to visit friends who owned my father's old donation land claim. While there she was attacked with pneumonia and for a time I despaired of her life. She calmly said, "I know my time has come! I am ready and anxious to go. I have lived beyond my usefulness! You are doing all you can and I do not blame you; but I feel that I ought to go now." But her time was not come. She recovered and went to Portland to live with her adopted son whom she had raised from infancy. I saw her there frequently.

In 1899, just before moving to Yakima, Washington, I called to say good-bye. On seeing me she arose to her feet and met me with her heart warming smile. "I see you are reading the Oregonian," I said. "Yes, I spend much of my time in reading. If I could only remember what I read. My memory is just about half across the floor. You see that is about the length of it." "Never mind your present memory," I said, "your past will not desert you, and the good you have done in this world will linger long after you and I have been laid to rest." The pleasant and cheerful way in which she alluded to her loss of memory illustrates the wonderful charm and beauty in which she invested life, so that all its rough, unsightly and annoying features were sure, under her sunny way of presenting them, to become less disagreeable and often charming. To me her examples have been helps and blessings throughout my life. That was the last time I saw that grand, noble woman, one of God's masterpieces. Her walk in life was lowly; but sunshine and flowers followed her and illumined her pathway. No one came in contact with her without being made better.

An amusing occurrence took place when I was about thirteen. Father had a little, ugly Welshman working for him. This man had been trying to make love to me for some time and notwithstanding my scornful rejection of his attention and positive rude treatment of him he persisted. One morning I was washing. In the room under the stairway were several barrels half-filled with cranberries. That little imp, knowing I was there and watching his opportunity, slipped up behind me as I was stirring down the clothes with a long broom handle. He threw his arms around me and hugged me and tried to kiss me, then jumped back and laughed triumphantly and tried to escape by the open door; but like a tiger I leaped between him and the door and gave him such a whack with the broom handle that he staggered and rushed under the stairs and plunged his head in the cranberry barrel, thus presenting a fair field for the strokes which in my fury I laid on thick and fast with all the strength I possessed. He screamed and mother hearing the disturbance ran down stairs and had to actually pull me off by main strength. When I got his head out of the barrel he sputtered and stammered and could not utter a coherent word. In towering contempt I exclaimed, "You little skunk, if you ever dare to come near me again, I'll kill you."

About this time another occurrence happened that made a lasting impression on my mind. One morning a young farmer about twenty-seven years old came rushing excitedly up with his coat on his arm to mother who was in the back yard, saying, "Where is Tom Owens?" "What do you want of him? He is not here." "I want him and I intend to whip him within an inch of his life." Mother said, "Now Luke, go home and get over your mad fit. Owens has never done you any harm and I tell you now, if you do get him roused he will beat you half to death, and I don't want to see you hurt;" but he had no notion of getting hurt. Just then we saw father coming up the road on horseback. Luke saw him and started for him. Mother called and begged him to come back, the children were terribly frightened and began to cry. Mother said, "Stop your crying, your father is not going to be hurt." She walked out with us to where we could see and hear all. Father stopped his horse, and Luke, throwing down his coat, began gesticulating, swearing and daring father to fight him; but father sat calmly on his horse and said, "Now Luke, you are only a boy, and you don't know what you are doing. Go home and let me alone. I don't want to hurt you." At this Luke sprang at him, calling him a coward and attempted to pull him off his horse; but before he could catch his foot, father was off his horse on the opposite side. Giving the bridle a pull he turned the horse away from him. The first thing he did when Luke came lunging at him was to knock him down with a single blow and then he held him down and choked him till he cried enough, when father released him saying, "Go to the house and wash and clean yourself up! My wife will give you water and towels." Luke lost no time in obeying and mother assisted him. She said, "I am very sorry you did not take my advice for I knew you would get hurt." He was very penitent and humiliated and when father came up, bringing his coat and assisted him in putting it on, they shook hands and were friends ever after. It turned out that some of the neighbors knowing him to be a bragging bully and wanting to see the conceit taken out of him had told him that father had accused him of stealing.

In 1853, finding that his six hundred and forty acres could no longer supply food for his rapidly increasing herds, father decided to move to southern Oregon. He set about building a flat boat or scow in which to move the family and stock that he did not wish to sell. In the fall, after the crops were harvested, and everything sold that was not desirable to move, the stock was shipped to Rainier and then the family and teams were shipped to Portland, then a small town. After disposing of the boat and loading up the two wagons we started for the valley. It had been raining and we had a terrible time getting through the timber, west and south of Portland, father leading and mother following with the second team.

Mr. John Hobson, my brother-in-law, had taken the cattle and horses through by a trail and leaving them in care of the men came back and met us in the woods for which we were very thankful. We came up with the herd and bidding Mr. Hobson and the men good-bye we proceeded on to Roseburg, without mishap, brother Flem and I with one man, who father said was not worth half as much as either of us. Father said we were worth more as drivers than any two men he could hire. The weather was fine and there was plenty of grass. That part of the journey was a picnic. Upon leaving home I insisted upon taking my big cat, "Tab," against the judgment of everybody; but after a good deal of argument and many tears on my part, I carried my point. After well on our way I let him out after making camp, putting him in the covered wagon and fastening down the cover. When we were ready to start one morning the horses had strayed off and father sent me after them. When I returned with them everything was packed and was moving. I forgot Tab. After going a mile or more I thought of him and rushed back to mother's wagon. She had not seen or thought of him. Without a word I put whip to my horse and galloped back to camp and rode up and down that pretty little creek calling, "Tabby"; but saw no signs of him. With a sad heart I rode back and overtook the wagons and stock. When we stopped for noon mother sent me to the wagon for something and when I lifted the cover what did I see but my big, beautiful Tab, ready to meet me with his affectionate meow. On reaching Roseburg we found our old friends, the Perrys, who had a house ready for us and we moved in. Father took up a claim just across the Unpqua river from the little town of Roseburg. He bought lumber for a good house and began hauling it on the building spot. He had a large scope of range and during the winter he built a ferry boat for his own accommodation and the public.

During the winter Mr. Hill came to visit us. His family had come to Oregon the year before and settled in Rogue River valley. It was arranged that we should be married in the spring when father's house was ready to move in. During the winter and spring I put in all my spare time preparing for my marriage. I had four quilts pieced. Mother gave me lining for all and cotton for two and I carded wool for two and we quilted them all. She gave me muslin for two sets of sheets and pillow cases, two table cloths and four towels. I cut and made two calico dresses for myself and assisted her with my wedding dress which was of pretty sky-blue lawn. Mr. Hill came in April and assisted us in moving into our new house. On the 4th of May, with only our old friends, the Perrys, and minister besides our family, we were married. I was still very small. My husband was five feet and eleven inches and I could stand under his outstretched arm. I grew slowly until I was twenty-five. Am now five feet and four inches. Just prior to our marriage, Mr. Hill had bought a farm of three hundred and sixty acres, four miles from father's, bought on credit for six hundred dollars to be paid in two years. The improvements consisted of a little log-cabin, twelve by fourteen, without floor or chimney. The roof was made of boards tied on with poles. One window consisted of two panes of glass, a section of log sawed out. Later I chinked the cracks with grass and mud. About ten acres had been fenced and seeded to oats and wheat. A rough open shed sufficed to shelter six or eight cattle. Our furniture consisted of the pioneer bedstead, made by boring three holes in the wall in one corner and then one leg was all that was required. The table was a mere shelf fastened to the wall. Three small shelves supplied for a cupboard and were sufficient for my small supply of dishes. My cooking utensils were a pot, bake-oven, frying pan and coffee pot. A washtub and board and a large pot for washing and a full supply of groceries I got on my father's account as he told me to go to the store and get what I wanted. He also gave me a fine saddle mare, Queen, a fresh cow and calf and a heifer that would be fresh. Mother gave me a feather bed and pair of blankets. My husband's possessions consisted of a horse and gun and less than twenty dollars in money. The Hon. John Hobson had once said to me, "Your father could make money faster than any man I ever knew. He came to Clatsop with fifty cents in his pocket and I don't think there were one hundred in the county, and in ten years he was worth twenty thousand," so I had high hopes and great expectations. My husband was strong and healthy. I had been bred to thrift and economy and everything looked beautiful and bright to me. My soul overflowed with love and joy and my buoyant and happy nature enabled me to enjoy everything, even to cooking outdoors without a shelter over my head.

Soon after our marriage father urged my husband to begin at once to fell trees and hew them so as to put up a good house before winter; but he was never in a hurry to get down to work. He frittered away the whole summer in going to camp meetings, reading novels and hunting. In September when the mornings and evenings grew cold we bought an old second-handed stove which we set up in one corner of the cabin. This was a great comfort to me. Soon after this we had a heavy rain. The next morning our house was flooded, and in one corner the water was bubbling up. That was from a gopher hole. It was late in November before the logs were even ready to be hauled for the sixteen by twenty house. Father provided doors, windows, shingles, nails and lumber for floors. He had all on the ground long before the logs were ready. At last all was ready and father came with men to help raise the house and mother came bringing bread, pies and cakes to help me with the dinner. The house was soon up and the openings for the windows and door were sawed out. Father said, "Now Lagrand, go right at it and get the roof on, for we can look for a big storm soon." Next morning I slipped out of bed and milked the cow and had breakfast almost ready when I tickled my husband's feet to get him in a good humor, because he was not pleased at what father had said. At breakfast I said, "Now we have an early start and we will show father how soon we can get the roof on and the floor down." I was so excited over the prospects of having a fine new house with a floor and windows. By the time the roof was on Mr. Hill was getting tired and suggested a hunt, but I begged and coaxed for only half the floor so we could move in, till he reluctantly went ahead. When sufficient floor was down for our one-legged bedstead it was moved in and made up and then one of my new braided rugs went down. No young wife of wealth could have looked with more pride on her velvet or Turkish rugs than I did on mine that I had made from scraps. When half the floor was down Mr. Hill stopped to put in the door and mashed his finger which meant a lay-off for a time. November was nearly gone. The cooking must be done in the old hut. There was no opening for the pipe and not sufficient pipe. I was planning to get the pipe with the butter and few eggs I could save the next week. Our groceries had all been bought with the butter except what mother gave me. Winter was on us and we were in a dilemma. I realized our condition. Though but fifteen I knew that it was due to the want of industry. He suggested that we go to father's for a visit. I did not like that for I realized that father did not approve of shiftlessness, but I had to consent for he had begun to exhibit temper when I objected to his plans. We got up the horses, nailed up the house and taking our cow and calf we took ourselves to fathers. There we stayed for two weeks, then father got us a box of groceries and stove pipe and he and mother came over and helped us get settled and now with two cows we could get along.

Mr. Hill had been receiving letters from his folks who were doing well and urged us to sell out and come out there in the spring. In April we were to pay three hundred dollars on the farm and we had not a dollar. Nothing had been added to or taken from the place excepting the house and father had furnished everything except the bare logs. Mr. Hill was handy with tools and could have had work all the time at good wages. The owner was anxious to get the place back and offered sixty dollars to have it returned, so we decided to go early in the spring. We traded the younger calf and crop for another horse as I would have to ride Queen to drive the cows. We remained several months with his father and mother and then he decided to go to Yreka, California, so he sold my cows and now that he had money he suggested that we ride back and see my folks before we went so far away. I was homesick and glad to go. Father did not approve of his having sold my cows. He said, "Now take my advice and settle down, and remember it does not take long for a few cows to grow into money." Mr. Hill had an aunt in Yreka. As soon as she heard we were there she came to see us. She had partly raised him. She said, "Now Lagrand, you must get right into work. There is plenty of it at good wages; but you must not leave this little wife alone. There are too many rough men here. She will be safe with me and I can help you both so you pick up and move right over to my house." I was delighted and she proved to be one of the best of mothers to me. She was an executive woman. She had two cows, and chickens. She sold milk, eggs and made cakes and pies for sale and took in sewing and so we worked together, she giving me all and more than I earned. "Now, I am going to see that you have plenty of nice clothes and I shall see to it that you do not give it to Lagrand to fool away." He sold the team and wagon. She would say, "Now, Lagrand, I want you to buy a house and lot while you have the money." In March there was a lot and a small one-roomed battered house with a barn, too, for sale for four hundred and fifty dollars, which we bought just across the street from Aunt Kelly's, which was a bargain. We paid three hundred dollars down, which was all the money left from my cows, heifer and team. My Queen was out on pasture which was now a bone of contention as she was only an expense; but I refused to have her sold and Aunt Kelly stood by me. We moved in and on April 17 our baby was born and Aunt Kelly begged me to give him to her. She would say, "Now, Bethenia, you just give him to me and I will educate him and make him my heir. I know Lagrand will just fool around all his life and never do anything." I continued to work for Aunt Kelly who was overworked and by this means I was able to keep up the house.

Mr. Hill did not drink or use tobacco but as his aunt said he simply idled away his time, doing a day's work now and then, spending more than he made. Father had heard how things were going. Thus the time dragged on till September, 1857, when one day father and mother drove up, to our surprise. They came to see the country and baby. It did not take them long to see that we were living from hand to mouth. "How would you like to go back to Roseburg? It is a growing town. I have several acres and I will give you an acre and lumber for a good house which you can build this fall." We were delighted and sold our house for less than a hundred dollars profit and were soon packed and on our migration. My only regret was leaving dear Aunt Kelly who had taught me so many useful things. With many tears I bid her goodbye. The weather was fine and we enjoyed the trip till we came to a deep gulch with a high, narrow bridge. Mother sat on the back seat with my youngest sister in her lap. I sat beside my husband. Father was leading Queen behind. The moment we were across Mr. Hill started up the horses with the whip, to which they were unaccustomed on a hill. In springing forward the wheel came up against a rock, and in the attempt to bring them around they began to back. I saw the danger and with one bound I was on the ground with baby in my arms. Laying him on the ground I seized a chunk, and turning I saw father running and heard his commanding shout, "Whoa!" The next instant he had seized the spokes of the wheel and with one supreme effort he stopped the wheel at the very edge of that forty-foot gulch. Meantime I had placed the chunk back of the front wheel and thus an awful tragedy was averted. Not till the danger was passed did I realize that I was hurt. I had suffered a severe sprain of my right foot which caused me suffering at times for many years.

Upon reaching home father said, "Go over and select your acre and your building spot," which I gladly did. Then he told Mr. Hill to take the team and he and the boys could haul the lumber, which they did; but Mr. Hill had been talking to a man about making brick. The man had the land and the teams. Each was to furnish a man and I should cook for them for the use of the team. Father begged him not to attempt it as the ground had not been tested and it was too late to burn a kiln; but the more he talked the more he was determined to put all we had in the venture. So he moved me down in the low, swampy place in a tent and we began work. But before a hundred brick were moulded it began to rain and put a stop to the work and I was stricken down with typhoid fever. Father and mother came with the wagon and took us home. It was now late in November and winter had set in. When I became convalescent, father urged him to begin on the house. He replied that he wanted a deed to the acre before he began the house. Father told him that he and mother had talked it over and had decided to deed the property to me and the boy; that they had given us one good start and now after three and one-half years we had nothing left but one horse. This enraged him and he said that he would not build on the acre unless it was deeded to him as he was the head of the family. Father asked him to think it over and not act rashly. He sulked for a time then bargained for a lot and hired a team and hauled the lumber off the acre to the lot and began to build. All this time we were living off father and mother who said nothing but furnished shingles and told him to get the nails on their account. In time the house was up and the roof on and floor down and kitchen partly finished. It was so open that the skunks made night hideous by racing under and on the floor and even getting on the table. My health was poor and baby was fretful and ill most of the time and things were going anything but smoothly.

A short time before the climax came I went home and told my parents that I did not think that I could stand it much longer. Mother was indignant and told me to come home, "that a man who could not make a living with the good start he had never would, and with his temper he is likely to kill you or the baby." But father broke down and said, "Oh, Bethenia, there never has been a divorce in my family and I hope there never will be. Go back and do your best to get along, but if you cannot possibly get along come home." I went back relieved for I knew I could go home. Our troubles usually started over the baby. He was so cross and had a voracious appetite. His father thought he was old enough to be spanked which I could not endure and war ensued and I received the chastisement. The evening before the separation he fed the child six hard boiled eggs in spite of all I could say or do. I did not close my eyes that night expecting the child would go into convulsions. Early in the morning early in March after a tempestuous scene he threw the baby on the bed and rushed down town. As soon as he was out of sight I put on my hat and shawl and taking baby I flew over to father's. I found brother Flem ferrying a man over and I went back with him. By that time I was almost in a state of collapse. I had run all the way, about three-fourths of a mile. Brother seeing that something was wrong and always anxious to smooth out the wrinkles, said with a smile, "Give me that little 'piggy-wig,' and shall I take you under my other arm? It seems to me you are getting smaller every year. Now hang on to me and I will get you up the hill all right. Mother will have breakfast ready and I guess a good square meal is what you need." The next day father saw Mr. Hill. He found he had been trying to sell the house. He told him that he would come with me to get my clothes and a few things and he could have the rest. As the lot was not paid for the house would go with it, and when he sold it I would sign the deed. Before he found a purchaser he repented and came several times to get me to go back. I said, "I have told you many times if I ever left you I would never go back and I never will." And now at eighteen I found myself broken in health and spirit again in my father's home from which four years ago I had gone so happy and full of hope. It seemed I should never be happy or strong again.

At this time I could not read or write legibly. I realized my position fully and determined to meet it bravely. Sorrow ended with cheerfulness and affection and nourishing food. My health soon returned and with it an increasing desire for education. My little George felt the benefits as much as I. He was such a tiny mite that he was only a plaything for the whole family. I said one day, "Mother do you think I might manage to go to school?" "Why, yes. Go right along. George is no trouble. The children will take care of him." From that day I was up early and out to the barn, milking and doing all the work possible. Saturdays with the help of the children I did the washing and ironing for the family. At the end of four months I had finished the third reader and had made good progress with the other studies. In September, Mr. and Mrs. Hobson (sister Diana), came to visit us, and she begged me to go home with them. With a light wagon and good horses we had a delightful trip over the road where I had helped to drive the stock five years before. Before going father had me apply for a divorce, the custody of my child and to change my name to Owens. The next spring brother Flem met us at Salem with a light rig and took us home in time for the May term of court. The suit was strongly contested on account of Mr. Hill's widowed mother, who wanted the child, thinking that would induce her son to remain with her on her farm as all her children had homes of their own. I, however, won the suit.

Now the world began to look brighter to me. I was a free woman. I sought work in all directions, even washing, which was the most profitable in those days. Father objected to this and said, "Why can't you be contented to stay at home? I am able to support you and your child." But no argument could shake my determination to support myself and child. So he bought me a sewing machine, the first one ever brought to that part of the country and so with sewing and nursing a year passed very profitably. Now my sister, Mrs. Hobson, urged me to return to her on the farm on Clatsop. She greatly needed my help. In the fall of 1860 she and I went to Oysterville, Washington, to visit an old friend, Mrs. Munson. The few days passed off too quickly and Captain and Mrs. Munson assured my sister that they would see that I reached home safely if I would only stay till I got my visit out. I told Mrs. Munson of my anxiety to go to school. She said, "Why not stay with me? We have a good school here, and I shall be glad to have you, especially further on." I said I would gladly accept if I could only find some way of earning my necessary expenses. She said, "There is my brother and his man. I can get their washing which will bring you in from one dollar to one dollar and a half per week. I gratefully accepted doing their washing evenings. Work to me was mere play and change of work is rest and I had plenty of it. Thus I passed one of the most pleasant and profitable winters of my life. Whetted with what it fed on, my thirst for knowledge grew stronger daily. My sister now urged me to go back to her, which I did. I said to her, "I am determined to get at least a common-school education. I know I can support myself and child and get an education, and I am resolved to do it. And I do not intend to make it over the wash tub, either. Neither will I work for my board and clothes. You need me and I will stay with you six months if you will send me to Astoria to school next winter." She agreed to that. Later I said, "Diana, don't you think I might teach a little summer school? I could be up at four to help milk and have the other work done by 8 A. M., and I can do the churning, washing and ironing evenings and Saturdays." She said, "You might try it." I asked Mr. Hobson if he would not get me up a little school. He said, "Take the horse and go around among the neighbors and work it up yourself." I lost no time and got the promise of sixteen scholars at two dollars each for three months. This was my first attempt. I taught my school in the first Presbyterian church in Oregon. Of my sixteen scholars there were three further advanced than myself, but I took their books home and with my brother-in-law I kept ahead of them, and they never suspected my incompetency.

Fall found me settled in an old hotel in Astoria in one small room. I had to take care of my nephew and my George. And now I encountered one of the sharpest trials of my life. On being examined in mental arithmetic I was placed in the primary class. Words cannot express my humiliation at being required to recite with children eight and ten years old. This was of short duration, for with the teacher's assistance I was soon advanced to the second class and then to the third, the highest. At the end of the nine months I had passed into most of the advanced classes, not because of ability but by determination and hard work. At 4 A. M. my light was burning. I never allowed myself more than eight hours for sleep. I permitted nothing to come between me and this, the greatest opportunity of my life. Next summer I was on the farm, milking, butter-making and doing all kinds of work on the farm. It was now 1862 and the state called upon the counties to contribute to the "Boys in Blue." Clatsop, being a dairy district, decided to contribute a mammoth cheese. Mr. Hobson had a man who made cheese so he and I volunteered to make the cheese. Everybody contributed milk; the ends of a hog's head were sawed off and the middle was used for a hoop. After the cheese was made the hoops were filed off. The cheese was pronounced a success, and was sold and resold in Astoria and brought one hundred and forty-five dollars. I was then sent with it to the state fair where it was again auctioned off many times till it brought between four hundred and five hundred dollars, and then the money and cheese were forwarded to the Oregon soldiers. Whether they found it palatable or digestible I never learned, as such things were not as easily accounted for as now. In the fall I rented three rooms in Astoria and with scanty furniture which I procured by the proceeds from blueberry picking and other work, I set up housekeeping. I was eager for school but my expenses must be met and this is how it was done. I engaged to do the washing for two large families, and washing and ironing for one. Sunday night found George and I at Capt. C's. At 4 A. M. I was in the kitchen. George went to school with the children and at 10 I was there myself. Monday and Tuesday this was repeated. The other was done at my rooms. For all this I received five dollars per week, including the kindest of treatment. This was sufficient to provide for our wants, especially as we lived on the beach, which enabled us to pick up most of our wood. And thus I was happy in my independence.

At that time there was a kind and estimable man in Astoria, a Captain Farnsworth. He was a friend of Mr. and Mrs. Hobson. He knew of my struggles for an education. One rainy evening he called. George had been tucked in bed and I was ironing at the table with my book before me. Thus I studied while I worked. My hands were trained to do their part without calling upon the brain. Removing his heavy overcoat and seating himself by the table he said, "Have you no time to talk?" "Oh, yes; I can talk and work, too." "Well," he said, "I want you to put away that work. I have come to talk to you and I want you to listen well to what I have to say." I closed the book, folded the ironing cloth and sat down, not knowing what was coming, but feeling very apprehensive. He saw this and smiling, said, "Don't you ever get tired?" "Oh, yes; but I get rested easily and quickly." "How long do you expect to go on this way?" "I don't know," I said. "I don't want to see you working in this way, and I have come to see you as a friend, and I want to be a true friend to you. I am alone in the world. The nearest friend I have is a nephew. I have more money than I need and I think I cannot do better than to help you." Trembling, and with moist eyes I exclaimed, "No, no; I cannot take money from you!" "Now, don't be foolish, but listen to me. I know you are thinking that it will compromise you. Besides you are a great deal too independent for your own good. I am a good deal older than you and know vastly more of the world than you do, and I want you to understand that if you accept the offer you are never to feel under any obligation to me. My offer is this: You are to select any school in the United States for as long a time as you choose. I will furnish the money for all the expenses for yourself and boy and no one shall ever know from me where the money came from. If you say so I will not even write to you." Could there ever have been a more generous or unselfish offer? I was now in tears, but my self will, independence and inexperience decided me to refuse it. I could not consent to such an obligation. The acceptance of that offer would doubtless have changed my whole life, but who can tell for better or for worse. Captain Farnsworth was thoroughly disgusted at my obstinacy, though he was still my friend, yet he did not show the same interest in me from that time and many times in after years during my hardships and struggles in my supreme efforts to get ahead, I bitterly repented my hasty decision, feeling that it was the mistake of my life.

Others beside my generous friend, the Captain, had been watching my efforts. Colonel Taylor and Mr. Ingalls were the school directors, and as the wife of the principal was prevented from assisting they generously gave me the position at a salary of twenty-five dollars per month for the remaining three months. This was a wave of prosperity, and as one good thing sometimes follows another I was offered board and room for myself and George for the care of nine rooms in a private boarding house, which I accepted. I asked and received permission to recite in two advanced classes. I also joined a reading and singing class which met once a week. When I was given charge of the primary department I had among my pupils a young lady who was far ahead of me when I attended the Oysterville school. Before the school closed I received a call to teach a three months' school at Bruceport, Washington, at twenty-five dollars per month and board. Judge Olney was county school superintendent. With fear and trembling I applied for an examination. He said, "I know you are competent to teach that school. I have had my eye on you for a year, and I know you will do your duty. I will send you a certificate," and he did. This was great encouragement and made me more determined to do my best.

I accepted the school and left with my boy as soon as my school closed, and opened the Bruceport school at once. After two weeks a collection was taken up among the oyster men and a few families for a second term, and before the six months closed I had a call to teach the Oysterville school, which had the undesirable reputation of being ungovernable. It was my reputation for good government that had prompted the directors to offer me the school. My reply was, "I will engage to teach your school if the directors will pledge their support to my government." They did, and I taught the school. There were three students that made all the trouble—a girl and two boys. The girl was the ringleader. About the third day one of the boys stuck a pin in a girl. I reprimanded him and told him to bring his lunch the next day and stay in noontime. He only groaned. The next day he failed to show up and in the afternoon his older brother came dragging him in. I met him at the door and taking him by the hand attempted to lead him to his seat. He had on heavy shoes and kicked me vigorously. That was a little more than my temper could stand. I seized him by the shoulders and fairly churned the bench with him, which subdued the young gentleman in short order. At the close of the school I gave him his choice of staying in during noon hour for one week or receiving five blows on each hand with the ferrule. He chose the latter and I administered the punishment at once. The Irish girl was living with one of the directors.

He told me that she came running home and said, "It's no use fooling with that teacher; she don't scarce worth a cent." She was twelve and proved to be one of my best scholars both in behavior and aptitude. That was the only punishment administered in that school by me. Before the close of that school I received a call for a four months' school on Clatsop at forty dollars per month and board myself. With my boy I moved into the old parsonage at Skipenon which had been unoccupied for a long time. This I could have free, so that with the addition of a few boards and nails made two rooms comfortable for spring and summer, so I was happy as a lark. I was an expert, as experts went in those days, with the sewing machine and crochet needle and my hands were never idle. I had in this way, so far, saved all my school money, and with this term I would have four hundred dollars. My ambition was to have a home. I had bought a half lot and engaged a carpenter to build me a little three-room house with a pretty little porch. To this, my last school, I can look back with pleasure and satisfaction. The neighbors and farmers were kindness itself to me. At the end of the term I moved in my little home. How proud I was! I could turn my hand to most anything and work came from all directions.

During all these years Mr. Hill kept on writing, urging me to remarry him. One dark night while my machine was buzzing and I was singing while I sewed, a knock came. I opened the door and there stood the father of my child. He had come unannounced, thinking his appearance might overcome my opposition. But, alas! He did not find the young inexperienced child-mother he had abused, but a full-grown, self-reliant and self-supporting woman who could look upon him only with pity. He now realized that there was a gulf between us which he could never hope to cross. He said, "Can I come and take my boy down town with me tomorrow? I will not ask you to wake him up tonight." "You can if you will promise not to run off with him as you are always threatening." "I will promise." Not daring to trust him I hastened to the sheriff next morning and told him my troubles. He smiled and said, "Now don't you worry, my dear little woman. He will never get out of this town with that child."

In the fall I rented my little home and went to Roseburg to visit my people at their urgent request. Roseburg was growing and they urged me to stay and go into business, so I rented a house and opened a millinery and dressmaking establishment. For two years I applied myself, and saved my earnings and bought my home and had a good, growing business. My boy was in school and work brings its reward and pleasure and I was happy. 5 A. M. never saw me in bed. Yes, I had had two years of uninterrupted success, but now a new milliner made her advent and opened next door to me. She came right in and looked me over, stock and all. She said she had been a milliner for years, had learned the trade and understood it thoroughly, and had come to stay. I was soon made to feel her power. She laughed and ridiculed my pretensions. Said mine was only a picked up business. She knew how to bleach and make over all kinds of straw. She could make hat blocks on which she could make over hats and frames, all of which was Greek to me. She came late in the fall and her husband went all over the country picking up all the old hats and advertising his wife's skill. This was not only humiliating to me, but also a severe blow to my business. I was at my wit's end to know what to do and how to do it. One beautiful day I was thinking the matter over while eating my dinner in front of a window which overlooked my neighbor's kitchen. I had seen her husband unload several boxes of old hats the evening before and now they were getting ready for bleaching and pressing. They sat at a table out in the sun on which they placed two new plaster paris hat blocks and now the work began not twenty feet from me. My house was above them and I could see them and hear everything they said; but they could not see me. For an hour I sat there and learned the art of cleaning, stiffening, shaping, pressing and bleaching. Oh, what a revolution. My heart was beating fast and I felt that I had never learned so much in one hour in my life. I saw how easy it was and how much profit there was in it. I knew if I could get the blocks I could press the hats so I stepped down and asked her what she would charge for two blocks. She said, "Thirty dollars." "I will think of it: I did not expect them to be so high." "You do not expect me to give my business away." Then with a smile she said, "Can you press hats?" I passed out and as the door closed I heard them laughing. This roused me and I said to myself, "The day will come when I will show you that I can press hats and do several other things as well. First of all I will find out how to make hat blocks. I had a book 'Inquire Within.' From this I learned how to mix plaster of paris. My first attempt was a failure, but it proved I was on the right track. I slept little that night, but I had thought it all out. As soon as the drug store was opened I bought a dollar's worth of plaster paris and in less than one hour I had made my coveted block. Words could not have expressed my triumph. In less than twenty-four hours I had found and held the key to that mysterious knowledge that had charmed away my customers. I commenced at once to put my acquired knowledge into practice and resolved not to allow a soul to know how I had obtained it. The next day a lady brought me a fine old hat to be renewed. "Oh, you haven't got any of that beautiful lace fringe. Mrs. — has it! Would you mind getting it?" "Not at all." When the hat was ready, I wrapped it carefully and walked into my rival's store with the pride of a full grown peacock. Laying it on the counter and lifting a pressed hat from the block that she kept for an advertisement on the same style, I asked, "How much of the bugle lace will it take for this hat?" "Three-quarters of a yard." I laid down seventy-five cents, she measured it off. "Please stick a pin in and I will see if it is enough," unwrapping the hat and measuring with the lace. As I finished I clipped it off with my belt scissors and dropped it in my hat. "Whose hat is that?" "It is one I have just made over for a customer." "Who pressed it?" "I did." "Who made the block?" "I made it myself," I said, and I walked out. I heard no laughing then. She knew I had her secret, but never knew how I obtained it.

I put my newly acquired knowledge into practice. All winter I worked. My work and goods were equal to hers; still the customers passed me by and bought of her. She managed to checkmate me. Thus the summer wore away and left me stranded, but not conquered. My time had not been lost and I knew I had gained much that would be of service to me in the future. I had surmounted other difficulties and I would yet bring victory out of this defeat. I had learned more of human nature than I had ever known. I saw that I must convince the community that I was not a pretender but was in reality mistress of my business and that could not be done by making over old hats and bonnets.

In November, of 1869, I left my boy with a minister and his wife who occupied my house, borrowed two hundred and fifty dollars and left for San Francisco, having previously advertised in the paper that I would spend the winter in the best millinery establishment for the purpose of perfecting myself in the work and would return in the spring bringing the latest and most attractive millinery. I carried that out to the letter. I sent out posters. Had a grand opening and swamped my rival and she left in disgust. I cleared one thousand, five hundred dollars that year and business continued to increase as long as I conducted it. In 1870 I placed my son in the University of California. I had a love for nursing. Mother said I was born a doctor, was always feeding the rag dolls with a spoon. Now my time was beginning to be encroached upon by calls from friends and doctors. One evening I was called by a friend. The old doctor came and was trying to catheterize her poor, suffering little girl by his bungling attempt. He had lacerated her tender flesh. At last he laid down the instrument to wipe his glasses. I picked it up and said, "Let me try, doctor," and passed it instantly with perfect ease, bringing instant relief. Her mother, who was in agony at the sight of her child's agony, threw her arms around my neck and sobbed out her thanks. Not so, the doctor. He was displeased and showed his displeasure most emphatically. A few days later I called on my friend, Dr. Hamilton, confided to him my ambitions and asked for the loan of medical books. As I came out of his private office in his drug store, I saw Hon. S. F. Chadwick, who had heard the conversation. He came up, shook me warmly by the hand, saying, "Go ahead. It is in you. Let it come out. You will win." The Hon. Jesse Applegate, my dear father's friend, who fondled me as a baby, was the only other one who ever gave me one word of encouragement. Realizing the opposition, especially from my own family, I decided not to mention my plans. I began at once to arrange my business affairs so that I could leave in eighteen months. I worked and studied as best I could. In due time I announced my decision. I had expected opposition, but I was not prepared for the storm of opposition. My family felt that they were disgraced and even my own child was made to think that I was doing him an irreparable injury. Most of my friends seemed to think it was their Christian duty to try to prevent me from taking the fatal step. That crucial fortnight was a period in my life never to be forgotten. I was literally kept on the rack. I had provided a home for my now seventeen year old boy in Portland.

My business, all in good shape, was entrusted to a sister who had been with me for a year. The day I left two friends came to say goodbye. One said, "Well, this beats all! I always did think you were a smart woman, but you must have gone stark crazy to leave such a business and run off on a wild goose chase." I smiled. "You may change your mind when I come back a physician and charge you more than I have for hats and bonnets." "Not much. You are a good milliner; but I'll never have a woman doctor about me." Choking back the tears, I replied, "Well, time will tell." As a fact both of those ladies receive my professional services, and we laugh together over that goodbye conversation. 11 P. M. came at last and found me seated in the California Overland stage beginning my long journey across the continent. It was a dark and stormy night and I was the only inside passenger. I was alone with my thoughts. I realized that I was starting out into an untried world alone with only my unaided resources to carry me through. All rose up before and all that I had left behind tugged at my heart strings. My crushed and overwrought soul cried out for sympathy and forced me to give vent to my pent up feelings in a flood of tears, while the stage floundered on through a flood of mud and slush and the rain came down in torrents as if sympathizing nature were weeping a fitting accompaniment to my lonely, sorrowful mood. I had time to reflect. I remembered that every sorrow of my life had proved a blessing in disguise and had brought me renewed strength and courage. I had taken the step and I would never turn back. Those cheering words from my faithful attorney came to me then as a sweet solace to my wounded spirit. "Go ahead. It is in you. Let it come out. You will win." How many times have those inspiring words cheered me on through the dark hours of my life. I resolved that if there was anything in me it should come out and come what might I would succeed. That decision comforted me.

Upon reaching Philadelphia I matriculated in the Eclectic Medical School and employed a private tutor. I also attended the lectures and clinics in the great Blockly Hospital. In due time I received my degree and returned to Roseburg. A few days later an old man without funds died and the five doctors decided to hold an autopsy. When they met, Dr. Palmer, who remembered my impudence in using his catheter, made a motion to invite the new Philadelphia doctor. This was carried, and a messenger was sent for me with a written invitation. I knew this meant no honor for me, but said, "Give my compliments to the doctors and say I will be up soon." The messenger left and I followed close behind and waited outside till he went in and closed the door. He said, "She said to give you her compliments and she will be up in a minute." Then came a roar of laughter. I opened the door and walked in, went forward and shook hands with Dr. Hoover who advanced to meet me and said, "The operation is to be on the genital organs." I answered, "One part of the human body should be as sacred to a physician as another." Dr. Palmer stepped back and said, "I object to a woman being present at a male autopsy. If she is allowed to remain I will retire." "I came by written invitation and I will leave it to a vote whether I go or stay; but first I will ask Dr. Palmer the difference between a woman attending a male autopsy and a man attending a female autopsy?" Dr. Hoover said, "I voted for you to come and I'll stick to it." No. 2, "I voted yes and I'll not go back on it," and "So did I." Dr. Hamilton said, "I did not vote, but I have no objections." Dr. P., "Then I'll retire," which he did, amid the cheers of forty or fifty men and boys.

Inside of the old shed the corpse lay on a board, resting on two old saw bucks, wrapped in his old gray blankets. One of the doctors came forward and offered me an old dissecting case. "You do not want me to do the work, do you?" "Oh, yes; go ahead." I took the case and complied. The news of what was being done had spread to every house in town. The excitement was at fever heat. When I had finished, the crowd, not the doctors, gave me three cheers. When I passed out and down to my home the street was lined with men, women and children, anxious to get a look at the terrible creature. The women were shocked and scandalized, and the men were disgusted and some amused at the good joke on the doctors. Now that I look back I believe that all that saved me from a coat of tar and feathers was my brothers, Flem and Josiah. They did not approve of my actions any more than others; but they would have died in their tracks before allowing me to suffer such indignities, which that community well knew. I did not at the time stop to consider the consequences. I was prompted by my natural disposition to resent an insult, which I knew was intended. I closed up my business as soon as possible and taking my sister moved to Portland and opened my office. I frankly admit that I breathed more freely after I had bid adieu to my family and few remaining friends, and was aboard the train, for it did seem that I was only a thorn in their flesh; but I will say right here that that affair was the means of bringing me many patients, especially from that locality, in after years, which added much to my purse and reputation.

For four years I practiced and got ahead far better than I had expected. I had given my sister a course in Mills Seminary; my son a medical education and set him up in business. I had eight thousand dollars at interest. I was thirsting for more knowledge. The old school would not recognize the Eclectic School, which was a thorn in my flesh. I said, "I will treat myself to a full course in Allopathy and a trip to Europe. Again my family and friends objected; saying, "You will soon be rich. What do you want to spend all you have got for?" But I was deaf to all entreaties. I must and would drink at the fountain head. This time I armed myself with letters from governors, senators and professors, and on September 1, 1878, I sailed for San Francisco. In due time I matriculated in the University of Michigan. After arriving there I was in my seat the next day but one. During the next nine months I spent sixteen hours a day excepting Sundays, in attending lectures, clinics, quizzes, and hard study. During vacation I spent ten hours a day in hard study. Most of the time was given to Professor Ford's question book on Anatomy, which was a "bugbear" for medical students. This book contained only questions and covered Gray's Anatomy from beginning to end. I completed it except a few answers which I could not find. When the term began I took it to Prof. Ford to get the answers. He took the book and examined it carefully. "And you have done this? You have done what no other student of this university has done and I never expected them to do, and you have done it while they have been enjoying a vacation, and I shall not forget it. It will be of great value to you in the saving of time and fixing the facts in your mind."

It was my custom to rise at 4, take a cold bath, then exercise, then study till breakfast, at seven. I allowed myself one-half hour for each meal between lectures, clinics, quizzes, and laboratory work, two good sermons on Sunday, now and then a church social, the time was fully and pleasantly occupied. The constant change brought rest and acted as a safety valve to my overheated brain. At the end of two years I received my degree and sent for my son, and with him and two lady physicians sailed for Europe. My letters with state seals always secured us open doors as travel was not then as it is now. We were there for study and we received the benefits by visiting the great hospitals and medical schools of the countries through which we traveled and attended their clinics. While in Munich we were being shown the masterpieces in castings. The guide opened the door and ushered us into a large circular room known as the American Department. The central figure was a heroic statue of Washington on his great white charger, carrying the flag of his country. Around him were grouped the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and there was our martyred Lincoln striking the fetters from the black man. That sight, so beautiful, so real, so moving, was enough to stir the blood of the coldest American. For months I had not seen "Old Glory," and her bursting upon our view, floating over all, the images of all we held nearest and dearest on earth was too much for my impulsive nature. Forgetting time and place and oblivious to all around me I rushed forward and fell upon my knees at the foot of the "Father of His Country," and gave vent to my pent up feelings of joy in exclamations of "Oh, My Country, My Country, My Flag." I was brought suddenly to my senses by the warning voice of Dr. Hill. "Mother! Mother! These people cannot understand one word of English and no telling what kind of trouble you will get us into." I sprang to my feet looking behind me expecting to see the gendarmes coming to take charge of me. Instead I saw a picture I shall never forget. The door was filled with great, broad, smiling faces, showing more plainly than words that they thoroughly understood the situation and heartily sympathized with the loyal American. As we passed out they further showed their appreciation and approval by bows and smiles. Dr. Hill said, after passing out, "Well I never did see anything like it. Mother is always getting into scrapes but somehow she always comes out on top."

Dr. Hill became homesick before the trip was nearly ended, declaring he would rather go home to his sweetheart than to see all the countries in the world. I gave him five hundred dollars and his return ticket and he lost no time in getting back to Goldendale and getting married. Upon reaching London I found many letters, one from a dear friend, begging me to come to her. I like Dr. Hill was homesick. Three years was a long time. When I landed in New York the custom collector demanded seventy-five dollars on my surgical instruments which I purchased in Paris. I said, "I am a physician and these are for my own use. Here are letters from United States senators, governors, doctors, and the president of the University of Michigan. If you take my instruments I will employ a lawyer." He said, "You sit right here. You will have to pay that duty." He was gone two hours. He said, "Take your things and go on!" I speedily obeyed, glad to get out of his clutches. In a few hours I was on my way to San Francisco. On reaching Portland, I found a carriage waiting to take me to the bedside of a patient, as all passengers names were telegraphed ahead. That was surely an auspicious beginning. I was delighted to get home and to get to work. My purse was depleted. I had but two hundred dollars left. Within twenty-four hours I had secured nice rooms over my old friend's, Dr. Plummer's drug store. A few days later a doctor whom I had known and greatly admired called upon me. His home was in Roseburg. He said, "I cannot succeed in Portland. I am going to sell at auction. I have many things you will need. Come to the sale?" "Why doctor, I have just come home. I have no money." "No matter, you can have everything I have without a dollar. You will soon earn enough." "But I do not know that." "I do! I only wish I was sure I could make half as much. In less than six months you will be making six hundred a month." I was astonished for I knew he was in earnest and yet his prophesy came true. I had for so many years been struggling, clinging to the slippery ladder and fighting for an existence making headway surely but so slowly that I could not realize that there was so much within my reach.

Hundreds of incidents might be recorded to prove my success during the next few years and words could never express the satisfaction and happiness it brought me. One morning a woman pale and trembling came into my office and said, "I have been sick for many years and the doctors say I cannot be cured. I have heard so much about you that I have come to see if you could give me any relief. We have paid out nearly all we have to doctors and I know if you cannot help me you will say so." Whom should this invalid be but my old Roseburg rival. I gave her a warm and cordial reception saying, "I earnestly hope I may be able to help you." I found her case ulceration of the bladder. I said, "I can help you. I will treat you for two or three weeks and then teach you to treat yourself and if you will follow my directions, I have faith that your health will be restored." With tears of hope and gratitude she said, "No one can or will be more faithful or obedient than I will be. When shall I come again?" "You are not able to come to my office." "But it is so far out to my son's and we are so poor." "That makes no difference. I am going to take you in my carriage and will go to your son's everyday and treat you till you are ready to go home and don't you worry about my bill, either." She broke down and said, "Oh, you are heaping coals of fire on my head; but I do want to tell you that I always had the greatest respect for you." "Now I do not look at it in that way. If you had not gone out to Roseburg and goaded me on by showing me how little I knew about millinery I might have been out there making poor hats and bonnets yet. A friend once said, 'If I wished you to be two and one-half inches taller I would attempt to press you down and you would grow out of sheer resentment.' So now you see my dear friend, you have been all along my good angel in disguise. I owe you a great debt of gratitude and I intend to repay it with interest." and I did. Her health was restored and from that hour arose a friendship between us that lasted till her death only a few years ago. We exchanged photographs.

When asked, as I often was, why I did not marry, I always replied, "I am married to my profession," and I was honest for I was in love with it; but the time came which is said comes to all that I was ready to add to my name that of another. Col. Adair and I were married July 24, 1884 in the First Congregational church of Portland. The church was filled with invited guests, many coming from Roseburg, two hundred miles distant. When we left the church the street was filled with friends and uninvited people and as the carriage rolled by many called, "Good-bye doctor! Good-bye!" After a month in San Francisco and California we returned and I took up my work where I left off. At the time of my marriage my yearly income was at least seven thousand dollars. My husband was of a bright and happy disposition and optimistic, always among the clouds and rarely got down to terra firma. There were no shadows in his picture and my love of him knew no bounds. At the age of forty-seven I gave birth to a little girl baby. Now my happiness knew no bounds. A son I had, and a daughter was my great desire. For her my plans were all made. With her nurse I would take her on all my rounds. She should imbibe the love of the profession not only from her mother's milk but by constant association as well. She should have all that I possessed and all that could be added; but ah, how little we mortals know what is in store for us and well we do not.

"There is no flock how ever watched and tended

But one dead lamb is there.

There is no fireside how so e'er defended
But has one vacant chair."

In 1898 being mentally and physically sick my husband urged me to go to North Yakima, Washington for the holidays with my son and his family. I went and the high altitude and change worked like magic. I confided my troubles to my son and he urged me to leave the farm and come up there saying, "I know you can make one hundred and fifty dollars a month and that is better than going behind that much." I said, "I will come." He smiled because he knew what that meant. When I reached home I said, "I have decided to go to Yakima. We will sell off all the stock, pay on the debts as much as we can and rent the farm." He looked at me in amazement saying, "My dear, consider well before giving up our home at our ages." "I do not consider that we will long have anything with a twenty-four thousand dollar mortgage at eight and ten per cent."

On April 6th we landed in North Yakima. In one week we were settled in four rooms and three days later I performed a one hundred dollar operation and so business came as of former years, and in six and one-half years I realized twenty-five thousand dollars from my profession alone.

In October, 1905, I retired from practice. I closed up my business, ordered my good horse, "Pride," hitched to my buggy and drove seventy-five miles to The Dalles over the mountain. My friends tried to dissuade me. Said it was too late and dangerous. I was not afraid and made the trip without a mishap and stayed two nights with friends. My whole trip home was a real pleasure trip, besides I made thirty-five dollars more than expenses. I retired from practice for several reasons: first, that I might complete a book, "Dr. Owens-Adair—some of her life experiences;" second, that I might take up a work that had been near my heart, "The Purification of the Human Race Through Propagation by Preventing the Birth of Defectives through Sterilization."

For many years I held the office of heredity and hygiene in the state Woman's Christian Temperance Union and for over thirty years I have been working along those lines and now that there were thousands of medical women in the field I felt that I might step out without being missed and I could be free to devote my time to the work that few women would care to take up. In November, I sailed for San Diego, California that I might be free from care and devote myself to completing my book. December 5th I arrived, found my dear friend of forty years on the dock awaiting me. We were soon in her cozy little wren's nest. I began my work at once, she doing all the type-writing and assisting me in many ways. When the book was all in manuscript I said, "Now we will take a few days for sight-seeing." I took a buggy and drove to Mexico and then to several beach resorts about San Diego, and gathered shells on California's lovely sea-shores. We saw the old adobe house where Romania, the heroine of that beautiful story was born, and many beautiful things in that lovely climate. Then I started for San Francisco, had a few hours with dear Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Monroe. Never did San Francisco look more beautiful. Next month, April, she was being consumed by quakes and fires. I was soon at my Sunnymead farm amidst chaotic confusion, neglect and destruction everywhere. The barn was unsafe and the house unfit for occupation. The rats made night hideous. My fine young orchard had not felt the pruner's knife for seven years. The big woodshed where so many cords of wood used to be stored was gone. The last board had been used for fuel. My beautiful lawn and flower beds were overrun with briars and brambles. The sight was sickening.

Had I not been inured to hardships and struggles all my life I should have succumbed, but "can't" has ever been unknown to me. There was but one thing to be done, to put my shoulder to the wheel and say "I will," as I had so often done. More than twenty-eight years have passed since I plighted my marriage vows. Many sorrows have been interspersed with the pleasures of my married life and during all these years I have been as active and determined as in my former life. I have never flinched from any undertaking and I hope I never shall, to the day of my death. But often during these later years I have looked back over my past life, not with a shudder but to gain strength and courage to meet the financial difficulties that had accumulated and threatened to engulf me. But let me draw the curtain and shut out all of the terrible ordeals through which I have passed during the last six years. Suffice it to say that I have lived through it all and still have my health, and my mind is unencumbered.

I have saved sufficient from the fortune that I had made to make me comfortable, with care, the remainder of my life. I have three lovely farms side by side, "Grand View," "Sunnymead" and "Park." The buildings are all within calling distance. I have reserved ten acres of my Grand View farm which contains a fine old orchard. Nature has made this one of her beauty spots for an ideal country home. I can sit on my porches or look from my windows and see all that is going on over my farms. The county road runs six hundred feet in front of my doors, where everything goes on a beautiful macadam road. The lordly Columbia a mile away in front, on which the traffic of all nations comes and goes. I can see every craft from a fishing boat to a war ship as it comes and goes to the great Pacific. At my right, five miles away is Astoria, the oldest town in Oregon. At my left, one and a half miles is Warrenton, Flavel three miles, Hammond four miles and Fort Stevens five miles. Across on the Washington side is Fort Columbia, Fort Canby and Cape Disappointment. Oh, what a grand panoramic picture! And this is my home where I expect to spend my days. And I shall try to enjoy everything as it comes and goes. I love to see the horses and cows as they come and go to and from their barns, the colts and calves as they play and feed on the green meadows. Just now I see fifteen pretty young pigs racing around in their lot near Park barn. There is a pretty stream full of fish winding along among my farms with the grass growing to its water's edge. There the ducks and geese love to swim, making love and raising their young. My home is surrounded with flowers and shrubs. Behind the house is a long wide bed, bordering the vegetable garden, filled with beautiful old-fashioned flowers, reminding me of my girlhood days and "mother's garden." Among these loves I hope to receive my friends. I am strong and vigorous. I can mount my horse from the ground and ride as of old. I drive one or two horses. My dear old Pride now past twenty, is sometimes as gay as a colt. He and pretty Lady are my drivers. They know when I take the reins and they obey my voice. I do so love them! Can I ever give them up for a mobile! Certainly not, for some time to come. And here in my home, surrounded with nature's own beauty and home comforts, I am prepared to vigorously prosecute my special work, now so well known as, "Dr. Owens-Adair 'Human Sterilization Bill of Oregon.'"

JAMES PELTON, widely known because of his extensive ranching and stock-raising interests in Klamath county, makes his home at Fort Klamath. He was born about twelve miles northeast of Medford, at Bybee Bridge, Jackson county, June 9, 1860, and is a son of Enoch C. and Mary Stuart (Rowe) Pelton.

The father's birth occurred near Little Rock, Arkansas, in 1830, and the mother was born in Missouri, in 1837. About 1849 he crossed the plains to the mines of California and the mother with her parents went to Oregon by way of The Dalles and over the old emigrant road, rafting their goods down the Columbia river. This was in 1853, and in 1857 in the Willamette valley she became the wife of Enoch C. Pelton. They settled on the Rogue river, where Mr. Pelton died of smallpox in 1865. In their family were three children: Horace, who is living on the old home place, seventeen miles north of Medford; James, of this review; and John, a resident of Roseburg. Some time after being left a widow Mrs. Pelton became the wife of her first husband's partner, John Sisemore, and there were three children by that union. The mother died at Portland about 1900.

James Pelton resided at the place of his birth until the memorable flood of 1861, when all the buildings upon the place were washed away. The following year the family settled in Sams valley on the old homestead that is now owned by James and Horace Pelton. The brothers had been partners throughout their entire business career. They own an interest in ranch lands in Jackson county, about four hundred acres in Sams valley and eighteen hundred acres in Klamath county, a half-brother, Linsy C. Sisemore, being also interested in the last mentioned property. They also have about a thousand acres on Summer lake in Lake county, each owning a third of this. They are also equal partners in extensive livestock interests in Klamath county and they conduct business under the name of the Pelton-Sisemore Company. The company altogether owns twenty-eight hundred acres in Klamath and Lake counties and are running about eight hundred head of cattle at the present time. They have had as high as three thousand head at one time but as they are continually buying and selling, their herds vary in numbers. They also handle about fifty head of horses, including thoroughbred sires and Percherons. The Pelton brothers, Horace and James, are also identified with the Gold Hill Bank and the Medford National Bank, while James Pelton is a director in the Home Building & Realty Company of Klamath Falls and is president of the Wood River Valley Cream and Butter Association, which was organized in the spring of 1912. He resides on a ranch of eighteen hundred acres of the Pelton-Sisemore Company's interests, and has personal management of this. It is situated a mile and a half northwest of Fort Klamath, is supplied with artesian water and is equipped with one of the best and cheapest irrigation systems to be found in the entire valley, furnishing an ample supply of water from Anna Creek, leading from Crater lake.

James Pelton resided in Jackson county until 1884, when he went to Crook county, where his mother and stepfather were then living, but the family returned to Jackson county and James Pelton and his half-brother, L. C. Sisemore, remained in Crook county.

James Pelton had a homestead in Crook county on the Des Chutes river, proved up his claim and at length sold it. In 1901 he came to Klamath county and in 1903 he disposed of all of his interests in Crook county, having in the meantime purchased his property in Klamath county in connection with his brothers.

On the 30th of May, 1908, Mr. Pelton was united in marriage to Miss Josephine Orth, a sister of the wife of his half-brother, L. C. Sisemore. She was born in Jacksonville, Oregon, in 1869 and is a daughter of John Orth. In politics Mr. Pelton is a democrat but has never been an office seeker. For many years he has been an exemplary member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to the blue lodge in Jacksonville, also the chapter in Jacksonville and to the consistory and the Mystic Shrine in Portland. He likewise holds membership with the Elks lodge at Klamath Falls and he is president of the Chamber of Commerce at Fort Klamath. He is interested in everything relating to the welfare of the community to the extent of giving active aid and cooperation to many movements for the general good. His life is indicative of the possibilities open to the ambitious man in the northwest, for it has been through the wise use of advantages that any might secure that he has reached his present enviable place as one of the substantial ranchmen and stockmen of his part of the state.

SILAS M. YORAN. Among the prominent citizens of Eugene is Silas M. Yoran, who has lived in the city of his adoption since January 22, 1883, when he arrived here from Jones county, Iowa. He was born in Herkimer county, New York, January 26, 1835, a son of Jacob and Mary (Timmerman) Yoran. The lineage of the Yoran family has been traced by an uncle of our subject back to the old Knickerbocker settlement of New York city. The grandfather was Jacob Yoran, a miller of Herkimer county, where he lived all of his life. His marriage was with a Miss Snell, whose five brothers as well as five members of the Yoran family were soldiers in the Revolutionary war, four of the Snells being killed at the battle of Oriskany. On the death of the grandfather his son, Jacob Yoran, succeeded to the ownership of the mills and farm on East creek, the latter remaining on the homestead in Herkimer county until his death, which occurred in 1876 when he was seventy-five years of age. He had taken an active part in the duties of life and for years had been supervisor of his township. In early life he had married Miss Mary Timmerman, a daughter of John and Margaret (Timmerman) Timmerman, and in their family were nine children.

Silas M. Yoran, who was the fifth in order of birth, was reared on the home farm near Herkimer, New York. His educational advantages were very limited and when he attained the age of twenty years he removed, in 1855, to Iowa, where for two years he acted as an agent for prospective eastern settlers, locating lands for them in the Sioux City and Decorah districts. He was also for a time in the mercantile business at Sand Spring, Delaware county, and in 1864 bought a farm in Monticello, Jones county, that state, going in debt for it and paying for it out of the proceeds of the farm. That remained his home until 1883, when he disposed of his interests in that state and settled in Eugene, Oregon. During his residence in Iowa he served five years as county commissioner of Jones county and two terms in the legislature of that state in the seventeenth and eighteenth sessions in 1878 and 1880. In 1884, in partnership with J. M. Hodgson, he launched the Eugene Register. This partnership was continued until 1888, when he bought his partner's interest and in 1890 was succeeded by his son, William C., who had already acquired an interest in the business. After withdrawing from the newspaper business Mr. Yoran became actively engaged in the organization of the Bank of Oregon, what is now the Eugene Loan & Savings Bank, of which he was vice president. In 1893 he with his son Darwin E., embarked in the retail shoe business which proved to be a very successful enterprise, and his time was thus occupied until January 1, 1904, when he withdrew from the shoe business and retired, being succeeded by his son, Darwin E.

Mr. Yoran was married to Miss Maria L., a daughter of John and Irene (Clark) Markell, of Herkimer county, New York, who traces her ancestry on the maternal side back to the third officer on the Mayflower. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Yoran were born five children, Elizabeth, George O., William C., Darwin E. and Louise C. In his fraternal relations Mr. Yoran is a Mason, his membership being in Lodge No. 11, F. & A. M., of Eugene, of which he is past master. He also is serving as past high priest of Eugene Chapter, No. 10, R. A. M.; past thrice illustrious master of Hiram Council, No. 7, R. & S. M.; and past commander of Ivanhoe Commandery, No. 2, K. T. He has also been grand master of the Grand Lodge of Oregon, in 1903 and 1904 and Past Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery of Oregon, and has also attained the thirty-second degree in the Scottish Rite, belonging to Portland Consistory, S. P. R. S. He and his family are regular attendants at the Congregational church services in Eugene, and they are valuable assistants in making the interests of that organization effective for good in this city. In 1896 he was elected presidential elector and had the pleasure of casting the vote for McKinley and Hobart for president and vice president. He made an extensive canvass of the state that year speaking acceptably upon forty-six occasions during the campaign. The long business career of Mr. Yoran in Eugene has served not only to yield him an adequate competence but has made for him a very large number of friends, many of whom are pleased to share the hospitality which he extends from his well appointed home at 646 Olive street. He is now leaving affairs of business in the hands of others though he is still taking a lively interest in the constantly increasing prosperity of Eugene, the city in which the most effective part of his business career was enacted.

CAPTAIN JUDAH PARKER was born in Essex county, New Jersey, July 17, 1829, and there resided until his fifteenth year. His parents then removed to New York locating in Seneca county, where our subject assisted his father, (the latter being a contractor and builder) for a period of six years. On reaching his majority Mr. Parker concluded to see some of the world and consequently shipped on board a whaling vessel bound for the Arctic Ocean. After a cruise of eighteen months they arrived at the Sandwich Islands where our subject shipped on board the bark Bayard and returned to America following coasting until the fall of 1853 when he shipped on board the ship Parthenon and came around Cape Horn arriving in San Francisco in February, 1854. Not unlike the early Californians he immediately proceeded to the gold fields and for four years prosecuted his search for the precious metal in Nevada county, where he was moderately successful. We next find Mr. Parker in the employ of The Pacific Steamship Company in the capacity of ship's carpenter and he remained in their service plying between San Francisco and other points until 1862. In the fall of that year Mr. Parker with the assistance of Mr. William Ireland concluded to try to recover the immense treasure of the lost Golden Gate which foundered off the coast of Mexico. Accordingly they fitted out the schooner William Ireland, and sixty days later found them in the vicinity of the lost vessel, it being the fifth expedition that undertook to secure the golden treasure. Through admirable management and use of hydraulic pressure, a method discovered by Captain Parker, they were enabled to secure six hundred and forty thousand dollars of the two millions dollars lost, and returned to San Francisco. On two subsequent occasions Captain Parker went in pursuit of the treasure, the second time, in the winter of 1863-4, on which occasion he succeeded in raising some sixty thousand dollars. The third attempt was made in 1870 when he found the wreck buried in twenty feet of sand. He then returned to San Francisco and fitted out the steamer Mary Taylor and again started in pursuit of lost treasure, this time to South America with the intention of raising an immense amount of money that had gone down with the wrecked Leo, Cadiz, a vessel that had foundered in the year 1802. In connection with this undertaking we may also mention Mr. G. W. Cooley who had the misfortune of losing the sight of one of his eyes while performing the services of diver. Captain Parker secured about five thousand Spanish dollars, but on account of the long time they had lain in salt water they were partly worthless. He then returned to Calao with the intention of selling his vessel but failing in this he came to San Francisco and in 1875 came to Coos county, first locating at East port and about one year later moved to the present site of Parkersburg, and began the erection of a sawmill which he successfully conducted until his death which occurred at his home in Parkersburg, May 20, 1899.

Captain Parker was united in marriage in San Francisco, April 6, 1863, to Mrs. Otilie Frederick who was born in Germany, March 1, 1837, and who passed away in San Francisco, February 3, 1900. Four children were born into this union, namely: Otilie K., the wife of J. L. Kronenberg, of Bandon; Georgianna, the wife of W. M. Poley, of Ashland, Oregon; Warren, of Prosper, Oregon; and Allan P., who is deceased. Captain Parker was a republican in politics but never sought political preferment.

ELMER J. WAINSCOTT, M. D., is one of the well known and successful physicians of Oakland, Douglas county, in which city he has been engaged in the practice of his profession since 1908. He was born in Long Creek, Grant county, Oregon, February 7, 1883, and is a son of Nathaniel C. and Rachel (Carpenter) Waincott, the former a native of Missouri and the latter of Indiana. The parents were married in Lyndon, Kansas, where they continued to reside until 1877. In that year they removed to Oregon and located in Grant county where the father for thirty years was successfully identified with the cattle business. In 1908 he retired from active life and removed to southern Oregon. He spent two years in Salem, where his son Clyde was a student at college, and at the end of that time he went to Douglas county and has since made his home in either Drain or Oakland, at the present time maintaining his residence in the latter town.

Dr. Elmer J. Waincott was reared in his father's home and received his early education in the public schools. He later pursued a three years' scientific course at the Willamette University and then took up the study of medicine in the medical department of that university, from which he was graduated with the degree of M. D. in the class of 1907. Following his graduation he located first in Richland, Baker county, Oregon, and was there engaged in the practice of his profession for one year. In 1908 he came to Oakland, where he opened offices and has since practiced as physician and surgeon, meeting with gratifying success.

Dr. Waincott was united in marriage October 25, 1906, to Miss May E. Lee, of Long Creek, Grant county. She is a daughter of Charles E. Lee, who is one of the pioneer settlers of Grant county and who crossed the plains to California during the gold excitement. He later removed to Oregon. He is a veteran of the Civil war, having served through the entire trouble in the Confederate army, and is a cousin of General Robert E. Lee, who was commander-in-chief of the Confederate forces. To Dr. and Mrs. Waincott two children have been born, one of whom, Harold C., is living. Dr. Waincott is affiliated with the republican party and has fraternal relations with Oakland Lodge, No. 16, A. F. & A. M., of which lodge he is secretary. He is a member of Umpqua Lodge, No. 37, I. O. O. F., the Woodmen of the World and the United Artisans. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. Dr. Waincott belongs to the Southern Oregon Medical Association and the Oregon State Medical Association and is one of the leading physicians in Douglas county.

WILLIAM E. HOMME has been a resident of Oregon since 1904 and since that time has been actively associated with some of the leading business interests of Coos county. He is practically the father and founder of Cooston, where he has established himself in business and has met with no small success in the building up of that town, in which he takes a pardonable pride. He was born in Winnebago county, near Oshkosh, Wisconsin, in 1871 and is a son of the late Rev. E. J. and Mrs. Homme. The father was the founder of the village of Wittenberg, Wisconsin, and an extended review of his life is here published in his honor and also as a further introduction to his son, William E. Homme.

"The village of Wittenberg, in the state of Wisconsin, was founded on the 13th day of February, 1880, by Rev. E. J. Homme. It happened in the following way. The Norwegian Synod, to which Rev. Homme belonged at that time, had for several years discussed the great need of a home for orphan children and homeless old people, as no such institution existed at that time among the Norwegian Lutherans in America. Rev. Homme declared his willingness to take the lead in this move toward the establishment of such a home, on the condition that he be at liberty to select the place for it. To this the synod agreed, but declared that he should consider this as a private enterprise, and not undertake the erection of buildings with the idea that the synod should be obliged to pay for them. On the other hand, the synod promised to lend its support to every honest means that he might make use of in furthering the cause. On the 27th of January a number of German Lutheran clergymen resolved to form an association for the purpose of establishing a high school (an academy or progymnasium) for the congregations in this section of the state. Rev. Homme was a member of this association. The German brethren resolved to locate their high school in the same place where Rev. Homme thought of building his orphans' home. At the same meeting it was decided to select a location between Clintonville and Wausau, on the Milwaukee, Lake Shore & Western Railway, now the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, which was then being built through the western portion of Shawano county. Upon the selection of a place a request should be made to the railroad company to have the nearest station called Wittenberg. A committee was elected to inspect and choose a site, said committee consisting of Jonas Swenholt, of Scandinavia, Wisconsin, John Uvaas, of Winchester, Wisconsin, August Kraenke, of Reedfield, Wisconsin, and Rev. E. J. Homme, who was at that time stationed at Winchester, that state. The committee accomplished its mission the 9th and 10th of February of the same year, and chose this region for the founding of Wittenberg. Rev. Homme immediately wrote a petition to the railroad company, that the station which was then in contemplation of establishment might be named Wittenberg, to which the railroad company responded favorably. The railroad had at that time not reached this far and this whole region was a dark and lonely wilderness, devoid of the habitation of man. The first sign of civilization in this burg was a log cabin made by the railroad company for some of its laborers. The first frame building in the town was a store, built in the spring of 1880 by Jonas Swenholt, of Scandinavia, this state. The following year Rev. Homme built his residence here and moved hither with his family, November 4, 1881. Throughout the winter and succeeding spring work was pursued upon the foundation and building of the Orphans' Home. On the 26th of August, 1882, the Orphans' Home was opened with an enrollment of four children and one aged man. Mrs. Ingeborg Johnson and her eldest daughter Mathilde, now Mrs. Rev. L. M. Biorn, of Spring Prairie, Wisconsin, stood in a motherly relation to the children. Jacob Lunde, a graduate from the Seminary of Stordoen, Norway, having lately arrived from New York, was engaged as instructor in religion and other branches of study. During the same fall the German Lutherans also commenced with their high-school classes in Homme's Orphans' Home. A "candidate," Feuchter by name, became instructor in Latin; Rev. Purzner taught German and religion, and Jacob Lunde was instructor in English. During the next summer, 1883, Rev. Homme built a second building, a schoolhouse for the use of the orphans, and on the 31st of October the whole institution was solemnly dedicated, Rev. A. Mikkelsen, of Chicago, officiating. This institution was located in the southern part of the village, on blocks 30 and 31. The same fall of 1883 the German Lutheran clergymen had their high-school building completed and school began on the 1st of September. After a course of six months, however, the building was utterly consumed by fire and the instruction was again given at Rev. Homme's Orphans' Home. In the summer of 1884 the building was rebuilt by Rev. Homme but the school was not continued any longer. The next year the school was converted into an orphans' home, the Martin Luther Orphans' Home, and continued as such until 1898, when it was discontinued. In the fall of 1901 it became the Wittenberg Academy under the principalship of Professor E. J. Onstad. In 1882, on motion of Rev. Homme, a committee was appointed by the Norwegian Synod to investigate as to the advisability of founding an Indian mission in this vicinity. This committee consisted of Revs. I. M. Dahl, T. Larson, M. P. Ruh and E. J. Homme. As the synod did not take any steps to realize the Indian mission, this committee went to work independently to establish such an institution. It selected a place three and one-half miles west of the village of Wittenberg, where in the fall of 1884 a small school was established, and engaged a teacher for some Indian children. In 1885 the committee resolved to move the Indian Mission School nearer to the village. A large building, the erection of which was superintended by Rev. Homme, was completed, and dedicated by Rev. N. J. Ellestad in the summer of 1886. Rev. T. Larson, of Harmony, Minnesota, was chosen by the committee as principal of the Indian mission. Rev. Homme made an application to the national government for financial assistance for the Indian Mission School, which was complied with. In 1887 the Norwegian Synod obtained full possession of the institution and continued it for several years, when it was leased to the government and became an Indian government school, and later purchased by the government. Through the exertions of Rev. Ellestad and Rev. Homme a Normal School was established here in 1887 in connection with the Orphans' Home. This school was continued for three years till the establishment of the United church, in 1890. In 1885 Rev. Homme built and equipped a printing office in connection with the Orphans' Home. From this institution 'For Gammel og Ung' has been issued every week and has reached at the present writing—1902—its twenty-second volume. Out of this institution were also sent forth for many years two weekly Sunday school papers—Sondagsskole Bladet and Sunday School Helper—the first Norwegian and English weekly Sunday school papers issued among the Norwegians in America. Sondagsskole Bladet is still issued at the Orphans' Home, but the Sunday School Helper was in 1900 sold to the United church and the name changed to 'The Children's Companion.' In 1901 the Christian Youth was purchased by Rev. Homme and son William and is also published from the Orphans' Home Printing office. In the course of years it was deemed advisable to separate the orphaned children from the aged people by erecting another building to be occupied by the orphans exclusively. This new building, a large imposing structure, is located one and one-half miles from the old home, a short distance from the Embarras river. The cornerstone of this new home was laid the 23d of September, 1894, by Rev. G. Hyme, the late president of the United Norwegian Lutheran church, and the building solemnly dedicated August 27, 1899. The Orphans' Home has been in existence for twenty years and during this time hundreds of children and aged persons have at different times had their home here." Rev. E. J. Homme's long years of active service as a clergyman of the Lutheran church in Wisconsin resulted in leaving a monument to his memory of which his surviving family have every reason to be proud, and the state of Wisconsin will cherish and honor his name long after his immediate relatives have passed to their reward.

education in the institutions of learning founded by his father at Wittenberg. He later became a student at St. Olaf's College, Northfield, Minnesota, and was graduated from that institution in the class of 1894 with the degree of B. A. Immediately following his graduation he returned to his home at Wittenberg, where he soon afterward received the appointment of postmaster for that place and continued for several years to fill that office of public trust. His last appointment as postmaster of Wittenberg he received from President McKinley but having tired of the close confinement, he tendered his resignation and made an extended tour of the world. He sailed from San Francisco in February, 1903, and on his journey visited the Hawaiian Islands, New Zealand, Australia, Tasmania, South Africa, England, Norway and all of the principal countries of Europe. He finally reached New York safely and thence went direct to his home at Wittenberg, having completed the entire circuit of the globe and traveled a distance of thirty-five thousand miles. In September, 1904, he with several of his relatives settled at Glendale, Coos county, Oregon, where for some time he was engaged as publisher of the Glendale News. In March, 1907, he removed to Marshfield, Oregon, and shortly after settled down on the east side of Coos bay, naming the place Cooston and has ever since worked for the upbuilding of that community. Shortly after his arrival at Cooston he built a commodious merchandising store, in which has since been located the government postoffice and he also built other structures for business and residence purposes. On May 13, 1908, he received the appointment of postmaster for Cooston and in that office he is now serving the government in the interests of the people of that community.

On October 15, 1903, Mr. Homme was united in marriage to Miss Laura Nass, who was a native of Wisconsin at the time of her marriage and a trained nurse by profession. Mr. and Mrs. Homme are the parents of three children: Frances Rosalind, who was born July 2, 1905; Franklin Fernando, born December 2, 1906; and Chester Cooston, born May 20, 1908. William E. Homme although comparatively young in his citizenship in Oregon has established his reputation as a trustworthy and eminently successful business man. Like father like son is an old adage that in many respects has found its fulfillment in the life of this young and enthusiastic citizen who is devoting his attention to the development and improvement of that portion of his adopted state in which he lives.

ENOCH W. CONYERS was closely associated with many of the events which figured on the pages of the early history of Oregon and the northwest. Moreover, he is entitled to representation in this volume as one of the few surviving heroes of the Mexican war. He has passed the eighty-second milestone on life's journey, his birth having occurred at Carlisle, Nichols county, Kentucky, December 2, 1829. His parents were Enoch and Mary (Williams) Conyers, who were also natives of Kentucky, living there in pioneer times. The father engaged in farming in the Blue Grass state. Later he removed to Adams county, Illinois, in company with Abraham Lincoln in 1830. At that time Enoch W. Conyers was but a child and Mr. Lincoln, being a bosom friend of his father's, often held the lad upon his knees. In Adams county, Illinois, Enoch Conyers carried on farming until 1835, when he became a resident of Quincy and, prominent in the early history of that state, was elected mayor in 1837, filling the position for three terms. During his last term the cholera epidemic occurred and after furnishing aid and funds to scores of his stricken townsmen, he himself fell victim to the dread disease. He also owned two brick yards there and likewise became proprietor of a sawmill which he operated to the time of his death. He was filling the office of mayor when called to his final rest and in his demise the city lost one of its representative and honored men whose worth was widely acknowledged by his fellow townsmen. He was married three times and became the father of fourteen children. His first wife was Mary Williams West. She became the mother of eight children, of whom the subject of this record and Mrs. Millicent A. P. Burns, the widow of William P. Burns, of Portland, are the only survivors. Mary W. West was a direct descendant of Lord De Lewore West and Mr. Conyers has in his possession an ivory and silver-mounted walking stick brought to America by him in 1618. The mother of our subject died in 1833. Having lost his first wife, the father married Katherine Parsons, a native of New Hampshire, and they had two sons and two daughters, of whom William Henry Conyers, an attorney of Clatskanie, is the only one now living. For his third wife the father chose Elizabeth Archer, a native of Kentucky, who died in Illinois, and the two children of that marriage have also passed away.

Enoch W. Conyers attended school until about sixteen years of age and then started out in life for himself. He became deputy postmaster, which position he filled for a year, and then resigned in order to enter the service of his country as a soldier of the Mexican war. He enlisted in Company A of the First Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, his captain being James D. Morgan, while John J. Hardin commanded the regiment as colonel under Brigadier General Shields. Mr. Conyers served for one year and was honorably discharged at Comargo, Mexico, on the 17th of June, 1847.

When the country no longer needed his military aid Enoch W. Conyers returned to Quincy, Illinois, where he attended school for six months and also assisted as teacher in class work. In the meantime he began the study of medicine, which he continued for some time. After coming to Oregon this knowledge was a great boon to the pioneers as he was for years the only man with any medical knowledge between Astoria and Portland and attended hundreds of the settlers of the early days without charge. In 1848 he opened the first telegraph office in Iowa, at Burlington, and remained as operator there until June, 1849. He then returned to Quincy to assist his father in operating the mill and carrying on other business interests, being thus engaged until his father's death. He learned the brick-layer's trade which he followed until 1852, when he crossed the plains with ox teams. California was his original destination but on account of trouble occasioned by the Mormons he changed his course, taking the Oregon trail and eventually reached Oregon City. Later he made his way to Portland, where he remained for a short time, and then proceeded to Hillsboro, where he engaged in brick-laying for one winter. He next went to Oak Point, on the Columbia river, and in the fall of that year was married. He resided there for two years and then came to Clatskanie, where he acquired a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres which now constitutes a part of the town site. Here he has resided continuously since with the exception of a period of six years spent in Yamhill. Most of the time he has been engaged in agricultural pursuits but in 1907 he retired. His has been a busy, useful and active life and success has rewarded his labors. He still owns a business block in the central part of the town but has divided much of his property among his children. When he came to this section of the state it was a wild and uncultivated district, the work of progress having been scarcely begun. With the early development and upbuilding he has been closely associated and his name is connected with many of the "first events." He owned and operated the first steamboat running from Clatskanie to the Columbia river and connecting with the steamers on the larger stream. He was also the originator and proprietor of the first postoffice route to Clatskanie and by presidential appointment served as postmaster here for many years.

Mr. Conyers was married in Clatskanie, in October, 1853, to Miss Hannah C. Bryant, who was born in Montgomery county, Indiana, a daughter of Elihu G. and Nancy Bryant, both of whom died in Clatskanie. In their family were nine children but only two are now living: Mrs. Mary C. Lockwood, the widow of R. L. Lockwood; and Elihu S. Bryant, who is living retired at Clatskanie. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Conyers have been born nine children: Mary Ellen, who passed away; William Elihu, of Clatskanie; Enoch George, who died at the age of four years; Nancy Ann, the wife of W. K. Tiehnor, of Clatskanie; Charles Lincoln; Millicent Sarah, at home; Hannah Edna, who is living with her brother in Clatskanie; Margaret Azelie, of Clatskanie; and Mrs. Lillian Albertha John, the widow of Wallace A. John, now residing in Clatskanie. She has three children, Wallace, Olive and Maxine. The wife and mother passed away on the 14th of June, 1909. For over a half century Mr. and Mrs. Conyers had traveled life's journey together and the loss of his wife was an irreparable blow to him.

In his political views Mr. Conyers is now a republican but was formerly a Douglas democrat. He was the first in the town to act as justice of the peace and filled the position for four years. He was elected to the legislature in the first and second regular sessions of the state of Oregon, serving from 1860 until 1864, and again this honor came to him in his later years, making him a member of the general assembly from 1908 until 1910. He has always been most efficient and faithful in the discharge of his duties of citizenship and his record has been characterized by devotion to the general good that none has questioned. Long connected with the Masonic fraternity, he was a charter member of Tualatin Lodge, No. 6, and also of Rainier Lodge, No. 24, and he now belongs to Clatskanie Lodge, No. 133, A. F. & A. M. The respect and veneration which is usually accorded honorable old age is freely given him, for all recognize that the principles which have governed his manhood have had their root in noble purpose and that his life work in many of its phases has been of intense value to the community in which he has resided.

EDMOND O. LAMB is one of the well known sheep raisers of Paisley, carrying on an extensive business and owning valuable ranch property in Lake county. He was born in Cadiz, Henry county, Indiana, May 6, 1860, and is a son of Thomas E. and Helen M. (Blair) Lamb. The father was born in Henry county, February 22, 1834, and the mother was born in Deersville, Ohio. The death of the latter occurred in Pittsburg, Kansas, in 1876. The parents were married in Henry county, Indiana, whither Helen Blair went with her parents when about twelve years of age. The father first went to Kansas to investigate the possibilities of establishing a home there and a year later was joined by his family. His son Edmond came to Oregon in 1887 and six years ago was joined by his father, who removed from Kansas to this state and has since made his home with his son. For thirty-five years the father followed the carpenter's trade, but afterward he engaged in farming. In his family were eight children, five of whom are living: Edmond O.; Mabel, the wife of Joseph Daughterty, of Henry county, Indiana; Elmer B., a farmer of Sears, California; Mrs. Rose Scott, of Boise, Idaho; and Lorenzo D., a coal miner of Pittsburg, Kansas.

Edmond O. Lamb resided at home until twenty years of age and afterward worked in a zinc smelter at Pittsburg, Kansas, for several years. He then engaged in farming in that state for two years, subsequent to which time he came to Oregon. Here he was connected with the sheep-raising industry in the employ of others and finally began running sheep on his own account. He has about forty-five hundred sheep leased out and is a well known representative of that industry, thoroughly informed concerning the best methods of breeding and caring for sheep.

EDMOND O. LAMB

He is the owner of one hundred and sixty acres in Chewaucan valley where he now resides and he also owns mountain land and a ranch a mile east of Paisley which he devotes to the raising of hay and which is headquarters for his stock. His ranch is all under ditch and produces about two hundred tons of wild hay annually. He has free water from the Chewaucan river and his property ranks with the leading sheep-raising ranches of this district. He and his father reside alone and the former has passed the seventy-eighth milestone on life's journey. The son is active and energetic in promoting his business interests, has studied sheep-raising in the northwest from every possible standpoint and is meeting with success in his undertaking.

In politics Mr. Lamb is an earnest republican and while he does not seek nor care for public office he keeps well informed concerning the salient questions of the day. He is identified with the various departments of Odd Fellowship, including the lodge, camp and order of Rebekah, and he is also a Master Mason and a member of the Eastern Star.

LINSY C. SISEMORE is extensively and successfully engaged in the live-stock business as a partner in the Pelton-Sisemore Company, owning twenty-eight hundred acres of land in Klamath and Lake counties, in addition to which Mr. Sisemore has other property. He was born in Jackson county, Oregon, July 12, 1869, and is a son of John and Mary (Rowe) Sisemore. The father was born in Kentucky, December 14, 1835, and in 1853 became a resident of California. There he engaged in mining and in the live-stock business until he removed to Jackson county. In 1881 he purchased a ranch on the present site of Bend, Oregon, on the Des Chutes river, the place being known as Farewell Bend. He made his purchase from John Y. Todd, one of the old-time pioneers. Princeton, thirty-five miles away, was their post-office and the nearest railroad station was at The Dalles, one hundred and fifty miles distant. The family spent the summer of 1881 in Wood River valley, when there were only two homes in the entire valley. From 1882 until his death John Sisemore resided continuously in Crook county, Oregon, and always carried on general farming and stock-raising until the last few years of his life, when he lived retired. He died in a hospital at Grants Pass, Oregon, December 16, 1910. He married Mrs. Mary (Rowe) Pelton, the widow of Enoch C. Pelton and a daughter of Joseph Rowe. She had three children by her first marriage: Horace, now living in Jackson county; James, of Fort Klamath; and John, whose home is in Douglas county.

Linsy C. Sisemore resided at the place of his birth until 1882, when he accompanied his parents on their removal to Crook county, Oregon. He worked as a day laborer for seven or eight years and was afterward employed in various places and in various ways. He was married at Jacksonville, Oregon, in 1893, to Miss Anna Orth, whose birth there occurred in 1874, her parents being Mr. and Mrs. John Orth. The young couple began their domestic life in Jackson county, where they remained until 1900, Mr. Sisemore devoting the greater part of his time to the ranch. He then removed to Fort Klamath and has since engaged in the live-stock business in connection with his half-brother, James Pelton, under the firm style of the Pelton-Sisemore Company. They are engaged in ranching and stock-raising and own eighteen hundred acres of land in Klamath county and one thousand acres in Lake county. In addition to the twenty-eight hundred acres which are in possession of the company Mr. Sisemore owns individually a ranch of one hundred acres, eight miles southeast of Klamath Falls, and city property in Bend, Oregon. He was engaged in general merchandising at Fort Klamath for some time but sold his store in December, 1909, and is now concentrating his energies upon his live-stock interests, which are of growing importance, bringing him a substantial financial return.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Sisemore have been born three children, Emmett, Roland and Orth. The family are well known and enjoy the friendship of many with whom they have come in contact. Mr. Sisemore has been a life long democrat and is interested in all that pertains to the welfare of the community at large whether accomplished through political lines or otherwise. Fraternally he is connected with the Masonic and Elks lodges at Klamath Falls and is loyal to their teachings and purposes.

EDGAR BOSSEN. Progressive agricultural interests in Curry county find a worthy representative in Edgar Bossen, who since 1876 has been carrying on general farming, stock-raising and dairying in this section. From a tract of wild timber land he has evolved an excellent farm, well equipped and well managed and his attainments along this line have added something year by year to the development and improvement of agricultural methods in Oregon. He has four hundred acres of productive land, one hundred of which are under cultivation. Upon a portion of this property he operates a brick yard and his able management of this enterprise indicates that his business ability equals his agricultural knowledge. Mr. Bossen was born in Germany in 1851, a son of Edgar and Mary (Benning) Bossen, natives of that country. He received his education in the public schools of the fatherland and was eighteen years of age when he crossed the Atlantic. Coming to America he settled in Chicago where he finished the study of the brick-laying and plastering trades, which he had begun in Germany. He followed these occupations for seven years throughout the middle states and then came to Oregon, settling in Curry county where he took up one hundred and sixty acres of land to which he has added until his farm comprises four hundred acres. The homestead was a wilderness, covered with a heavy growth of timber and the trees had to be felled before the work of cultivation could be begun. Acre by acre the farm was cleared and brought under the plow, fields were planted and a beginning was made in the operation of what is now one of the finest farming properties in Curry county. Gradually more land was tilled and Mr. Bossen extended his activities to include sheep-raising, in which pursuit he has become successful and prominent in the course of years. He next started a dairy and finally turned his attention to the development of a rich deposit of fine clay which covers his land. Quick to recognize an unusual opportunity, he established a brickyard, the first enterprise of its kind in this section of the state and it has grown and expanded under his able management into a prosperous institution. His apple orchard represents another successful venture and yields abundant crops every year. Being a true business man Mr. Bossen operates his farm as a business enterprise and his systematic and progressive methods have had their natural result.

In 1872 Mr. Bossen married in Chicago, Miss Mary Bruhn, a native of Germany, and a daughter of Boh Bruhn, also a native of the fatherland. Mrs. Bossen is one of a family of four children. The others are: Nels, who is farming in Iowa; Ankie, the wife of Carl Nelson, of Bandon; and Botella, who married Lutier Lutzen, of Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Bossen have nine children: Edward and William, both deceased; Alice, the wife of William Button, of Bandon, by whom she has one daughter, Alice; Mary, who married Claud O. Banning, of Argentina, South America, who owns a trading post in the Andes Mountains, and is the father of one daughter, Mary; Elena, the wife of Walter Rodelle, who is engaged in the mercantile business in Elkton; Andrew, who is engaged in farming in Elkton; Jennie, who is a graduate of the State Agricultural College at Corvallis, and who is teaching school; Grace, a music teacher; and Henry, who is associated with his father in the conduct of the home farm.

Mr. Bossen is a charter member of the Woodmen of the World camp at Langlois. He gives his allegiance to the republican party and for many years was road supervisor and school director. These offices came to him entirely unsolicited, since Mr. Bossen never seeks political preferment, although he is one of the most effectively public-spirited men of his section.

W. P. WHITNEY president of the firm of Thomas & Henley, general merchants of Merrill, where he has carried on business under the present relations since the 1st of March, 1912. This is not the first time, however, that he has been associated with commercial interests and at different times he has successfully carried on agricultural pursuits. He was born in Cottage Grove, Oregon, January 18, 1865, and is a son of Elkanah and Mary Ann (White) Whitney, who were natives of New York and of Indiana, respectively. At an early day they came with their parents to Oregon, settling in Linn county, near Cottage Grove, where they were married. They resided at Klamath Falls until 1873 and then removed to Merrill, where their last days were spent, both passing away here. They had been residents of Klamath county since 1870. The father was a farmer and stock-raiser throughout his entire life. In their family were eight children, seven of whom are yet living.

W. P. Whitney, the second in order of birth, remained with his parents until they were called to their final rest, the mother passing away in 1896 and the father in 1900. He followed farming and stock-raising until a few years ago, when he began merchandising in Merrill in connection with partners under the firm style of the Whitney Mercantile Company. He continued in that business for eight years and was afterward alone in business for three years. He then sold his store in March, 1910, and returned to Cottage Grove, where he engaged in ranching until the 1st of March, 1912, when he again came to Merrill and joined Mr. Thomas in their present relation as proprietors of a general store conducted under the firm style of Thomas & Henley. He owns the building in which they are located—a two-story frame structure, thirty by eighty feet—together with a wareroom twenty by eighty feet and an implement warehouse thirty-five by fifty feet. Mr. Whitney built the implement building and has owned the entire store building individually for the past five years. He is also the owner of two houses and lots in Albany, a good residence in Merrill and five acres of land in Jefferson, Oregon.

On the 6th of June, 1901, Mr. Whitney was married to Miss Augusta Kattenhorn, a native of Nevada, and a daughter of Albert Kattenhorn. They have four children: Myra, who died at the age of four months; Perry Martin, six years of age; Inez, four years old; and Calvin, in his second year. Mr. Whitney has been a lifelong resident of this district, having for forty-seven years been a witness of its growth and development, while in works of public progress he has cooperated in large measure.

COLONEL CHARLES T. BLUMENROTHER. Although Colonel Charles T. Blumenrother holds his title in the Oregon National Guards his military activities were not by any means confined to state service in times of peace. His army record is unique in that it began when he was a mere boy and it is honorable and worthy by reason of the usefulness of his services in many of the important engagements of the Civil war. He has, however, other claims to a place in this work. For over twenty years he has been prominent in business and agricultural circles of Curry county and has been an important factor in both lines. He was born in New York city, June 18, 1846, a son of Thomas J. G. and Pauline R. W. (Menda) Blumenrother, natives of Germany. In their family were twelve children, only two of whom are living, namely: Charlotte, who married Alvin Wertzman, of Staten Island, New York, by whom she has one son, Frank; and Charles T., of this review.

Colonel Blumenrother's father died in Central America, where he was working as a member of the Walker expedition. The subject of this review was only nine years of age at that time and he remained in New York city until he enlisted in the United States Army as a member of Company A, Fourth United States Infantry, and served as a drummer boy at Fort Brown, Texas, where he was captured and later discharged. After being exchanged, he was mustered out and two days afterward reenlisted in Company H, Sixth New York Volunteer Infantry, and served until July 26, 1861, when he was discharged. Immediately afterward he again enlisted in the same company and did active work until December 31, 1863. On January 31st of the following year he reenlisted as a veteran and was honorably discharged December 24, 1865. After the war he learned the lithographing trade and followed this occupation until 1877, when he went to Colorado and there engaged principally in prospecting and mining until 1881. In that year he went to Nebraska and took up a soldier's homestead claim, which he operated and developed for three years, going west to Cheyenne in 1884. He remained in that city only a short time, coming almost directly to Oregon, where he took up a pre-emption claim on the edge of Curry county and upon it established his home. The land was uncultivated and covered with timber and Colonel Blumenrother was obliged to clear the trees before beginning the work of cultivation. Out of the timber felled he built a log cabin, in which he lived for a number of years, engaging in general farming during the time. He carried on his agricultural pursuits until November 26, 1887, when he enlisted as a private in Company K, Second Regiment Oregon National Guard, and obtained rapid advancement, serving in all ranks up to and including that of lieutenant colonel. He was discharged as lieutenant colonel January 5, 1895, and on July 26th of the same year was appointed major in a separate battalion, receiving his discharge on November 13th of the following year. He afterward settled in Bandon, where he has been engaged in the real-estate and loan business, giving most of his attention to buying and selling mortgages and bonds. He owns his ranch in Curry county but his son manages the place.

In 1870 Colonel Blumenrother was united in marriage to Miss Amelia L. M. Meier, a daughter of Charles and Mary (Bertz) Meier, natives of Germany. Mrs. Blumenrother is one of a family of nine children, only four of whom are living, namely: Elizabeth L., the wife of Charles T. Feiger, of Bandon; Anna E., who married August Miller, of Baker City; Charles F. W., of Jefferson; and Amelia L. M. Colonel and Mrs. Blumenrother have four children, Thomas J. G. lives in San Francisco, Charles F. W. resides at home and is operating his father's ranch. Pauline R. W. is the wife of Robert P. Hunt, of Bandon, Coos county, Frank H., the youngest member of the family, is deceased.

Colonel Blumenrother is identified with the Masonic order and with the order of Owls. He is also a member of Bandon Post, G. A. R., and is pensioned on account of wounds received at the battle of Chancellorsville, Virginia, May 2, 1863. He is a staunch republican, being a firm believer in the principles for which that party stands and has done able work in its interests. While a resident of St. Louis he was deputy United States marshal and since coming to Oregon has been chairman of the district school board for twenty-five years and notary public for twenty-six, his long periods of service proving his unusual ability and fitness.

CLIFFORD STUART BENSON. Clifford Stuart Benson is the owner of ranch interests in Douglas county but was born at Roseburg, Oregon, June 2, 1885, a son of Frank Williamson and Harriett (Ruth) Benson. He was a pupil in the public schools of his native town and also attended the Oregon Agricultural College, but did not complete the full course there. Early in life he engaged in bookkeeping but is now giving his attention to ranching which he finds profitable, deriving a good income therefrom.

On the 5th of September, 1908, at Salem, Oregon, Mr. Benson was married to Miss Bertha Louise Allen, a daughter of R. D. Allen, and they now have one son, Stuart Frank. Fraternally Mr. Benson is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and he is typically western in spirit, interests and activities, displaying the enterprise which has been the dominant factor in the upbuilding and development of this section of the country.

CLARENCE J. EDWARDS, manager of the Yamhill Electric Company and also prominently connected with the Newberg Telephone Company at Newberg, Oregon, was born in Mooresville, Indiana, February 17, 1871, his parents being Jesse and Mary E. K. Edwards, who were early settlers of this state and among the founders of Newberg. They were active in the early work of the Quaker church in Oregon and in the establishment of Pacific College, and in many other ways left their impress for good upon the development of the northwest.

Clarence J. Edwards, becoming a student in the Pacific College, was graduated therefrom with its first class in 1893. He has since figured actively and prominently in business circles, spending nine years as manager of the Newberg Pressed Brick & Terra Cotta Company, which afterward became the Pacific Face Brick Company. He organized and for the past eleven years has been manager of the Yamhill Electric Company, of which he is the principal stockholder, and he is one of the leading directors of the Newberg Telephone Company. A recital of these connections is sufficient to indicate how prominent a place he has occupied in connection with the business development of his town. He is a man of determined purpose, carrying forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes, for he knows that when one avenue of opportunity seems closed there can be found other paths leading to the desired goal. Aside from his business associations Mr. Edwards has occupied a central place in public activity here. He is one of the prominent representatives of the republican party and has filled the office of mayor of Newberg, while several times he has served as school director. He has likewise been a member of the board of management of Pacific College and his influence is always given on the side of advancement, progress and reform.

In 1893 occurred the marriage of Mr. Edwards and Miss Abbie L. Miles, a daughter of I. N. Miles, a leading horticulturist and stock farmer of Marion county, Oregon. There are two children of this marriage, Lloyd W. and M. Lowell. The family attend the Friends church, in the faith of which Mr. Edwards was reared and to which he has always adhered. Practically his entire life has been spent in the northwest and at all times he has been closely allied with the progressive movement which is leading to the rapid development of this section of the country and placing it upon a par with the older and more thickly settled east. He knows that there is much to be done and he bears his part in the work, never faltering where the best interests of the community are to be served.

JOHN PATTERSON MESSER is living retired in Coquille, where he is spending his leisure in looking after the business and residence property in which he has invested extensively. For forty-two years he has lived in Coos county, being numbered among the pioneers in Oregon, and during that time has been engaged in important and representative enterprises, most of his time, however, having been given to general farming. He well deserves the rest he is enjoying, for it has been earned by industry and persevering diligence. He was born in Hawkins county, Tennessee, in 1837 and is a son of Isaac and Margaret (Patterson) Messer, natives of that state. The parents moved to Missouri when he was still a child and in that state the father followed general farming for a number of years. In their family were ten children: Eliza, Nancy, Mary, Adelaide and Amanda, all of whom are deceased; Martha, the widow of John Haynes, of Washington; James, deceased; John Patterson, of this review; Louis, deceased; and George, who died in infancy.

John P. Messer was educated in the public schools of Missouri and grew up upon his father's farm, upon which he remained until three years after his marriage. In 1864 he and his wife crossed the plains with ox teams and settled in Union county, whence after a short time they moved to the Willamette valley. In 1870 they came from that section to Coos county and lived upon rented farms for several years. Eventually, however, Mr. Messer took up one hundred and sixty acres on Cunningham creek, going to that section by pack train from Camas valley. Upon this property he lived for some time, removing from it in order to give his children the school advantages to be found in Coquille. He disposed of his property in 1908 and since that time has definitely abandoned farming. When he first took up his residence in the city he conducted a livery business and continued in this line of activity for fifteen years. It was in 1900 that he sold his livery and retired from business life. He now gives his attention to the management of his property and to the affairs of the local business concerns in which he holds stock. He owns a beautiful home in Coquille and residence and business property in this city. He is a stockholder in a creamery company and has a forty-one acre ranch in California.

On September 2, 1860, Mr. Messer was united in marriage to Miss Nancy J. Hatcher, a native of Missouri and a daughter of William and Mahala (Morris) Hatcher. Mrs. Messer is one of a family of ten children: John and James, both of whom are deceased; Nancy J., the wife of our subject; William, deceased; Elizabeth, the wife of Herbert Gibbs, of Josephine county, Oregon; Martha, deceased; Hiram, of Bridge, Oregon; Annie, the wife of A. L. Nosler, of Bridge; and Mary and Joseph, both of whom are deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Messer eight children were born of whom Louannie, John, Mamie, George, Ray, Wilder and Rose, are deceased. Zettie is the wife of Marvin Hawkins, deputy assessor, who formerly held the position of principal of schools in Coquille. They have two children, Mamie and Marvin, aged respectively ten and two years.

Mr. Messer gives his allegiance to the democratic party but never seeks public office. His wife belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church. In both his agricultural and his business activities he has been a distinct influence in the progress of this section. He helped build the roads through Coos county in the early days of its settlement and aided in the upbuilding of the section. He was interested in building the schools and for a long time was a director of the board of education. He helped organize the first creamery company and the first city water company and has watched the development and growth of Coos county and has to a large extent been identified with it. He is numbered among the enterprising and valued citizens of the section to which he came as a pioneer.

FRANK T. McMULLEN is operating a four hundred and eighty acre farm near Langlois and has other important property interests in this section of Oregon. He was born in Putnam, Connecticut, April 27, 1871, a son of Frank and Catherine (Carroll) McMullen, natives of Ireland, who came to America in early life. The father came to Oregon in 1878 and settled in Roseburg, where he lived for eight years, finally buying land in the vicinity and operating this in connection with property which he rented until 1885, when he came to Curry county and purchased one hundred and sixty acres, upon which he carried on an extensive and profitable dairy business until his retirement in 1900. He died in 1905 and his wife makes her home with the subject of this review. In their family were five children: Frank L., deceased; Jane, who died at the age of fourteen years; Anna, who passed away when she was twelve years old; Laura, the wife of J. S. Hughes, of Port Orford, by whom she has two children, Agnes and Anna; and Frank T., the subject of this sketch.

Frank T. McMullen was only seven years of age when he came with his parents to Oregon and consequently, his education was received in the public schools of this state. He grew up upon his father's farm. He is a self-made man in the sense that he accomplished a distinct prosperity by his own efforts, rising from poverty to a position of wealth and importance. When he began his active life at twenty-one he had no money and the prosperity which he now enjoys represents many years of hard and well directed work. When his father retired he took charge of the farm which he now owns and has added to it until it comprises four hundred and eighty acres well improved and in excellent condition. Mr. McMullen also owns business property in Langlois and eight blocks of residence property at Port Orford, besides valuable land on Coos bay and his judicious investments have made him one of the wealthy and prominent men of the section.

Mr. McMullen married in 1898, Miss Mary Hughes, of Port Orford, a native of Oregon, and a daughter of Patrick Hughes. She is one of a family of eight children born to her parents, as follows: Joseph, who is deceased; Edward and James, both of whom reside in Port Orford; John C., a clergyman, of Portland; Alice, the widow of J. P. Masterson, of Port Orford; Mary, the wife of our subject; and Thomas and Francis, also residents of Port Orford. Mr. and Mrs. McMullen have six children: Margerite, who was born in 1899, and is attending school; May, whose birth occurred in 1901, and is attending school; Teresa, born in 1902, who is a pupil in the public schools; John, born in 1905, and is attending school; Rosalie, who was born in 1906, and is also a pupil in the public schools; and Edith, whose birth occurred in 1908. The family are members of the Roman Catholic church.

Mr. McMullen is a republican and takes an interest in the affairs of his community. He belongs to the Knights of Columbus and the Fraternal Order of Eagles and is well known in both organizations. Besides being an able farmer he is a modern man of affairs with broad interests which he has the power and ability to make effective and a knowledge and comprehension of local conditions which make his investments benefit himself while promoting growth and development.

STEPHEN AND EDMUND M. GALLIER are numbered among the best known and most enterprising business men of Bandon, interested extensively in local concerns and to a high degree influencing commercial development. They own and operate the Gallier Hotel, the largest of its kind in Coos county and by able management and business methods of the most progressive kind are making it one of the important hostelrys in Oregon. They have been engaged in the hotel business in partnership for sixteen years and thus add to their other qualifications the advantage of long experience. They have been residents of Oregon since 1871 but both were born in Kendall county, Illinois, Stephen on the 4th of September, 1857, and E. M. on October 5, 1861. Their parents were William and Matilda (Henstis) Gallier, the latter a native of New York and the former of England. The father left his native country when he was a young man and crossed the Atlantic to America settling first in Philadelphia, where he worked in the Roland Spade & Shovel factory for a short time. He later moved to Yorkville, Illinois, and established a blacksmith shop there which he operated until 1862, moving in that year to Grundy county, where he purchased a farm and engaged in general agricultural pursuits for a short time. When he sold his property he went to Morris, Illinois, where for eighteen months he operated a hotel. His building was entirely destroyed by fire at the end of that time and William Gallier moved to Marion county where he farmed for three years. He was obliged to go to Santa Cruz, California, on account of failing health. He arrived in that city in January, 1871, and six months later, having entirely recovered he moved to Eldorado county, California, where he again engaged as a blacksmith, locating his shop on a toll wagon road which he leased and operated for a short time. In the same year he came with his family to Jackson county, Oregon, where he followed his trade for two years finally purchasing forty acres of railroad land upon which he carried on general farming until 1873. He came to Coos county in September of that year and settled on the Coquille river. In 1875 he moved to Curry county, proved up a homestead claim and lived upon his holdings for several years, farming and operating a blacksmith shop. In 1882 he purchased a home in the city of Coquille and also bought a small shop which he conducted until 1893 when he moved to Bandon and entered into partnership with his son E. M. Gallier, in the same line of activity. After four years the father sold out his interest and established himself in the hardware business at Coquille. After four years he moved his store to Bandon and was well known and prominent in mercantile circles of that city until 1906, when he retired. His wife passed away in January, 1907, when she was seventy-six years of age. Her husband survived her until February, 1911, dying at the age of eighty-four. To them were born three children: Stephen; Mary, who passed away at the age of eighteen months; and Edmund M.

Stephen Gallier, the elder partner in the hotel enterprise, received his education in the public schools of Coos county and started life for himself when he was seventeen years of age, operating a pack train to the river mining camp on the south fork of the Sixes.

river. For three years he followed this occupation and then took up a preemption and a homestead claim upon which he conducted a large sheep ranch until 1896. In June of that year he came to Bandon and formed a partnership with his brother Edmund in the operation of the Tupper Hotel, which they leased for four years. They met with gratifying success in the conduct of this enterprise and at the expiration of their lease purchased the hotel and have managed it since that time under the name of the Gallier Hotel. The brothers have recently built an addition to the original building and made extensive improvements, steadily adhering to their original policy of progress and expansion. The hotel contains one hundred and six rooms equipped with all modern comforts and conveniences and its operation is smoothly and systematically carried on. They have given most of their time and attention for the past sixteen years to further their enterprise and the excellent patronage the hotel enjoys attests their success. Both brothers are actively and intelligently interested in the progress and growth of the section in which they reside and have invested heavily in local land. They own more than one hundred lots in the business and residence sections of Bandon and also eighty acres, three miles from the town, which they have improved and developed. They have an interest in a four hundred and eighty acre ranch adjoining the city limits and have other important holdings in the county.

Edmund M. Gallier has been in partnership with his brother for sixteen years and their harmonious relations during that time have been an important factor in their success. The younger brother was also born in Kendall county, Illinois, his natal day being October 5, 1861. He came to Oregon with his parents in pioneer times and has been a resident of the state since 1873. He received his education in the public schools and began active life when he was sixteen years of age, operating a sheep ranch in Coos county in partnership with his brother. He later worked at various occupations for several years and in 1885 went to Coquille where he learned the blacksmith's trade and conducted a shop in association with his father for five years. He then became identified with the management of the Robinson Hotel but after one year moved to Bandon where he opened the first blacksmith shop in the city. In 1906 he entered into partnership with his brother Stephen in the conduct of the Tupper Hotel which was renamed the Gallier Hotel and has been successful and prosperous.

Both of the Gallier brothers are married. On January 12, 1887, Stephen wedded Miss Mary A. Langlois, a native of Curry county and a daughter of William and Mary A. Langlois, the former a native of the Isle of Guernsey, England, and the latter of Virginia, and both early settlers in Oregon. Her father sailed the sea in his younger years but later settled on a ranch in Curry county where he died in 1880. His wife made her home with Stephen Gallier until her death which occurred in 1898. Mr. and Mrs. William Langlois had eight children, seven of whom are living: James, who resides in Cape Blanco, Oregon; Frank, of Langlois; John, Thomas O., Mrs. Ella Nelson, and Charles E., all of Bandon; and Mary A., the wife of our subject. To Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Gallier have been born six children: W. W., who has passed away; one child who died in infancy; Lentner Ervin, who was born December 23, 1892, and educated in the Bandon high school; Edna, who was born in March, 1896, and is pursuing her studies in high school; Ellen, who has passed away; and Gladys, who was born in 1899, and is a student in the Bandon high school.

Edmund M. Gallier has been twice married. On December 29, 1885, he wedded Miss Emma L. Clemens, a native of San Francisco, who died in Oregon, in August, 1888. In April, 1891, Edmund Gallier was wedded to Miss Alice C. Tuttle, who was born in Pownal, Maine, and who is a daughter of S. J. and Amanda Tuttle of that state. They came to California at an early date and settled in San Francisco county, where the father operated a dray line for some time. They resided in various sections of the state until 1888 when they moved to Oregon settling in Coquille where the father conducted a hotel until his death which occurred in 1904, his wife's death having long preceded his. To Mr. and Mrs. Tuttle were born four children: Herbert M., who resides in California; Ernest, who is living in North Yarmouth, Maine; Ervin, who was a twin to Ernest, and who has passed away; and Alice C., the wife of our subject. Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Gallier became the parents of four children: Edmund W., who was born in 1893, and who is a student in the Bandon high school; one child who died in infancy; Reed A., who was born in 1896 and is a student in high school; and Alice K., whose birth occurred in 1898, and who is also pursuing her studies in the Bandon high school.

Both Gallier brothers give allegiance to the republican party and each has served in various important official capacities. Stephen was sheriff of Coos county for three terms from 1900 to 1906, was mayor of Bandon for two years and a member of the town council for three. He brought to his public duties the same ability and power of administration which have made him successful in the conduct of his business affairs. Edmund served as town marshal for six years and for eight years was deputy sheriff under Harlocker and also under his brother Stephen. He was a member of the town council for a number of years and always fulfilled his duties in an irreproachable manner. Stephen Gallier is a member of the Knights of Pythias and both brothers affiliate with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Edmund is well known in the affairs of the Woodmen of the World. The Gallier brothers are thorough business men working together in the most harmonious relations. Their affairs are carried on caretully and along progressive lines. They are capable and alert and have built up a distinct and substantial success upon long experience and efficient management. In all phases of their business life they have shown a comprehensive knowledge and a power of making their energies effective and have met with the measure of success which always rewards earnest, persistent and well directed labor.

PETER M. ABBEY, one of the well known hotel men of Oregon, who has been actively connected with the business in Newport for forty years, is a native of Watertown, Ohio. He was born August 19, 1837, a son of Seth Abbey, who was for many years a judge on the bench at Cleveland, Ohio, and subsequently filled the office of sheriff of Cuyahoga county. He served as an officer in the Union army during the entire period of the great rebellion and rode the same horse home at the close of the war that he chose at the beginning. He was very prominent for a number of years in northern Ohio, being a man of good education, sound judgment and, as was demonstrated by his life, a true lover of his country.

Peter M. Abbey received his education in the public schools and spent his boyhood and youth under conditions that were favorable for an active and useful career. His first employment was as clerk in a mercantile establishment and he continued there until 1862. He then went to Port Burwell, Canada, and engaged in buying and shipping cattle to Ohio. He was married in Canada and in 1866 came with his wife to Corvallis, Oregon, and remained at that place from September, 1866, to May of the following year. Having heard favorable reports concerning Newport, he and his wife traveled by wagon from Corvallis to Pioneer and then took passage aboard the old steamer Pioneer for Newport. There were few people in Newport at that time and it required a lively imagination to conceive the small settlement expanding into a thriving community. Mr. Abbey, however, had faith in the locality, which for forty-four years has been his home, and his early favorable impressions were verified. He entered the mercantile business, his customers for several years being principally Indians and fishermen. In 1871 he built the old Abbey Hotel in Newport and he has ever since been identified with the hotel business. In 1911 the new Abbey Hotel was completed. It contains fifty-one rooms and, as it is entirely modern and is conducted in such a way as to give satisfaction to patrons, the reputation of the Abbeyes as hotel-keepers is being well sustained.

In 1863 Mr. Abbey was married to Miss Cerena Reynolds, who was born at Vienna, Canada, July 6, 1848, and received a good education in the common and high schools of her native town. Her father was a farmer and was of Scotch descent, while her mother was of Irish descent. Mr. and Mrs. Abbey are the parents of four children, one of whom died in infancy. The others are: Edwin James, who was born November 29, 1865, and is connected with his father and brother in the hotel business; Morton Hassard, born April 11, 1869, who is now manager of the Abbey Hotel; and Irene Ellen, who died June 6, 1873, at the age of two years.

Mr. Abbey is an adherent of the republican party but has never sought political honors. He and his estimable wife are members of the Presbyterian church. During the many years of his residence in Newport he has made a host of friends, who perceive in him those qualities that command confidence and respect. Capable and conscientious in the discharge of every trust, he has assisted materially in the upbuilding of Newport and by his kindly and generous disposition has added to the comfort and happiness of all with whom he has associated.

JOHN W. COX is the owner of one of the fine ranches in the beautiful Wood River valley. His landed possessions are extensive, comprising fourteen hundred and eighty acres, two and one-half miles west of Fort Klamath. He was born in Roane county, Tennessee, November 27, 1861, his parents being Rufus and Malinda Catharine (Wilson) Cox, who were also natives of the same county. On leaving that state in 1881 they made their way to the Rogue River valley of Oregon, where their last days were spent, the mother dying in 1883, at the age of forty-eight years, while the father survived until 1908, passing away at the age of seventy-five. He was interested in ranching and in connection with his son John owned one thousand acres of land near Medford devoted to farming and stock-raising.

John W. Cox was the eldest in a family of four sons and four daughters. He was a young man of twenty years at the time of removal of the family to the northwest and he resided with his parents until December, 1892, when he married Elmira May Crain, a native of Jackson county, Oregon, to which place her father had removed from Ohio in 1851. Her father became a prominent and influential resident there and served in the state legislature. His wife, a native of New Jersey, arrived in Oregon in 1852 in company with her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Crain remained residents of Jackson county until called to their final rest.

Following his marriage John W. Cox began ranching independently, and with his wife owned about three thousand acres of land. Fourteen years ago he purchased his present ranch of fourteen hundred and eighty acres in the Wood River valley, about two and a half miles west of Fort Klamath. This ranch he operated for three years and then leased it out for ten years, but in the spring of 1912 he returned to the property and is again actively engaged in its management. After leasing the ranch he went to Medford, where he engaged as a farmer and stockman for eight years. He next went to Oakland and San Jose, California, looking after his interests in that state. He is the owner of two ranches in the Sacramento valley, one of two hundred and four acres and the other of one hundred and sixty acres. On his home place he has three hundred acres in timothy and runs some stock. For three years he was identified with the First National Bank of Medford but he has sold his interest in that institution. His ideas and methods are practical and are productive of good results. His property is becoming very valuable. It is attractively situated in one of the most beautiful valleys in the world, adjoining the Crater Lake National Park.

John W. Cox holds membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church, to the teachings of which they are loyal. They are interested in everything pertaining to the moral progress of the community and as a citizen Mr. Cox takes deep interest in the welfare and upbuilding of the district in which he lives.

ELMER E. MORRISON, who is conducting a highly lucrative hardware and farming implement store in Springfield, has been successfully identified with the local commercial fraternity for two and a half years. He was born in Polk county, Oregon, on the 9th of April, 1879, and is a son of Thomas J. and Elizabeth (Galloway) Morrison. The father is a native of Iowa and the mother of Oregon. The maternal grandparents were among the early pioneers of this state, making the trip overland from Illinois in 1834. Our subject is the eldest of the five children born to his parents, the others being as follows: Nellie, the wife of W. O. Hill of Heppner, this state, and the mother of one son, Herman; Etta, who married Jack Littell of Springfield, Oregon; Eva, the wife of Elza Sutton of Heppner, by whom she has had one child, Darold; and Carol, who is living in Portland.

In common with his brothers and sisters, Elmer E. Morrison was given the advantages of a common-school education. At the age of fourteen years he laid aside his text-books and began preparations for a business career, as an employe of John Belt, a druggist. He continued in his service for two and a half years, following which he went to eastern Oregon, locating at Elgin. There he worked in a warehouse for a year and then engaged in the teaming business for a similar period. He subsequently went to Sumpter, Oregon, and worked in the gold mines for two and a half years. His next removal was to Heppner, where he engaged in the dray business for two years, but was washed out at the time of the Heppner flood and lost eight horses and wagons, his house and all his other possessions. From Heppner he removed to Walterville. Upon his return to Lane county he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits and rented one hundred and seventy acres of land which he devoted to hop culture. He withdrew from this occupation at the expiration of three years, went to Eugene and took a position in a hardware store. He soon gave this up, however, and came to Springfield and opened a small second-hand store. When he first engaged in this business he had a stock invoicing about three hundred dollars, but during the intervening period of two and a half years he has increased his stock and enlarged his enterprise, giving up the second-hand business and now has one of the largest hardware and implement stores in Springfield which is one of the thriving and highly lucrative enterprises of the town.

For his wife and helpmate, Mr. Morrison chose Miss Vernie Clingan, the eldest child and only daughter of Pierce and Mary (Harris) Clingan. Mrs. Morrison has one brother, Fred A., who is a contractor and builder at Burns, Oregon. He is married and has one son, Hale. One daughter, Vernita, born on the 21st of April, 1905, and one son, Kenneth, who died at the age of thirteen months, have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Morrison.

Mr. and Mrs. Morrison are members of the Christian church in the work of which they take an active interest. He holds the office of deacon in this organization and is leader of the choir, while at one time he was superintendent of the Sunday school. In politics Mr. Morrison is a republican and he takes a helpful interest in all municipal affairs. He is now serving his second term as city treasurer and he has refused the office of mayor on two different occasions. He is also a member of the school board. Although he has not long been a resident of the town, Mr. Morrison is held in favorable regard by all who know him in either a business or social way. He is prospering in his undertakings and in addition to his hardware and implement store he holds stock in the Commercial State Bank and is the owner of a very pleasant home, the hospitality of which is extended to the many friends of him and his wife.

GEORGE E. BEERS. Residing in Woodville, Jackson county, where he was born, George E. Beers is operating a well improved farm of twenty acres which under his good management yields copious harvests. He was born in this county February 26, 1874, a son of Stephen H. and Elizabeth (Evans) Beers, the father a native of New York and the mother, of England. The parents migrated to Jackson county, Oregon, in 1871 and settled on a farm in the Evans valley, where the mother passed away in 1890. The father is still living on the old home place, having attained the age of sixty-eight years. In his family were six children only two of whom survive.

George E. Beers remained at home until he was of age and attended the common schools of the community, meanwhile assisting his father in the work of the farm. After attaining majority he was employed by neighboring farmers for a time but as he was careful to save his earnings he was soon able to buy twenty acres of land. Upon that farm he has placed valuable improvements. He has brought the fields to a high state of cultivation.

Mr. Beers was married in 1900 to Miss Ida Magerle, a native of Jackson county, and to their union one son, Lloyd S., was born, June 27, 1906. Mr. Beers supports the republican party and as he has taken a great deal of interest in educational affairs he has for some time been a member of the school board. He has long been regarded as one of the best citizens of the community, being greatly respected by a large number of business and personal friends with whom he associates. He takes an active interest in the upbuilding of the community along all lines and has great faith in the state of his nativity.

WILLIAM V. COPE, who died in Coquille, March 22, 1909, had been for twenty-one years a resident of Curry county, prominently identified with business and agricultural interests. He was known as one of the most able, progressive and public-spirited men of his section and his death was regretted by a large circle of friends who honored and esteemed him for the upright and honorable qualities in his character. He was born in Canada, in March, 1846, a son of Benjamin and Nancy (Vermilyea) Cope, the former a native of New York and the latter of Canada. In their family were seven children: Alexis L., of Canada; Elmira, who resides in California; Helen M., the wife of Michael Keiser, of Sparks, Nebraska; William V., of this review; Peter P., who has passed away; Benjamin E., a resident of Canada; and James A., who lives in Bandon.

William V. Cope lived with his parents until he was six years of age and then made his home with a cousin until he had reached his eleventh year. At that early age and until he was nineteen he worked on a farm. Afterward he went to Wisconsin and engaged in general farming in various sections of that state for five years, going to Minnesota at the end of that time in order to take a position as foreman on a large ranch. After two years he rented a farm which he developed and improved until he went to California settling in Humboldt county. In that section he purchased land which, however, he soon sold and then operated a rented farm until he came to Oregon. He settled in Curry county in 1888 and bought one hundred and twenty acres of land and engaged in dairying and teaming and was also identified with the cooperage business, on a small scale. He brought the first thrasher to this county. In 1906 he moved to Coquille and established himself in the butcher business, in which he remained until just prior to his death, which occurred March 22, 1909. His widow now owns the home in Coquille and a fine dairy ranch of one hundred and twenty acres, two miles from Langlois, on which she makes her home.

On January 26, 1868, Mr. Cope was united in marriage to Miss Sarah M. Emerson, who was born in New York, a daughter of B. N. and Hannah (Pope) Emerson. Mrs. Cope is one of two children. Her brother, Richard B., lives in Eureka, California. Mr. and Mrs. Cope became the parents of eight children: Ralph E., a rancher of Langlois, who is married and has four children; Leora E., the wife of W. P. Beckett, of Ilwaco, Washington, by whom she has four children; Della M., who married Fred Belloni, of Coquille; Helen M., the wife of J. M. Nye, also of Coquille, by whom she has one child; Benjamin

E., who lived in Langlois, and died, leaving a wife and one child; Alexis W., of Langlois, who is associated with his mother in the operation of the home farm; William E., who is also a partner with his mother and brother in the conduct of the home ranch; and Mary V., who passed away at the age of twelve years.

Mr. Cope was identified with the American Protective Association and also belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He gave his allegiance to the republican party and served as county commissioner for two terms and also did able work as road superintendent. During the twenty-one years of his residence in Curry county he took an active and helpful part in the work of improvement and progress, which has been carried forward along various lines. Possessed of determination, energy, and unflagging industry, he worked his way upward through hardships and obstacles until he gained a prominent place among the representative citizens of the section. His qualities of mind and heart were evidenced by the sincere and widespread regret which attended his death.

JOHN R. SELLERS is most successfully engaged in general ranching and stock-raising five miles east of Creswell, where he owns eight hundred and six acres of land, which has been in the possession of his family for over forty years. His birth occurred in Story county, Iowa, on May 15, 1854, his parents being James R. and Mary Ann (McCartney) Sellers. The father's natal day was the 1st of September, 1827, and he was the second son of Mr. and Mrs. James Rodman Sellers who had the following children: John, who lives in Missouri; James R., the father of our subject; William, who is living in Story county, Iowa; and Robert, Moses, Sarah, Julia, Maria and Thomas. James R. Sellers was reared to manhood in Illinois and there he was also educated and on the 7th of January, 1849, married Miss Mary Ann McCartney. He subsequently located in Story county, Iowa, whence he crossed the plains in 1863 to California. There he bought one hundred and sixty acres of land which he cultivated for eight years, at the expiration of which time he continued his journey westward, locating in Oregon in the fall of 1871. The following spring he bought four hundred and fifty acres of land about five miles east of Creswell, which formed the nucleus of his large ranch. Three hundred and eighty acres of this was already cleared and under cultivation and, as he was able, he extended his holdings until his home ranch embraced eight hundred and six acres. He subsequently purchased one hundred and six acres located in the same vicinity and seven hundred acres about four miles west of Creswell, making his holdings in Lane county aggregate sixteen hundred acres, ten hundred and fifty of which is tillable. Mr. Sellers resided on his ranch until 1897, when he withdrew from active work and removed to Eugene, living retired until his death on February 3, 1911, at the venerable age of eighty-three years. The mother of our subject was born in the state of Michigan on the 25th of April, 1829, and was a daughter of Mary A. and Robert McCartney. Her parents were natives of the Empire state, whence they removed first to Illinois and later to Michigan and Iowa. The family of Mr. and Mrs. McCartney numbered five. To Mr. and Mrs. Sellers were born six children, our subject being the eldest son. In order of birth the others are as follows: Mary, the wife of J. L. Hunter, a carpenter of Eugene; James D., who is deceased; Martha Ann, the widow of A. G. Matthews, of Eugene; William T., a ranchman in Umatilla county; and Charles H., who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Creswell. The mother passed away at the age of fifty-nine years.

John R. Sellers was a child of nine years when his parents removed to California and a youth of seventeen when the family located in Lane county. He began his education in the public schools of his native state and completed it in Oregon, remaining at home until he was twenty-one. After attaining his majority he started out to make his own way in the world, going to eastern Oregon where he worked on a stock ranch at intervals for twenty years. During that time he gradually accumulated a herd of his own and for about ten years was engaged in stock-raising, meeting with very good success. He acquired two hundred and fourteen acres of land in that time which he has in hay that he uses in feeding his herds. In the spring of 1909, he disposed of his interests there and returning to Lane county bought the old home ranch from his father, and here in connection with the cultivation of his fields he continues to engage in stock-raising.

On the 23d of October, 1878, John R. Sellers was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Martin of Creswell, and to them have been born four children: Nora D., the wife of L. M. Streeter, of Port Klamath, this state; William Frank, who is engaged in mining in Nevada; Ethel M., who died in girlhood; and Tressa A., who is attending school at Enterprise, this state. Mrs. Sellers is a daughter of Ivan and Mary Ann (Turpin) Martin, whose family numbered five daughters and one son, as follows: Margaret A., the wife of Henry Rinehart, of Walla Walla, Washington; Elizabeth J., the wife of W. E. Rinehart, of Cottage Grove; William Frank Martin, who is ranching at Kenewick, Washington; Matilda, who died in childhood; Mrs. Eliza Sellers; and Dora, the widow of James Helms, of Talent, Oregon. The parents of Ivan Martin were Joseph and Jane Martin, and to them were born, beside the father of the wife of our subject, the following children: Isaac, Jonathan, Margaret, Urias, Francis, Ellen, Asinthia, Julian, Louis and Ephraim. The parents of Mary Ann (Turpin) Martin were John J. and Elizabeth Turpin, who were married at Bowling Green, Pike county, Missouri. Unto them was born beside Mary Ann Turpin one sister, Margaret, who became the wife of Ed Mulholland, and they are living in La Grande, Union county, Oregon.

In his political views Mr. Sellers is a democrat and has served as road supervisor for four years and as school trustee for one. He is one of the enterprising and progressive men of his community and takes an earnest interest in everything pertaining to the public welfare. Both he and Mrs. Sellers are members of the Christian church and generously contribute of both their means and time in furthering its work. He is a worthy representative of a highly esteemed pioneer family and has many friends in the county, whose regard he has won through his personal worth.

GEORGE W. LOOSLEY. Various business interests and activities have claimed the attention of George W. Loosley, whose efforts have not only been a source of individual profit but also an element in public progress and prosperity. He now makes his home on a ranch on the west bank of Wood river, three miles south of Fort Klamath, and has converted the place from a tract of wild land into a well developed farm. He was born at Champoeg, Clackamas county, Oregon, August 16, 1856, a son of John and Lucy (Walling) Loosley. The father was born in Oxford, England, February 8, 1824, and the mother in Muscatine, Iowa, January 22, 1834. The father served an apprenticeship at the miller's trade and when twenty-one years of age crossed the Atlantic to New York, whence he made his way to Chicago. There he operated a mill for a year and in 1852 made his way to the gold mines of California. He followed mining near Yreka and also in Jackson county, Oregon, and he operated the first gristmill at Albany, Oregon. He was married there and later went to Champoeg, where he conducted a gristmill for Major McLaughlin. Subsequently he removed to the Grande Ronde Indian reservation in Yamhill county, where he was in the employ of the government under General John F. Miller for about three years. He next went to McMinnville, where he operated a gristmill for several years, but he lost all that he had in the milling business about 1870. He was also in ill health and he had a family of seven children to support. Conditions looked very dark and discouraging but in 1871 he made his way to Klamath Agency, secured a tract of government land and filed on his homestead, settling in the Wood River valley before the survey was made. The remainder of his life was here passed, his death occurring November 8, 1900. He engaged in the cattle business here, starting with sixty head, and he was the first to demonstrate the fact that cattle could remain in the valley through the winter, the other settlers telling him that there was too much snow. Mr. Loosley, however, cut hay and fed his stock and his care of them enabled them to withstand the hard winter. He owned three hundred and twenty acres of land and had from three hundred to four hundred head of cattle on the range, for the whole country was open then. During the first two years of his residence in this part of the state he was employed at the Indian agency, at which time his nearest neighbors were at Klamath Falls, forty miles away, with some soldiers at the fort. He was largely instrumental in having this valley settled by homeseekers and he contributed in large measure to the early improvement and progress in this part of the state. His wife survived him and passed away in the Wood River valley May 28, 1912. She was a daughter of Jerome B. and Sarah Walling, natives of the middle west, who in 1847 crossed the plains to the Willamette valley and settled on the present site of Amity, in Yamhill county, where they secured a donation claim. In 1864 Mr. Walling removed to Boise, Idaho, where he secured land and put in the first irrigation system and also planted the first orchard of that district. He prospered in his undertakings and had a goodly competency to leave to his large family at his death.

George W. Loosley was the second in order of birth in a family of eleven children, the other being: Nancy, the deceased wife of Jacob Moyer; Mary, the wife of John H. Smart, of Wood River valley; J. F., also living in this valley; Rosa, the wife of George L. Nutley, of Tacoma, Washington; Bird, of Klamath Falls; Philip Sheridan, living at Tolo, Oregon; Marion, of Wood River valley; Fannie, the wife of Oscar Bunch, of Fort Klamath; Milan A., of the Philippine Islands, in the signal service department of the government; and Benjamin, who is postmaster of Fort Klamath.

George W. Loosley remained at home with his parents until twenty-four years of age. He was married May 2, 1880, to Emma Anderson, who was born at Brownsville, Oregon, December 8, 1858, a daughter of the Rev. Marion and Malissa (Arnold) Anderson, who were born, reared and married in the middle west, and in 1851 settled in the Rogue River valley of Oregon, whence they later removed to the Willamette valley. The father was a lifelong clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal church. His wife died in January, and he in April of 1861, when they were residing near Ashland, Oregon.

In 1882 Mr. Loosley built and operated the first steamboat on the Upper Klamath lake. It was a screw-propeller, called the General Howard. He afterward built the City Klamath, a stern wheel boat but in 1887 he disposed of his steamboat interests and has since concentrated his energies upon ranching. He owns thirteen hundred acres in Wood River valley in three ranches. His own home is pleasantly situated three miles south of Fort Klamath, on the west bank of Wood river, and through his efforts the place has been transformed from a tract of wild land into a highly improved property. He has every acre under ditch and owns the water supply. The fencing, ditching and irrigating have all been done by him and he also erected good buildings upon his place, which is devoted to the raising of cattle. In 1895 he assisted in establishing the first creamery in Wood River valley at Fort Klamath and for a year after acted as manager, after which the business was sold to his brother John F. Loosley, who still conducts it. George W. Loosley also spent two years in the butchering business at Ashland, from 1908 until 1910, as a member of the Neil-Loosley Company. They owned three markets, bought and sold cattle and carried on an extensive business, their sales in the retail department amounting to sixty thousand dollars annually.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Loosley have been born four children. Earl was born June 28, 1881, and died January 3, 1882. Edward K., who was born March 4, 1883, is the owner of a fruit ranch at Beswick, California. He married Bessie Butler and has one child, George, Carey V., born June 13, 1885, is at home. Clara M. is the wife of Fred R. Neil, a stockman of the Wood River valley, and they have two children: Joe, born March 11, 1907; and Frederick, born May 13, 1910. Edward Loosley spent one year in the State University and is a graduate of the Armstrong Business College. Carey spent three and a half years at the State University and is now superintendent of the Abner Weed ranch of twenty-two thousand acres in Wood River valley. Clara pursued a normal course at Ashland.

In his political views Mr. Loosley is a republican, having always supported the party, as did his father before him. His father voted twice to make Oregon a free state when the question of slavery was before the people. Fraternally Mr. Loosley is connected with Ashland Lodge, No. 112, F. & A. M., and his wife is a member of the Eastern Star. They also hold membership in the Episcopal church and are interested in all that pertains to the material, intellectual, political and moral advancement of the district.

STEWART BATES EAKIN, who passed away on the 14th day of February, 1912, was for many years one of the most influential factors in local business and financial circles, and contributed largely toward promoting the general development of Eugene. As one of the founders and organizers of the First National Bank, of which he was vice president for many years, he was a distinctive figure in the business life of the community, and he was also prominently identified with political affairs, and not only filled some of the leading county and city offices but represented his district in the state senate and legislature.

He was born in Rutland, Kane county, Illinois, six miles from Elgin, on the 28th of August, 1846, and was a son of Stewart Bates and Mary (McEldowney) Eakin. The father was a native of Ireland, of Scotch-Irish parentage, and the mother was born in the United States. The father came to the United States in 1840 and was married June 12, 1844. The family home was for many years located in the state of Illinois. In 1866, the father, mother and other members of the family started across the plains from Bloom, now Chicago Heights, Illinois, for Oregon. They were four months making the journey across the prairies with a mule team, meeting with the usual experiences encountered by all who came to the northwest at that period in an emigrant train. Upon their arrival in Lane county they located three miles northwest of Eugene, enduring the hardships and privations incident to pioneering the world over. The father continued to reside there until his death which occurred March 12, 1892, at the age of seventy-six years. Mrs. Mary Eakin died November 5, 1866. Of seven children born to Mr. and Mrs. Eakin our subject died recently and six are still living. In order of birth these seven are: Stewart Bates Eakin, deceased; Judge Robert Eakin of Salem, this state; Jane Paul, the wife of Calvin Hannah, of Eugene; Herbert, who lives in Cottage Grove; Mary C., who married John McQueen, of Portland; Judge James A., of Astoria; and Walter, who is engaged in the abstract business in Astoria. Stewart Bates Eakin, Sr., was twice married, his second wife being Mrs. Nancy (Bates) Leslie who died November 29, 1896.

The first twenty years in the life of Stewart B. Eakin were passed in his native state. He received his education in Bloom, Illinois. When he was twelve years of age he worked in his father's store before and after school hours and his bed was in the store building, up to the time of their departure for Oregon in 1866. He drove a team across the plains and passed one winter with his parents in Oregon, but began clerking in the store of Peters & Parsons in April 1867, and continued with this firm until 1870, when he engaged in the sheep business. Not having the necessary experience in this line, his efforts were not successful and he sold out at the end of the year. He then secured a clerkship with F. B. Dunn, remaining with that house until the spring of 1874, when unsolicited he was nominated on the republican ticket for sheriff of Lane county, and was elected by a majority of one vote, the county being strongly democratic. His tenure of office was for two years and he served with so much satisfaction that in 1876 he was renominated and elected by a three hundred and thirty majority and was again renominated and elected in 1878, continuing in the office until 1880, when he began clerking for T. G. Hendricks, remaining one year. In 1881 he made his first eastern trip and passed six months amid old and new scenes. Returning to Eugene in the spring of 1882 he was elected to the state legislature, being the only republican elected from Lane county. In 1888 he was elected to the state senate from Lane county, being the first republican senator from this county in eighteen years. During his political career Mr. Eakin was never defeated.

He first became identified with local business and financial affairs in 1883, when together with T. G. Hendricks he organized a private banking house, known as the Hendricks & Eakin Bank. This was conducted as a private institution with Mr. Hendricks as president and Mr. Eakin, as cashier, until February 27, 1886, when they secured a charter for a national bank and thus established the First National Bank of Eugene, which began business March 9, 1886, with a paid-up capital of fifty thousand dollars. Mr. Eakin becoming cashier, which office he held for several years when in April, 1899, he was elected vice president and continued in this office until his death. He was also one of the organizers and a heavy stockholder of the Eugene Water Works Company. He possessed unusual business sagacity and met with excellent success in his undertakings and not only was one of the largest stockholders in this bank, but he also had extensive property interests in the state.

On September 27, 1871, Mr. Eakin was united in marriage to Miss Eliza J. Hadley, who was born in Lane county on the 12th of September, 1852, and is a daughter of Henry D. and Loretta (Cox) Hadley. The father was a native of Portland, Maine, and the mother of Sandusky, Ohio, and they were married in Illinois. They crossed the plains to Oregon in 1851, settling ten miles southwest of Eugene, where the father acquired two thousand acres of land and engaged in stock-raising. He became one of the largest sheep-raisers in this section and extended the boundaries of his ranch until it comprised four thousand acres of land, while his herds contained as high as seven thousand head of sheep. He met with most gratifying prosperity and the latter years of his life were passed in retirement in the city of Eugene, where he passed away April 2, 1906, at the venerable age of ninety-one years. The mother was eighty-two at the time of her death, which occurred on the 12th of July, 1904. Mr. Hadley figured prominently in the early political life of Lane county, and was one of the first members of the Oregon legislature, while he served for some years as justice of the peace and in lieu of a better place, oftentimes held his court under the shade of an old oak tree near the center of the city of Eugene, the tree having stood there until about a year ago when it was cut down. More extended mention of the Hadley family is made in another part of this work. Mrs. Eakin is the eldest of the four children born to Mr. and Mrs. Hadley, the other members of the family being: Charles and Frank, who are residents of Eugene; and George, who is living on a part of the old home ranch. To Mr. and Mrs. Eakin was born one daughter, Georgie Myrtle, who died at the age of seven months.

In matters of religious faith Mr. Eakin was a Presbyterian, as is also Mrs. Eakin, and in politics he was a republican. He was a man well adapted to pioneering as he was resourceful and fearless, and possessed the determination of purpose that enabled him to reach his objective point, whatever it might be. He was deeply interested in the improvement of educational institutions and for several years he handled the funds of the University of Oregon, greatly to the benefit of that school. He was also regent of the Normal School at Monmouth until it was closed by an act of a state law. He gave Lane county and the city of Eugene notable service both as a private citizen and a public official, and was loved and esteemed throughout the community, where he had hosts of friends who paid him that tribute of absolute loyalty which his splendid character so well merited.

IRA B. BARTLE, M. D., is one of the well known and respected citizens of North Bend, Coos county, where he is successfully engaged in the general practice of medicine. He was born in Woodhull, New York, September 16, 1871, and is a son of William and Hannah (Baxter) Bartle, both of whom are natives of New York. They celebrated their marriage in that state and there continued to live until 1885 at which time they settled at Larned, Kansas. In 1904 they removed to Oregon and established their home at Eugene where they are still living. They are the parents of three children: Ella, the deceased wife of V. Neal of Tillamook, Oregon; Ira B., the subject of this review; and Phillip, who is engaged in the general practice of medicine at Eugene, Oregon.

Ira B. Bartle was reared in his parents' home and received his elementary education in the public schools of New York. In 1885 he removed with his parents to Kansas where he continued his studies and was graduated from the high school in Larned, Kansas, in 1891. He then took up the study of medicine in a college at Keokuk, Iowa, and was graduated therefrom with the degree of M. D. in the class of 1894, after which he engaged in the practice of his profession for some time in Kansas and later settled at Carmen, Oklahoma. Some time later he went to Louisiana where he pursued a course of study in the Tulane University for four years and then returned to Carmen, Oklahoma, where he again opened offices and was engaged in the practice of his profession until 1904. In that year he removed to Oregon, locating first at Eugene where he practiced medicine for three years, after which he settled in North Bend and has since successfully followed his profession at that place. He is one of three physicians of North Bend who are engaged in the general practice of medicine. Dr. Bartle is physician for the Simpson Lumber Company and has been United States quarantine officer of this port for three years. While in Oklahoma he was one of the executive board of doctors of that state. He is the owner of a fine home and other property in North Bend and has a summer home up the river. He also owns a cranberry ranch in North Inlet, Coos county.

Dr. Bartle was twice married. His second union was with Miss Maud R. Coke, a native of Coos county and a daughter of R. J. and Barbara Coke, of North Bend, Oregon. The father was a native of Tennessee and the mother of Kansas. Mrs. Bartle came with her parents, who were among the early settlers of this part of the state, to Oregon. Her father owns and operates the Coos Bay Grocery of North Bend. To Mr. and Mrs. Coke two children were born: Ralph, a resident of Los Angeles, California; and Maud R., the wife of the subject of this review.

Dr. Bartle was by his first wife the father of three children: Helen, who was born in 1898; Sanford, born in 1902; and Dorothy, whose birth occurred in 1906. Dr. Bartle's second wife received her education in Coos county and after passing through the lower grades was graduated from the high school. Subsequently she engaged in teaching school until the time of her marriage. She is a graduate of the State Normal school.

Dr. Ira B. Bartle belongs to the republican party and has been a member of the city council of North Bend for two years. He has fraternal relations with the Masonic lodge and with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is a member of the Knights of Pythias, having passed through all the chairs of this lodge. He is one of the successful physicians of Coos county and is a man whose aid is always to be relied upon to advance any public measure calculated to improve conditions for the people in his county and state.

ANDREW JACKSON HAMLIN is living upon two hundred and fifty-seven acres of land in Curry county, near Langlois, and is well known in agricultural circles of this section. He is a native of Oregon, born in Jackson county, in 1867, a son of James Hamlin, a native of Maine, and a pioneer of Jackson county. Andrew J. Hamlin is the youngest of seven children, six of whom are living, the others being: Rose, who is the wife of Jesse Wilson, of Medford; Julia, the wife of Thomas Myers, of Medford; and William, George, and Jefferson, all of whom reside in Medford.

Andrew J. Hamlin grew up upon the home farm in Jackson county and received his education in the district schools. After his father died he assumed the management of the homestead and operated and developed this property until after the death of his mother. In 1901 he sold the farm and came to Curry county, settling near Langlois, where he bought two hundred and fifty-seven acres of unimproved land which, with the aid of his two sons, he cleared and developed, building barns, granaries, and other buildings necessary for the complete equipment of a modern farm, and he occupies a pleasant home which he also erected.

In 1888 Mr. Hamlin was united in marriage to Miss Alva Fitzwater, a native of California, and a member of one of the pioneer families in that state. She is one of two children, the other having died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Hamlin have three sons, James Edward, who was born February 5, 1889, married Miss Mabel Gertrude Foster, December 24, 1911. She is a native of Washington and a daughter of J. L. and Sadie (Churchill) Foster, both of Illinois. Delbert was born March 28, 1891. Erwin V., the youngest member of the family, was born July 26, 1893, and is attending school.

Mr. Hamlin gives his allegiance to the republican party and is identified with the Improved Order of Red Men. For over a quarter of a century he has farmed in Oregon and eleven years of this time have been spent in Curry county, where his labors have resulted in developing an uncultivated tract into a model farm. Thus he has added not only to his own prosperity but indirectly to general advancement and growth.

EDMONSON M. LEEVER. The life record of Edmonson M. Leever indicates what may be accomplished when industry is a dominant element in one's nature. It has been that quality which has gained for him a substantial measure of success and he is now the owner of a good farm on Anna creek, two miles north of Fort Klamath. He was born at Central Point, Jackson county, Oregon, October 2, 1867, and is a son of William and Elizabeth M. (Constant) Leever. The father's birth occurred in Springfield, Ohio, February 27, 1829, and the mother, a native of Illinois, was born January 2, 1839. William Leever crossed the plains in 1849 to the Willamette valley, making the journey with ox teams from his native state. After teaching school for two years he went to Portland, visiting the site of that city when there was only one cabin within its present corporation limits. Removing to Jackson county, he taught school at Central Point and spent the remainder of his life in that district, devoting the greater part of his time and attention to farming. He was injured in an accident which incapacitated him for business for five or six years before his death, which occurred in 1903. His wife died July 19, 1900. In their family were ten children: W. C., who makes his home at Central Point, Oregon; Levina, the wife of Frank Hatlaway, also of Central Point; Ida, the wife of John Bollinger, of Modesta, California; Edmonson M.; J. C., living at Visalia, California; T. S., of the same state; Ada, the wife of Walter Damon, of the John Day county of Oregon; Lucinda, the wife of W. J. Guy, of Portland; Nellie, the wife of Frank Jeffries, of California; and Elizabeth, the wife of Eli Mayer, of Exeter, California.

E. M. Leever, whose name introduces this record, was a resident of Jackson county until he settled in the Wood River valley, in Klamath county, October 15, 1898. He worked for wages for a number of years in early manhood, spending two years in Portland but most of his life upon a ranch. He has here a tract of land of one hundred and sixty acres, having homesteaded eighty-two and a half acres and purchased the remainder. His place is pleasantly and conveniently located on Anna creek, two miles north of Fort Klamath, and has been greatly developed and improved by him, many modern equipments and accessories being added. In addition to his farming interests Mr. Leever is a stockholder in the Home Building & Realty Company, of Klamath Falls, and a stockholder in the Wood River Cream and Butter Association. He has a stock and dairy ranch, milking twelve cows, and he is closely associated with dairy interests in this part of the state. He does his banking in the First National Bank of Medford, making trips over the mountains ninety-three miles with teams. In the early days of his residence here Medford was his trading point. He is likewise a stockholder in the Aransas Pass Deep Water Harbor of Texas.

In 1894 occurred the marriage of Mr. Leever and Miss Lizzie J. Nicholson, who was born in Jasper county, Iowa, April 20, 1868, and in the fall of 1891 came to Oregon. She is a daughter of C. T. and Mary (Norton) Nicholson, who were natives of Indiana. The father still resides at Medford but the mother passed away there in March, 1909. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Leever are three children, Fern, Mamie and Russell. Mr. Leever is a republican in his political views and somewhat prominent in the local ranks of the party, having for the past four years served as a central committeeman. The cause of education finds in him a warm friend, as is indicated in his service as school director for a number of years. Fraternally he is connected with Medford Lodge, No. 83, I. O. O. F. He has many friends in that part of the state as well as in the Wood River valley, where he is most widely and favorably known.

CHARLES APPLGATE, a prominent representative of a family whose history is closely interwoven with that of Douglas county and the state of Oregon, took up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres adjoining the present site of the town of Yoncalla, in the spring of 1850. There he continued to reside until called to his final rest in 1879, when in the seventy-fourth year of his age. He was a Kentuckian by birth, while his wife, Melinda (Miller) Applegate, was a native of Tennessee. All of their fifteen children grew to manhood and womanhood. In 1843, in association with his brothers, Jesse and Lindsay, Charles Applegate formed the Applegate Company and with about eight hundred people crossed the plains to the Sunset state. Jesse Applegate, one of the most dominant characters in the pioneer settlement of western Oregon, was captain of the company. Our subject had two wagons, each drawn by four oxen, and brought with him ten cows and one horse. Leaving his cattle at Walla Walla, Washington, he built a boat and made the journey by water to Oregon City, later going to Marion county. The following winter he worked for a Mr. Burr, "the mission blacksmith," whose shop was situated about fourteen miles from Salem. In 1844 he went to Polk county and settled on a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres about four miles north of Dallas, continuing to reside thereon until he disposed of the property in the spring of 1850. At that time he brought his family south to Douglas county, taking up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres adjoining the present site of the town of Yoncalla. His brothers had already settled in the Yoncalla valley.

It was in 1851 that Charles Applegate and his brothers built the first schoolhouse in Douglas county, installing James Applegate as teacher and conducting the institution independent of outside aid. At the cost of one thousand dollars they purchased from Harper's Publishing Company, of New York city, a library which was shipped by water around Cape Horn. James Applegate, the first teacher of Douglas county and the son of Charles, was later chosen county judge and subsequently served as county commissioner, while for several years he was a member of the state legislature. In 1864 he enlisted for service in the Civil war and was made sergeant major of his regiment, acting in that capacity for one year or until the close of hostilities. Charles Applegate, who passed away in 1879, was survived by his wife until 1888, the latter reaching the age of seventy-six years. Thus the community lost two of its most highly respected and valued pioneer settlers.

ALBERT EUGENE ELDER, secretary of the Klamath Water Users Association and also identified with agricultural interests in Klamath county, was born in Lewisburg, Wayne county, Iowa, March 29, 1875, his parents being John J. and Martha Agnes (Kerr) Elder. His father was born in Coshocton county, Ohio, in 1847 and when but three years of age was taken by his parents to Monroe county, Iowa, where the family home was established in 1850. There he was reared to manhood amid pioneer scenes and surroundings and in 1872 he wedded Martha A. Kerr, who was born in Dubuque county, Iowa, in 1851. He has since resided in the Hawkeye state and for many years followed farming and merchandising but is now living retired. To him were born three sons and a daughter who reached adult age; Albert E.; Claude H., who was born in 1877 and was killed by a boiler explosion in 1900; Alma Jeanetta, the wife of Hallie Duncan, of Allerton, Iowa; and T. Harley, of Torrington, Wyoming.

Albert E. Elder was reared at the place of his birth, remaining on the home farm until sixteen years of age, during which period he attended the public schools and then entered the high school, from which he was graduated with the class of 1894. For one year he engaged in teaching and then matriculated in the Iowa State Agricultural College, in which he had pursued his studies for a year and a half when the Spanish-American war broke out. Enlisting in Company A, Fifty-first Iowa Volunteer Infantry at Des Moines, he went to the Philippines and was on active duty until honorably discharged at San Francisco in November, 1899. He then returned to the State Agricultural College at Ames, Iowa, and was graduated with the class of 1903. During the summer months he was employed in a law office at Des Moines and in January, 1903, entered the Iowa College of Law, from which he was graduated in 1904. He afterward engaged in teaching for one term in South Dakota and then opened a law office at Allison, Butler county, Iowa, where he continued in practice until 1907. In that year he came to Oregon and spent about a year in looking over the state in search of a favorable location. He decided upon Klamath Falls and has made his home here since March, 1908. He was admitted to the bar in Oregon but has not engaged in active practice, devoting the greater part of his time during the past three years to his duties as secretary of the Klamath Water Users' Association, having closely studied irrigation. He owns a tract of land eight miles southeast of Klamath Falls, which is under the United States ditch.

Albert Eugene Elder has won a wide acquaintance and gained the warm friendship of many during the period of his residence in the northwest. While residing in Iowa he held a major's commission and he has taught military tactics to school children since coming to southern Oregon. His political allegiance is given to the republican party and he is an exemplary representative of the Masonic fraternity, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the Presbyterian church. He is also a member of the Shakespearian Club and broad reading has kept him in touch with a wide variety of literary subjects and with topics of general interest. His military service, his business affairs, his literary and social activities all bespeak him an enterprising, progressive man, popular with the citizens among whom he makes his home.

EDWIN BAKER is the owner of a valuable farm located on the south fork of the Coquille river and is bringing it, by scientific and progressive methods of agriculture into a flourishing and highly productive condition. He was born in Iowa on the 21st of February, 1866, and is a son of A. J. and Joanna Baker, the father a native of Indiana and the mother of Missouri. The parents were married in Iowa and spent several years in that state. The mother died in 1873 and the father removed to Kansas, sixteen years later. He took up a homestead near Norton where he was prosperous and successful as a farmer until 1907 when he removed to Seattle, Washington, and there he is now living retired. To him were born seven children: H. M., Annie and Clotilda, all of whom are deceased; G. A., who maintains his residence in California; Edwin, the subject of this review; and James B. and William, both of whom are deceased.

Edwin Baker received his education in the public schools and laid aside his books at the age of fifteen in order to earn his own livelihood. He learned the trade of blacksmithing and followed that occupation with success for two years. He later became a fireman on the Burlington & Missouri River railway. He gave up that work in 1889, in which year he established his residence in Oregon. He settled first in Portland where he was employed by the Wolff and Swigger Machine Company for six months. He resigned that position eventually and spent two years engaged in various lines of activity. He operated a steamboat on Coos bay for three years and later worked in the ship yards of North Bend. Finally he determined to devote his attention to agriculture and bought one hundred and fifty acres of land, four miles south of Myrtle Point, in the valley of the south fork of the Coquille river, and there he is conducting an extensive agricultural enterprise, operated along modern and scientific lines.

In 1895 Mr. Baker was united in marriage to Miss Charlotte C. Eckhoff, a native of Coos county and a daughter of Charles and Charlotte Eckhoff. Mrs. Baker's father died May 10, 1911, and her mother is still living at North Bend, Oregon, in the sixty-ninth year of her age. The wife of our subject is one of eleven children born to her parents, ten of whom are living. To Mr. and Mrs. Baker has been born one daughter, Charlotte C., whose birth occurred on October 8, 1896, and who is attending school.

Edwin Baker is a republican and has never sought public office. He is one of the representative and successful men of Coos county and has borne his part in the development of his section by unremitting industry.

REUBEN W. ENSIGN. Although Reuben W. Ensign has lived only seven years in Oregon, he has gained a distinct place in agricultural circles of Coos county by his able management of two hundred and forty acres of land in that section. He was born in New York state in 1846, a son of Richard and Sabra (Bush) Ensign, natives of New York. In their family were four children: Otis, Bertha and Martha, all of whom have passed away; and Reuben, of this review.

Reuben W. Ensign received his education in the New York public schools and when he was eighteen years of age began his active life, working at various occupations until he was twenty-eight, when he went to Pennsylvania and began working in the oil fields. He was successful and became the owner of valuable wells in that state. Eventually, however, he disposed of his holdings and returned to New York, where he farmed for fourteen years, abandoning this occupation in order to go to Ohio, where for ten years he was identified with the Standard Oil Company. In 1905 he came to Oregon and bought two hundred and forty acres of land in Coos county. The land is in two tracts, one of forty acres and the other of two hundred and upon the smaller of these Mr. Ensign has erected a modern home, in which he resides. The two hundred acre tract fronts the Pacific ocean and is almost entirely timber land.

Mr. Ensign married, in 1867, Miss Susan O. Miller, a native of New York, and a daughter of John and Philena (Baldwin) Miller, who were the parents of eight children: William, Adelbert, and Clarence, all of whom reside in New York; Alice, the wife of Winfield Scott, of Findlay, Ohio; Eunice, Mary, and Florence, all of whom have passed away; and Susan O., the wife of our subject. Mr. and Mrs. Ensign have three children: Herbert, a resident of Findlay, Ohio, who is married and has six children, Sidney, Leon, Lester, Francis, Marion, and Bernice; Grace, who resides with her parents; and Fay M., a resident of Findlay, Ohio, who is married and has two children, Florence L. and Kenneth. The family belong to the Presbyterian church. Mr. Ensign is a prominent member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a stanch democrat and although he never seeks public office is yet interested in the progress of his section and always willing to aid in promoting it.

AUGUSTUS H. SCHROEDER is a man who, in a quiet and unassuming way, is contributing much to Coos county's agricultural prosperity. He is cultivating one hundred and sixty acres of land three miles below Myrtle Point, on the Coquille river, and has gained success. He was born in Baltimore, Maryland, March 8, 1843, and is a son of Henry and Dorothy (Dietz) Schroeder, both natives of Germany. His father came to America when he was seventeen years of age and his mother was fifteen years old when she crossed the Atlantic. Both settled in Baltimore and in that city their marriage occurred. They lived in Maryland until April, 1859, in which year they came west by way of the Isthmus of Panama as members of a colony organized by Dr. Henry Herman. They settled in Coos county, Oregon, where the father took up a preemption claim, which he brought to a high state of development. He later added to his holdings by the purchase of adjoining acres and was a large landowner at the time of his retirement. The last years of his life were spent with his son, Augustus, with whom he resided until his death in 1895. His wife survived him for three years, dying in 1898. They were the parents of six children: Judge J. Henry, who is now deceased; Augustus H., the subject of this sketch; John F., who resides in Coquille, Oregon; Louisa, the wife of Orvil Dodge; William, who was accidentally drowned when ten years of age; and Charles Edward, of Brighton, Washington.

Augustus H. Schroeder received his early education in the public schools of Baltimore and supplemented this by a short period in the high school of that city. He remained at home until 1862 at which time he formed a partnership with Vale M. Perry in a large placer mining enterprise which they operated in the mountains near Johnson creek in Coos county, whither Augustus Schroeder had come with his parents in 1859. He continued with this gold mining enterprise only a few months, and later worked at various occupations until 1864, when he purchased a tract of land near Bandon, Oregon, and did placer mining on this property for four years. He then returned to the Coquille river, bought one hundred and sixty acres of comparatively unimproved land and began its development. He has resided upon this tract since that time, has made extensive improvements in his barns and outbuildings and has made his acres productive to the fullest extent. He is now one of the representative agriculturists in Coos county and is numbered among the enterprising citizens of that section.

In October, 1868, Mr. Schroeder was united in marriage to Miss Dora C. Perry, who was born on Clatsop Plains, near the mouth of the Columbia river, August 15, 1850. She is a daughter of William and Ann (Able) Perry, the former a native of Connecticut, and the latter of South Bend, Indiana. After their marriage Mrs. Schroeder's parents removed to Michigan, where they lived until 1840, going at that time to Muscatine, Iowa, where the father followed carpentering and contracting for two years. He was among the earliest Oregon pioneers and was a force in the development of the state. His residence in Oregon dates from 1842, in which year he settled in Oregon City, with a cash capital amounting to fifty cents and no other asset except a team of horses and three pack mules. He met with success and in 1843 he erected the first gristmill built in Oregon City and operated this with gratifying success for a number of years. He later removed to Clatsop plains, where he lived until 1851, and during this time built the first schooner sailing vessel, named the Pioneer, operated between the mouth of the Columbia river and San Francisco. In 1851 he transferred his residence to Roseburg, Oregon. He built the first mill in the city which was also the second in the county. He took up a donation claim near Roseburg comprising one hundred and sixty acres and was personally identified with its development until 1859. In that year he came to Coos county and purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land near Norway, Oregon, and here he died in 1881 after a long and useful life spent in activities which always had for their object the welfare of his adopted state. He had long survived his wife who passed away in 1876. To their union were born six children: Vale M., of Kalama bay, Washington; Mary, the deceased wife of J. F. Schroeder, of Coquille; Emily, who is now Mrs. Henry Schroeder of Arago, Oregon; Dora C., the wife of our subject; Kate L., who married D. Hobson of Marshfield, Oregon; and one child who died in infancy. Mrs. Schroeder received her education in the public schools of Douglas county, Oregon, and remained at home until her marriage. She and her husband have become the parents of twelve children: Edwin F., born August 3, 1869, who now resides on the south fork of the Coquille river; Thomas A., whose birth occurred in March, 1871, and who is a resident of Marshfield, Oregon; Eugene A., born August 26, 1872, and who died November 26, 1889; Charles E., born November 12, 1873, who now lives near Bandon, Oregon; Johanna L., born January 3, 1875, who is now the wife of Frederick Linegar, of Coquille; Fred W., who died August 2, 1898, when he was twenty-two years of age; Arthur B., who died February 11, 1881; Ada E., born March 5, 1880, who is now the wife of A. H. Bender, of Myrtle Point; Percy G., born August 21, 1881, who is living at home; Henry A., whose birth occurred on the 12th of February, 1884, and who is now living in Myrtle Point; Edna May, born May 15, 1885, who married John B. Carl, and resides near Norway, Oregon; and Chester W., born October 28, 1890, who is now living at home. All the children received a good education in the public schools of Coos county.

Mr. Schroeder is a democrat in his political views but is extremely liberal in his interpretation of the party doctrines. He has served for ten years as justice of the peace in Coos county and is known as an upright and conscientious public official. He seeks no success beyond attainment in a purely agricultural walk of life and has made his farming career honorable and upright, and in doing this has achieved prosperity.

ALBERT L. PERKINS is a native son of Oregon. His boyhood was spent in its outdoor pleasures, his youth was spent in its logging camps and he is now, as manager of the Umpqua Co-operative Packing Company, prominent in one of its representative industries. He was born in Douglas county, December 24, 1869, and is a son of Solomon and Catherine (Elliott) Perkins, of whom more extended mention is made on another page in this work. Mr. Perkins was reared at home and acquired a primitive and inadequate education in the common schools of his native district. He pursued his studies for three months in each year, spending the winters from the time of his early boyhood in the logging camps in the northern part of the state. He was identified with this line of occupation until 1900, gaining during the period knowledge of the business. His industry did not allow him to be idle even during the summer months when the logging occupation was not open to him, during the five years of his identification with this line of activity, for he worked constantly through his vacations in the fishing industry. In 1900 he engaged in buying and selling cattle throughout the state of Oregon, making his headquarters in Gardiner. He continued for five years as a successful cattle dealer before he moved to Portland where he dealt in real-estate for two years. When he returned to Gardiner he became identified with his brother in the hotel business having purchased an interest in the Old Gardiner Hotel, in 1896. He retained his holdings up to the time the building was burned in January, 1911. For a short time after his return from Portland Mr. Perkins engaged in the saloon business in connection with the conduct of his hotel, but he later abandoned this and has never since returned to it. In 1910 Mr. Perkins was one of the organizers of the Umpqua Co-operative Packing Company and is one of its chief stockholders and a director. In March, 1912, he was made manager of the plant, and his industry and good business sense have been factors in bringing the enterprise to its present flourishing and prosperous condition.

In February, 1911, Mr. Perkins was united in marriage to Miss Anna Varrelmann, a daughter of Frank Varrelmann, a prominent and substantial citizen of Gardiner, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Perkins have one child, Oliver Raymond. Mrs. Perkins is a devout member of the Episcopal church. In his political views Mr. Perkins is a republican but takes very little part in local affairs and has never sought office. He is one of the representative business men in Gardiner. He is endowed with a natural industry and business judgment of a high order which qualities have brought him success.

J. A. BOWMAN is a member of the firm of Cheever & Bowman, of Langlois, conducting the only general hardware and implement store in Curry county, and is numbered among the representative business men of this section. He is a son of a pioneer in Oregon, and is a native of the state, born in Marion county, October 4, 1864. His parents were P. H. and America (Allphin) Bowman, the former born in Lafayette county, Missouri, in 1828, and the latter in Ohio, in 1830. Both crossed the plains with ox teams in 1847 and settled in Linn county where they were married the following year. In 1849 the father went to California, attracted by rumors of easy wealth to be found in the gold mines of that state. After one season he returned to Oregon and took up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres, five miles northeast of Albany, upon which he lived for some years, removing at the end of that time to Marion county, and later to Springhill, Benton county. There he purchased the Allphin donation claim upon which he resided until his death, which occurred when he was fifty-two years of age. His wife is still living on the old homestead at Springhill and is eighty-two years old. In their family were seven children, six of whom are still living. Mrs. Elizabeth Reese, whose birth occurred in 1851, and who resides in Benton county; N. A., who was born in 1852, and who is a resident of Alaska; Mrs. Nancy E. Miller, who was born in 1854, and is residing at Miller Station, Linn county; W. H., whose birth occurred in 1858, and who makes his home in Albany; Mrs. Maria L. Jones, who was born in 1860, and who resides in Marion county; J. A., the subject of this sketch; and Mary, who has passed away.

J. A. Bowman received his education in Benton county and remained at home until he was eighteen years of age. He learned the blacksmith's trade and followed that occupation from the time he was eighteen until he was forty-six, spending three years in Civil Bend, Douglas county, and a similar period in Independence, Polk county. For three years he worked in Albany, Linn county, and then went to Bandon, where he worked for wages for four years. At the end of that time he came to Langlois and started a blacksmith shop, which he operated independently for nine years. When he abandoned his trade he established himself in the hardware and farm implement business in association with E. H. Cheever and is still active in the conduct of this enterprise. The concern has grown to a gratifying extent since its establishment. Mr. Bowman's industry and ability having brought him an excellent business. He has invested judiciously in local enterprises, being a stockholder in the Langlois Hotel and a member of the City Water Works Company. He owns a comfortable home in the city and much valuable business property and has also an interest in the old homestead of one hundred and ten acres.

In 1887 Mr. Bowman was united in marriage to Miss Anna Jordan, of English parentage, who was born in August, 1867. They became the parents of three children: Mrs. Laura M. Smith, whose birth occurred in 1888, and who makes her home in Curry county; David E., who was born in 1890, and who resides in Marshfield; and Nancy E., who was born in 1891, and who became the wife of Herbert Looney, of Marion county. Mr. Bowman's first wife died in 1892 and in 1894 he was again married. His second union was with Miss Eleanor E. Anderson, who was born in Andersonville, California, February 8, 1874, a daughter of Ira D. and Nancy Sarah Anderson, the former of Fort Madison, Ohio, and the latter of Illinois. They came west and settled at Andersonville, California, later coming to Linn county, Oregon, where both passed away, the mother in 1911, and the father many years previously. Mr. and Mrs. Bowman have five children: Ivan M., who was born January 29, 1900; Preston D., whose birth occurred June 23, 1905; Corinne A., whose natal day was January 21, 1908, and who passed away on the 28th of the same month; Helen R., who was born in December, 1908; and Nolan S., whose birth occurred February 18, 1911.

Mr. Bowman gives his political allegiance to the democratic party but never seeks public office, although he is now serving as deputy sheriff of the north end of Curry county. He was postmaster of Brockway, Douglas county, for some time and did able and conscientious work in this capacity. He belongs to the Presbyterian church and is a member of the Woodmen of the World and the Independent Order of Red Men. He has made many friends in Oregon, all of whom respect him as a man of fine business ability and honorable standards, and his record is a credit to his community.

K. V. KRUSE is the senior partner of the Kruse and Banks Shipbuilding Company, extensive shipbuilders of North Bend, Coos county, Oregon. Mr. Kruse was born in Denmark in July, 1853. He received his early education in his native country and emigrated to America, in 1874. In early life he was a sailor and after reaching the new world continued in that vocation for eight years, making San Francisco his headquarters. In 1900 he came to Coos bay and at North Bend entering into partnership with Robert Banks started a ship yard. The partners have since continued in the shipbuilding business. They are the builders of large ocean going vessels and all other kinds of water craft used on both inland waters and on the high seas. They have at the present time in their yards two vessels under construction, one two hundred and five feet and the other two hundred feet in length, both of which are wooden.

Mr. Kruse was united in marriage in 1881, to Miss Mary Rasmussen, a native of Denmark, from which country she emigrated to America in 1874. To Mr. and Mrs. Kruse seven children have been born: Lena, who was born in 1883 and resides at home; Thea, born in 1886, who is at home; Bertha, who was born in 1888 and is the wife of Dr. Cather, a resident of Portland, Oregon; Laura, who was born in 1892 and resides at home; Fred, born in 1894, at home; and Henry and Peter, deceased. Mr. Kruse belongs to the republican party and has fraternal relations with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He and his family are members of the Lutheran church of North Bend. Kruse and Banks are among the largest shipbuilders of the Pacific coast and they have gained a good reputation in the business world by virtue of the excellency of the workmanship as well as the material used in the construction of their boats.

JASON MACHADO, who has recently retired from merchandising but still retains important real-estate interests in Myrtle Point and elsewhere in the county, was born at St. Michaels, Portugal, in 1846, his parents being Frank and Helena (Dias) Machado, the former a native of Brazil and the latter of Portugal. The maternal grandfather was a distinguished lawyer and a recognized leader among men.

Jason Machado is one of a family of twenty-one children who were born to his parents but all are now deceased with the exception of two, his brother being Alfred, a farmer, sailor and fisherman who was also a sea captain and is living near Prosper, Oregon.

Jason Machado started out to earn his own living in 1861, when fourteen years of age. His father was a merchant and prominent in the community in which he lived. The son had opportunity for attending school for only five months. He left home to avoid enforced military service and, shipping on an American vessel, arrived in Boston, Massachusetts, in 1861. He worked in a restaurant there for six months for a dollar per week and board and on the expiration of that period went to Portland, Maine, where his brother lived. He afterward followed the sea for five years, serving as cook on a ship, and also as steward on sailing vessels. He likewise engaged in mackerel fishing off Cape Breton for one season and in 1866 took passage on the Concordia for New Orleans. His first position there was driving a delivery wagon but in 1867 he was stricken with yellow fever and when he had recovered he became a butcher and engaged in business with his brother William. Later he was alone in business and added to the scope of his activities by putting in a line of groceries. He continued in merchandising there for a number of years until 1878, when he left the Crescent City for San Francisco. After remaining there for a brief period, he made his way northward to Oregon, settling in Prosper, where he conducted a meat market and grocery store. A little later he removed to Coquille and opened a hotel, which he conducted for a year. He then came to Myrtle Point where he opened a butcher shop and later added a stock of groceries. As his trade grew in that connection he discontinued the meat market and afterward opened a general mercantile store which he has since conducted, meeting with success. He came to the west practically empty-handed and industry and enterprise have been the features which made for his prosperity. In May, 1912, he sold his stock of merchandise but he retains his real-estate holdings, consisting of one hundred feet frontage on a business street, also farm property on the river, timber land and town property. He has made extensive investments in real estate in California, and all his property interests represent the fit utilization of time, talents and opportunities.

Jason Machado has been married twice. He first wedded Miss Bessie Deary, a native of New Orleans, as were her parents, who were of Scotch and Pennsylvania Dutch descent. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Machado was celebrated in New Orleans in 1877 and to them were born four children: Glenn, who was educated in St. Mary's College in Portland, and is now a resident of San Francisco; Bessie, of Myrtle Point; and Jason W. and Lawrence, both in school. The wife and mother died May 12, 1906. More than four years later in San Francisco on the 1st of October, 1910, Mr. Machado was married to Mrs. Mary Morris, the widow of George Morris, of Marshfield, Oregon.

In his religious faith Mr. Machado is a Catholic. He gives his political allegiance to the democratic party but has had neither time nor inclination for office, preferring to give his undivided attention to business, and his activities and enterprise as a merchant and his wise investments in real estate have placed him among the substantial residents of Coos county.

SHADRACH HUDSON. The pioneers in the settlement of the state of Oregon were sturdy, upright and industrious men, who gave their energies and abilities to the formation of a new country out of undeveloped wilderness. Their virtues and characteristics find a worthy representative in Shadrach Hudson, who crossed the plains with ox teams in 1847 and who since that time has been identified with the evolution and progress of the American northwest. He encountered hardships and perils, has farmed and raised stock, and has finally retired after an eventful and successful career, which has influenced and hastened the growth and civilization of this section. He is living in the Sobliers' Home at Roseburg as an honored veteran of the Rogue River Indian war.

Shadrach Hudson was born in Cass county, Michigan, on November 10, 1830, and is a son of John and Rhodia (Denman) Hudson, natives of New Jersey. Representatives of the family on both sides have been in America since pre-Revolutionary times. The paternal grandfather of our subject was a native of New Jersey and the ancestors in the maternal line also came from that section of America. The family was founded in Ohio by the great-grandfather and grandfather of our subject on the maternal side, who came to that state in the early period of its settlement. Mr. Hudson's parents were married in that state in 1820 and later removed to Michigan, returning to Ohio in 1834. They were the parents of five children, of whom Shadrach, the eldest son, is the subject of this review. Another, Clark, who has passed away, was married and had three children, of whom one is surviving. The youngest son Joseph, is also deceased, and his widow resides in Coquille city, Coos county. They had seven children, Mamie, Josephine, Elizabeth, Maude, John, Joseph and Daniel.

Shadrach Hudson was educated in the public schools of Ohio and in 1847 when he was seventeen years of age started with his parents and five brothers across the plains with ox teams. The long trip was made under the most primitive conditions and the party encountered many hardships and perils, the two youngest brothers and the mother dying upon the journey. The remainder of the family arrived in Oregon the last of October 1847, and settled in the Willamette valley, near what is now Eugene. They had encountered disease and contagion upon their journey but had escaped trouble with the Indians. They were members of the second train to reach Oregon via Shasta, Butte and the Rogue river. When they started from Independence a Mr. McGoon was made captain of the caravan which consisted of one hundred wagons and many cattle and horses. After leaving Fort Hall the train was divided into two companies, one taking the northern route via the Columbia river. This portion of the caravan which included the Hudsons wintered in the Willamette valley and then went to California in 1849, at the time of the gold discoveries in that state, reaching San Francisco and journeying from that city to the mines on the American river. The father of our subject and his three sons remained in that section until April, 1850, when they traveled by vessel up to the Columbia river to the Clatsop plains where they were among the few white settlers at that time. Here John Hudson took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres and operated and improved it as well as he could under the primitive conditions for one year. In October, 1850, Shadrach Hudson and one of his brothers drove their cattle to the Umpqua valley where they were later joined by their father in the operation of a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres. Later Shadrach Hudson took up another claim of similar size and upon the combined holdings the family carried on stock-raising, selling their cattle at excellent prices for beef in the gold fields. The father remained upon this property until his death which occurred in 1872 after which the claims were sold and the three brothers located near Wilber where they carried on an extensive sheep-raising enterprise for five years, disposing of their holdings at the end of that time and going to Coos county. In 1877 Shadrach Hudson went into the mining district of Curry county and followed mining in that section until he had the misfortune to lose his arm, as a result of tuberculosis of the bone. He then retired from active work and gave his mining interests to his niece.

He has been identified with much of the upbuilding and development of the section in which he resides and has borne his part in the Indian wars. He enlisted as a private in 1855, in Company I, Second Regiment Oregon Mounted Volunteers under the command of Captain W. W. Chapman, and served during the entire period of the Rogue River Indian war from 1855 to 1856. He is now in the eighty-second year of his age and is living retired in the Soldiers' Home at Roseburg. He can look back upon a long and constructively active life spent in a newly opened country and identified with an important period of its development. He has proven himself worthy of a high place among the band of pioneers who as by magic wand transformed wild and primitive conditions into civilization and a great and prosperous commonwealth.

E. H. CHEEVER is a member of the firm of Cheever & Bowman, general hardware merchants, of Langlois, and has built up an excellent patronage along this line by steadily adhering to upright business methods and honorable standards of activity. He was born in Vernon, Oneida county, New York, in 1858, a son of S. W. and Caroline E. Cheever, likewise natives of the Empire state. His mother died in that state and in 1872 his father moved to Iowa, settling in Butler county. There he purchased land and cultivated and developed his farm until his death, which occurred in the sixty-seventh year of his age. He was twice married. By his first union he had three children: Frank M., of Iowa; George H. of Waterloo, Iowa; and the subject of this review. He and his second wife were the parents of five sons, all of whom are still living.

E. H. Cheever received his education in the public schools of Iowa and remained at home until he was twenty-two years of age. He then went to Charles City, Iowa, and worked for two years upon a farm before moving to Minnesota, where he worked at carpentering for a year and a half. At the end of that time he returned to Iowa and spent one year before coming to Oregon. For two years he worked at his trade in Portland and then came to Curry county, where he engaged in carpentering and building, following both lines of occupation for some time. In the meanwhile, however, he had proved up a title to a ranch four miles from Langlois and eventually moved upon his property, which he developed and improved for seven years. He still owns his farm of two hundred and sixty-two acres but leaves the active work of the fields to others. When he abandoned agriculture he moved into the village, where he established himself in the general merchandise business and after a short time sold his interests and became associated with J. A. Bowman in the conduct of a hardware and implement store, with which he has been connected since that time. He has made a comfortable fortune which he has invested judiciously in local enterprises, owning a fine home set in the midst of two acres of land in Langlois, and also a tract of twenty-two acres adjoining the town site.

On April 1st, 1889, Mr. Cheever was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Russell, a native of Shelbyville, Tennessee, and a daughter of James P. Russell, an early settler of Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Cheever has been born one daughter, Ethel, whose birth occurred March 29, 1891, and who is now the wife of Clyde Corrick, connected with the city railroad in Portland. Mrs. Corrick is a graduate of the Albany Conservatory of Music and is an excellent musician.

Mr. Cheever gives his allegiance to the republican party but never seeks public office. He is a member of the Woodmen of the World and belongs to the Presbyterian church. He is actively and intelligently interested in the welfare of the section which has been his home for many years. He is regarded as one of the most representative citizens of Langlois and his industry, intelligent activity and high personal standards have brought him prosperity in business and won many friends.

JOHN R. MILLER is conducting the largest general merchandise store in Port Orford and has been the proprietor of this establishment since 1902. He has gained prosperity in a short time by hard work and persistent attention to business and is numbered among the valued and representative business men of his section. A native son of Oregon, Mr. Miller was born at Waldo Hills, Marion county, April 30, 1864, a son of W. C. and Permelia A. Miller. His father was born in Ohio and crossed the plains with ox teams to Oregon in 1847, among the early settlers in the state. The mother was a native of Missouri and also came overland with ox teams in 1850. She began the journey in company with her parents but her father and two sisters died upon the way. The parents of our subject were married in Marion county and there the father took up a donation claim, upon which he lived until 1869, when he moved to Curry county and settled on the Rogue river, where Gold Beach now stands. Here he also took up land and carried on extensive stock-raising, breeding high-grade sheep and cattle and owning at one time three thousand head of stock. He lived upon this property until his death, which occurred on April 8, 1892. His wife survived him until 1897. In their family were six children, four of whom are living: Alfred, who is operating his father's homestead on the Rogue river; John R., of this review; Eva M., of Roseburg; and Elva A., the wife of R. H. C. Wood, of Roseburg.

John R. Miller received his early education in the public schools of Curry county and supplemented this by a course in a business college in Benton county. When he was nineteen years of age he began to earn his own livelihood, working upon the neighboring farms until 1892, when he took charge of his father's ranch and continued to manage it for five years. At the end of that time he bought a stock of general merchandise and went into business at Port Orford, locating in this city in 1898. Two years later he disposed of his business and went to Dawson, Alaska, where he furnished supplies to the miners. In 1904 he returned to Port Orford and bought a fine store which he stocked with complete and up-to-date lines of goods and he now operates one of the largest general merchandise establishments in the city. His stock is neatly and tastefully arranged and a constantly increasing patronage is evidence of his success and is the result of his long experience and his business ability. He has built up in Port Orford a modern, growing and intelligently operated enterprise and has achieved his prosperity by hard work and straightforward methods.

John R. Miller has been twice married. In 1893 he wedded Miss Addie L. Burrow, a native of Tennessee, and they had one daughter, Anita, who died when she was three years of age. Mr. Miller's first wife passed away in 1898 and in 1902 he was united in marriage to Miss Belle J. Nordberg, a native of Port Orford and a daughter of William and Lucinda Nordberg. The father came to Oregon in the early '50s and the mother was a native of this state. In their family were three children: Franz and Mrs. Wright, both of whom reside in Port Orford; and Belle J., the wife of our subject.

Mr. Miller gives his allegiance to the republican party but has never sought public office. He is well known in the affairs of the Woodmen of the World, holding membership in the camp at Port Orford. He is one of the leading business men of the city, active in promoting his own and general prosperity and at the same time mindful of his obligations as a citizen. The enterprise which he established he has made successful by seizing any opportunity for advancement and by adhering faithfully to high standards of commercial honor.

ALFRED OLSON is living retired in Port Orford and resting after a useful and eventful life spent in different occupations and in various countries. His residence in Curry county dates from 1877 and for eight years he was active in the operation of a fine ranch of two hundred and thirty acres in this section. He has however, definitely abandoned agricultural pursuits and is enjoying the rest which he earned by diligence and industry. He was born in Norway, in 1833, and was educated in the public schools of that country. In 1856 he came to America and settled first in New York where he lived for a short time. He was a sailor and had followed the seas for two years while a resident of Norway and after he came to America sailed out of New York to various European ports for some time. He later went to London and after a short period of residence in that city pushed on to New Zealand where he mined for gold for three years. He next journeyed to Chile, South America, with the intention of working in the gold mines of that country but was prevented by Indian interference and he returned to America, settling in San Francisco where for some time he worked in a lumberyard. He was engaged in lumbering in the Redwood section of Mendocino county, California, for several years and then came to Port Orford in 1877. Here he continued in the lumber business working as foreman in a logging camp until 1900, when he purchased a ranch of two hundred and thirty acres which he operated and developed until 1908 when he moved to Port Orford and retired. He has since sold his ranch and has invested extensively in property in Port Orford where he owns a beautiful and comfortable home.

Mr. Olson gives his allegiance to the republican party but is not an office seeker. An eventful life has broadened his outlook and increased his interests without detracting in any way from his loyalty to his adopted country. He is giving his entire time to the supervision and management of his property in Port Orford and has many friends in this section.

ERIK ARNESON is cultivating one hundred and forty-two acres comprising one of the most highly developed and improved ranches in Coos county. He is a native of Norway, in which country his parents Arne and Ingburg (Erickson) Arneson were also born, his natal day being August 15, 1851. He is the eldest of nine children born to his parents. The others are: Annie, who passed away leaving one son; Carrie, the wife of Park Adams of Vancouver, Washington; Andrew, also deceased; Lena, the widow of Captain Antone Nelson of Seattle, Washington, by whom she has two children; Elisa, who has passed away; Julia, the widow of Thomas Clark of Sacramento, California, and the mother of two children; Ida, who has been stenographer for Senator Bourn of Portland, Oregon, for twenty years; and Louis, who is receiver for the United States Land Office of The Dalles, Oregon, and the father of two children.

Mr. Arneson was reared on the homestead farm and received his education in the public schools. He came to America in 1866 with his parents, and lived at home until he was twenty-seven. He was then married and took up a homestead claim of three hundred and twenty acres in Nebraska, which he began to improve and cultivate. In 1882 he removed to Colorado Springs, where for five months he engaged in teaming, hauling railroad ties from one settlement to another, and in August of that year continued his journey to San Francisco by rail, thence to Portland by boat, arriving in the latter city, September 2, 1882. For a short time he worked in a blacksmith shop and later was engaged in construction work on the Southern Pacific railway, but after five months removed to Fairview and opened a blacksmith shop, building up a prosperous business. He also owned his own home which was one of the commodious and comfortable buildings in Fairview. After eight years he sold his shop and rented a ranch, where he carried on general farming, specializing in dairy work. He milked one hundred and fifty cows and had one of the most flourishing and prosperous enterprises of its kind in the vicinity of Fairview. Mr. Arneson operated his dairy in conjunction with his ranch for three and one half years and at the end of that time moved to Clark county, Washington, where he purchased land and engaged in general agriculture and dairying for two years. When he returned to Fairview he bought his brother's land and directed his energies to looking after the comfort of his mother and father who had then reached an advanced age. After one year he purchased the farm near Myrtle Point, where he now lives. Mr. Arneson lived continuously for eighteen years in Coos county, with the exception of four years which he spent in blacksmithing and gold mining in Republic, Washington. His family, however, remained upon the Oregon ranch during this period. He has cleared and improved his acres and his is now one of the model farms near Myrtle Point. He has always been progressive and broad minded. He bought the first traction engine ever operated in Coos county and all his activities are carried on along modernly scientific principles. He is engaged in general farming and also operated for some years a saw-mill upon his holdings. The lumber which he cut he sold in the markets of the state and the income thus derived was a valuable addition to his resources. He has, however, disposed of his mill and now devotes his time to general agriculture. He has sold parts of his ranch at different times and his present holdings comprise one hundred and twenty three acres of the finest land in Coos county and nineteen acres of river bottom land which he has also improved and developed.

On March 24, 1878, in Webster county, Nebraska, Mr. Arneson was united in marriage to Miss Mary Alice Brockman, a native of Iowa. She is a daughter of Chesley and Rispah (Lucore) Brockman, the former born in Indiana, and the later in Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Brockman were early settlers in the latter state and were prominently connected with its development. They were the parents of eleven children: Rufus, who passed away, leaving two children; Chesley N., of Reed Island, British Columbia, who is married and has four children; Mary Alice, the wife of our subject; Charles E., deceased; Mahala, who married Noah White of Colorado, by whom she has ten children; William S., who lives with his wife and three children in Reed Island, British Columbia; James A., who is a resident of Coquille, Oregon, and the father of one child; and Claude, Isadore, Sarah A., and Carrie A., all of whom have passed away. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Arneson have been born five children: Etta May, who died in infancy; Ira Emmanuel, born June 23, 1881, who is now in partnership with his father in the conduct of the home farm; Arthur Marble, born February 10, 1884, who attended the agricultural college at Corvallis, Oregon, and is now assisting with the work of the home farm and also active as a steam engineer; William Cecil, born December 19, 1887, who follows the timber business in British Columbia; and Ella May, born January 31, 1894, whose death occurred when she was fifteen years of age.

In his political affiliations Mr. Arneson is a republican and takes an interest in public affairs. He does not seek office, however, and has never held any public position since he took up his residence in Oregon, but while living in Nebraska he served as postmaster of his city. He is a member of the Grangers and prominent in the Masonic Order, and is also affiliated with the Farmers' Union. Progressive ideas and an open and liberal mind, combined with personal experience in agricultural details are the basis of his success, and he is a valuable addition to this community.

WILLIAM BYRON BARNES, living in Klamath Falls, has been active in political and fraternal circles as well as in business affairs. At one time he was quite extensively engaged in stock-raising and is still the owner of valuable timber claims in the state. At the present writing he is serving for the second term as sheriff of the county, his reelection being proof of the confidence reposed in him and of the excellent record which he made as an official during his first term. He was born in Bridgeport, Mono county, California, May 14, 1865, his parents being James A. and Mary J. (Patterson) Barnes, both of whom were natives of Ohio. They were reared and married in Birmingham, Iowa, and in 1862 came to California, crossing the plains with horse teams. The father died in Modoc county, California, in 1898, when about fifty-six years of age, his birth having occurred in 1842. The mother resides with her son Hiram at Kelseyville, Lake county, California. The father had farming interests in Modoc county at the time of his death. In early days he was a freighter and engaged in teaming for many years. In his family were five children: Hiram, of Kelseyville; Frank, of Summer Lake, Oregon; William Byron; Marion, living in Lakeview, Oregon; and Emma, who died in May, 1891.

William B. Barnes was reared in Bridgeport to the age of nineteen years, when the family removed to Modoc county. Later he went to Summer Lake and there engaged in the stock-raising business until he came to Klamath Falls in 1904. Here he conducted the American Hotel until about 1908, when he was elected sheriff of the county, in which position he is now serving for the second term. He has always voted with the republican party and has filled a number of local offices, also taking an active part in the organization work of the party. For two years he served as assessor of Lake county, Oregon, and for two years was deputy sheriff of Modoc county, California. He has frequently been a delegate to party conventions and has served repeatedly on election boards. While he has disposed of his large ranch in Lake county he still owns timber claims but devotes the greater part of his time and attention to his official duties.

In 1888 Mr. Barnes was married to Miss Tilly McDowell, a native of Missouri, who was reared in Oregon and California and is a daughter of Mrs. Flavia McDowell, who has been postmistress at Summer Lake for many years. The four children of this marriage are: Marion, who is acting as deputy sheriff; Golda, the wife of Vernon Houston, of Klamath Falls; Hazel, who is in the sheriff's office; and Zeddie.

Mr. Barnes is a self-made man. He had little opportunity for acquiring an education and whatever he has won or enjoyed in life has been the result of his own efforts. In the early days he engaged in teaming from Lakeview, Oregon, to Redding, California, for four or five years and also in logging in Shasta county, California, with a twelve horse team for one season before he went into the cattle business. The necessity of providing for his own support and earning his living wherever he could find the opportunity prevented him from having a home until after his marriage. This brought him into contact with many rough characters and the knowledge which he gained in that class of service proved valuable to him in the discharge of his duties as sheriff. He has made an excellent record in office especially in the capture of cattle and horse thieves whom he has followed as far east as the Missonri river, bringing to punishment various men of this class who had been stealing in the northwest for twenty years. His work in this connection has been valuable to the community and his record as sheriff is one well worthy of praise.

COLONEL RALPH H. ROSA. No history of Coos county would be complete without a mention of Colonel Ralph H. Rosa, who is not only the oldest living settler in Bandon, but also one of the foremost figures in the industrial and business life of the city and in republican politics of the county and state. For over forty years he has been one of the greatest individual forces in the up-building and progress of Coos county and his energies have been directed along progressive lines of expansion and organization. Although he is living retired he retains his business interests and is a factor in directing the management and controlling the policy of most of the important interests of Bandon, while his extensive holdings in farm lands make him well known and prominent in agricultural circles. He was born in Cayuga county, New York, and is a son of George W. and Lydia (Hlanette) Rosa, the former a native of New York and the latter of England. Colonel Rosa is one of a family of six children, three of whom are living:

Kate, who married J. S. Long, of Los Angeles, California; Frank G., of Los Angeles; and Ralph H. Rosa.

Colonel Rosa remained in New York until after the death of his father in 1853 in which year the family moved to Michigan. Here he remained with his mother for ten years and in 1863 offered his services to the United States government in defense of the Union. He saw one year of active service and was honorably discharged in 1864. He thus acquired a taste for military life and after he came to Oregon enlisted in the National Guard, serving as lieutenant colonel of the third regiment. He has resigned the position but still retains his title by which he is familiarly known to his many friends.

After he was mustered out of the Federal army Colonel Rosa went to Nebraska where for two years he was engaged in building telegraph lines. In 1867 he came west to California and followed the same line of occupation in that state until 1870 in which year he came to Oregon. He settled immediately in Marshfield, Coos county, and took up a preemption claim near that city which he improved and cultivated for four years, removing to the Coquille river in 1874 and settling at Randolph where for nine years he was employed in a prosperous general merchandise store. When he left this establishment he came to Bandon and erected a sawmill two miles south of the city and bought timber land from which he supplied his mill, operating it until 1911 when he retired. During the course of his active life he has invested extensively in Oregon land and now owns upward of two thousand acres, on three hundred of which the timber remains. He is also interested in a large mercantile enterprise in Bandon, is a stockholder in the First National Bank of that city, and a director in the Bank of Bandon. He owns the central warehouse and is interested in the Bandon woolen mills and the local electric light plant, besides a large and modernly equipped creamery. His home is one of the pleasant residences in Coos county and Colonel Rosa makes it a hospitable meeting place for his many friends. He owns much residence property in Bandon and invests in local enterprises, having firm faith in the ascendant prosperity of Oregon.

Colonel Rosa married Miss Iola Lowe, who was born in Coos county, a daughter of Y. M. and Mary (Slayback) Lowe, early settlers of this section of the state. Colonel and Mrs. Rosa have four children: Florence A., the wife of A. G. Thrift, of Bandon, by whom she has two children; Lloyd L., who is engaged in the lumber business and who owns an interest in the Crain Timber Company, of Coos county; L. Kate, who is a graduate of Albany College, and is engaged in school teaching; and Archie H., who is a pupil in the high school.

In fraternal circles Colonel Rosa is active and widely known. He belongs to the Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias, and is one of the most prominent Masons in Coos county. By virtue of his service in the Federal army he holds membership in the Grand

COLONEL RALPH H. ROSA

Army of the Republic and his interest in the affairs of this organization has never lessened in the course of years. He gives his allegiance to the republican party, his interest in education leading him to pay special attention to the cause of school expansion along progressive lines. In 1876 he was chosen by his fellow citizens to represent them in the Oregon legislature and his work in that office fully justified their choice. He showed himself a true public servant, forceful, shrewd, and able, with a discriminating judgment and unselfish consideration for the wishes of his constituents. In this relation as in all others he proved capable of managing and directing important affairs. His life has been valuable and worthy as he has constantly been identified with lasting and useful work.

FRED ASSENHEIMER has at various times been prominently identified with some of the representative enterprises of Gardiner, Oregon, and is at present a foremost figure in the affairs of the large business corporations of the city. He is a native of Germany, born in Wurtemberg, November 26, 1870. He is a son of Christian and Caroline (Carle) Assenheimer, who were reared and married in the fatherland. Christian Assenheimer was a successful wine-maker and operated one of the largest vineyards in his native section. In connection with his grape culture he owned a wagon-making shop, which was a profitable source of income until his death in 1908. His wife is still living and resides in Wurtemberg.

Fred Assenheimer pursued his studies in the public schools of Germany until he was seventeen years of age. In 1889 he sailed for America, landing in New York city on the 17th of March, of that year. After spending two weeks in that city and one week in Buffalo he continued his journey westward, locating in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, which was his chosen destination when he left Germany. He had learned the carriage and wagon-making trade under his father's supervision in his native country and followed this line of occupation upon his arrival in Milwaukee. He worked in the shop maintained by the Milwaukee Fire Department for one year, at the end of which time he accepted a position in a wholesale liquor house, where he spent ten years. He was hampered in the first years of his residence in America by his lack of knowledge of the English language and in order to overcome this difficulty attended the night school, conducted in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association, until he became thoroughly conversant with the customs and language of America. In 1900 he accepted employment as checker in the freight office of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, where he remained for four years. In 1904 he came to the northwest locating in Roseburg, Oregon, where he remained for a short time. While there he made judicious investments in timber lands on the Coquille river and also bought extensive tracts on the banks of the Umpqua and Smith rivers.

In the same year he took up a homestead claim ten miles up the Smith river from Gardiner and maintained his residence thereon until he had proved upon the land.

In 1909 he removed to Gardiner and has since been an influential factor in the business life of the town. Soon after he located in this city he bought a confectionery business which he conducted with success for a year and a half. At the end of that time he disposed of his enterprise and purchased the Gardiner Hotel, which he conducted for one year and then sold. He repurchased his confectionery business, which he is conducting in the building which he purchased upon coming to Gardiner. This is only one of the many enterprises with which Mr. Assenheimer is identified. He has been a prominent figure in the business life of Gardiner since he took up his residence here and his work has been carried on along progressive lines of commercial development. He is one of the stockholders in the New Gardiner Hotel and was one of the organizers of the Umpqua Co-operative Packing Company, of which he is treasurer. He is also a director of the company which built the Gardiner Hotel. Fraternally he is a member of the White City Camp, Woodmen of the World. Judged by the standards of his time Mr. Assenheimer is a prosperous man and may be ranked as a man of sound mind, kindly heart and broad intelligence.

WILLIS T. WHITE is living in Port Orford where he is active and prominent in different circles. During the thirty-six years of his residence his attention has been given principally to agricultural pursuits and he has at different times owned and operated some of the most valuable ranches in the state. He has made many removals each of which has advanced his interests materially and he is today one of the prosperous and deservedly successful citizens of Curry county. He was born in Belfast, Maine, in 1847, a son of James and Lydia S. White, the former a native of New Hampshire and the latter of Maine. In this state their marriage occurred and they lived in Belfast for forty years, the father practicing law and also engaging in the real-estate business. Both died in that city, the mother in 1853 and the father on December 25, 1870.

Willis T. White received his education in the public schools of his native section and laid aside his books when he was eighteen years of age in order to learn the tanner's trade which he followed until he was twenty-four. In 1871 he came to California and later to Oregon, settling in Curry county in the same year. However, he spent all the winters between 1871 and 1876 in California, definitely locating in Curry county in the latter year. Here he worked at lumbering and at various other occupations until 1883 when he took up a preemption claim of one hundred and sixty acres on the Rogue river which he improved and operated for ten months and when he had completed his payments took up a homestead, adjoining, of one hundred and sixty acres. After residing upon this property for eighteen months he committed it and purchased three hundred adjoining acres, his combined holdings amounting at this time to six hundred and twenty acres. To this he gradually added, buying first three hundred and twenty acres and then forty, and owning altogether nine hundred and forty acres in one tract. Three years later he sold all of this property and bought a ranch at the head of the Pistol river, four miles from any neighbors and upon this he lived for three years, improving and cultivating it along the most modern and progressive lines. Eventually, however, he sold this ranch and moved to the coast where he lived two years, finally returning and buying a farm of seven hundred and sixty acres on the Cluteo river upon which he resided for four years. When he sold this property he came to the Rogue river where he leased a large ranch and for two years engaged in the breeding and raising of high-grade stock. At the end of that time he leased land on the Carey range a portion of which he afterward bought and upon which for nine years he handled thoroughbred cattle and horses. He still owns this property comprising five hundred acres of valuable land. In 1912 he left his farm and came to Port Orford where he bought a comfortable home in which he resides. He is active and prominent in local affairs and financially interested in many important projects, holding a one-third interest in the town site of Port Orford.

In 1882 Mr. White was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Curry, who was born at Marietta, Ohio, a daughter of James and Frances Curry, natives of that state, who came to Oregon in 1875 and settled in Curry county where they resided for the remainder of their lives. To Mr. and Mrs. White were born six children: Eugene, born in 1883, who is engaged in the conduct of his father's ranch, and who married Miss Hurst, by whom he has one son, James Carl; Willis, born in 1885, who is a stock dealer, and who resides at home; Violet, who was born in October, 1886, and became the wife of John Fromm of Brush Creek, Curry county, by whom she has two children, Lex and Clinton; James Carl, whose birth occurred in 1889, and who lives at home; Leland L., born in 1891, who resides at home; and Magnolia, born in 1893, who also resides at home. All of the children have a good common-school education and Magnolia has a business-college education.

Mr. White gives his allegiance to the republican party and is one of the foremost figures in local politics. He served for two terms as assessor of Curry county, holding this office in the early '80s. For twelve years he was deputy sheriff and enumerator for the lower district and is at the present time president of the commission of Port Orford. He holds membership in the Masonic order, belonging to the lodge at Lewys Island, Princeton, Maine. In all the various relations of his life he has constantly evidenced a shrewd business ability which controlled and directed his agricultural labors and by constantly adhering to a progressive policy he has become one of the wealthy and prominent men of Curry county.

WILBERT F. PECK has the distinction not only of having made the first permanent settlement on the Smith river in Douglas county, but also of having maintained a continuous residence in this section for thirty-three years. His home is five or six miles up the river from Gardiner, where he is cultivating and developing five hundred acres of fertile and productive land. He was born in Westfield, Marquette county, Wisconsin, March 8, 1859, and is a son of Alexander and Laura (Cooper) Peck, the former a native of New York state and the latter of Canada. The father as a young man worked in the shipyards at the Thousand Islands and it was while thus employed that he met and married his wife. He lived in Canada for a number of years removing thence to Marquette county, Wisconsin, where he bought a farm and followed agriculture and carpentering for a number of years. His first wife died when her son, the subject of this sketch, was still in his infancy and the father later married Miss Melissa Brown.

Wilbert F. Peck was reared at home and acquired a limited education in the common schools of Marquette county. As early as his fourteenth year he road a pony mail route. The country was then a frontier settlement and the population was largely made up of Indians. His work was attended by dangers and hardships incident to pioneer conditions. From his fifteenth year he worked at many different occupations, varying from employment in the lumber woods to labor in the harvest fields. He was endowed with a capacity for persevering industry and a power for hard work which are the qualities upon which he has founded his present success.

In April 1879, when he was twenty years of age, Mr. Peck left Wisconsin and went to Oregon. Arriving in Portland, he remained there only a few days and then came to Douglas county, his being the first permanent settlement on the Smith river. He has maintained his residence in this district and has been active in the cultivation and development of the soil for thirty-three consecutive years. He operates almost five hundred acres of the most fertile and productive land in Douglas county and carries on his farming along the most modern and scientific principles.

In August, 1881, Mr. Peck was united in marriage to Miss Anna O'Brien, a native of Canada, and a daughter of Hugh O'Brien, who located on the Smith river in 1880, and passed the remaining years of his life in that vicinity. To Mr. and Mrs. Peck have been born five children, four of whom are still living: Laura, the wife of William R. Dailey, who is a successful farmer on the Smith river; Duane, a ranchman with property on the Smith river; and Alpheus and Roy J., both of whom are still at home.

In his political affiliations Mr. Peck is independent. He is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is one of the progressive and popular men of Douglas county and his career has been a force in its upbuilding. In all the relations of his life Mr. Peck shows a modern spirit and a policy of gradual expansion which qualities directed toward agriculture have made him thriving and prosperous as a western rancher and a dominating influence in the development of the section where he has so long resided.

WILLIAM N. SAVAGE. Among the men who are living in Salem, Marion county, who have been numbered among the substantial farmers and representative citizens and who have achieved success and surrounded themselves with prosperity by their own exertions and persevering efforts is William N. Savage, whose birth occurred in Jackson county, Missouri, on the 16th of August, 1847. His industry and enterprise, together with good management, have been the means of enabling him to acquire considerable acreage of good land, which he cultivated for many years before he entered upon the dairy business and which he kept under such a state of fertility that he derived bountiful harvests. His parents were Dr. John M. and Jane (Wait) Savage, both of whom were natives of Kentucky, and who resided there until after their marriage, when they removed to Missouri. In 1850 they left that state and crossed the plains, coming direct to Oregon with ox teams. They arrived at The Dalles on the 10th of October and from that town came down the Columbia river on a raft and landed at the mouth of the Sandy river. At that place they camped until they took up a donation land claim of six hundred and forty acres in Marion county. After receiving this claim Dr. Savage immediately began clearing the property and built a log cabin, which he covered with a clapboard roof and which was their home for several years. His death occurred on the 29th of June, 1888, the mother having passed away in 1875. Dr. Savage was twice married. To his first union five children were born, three of whom survive. To the second union ten children were born: John and Cynthia J., both deceased; William N., who is the subject of this review; Frank; Ben, who is a physician practicing in Kansas; Sarah, who is living in California; Mary J., the wife of Dr. Charles Bebee, of California; Albert, who is residing in Marion county; Alice, who is married to Dr. E. L. Ketchum, a resident of this state, and Hiram, deceased.

After completing his studies William N. Savage engaged in daily farm work, assisting his father until he was twenty-one years of age, at which time the desire to earn his own livelihood started him upon an independent career. For the two following years he was employed as a farm hand but at the end of that time he rented a farm for two years before purchasing one hundred and sixty acres in Marion county, which was his home for fifteen years. He added every improvement which might contribute to the neatness and fertility of his farm and made such a study of the soil as to enable him so to adapt his crops as to reap the maximum yield per acre. After having farmed for fifteen years he removed to Salem and engaged in the dairy business, which he conducted for fifteen years. In this as in his agricultural pursuits, he met with success, because of his strict attention to the details of his business, and his untiring energy and indefatigable labor. The returns from this enterprise were highly gratifying and enabled him to give up business life and live retired. He has built a very fine and commodious residence at No. 1333 State street, where he is now living. He still owns eighty acres of the old homestead to which he gives occasional supervision.

Mr. Savage has been twice married. His first union occurred in 1872, when he married Miss Susan E. Ray, whose birth occurred in Linn county, on the 6th of November, 1853, her parents being Louis and Mary Ray, natives of Tennessee who came to Oregon in 1853. To Mr. and Mrs. Savage twelve children were born: Charles; W. W., who is a resident of Portland; Oliver F., who is living in Oregon; Louis A.; Bertia E.; Eva J., who is teaching school and residing at home; Edna, who is the wife of M. Harding; Roy M., who is living at home; and four deceased. Mrs. Savage's death occurred on the 11th of December, 1892. On the 27th of October, 1897, Mr. Savage was again married, his second union being with Miss Etta Kelly, a native of Minnesota. In agricultural and business pursuits Mr. Savage was progressive, yet methodical, and was ever ready to incorporate in his undertakings modern ways and means. His industry and enterprise have not only enabled him to attain prosperity but have won him a high place in the respect and regard of his neighbors.

AMAZIAH A. JAMIESON has been a resident of Oregon since 1887 and his activities in this state have been varied and important. He has made natural business ability effective in the conduct of many representative enterprises and has not only achieved individual success but has developed and promoted some of the principal industries of the state. He is one of the leading men of Curry county, an extensive owner of farming and mining property and an important figure in business circles of his section. He was born at Canterbury Station, New Brunswick, January 6, 1858, a son of Hugh and Julia Jamieson, the former of Scotch parentage and the latter of English descent. They removed later to Maine, in which state the father operated and improved two large farms and also engaged in freighting for two years. At the time of his death he owned one hundred and sixty acres of land, highly improved and developed and one of the valuable properties of his district. His wife has also passed away. They were the parents of eleven children: Amaziah A., of this review; Charles, a resident of Bandon; Julius and Julia, twins, the former of whom is managing a hotel in Minnesota, while the latter is deceased, her death occurring when she was sixteen years of age; Lydia, who passed away at the age of three; Hugh and Mary, twins, both of whom reside in Maine; Fred, who is the owner of a ranch in Maine; Amelia and Caroline, both of whom reside in Maine; and Margaret, of Boston.

Amaziah Jamieson received his education in the public schools of Maine and remained at home until he was twenty-two years of age. He then went to Minnesota, where for five years he worked in the lumber woods, logging during the winter and driving logs on the river during the summer months. He has a record of never having lost a day's work during this time. His activities along this line gradually expanded and he was eventually given charge of the lumber business operated by Curtis & Lawrence at Motley, Minnesota, and remained in this capacity for two years, guiding his special knowledge and long experience by practical business ability. It was in 1887 that he first came to Oregon, settling in Myrtle Point, where he bought land and erected a fine house which some time later he traded for a ranch upon which he lived and which he improved and operated for one year. This property he disposed of and established himself in the livery business in Myrtle Point, conducting this enterprise for three years and meeting with gratifying prosperity. When he sold his interests he moved to Curry county and took up mineral land on the Sixes river, later adding to his holdings by proving up on a homestead claim, upon which he lived until July, 1912, when he sold the ranch for five thousand, three hundred and fifty dollars and moved to Port Orford, where he now resides. During the period of his residence upon his property in Curry county he organized the Big Jewel Mining Company, composed principally of Minneapolis men, which owns one hundred and ten acres of valuable mineral lands in this district. They have spent over forty thousand dollars in improvements during the past few years and now have control of some of the most valuable mineral property in this part of Oregon. For some time Mr. Jamieson was interested in the operation of a saw-mill on the Sixes river, which he recently sold for forty-five hundred dollars. He owns ten acres of farming land in this section and town property in Port Orford and has other important interests of this kind. It is his intention to handle stock on the government reserve in Curry county and his success in the past is a favorable prophecy of his future prosperity.

In 1887 Mr. Jamieson was united in marriage to Miss Eunice Corbin, who was born in Missouri and came to Oregon with her parents in 1876. Her mother died in this state in 1900 and the father is residing in Curry county. In their family were two children: Eunice, the wife of our subject; and W. H., of Myrtle Point. Mr. and Mrs. Jamieson are the parents of four children: Fred, who was born in 1889 and who is living at home; Ethel, who was born in 1891 and who is the wife of O. J. Mather, of Curry county; Warren, who was born in 1896 and who is attending school; and Eunice, who was born in 1898 and who is also attending school.

Mr. Jamieson gives his allegiance to the republican party and did able and conscientious work for some years as a member of the board of education. He is well known in the Masonic order, holding membership in the lodge at Langlois. He has achieved success as a promoter and organizer by reason of his ability to recognize true opportunity and by his constructive activities along expanding lines, guided and directed by unusual business ability, the foundation of which is simple honesty and hard work.

PATRICK HUGHES, well known in Curry county as a successful ranchman, dairyman and stock-raiser, died upon his farm at the mouth of the Sixes river, June 28, 1901. Agricultural interests in this section lost by his death, an important exponent of progressive ideas and a man who for thirty-five years had been identified with modern farming in this part of the state. He was born in Ireland in 1830 and his parents passed away in that country. He was twenty-five years of age when he came to America, settling in Boston, Massachusetts, in 1855. In that city he spent three years and then crossed the plains to Oregon with ox teams locating in Curry county in the early days of its settlement. Here he mined for gold for nine years and then took up land upon which he resided until the time of his death. He constantly pursued a policy of expansion, improvement and development and when he died owned over one thousand acres of the finest land in this section. The ranch is located at the mouth of the Sixes river, fronting the ocean, and is a beautiful and intelligently improved property. It is operated by the wife of the subject of this review and three of her sons, who are following the methods and standards inaugurated by Patrick Hughes. They have one of the finest equipped dairies in Curry county and milk one hundred cows, manufacturing a high grade of butter which they sell readily in the local markets.

In Boston, Massachusetts, Mr. Hughes was united in marriage to Miss Jane O'Neil, who was born in Ireland and who came to America when she was still a girl. Mr. and Mrs. Hughes became the parents of seven children: Edward, who in company with his mother and his two brothers is operating the homestead and who is also the owner of a five hundred acre ranch; Thomas, who is associated with his brothers in the operation of the home farm; Francis, who is married and resides on the home farm, which he assists in operating; James, who resides on a ranch on the Sixes river; Rev. John C., pastor of St. Lawrence's church at Portland; Mrs. Alice Masterson, of Port Orford; and Mrs. Mary McMullin, of Denmark, Curry county. The family are members of the Roman Catholic church, to which religion Mr. Hughes gave his allegiance.

Patrick Hughes was a consistent republican and did able work as county commissioner for several terms, although he never sought political office, preferring to devote his entire time to the management of his farm. At the time of his death his land was in excellent condition, well improved and developed, showing the results of the owner's care and labor. Mr. Hughes' influence was important in the agricultural community in which he resided, for his methods were always progressive and systematic, his standards high and he was ever intelligently interested in the progress and advancement of the section which owes so much to his useful activities.

FRANCIS J. FAHY, a leading figure in the organization of the Bank of Bandon in 1904, has held the office of cashier since the establishment of the enterprise. He has managed the affairs under his charge competently and with shrewd discrimination, making the business grow and expand along modern and progressive lines. He is a native of Bandon, born March 11, 1872, and is a son of Edward and Sarah (Spoonheimer) Fahy, the former a native of Ireland, and the latter of Germany. His parents came to Port Orford, Oregon, in the spring of 1854, where the father followed milling, working in a sawmill in association with Captain Tichenor. He aided in the erection of the mill and assisted in its operation for several years, but later engaged in the lumber business. After some time he came to Bandon and operated the ferry at this point for two years, finally returning to the old home near Randolph. He built a sawmill upon his property and operated it by natural water power. He conducted this enterprise successfully in connection with his general farming until his death, which occurred October 31, 1907. His wife is still residing upon the home farm. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Fahy had nine children. Edward W. is engaged in ranching and also operates the mill near the home place. Florinda is in business in Portland, Oregon. Henrietta is the deceased wife of O. L. Gruggel, of San Francisco, California. Isadore P. is employed by the government in the lighthouse on the Umpqua river. Silas W. is engaged in milling at Prosper, Oregon. Mary E. makes her home with her mother. Francis J., the subject of this review, is the next in order of birth. Charles G. is engaged in the operation of the farm and mill in connection with his brother Edward W. Sadie became the wife of Alfred H. Brown, a druggist of Portland.

Francis J. Fahy was educated in the public schools of his native district and completed his studies in the Bandon high school. He later attended a business college in San Francisco but in the meantime had worked for several years in the sawmills of Coos county and engaged in various other enterprises, acquiring in this way the money to pay for his tuition. He was graduated from the Healds Business College in San Francisco and immediately afterward returned to Oregon, where for a short time he worked in a sawmill. He then became manager of a store in Parkersburg, and held the position of bookkeeper for the Coquille Mill & Tug Company for eight years. At the end of that time he established his residence in Bandon and in partnership with several others organized the Bank of Bandon, in 1904, with a capital stock of twenty-five thousand dollars and from its organization to the present Mr. Fahy has acted as cashier. The stock was increased in 1910 to fifty thousand dollars. Three years after the establishment of the bank the stock was all paid up, dividends having been declared from the first year and it has grown until it is now one of the largest financial institutions in the county. Its officers and directors are as follows: J. L. Kronenberg, president; T. P. Hanly, vice president; F. J. Fahy, cashier; W. J. Sweet, assistant cashier. These officers with R. H. Rosa and C. Y. Lowe are directors. The bank building is a large, two-story structure, shaped like a flatiron and built of concrete and is one of the finest business buildings in the village. During the course of his eight years' residence in Bandon Mr. Fahy has accumulated a comfortable fortune, which he has invested judiciously in local enterprises. He is a stockholder in the Bandon Heights Land Company addition and is interested in the Coquille Tow Boat Company. He owns with a partner a business block in Bandon and is interested in the commercial growth and upbuilding of the village in which he resides. He is a real student of banking conditions, an able financier, a shrewd manager and a reliable and trustworthy man. He is entitled to be numbered among the representative men of Bandon since he has been instrumental in establishing within the village a growing, prosperous and intelligently managed enterprise and since he has added to the standards of citizenship by reason of a life which has been consistently upright, useful and valuable.

ASMUS ADOLPHSEN is living upon his original homestead claim in Curry county which he acquired in 1886 when he settled in Oregon. He does little farming but has charge of a sawmill owned by an operating company and is doing able work in this line although he is living practically retired. He was born in Denmark, in April, 1854, a son of Henry and Katrina Adolphsen, natives of that country. He received a limited education in the public schools of Denmark and in 1873 came to America, settling in the eastern states where he spent six years. At the end of that time he returned to his native country and there remained until 1886 when he again crossed the Atlantic, settling in Curry county, at Denmark, where he proved up one hundred and sixty acres of land on which he resided for five years. At the end of that time he moved to Dairyville, where he operated a sawmill for nine years, building up during that time a modern and prosperous enterprise. His mill here had a capacity of eight thousand feet of lumber per day and gave employment to an average of five men. During this time Mr. Adolphsen cut the timber on several large tracts of land. Eventually, however, he moved his mill to Elk river and there operated it for ten years, holding the position as manager during the latter period of this time in the employ of an operating company which had purchased it from him. This mill had a capacity of twenty-five thousand feet per day and employed on an average of thirty-five men. He is still in charge, but now lives upon his homestead near Denmark, called the Wood Lily Dairy Farm. He gives general supervision to his agricultural interests but does not do any active work.

In 1881 Mr. Adolphsen was united in marriage to Miss Anna Festersen, a native of Denmark. In that country their marriage occurred and Mrs. Adolphsen accompanied her husband on his second journey to America. They became the parents of seven children: Hans H., of Bandon; Henry, who is a forest ranger, and resides on Elk river; Christian and Anna, both of whom have passed away; Katie, who lives at home; Ralph, deceased; and Fred, who is attending school. The two eldest children were born in Denmark.

Mr. Adolphsen is a democrat and served for two terms as county commissioner. He is well known in Port Orford and takes an active and intelligent interest in promoting the progress and development of this town, doing effective work in this way as a member of the committee of Port Orford port commissioners. He belongs to the Woodmen of the World but is not otherwise connected with fraternal organizations. The rest which he is enjoying is well deserved for it has come after a successful career which had for its foundation ability, made practically effective by hard work. He is one of the sterling citizens of Curry county and his life in this section has been useful and valuable as a factor in progress.

FRED WRIGHT. Among those who by reason of their well directed labor and unceasing diligence have contributed largely toward the agricultural development of Lane county must be numbered Fred Wright, who owns an excellent ranch of seven hundred and fifty-eight acres in the vicinity of Walker, on the Cottage Grove road. Here for twenty-two years he has been engaged in general farming and stock-raising, meeting with lucrative returns from both and is now numbered among the prosperous ranchmen of the county. He was born at Coventry, Orleans county, Vermont, on the 21st of July, 1851, and is a son of Erastus and Mary Ann (Fairbrother) Wright. The paternal grandparents were Solomon and Ruth Wright and to them were born seven children, including Joel, Azariah, Mary, Erastus, the father of our subject, and Louise. Erastus Wright, who was the youngest son, was born at Westminster, Vermont, on the 4th of January, 1815. There he was reared to manhood and subsequently engaged in farming, following that occupation during the remainder of his active life. His death occurred on the 5th of February, 1907. At the age of about twenty-two years he married Miss Fairbrother, who was likewise a native of Vermont, and the only daughter and third in order of birth in a family of five. The others are as follows: Willard, Calvin, Luther and Mark. To Mr. and Mrs. Wright there were born eight children: Riley E., who served as captain of Company H, Fifteenth Vermont Volunteers during the Civil war, and who is an attorney and ex-judge of Baltimore, Maryland; Adelaide, the widow of Joseph Worthy, a farmer in the vicinity of Bethel, Maine; Solomon A., deceased, a former resident of Barton, Vermont, and a veteran of the Civil war; Joel F., a physician of Orleans county, Vermont; Mary A., of Barton, Vermont, who has been an invalid since girlhood; Fred, our subject; Mark Willis, a practicing attorney of Baltimore, Maryland; and Homer, a farmer, living on the old homestead at Coventry, Vermont.

Reared on a New England farm, Fred Wright received his education in the common schools of his native state and early began to assist with the work of the homestead, thus laying the foundation for the vocation that he has ever since followed with such excellent success. At the age of twenty-two years he left the scenes of his boyhood and went to Colorado, where for six years he engaged in sheep-raising, ranging his herds on public lands, on which he had purchased the water right. He subsequently withdrew from this and bought an interest in a stone quarry at Manitou, that state, from which he furnished the stone for many of the large buildings of both Denver and Colorado Springs. This enterprise engaged his energies for about five years, and in May, 1886, he moved to Douglas county, Oregon. There for three years he worked on a dairy ranch, but owing to the condition of his health at the expiration of that period he was compelled to return to the east. A year later he returned to Oregon and bought ninety-two acres of land in the vicinity of Walker, Lane county, that formed the nucleus of his present ranch. Thirty-five acres of this was cleared and under cultivation and the remainder was in brush. In the fall of 1905, Mr. Wright and his son, Clyde E., together purchased three hundred and nine acres of land, located three-quarters of a mile northwest of his first farm. There was only seventy-five acres of this tract under cultivation at that time, the remainder being in pasture and timber, but it was all excellent land. In May, 1908, Mr. Wright again extended the boundaries of his ranch by the purchase of three hundred and fifty-seven acres that connected his former tracts, making his holdings aggregate seven hundred and fifty-eight acres. During the period of his ownership he has cleared one hundred and thirty acres of his land, eighty of which has been brought to a high state of productivity, while the other fifty is in pasture. He now has five hundred acres under cultivation, the most of it located in the river bottom, and his fields annually net him a handsome dividend. He has an orchard of about twelve acres, nine of this being planted to prunes which in the year 1911 netted him two hundred dollars per acre. Twenty years ago he began raising corn and now he annually plants about twenty-five acres to this grain, his yield averaging sixty bushels to the acre. He also devotes a large portion of his acreage to oats, his average yield being fifty bushels per acre, while his wheat approximates thirty-two bushels to the acre. Mr. Wright has been especially successful in raising potatoes and has harvested as many as five hundred bushel to the acre but he averages about three hundred. His early crop is usually planted in March and marketed in June. His hay consists of vetch and oat, some of which yields as high as five tons to the acre and is used by Mr. Wright for feed, for in connection with his diversified farming he raises a high grade of hogs, sheep, cattle and horses. He takes great pride in his ranch, and well he may as it is one of the best cultivated and most highly improved places in the county. His land is all fenced and is provided with ample barns and sheds for the protection of his stock and grain, and he has also erected a comfortable residence. He is a man of progressive and enterprising methods, is practical in his ideas and at various times he has installed on his ranch such modern conveniences and appliances as would lessen the labor and expense of its operation and he now has a most excellent equipment.

On the 8th of February, 1881, at Manitou, Colorado, Mr. Wright was united in marriage to Miss Annie J. Blackwell, who was born in Illinois on the 27th of January, 1860, and is a daughter of Ellis and Maria E. (Gibbs) Blackwell. The family is of Scotch descent in the paternal line but the father was a native of Maine and the mother of the state of New York. They were married in Illinois, however, and there passed the early years of their domestic life, removing to Colorado in 1879. The father, who has always engaged in farming, continued his agricultural pursuits in the latter state until his death, April 28, 1902. The mother is still living and now resides at Gardiner, Oregon. Mrs. Wright is the eldest of the eight children born to her parents, the others being as follows: Ada M., who died in infancy; Grace E., who lives in Gardiner; Louisa M., the widow of I. L. Harding, of Walker; Lincoln A., a farmer of Gardiner; Ellis W. and Fred, both of whom are deceased; and one daughter, who died in infancy. The maternal grandmother prior to her marriage was a Miss Burbee, of Vermont, while the grandmother on the paternal side was Miss Jedidah Sturdivant of Lewiston, Maine. The family in both lines is descended from old New England colonial stock. Mr. and Mrs. Wright are the parents of four children: Nora A., who was born November 21, 1881, the wife of Oscar Jackson, a farmer of Walker, Oregon; Clyde E., a farmer, born on the 18th of December, 1883, now married and living at Walker; Ralph E., whose natal day was the 5th of February, 1893, and who is assisting his father with the operation of the home ranch; and Ruth A., his twin sister who died three days after birth. Mr. and Mrs. Wright gave their children the advantages of a good common-school education.

The family attended the Presbyterian church, in which the parents hold membership, and in politics Mr. Wright is a republican. He is held in high regard in his community and on several occasions he has declined the candidacy for various county offices. However, he has served for twelve years as road supervisor in his district and for about fifteen years he was clerk of the school board.

He has met with gratifying prosperity in his pursuits, as he has applied himself consistently and intelligently to the achievement of his purpose.

ALFRED J. MARSH. One of the most prominent, successful and progressive farmers of Curry county is Alfred J. Marsh, who is operating an excellent tract of four hundred and eighty acres near Port Orford, upon which he carries on general farming, stock-raising and dairying, gaining conspicuous success in all of these lines by reason of his efficiency and industry. He has been a resident of Curry county since he was twenty-one years of age and with the exception of one year has given his entire attention to modern farming. He was born in Brooklyn, New York, August 19, 1861, a son of Robert and Mary (Crawford) Marsh, the former a native of England, and the latter of Scotland. Their marriage occurred in the former country and they came to America in the early '50s, settling in New York city, where the father was a ship broker and importer, continuing in this occupation for a number of years. He spent three years in the South Sea islands in charge of the ships and stores belonging to Andrew Crawford and upon his return to America in 1902 he retired from active life and spent the remainder of his days with the subject of this review in Curry county, where he died in 1904. His wife survived him until 1911. They had three children: Alfred J., of this review; Mrs. Mary Waters, of New York city; and Edmond, who passed away in Douglas county in 1905.

Alfred J. Marsh received his early education in the public schools of New York and completed it by a two years' course in Edinburgh Academy in Scotland. He came west when he was sixteen years of age, journeying to California with his uncle and remaining in that state until he had attained his majority. He then came to Curry county, where he spent one year as bookkeeper in his uncle's store at Port Orford, purchasing at the end of that time a quarter section of land on Elk river, which he has since operated and improved. He has added to his holdings from time to time and now owns four hundred and eighty acres, three hundred of which are tillable. This property he has improved and developed along the most practical and scientific lines and upon it carries on general farming, specializing in dairying and stock-breeding. His dairy is one of the most sanitary and modern enterprises of its kind in the section, equipped with all the latest conveniences and accessories. Mr. Marsh keeps fifty head of high-grade Jersey cows for this purpose and manufactures a fine brand of butter, which he ships to the Portland market, where it has a ready sale. He handles horses, hogs and sheep, all of a high grade, for breeding purposes, and his work along this line is steadily increasing in importance. Every year Mr. Marsh cuts about one hundred tons of hay. He is one of the sterling and substantial citizens of Curry county, seeking his success in a field of labor with which he has been familiar for many years and which has repaid his practical and well directed industry by constantly growing prosperity. His farm is a credit to his progressive methods and to his business judgment, and is a valuable addition to the resources of this section.

In 1885 Mr. Marsh was united in marriage to Miss Rachel Kronenburg, who was born in Coos county, a daughter of John and Kate Kronenburg, of Coquille. The father died in 1910 and the mother is residing in the family home in Coquille. They were the parents of five children: John, of Bandon; Emma, the wife of James Blakely, of California; Fred, of Denver, Colorado; Rachel, the wife of our subject; and Ida, who married Dr. Owens, of St. Louis, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Marsh are the parents of nine children: Mary, the wife of Ray Keefer, who has a large sheep ranch in Idaho; John and Louis, who are at home; Donald and Dorothy, twins; Fred; Nicholas; Beatrice; and Kate. The family belong to the Episcopal church.

Mr. Marsh is a republican and has served his fellow citizens in numerous important capacities, including those of county assessor and road supervisor. He held the former office for twelve years and did able and effective work. He has been in the latter position for three years and is still serving. He belongs to the Woodmen of the World and is prominent also in the Improved Order of Red Men. The principal activities of his life, however, are directed toward agriculture. He is a farmer of the modern kind, intelligent, trained by experience, active, progressive and a student of economics as applied to planting and harvesting, and in his possession of these qualities is an exemplification of a type which is raising agriculture to a systematic science.

JOHN D. GRAHAM. A farm of eighty-five acres, all bottom land, situated a mile and a half above Coquille on the Coquille river, is the property of John D. Graham, who in connection with his two sons is making a specialty of dairying and was instrumental in the building of one of the finest creameries in the state. He is president of the company which operates the latter enterprise and in its successful control gives evidence of his business and executive ability. He was born in Clay county, Missouri, March 27, 1855, a son of William T. and Lapina Graham, natives of Kentucky and Virginia respectively. In childhood they accompanied their parents to Missouri, where they were married and spent their remaining days. The father followed farming throughout his entire life and held many county offices, taking active part in the public affairs of the community. He was a representative of a family whose members were among the earliest settlers of Missouri and he lived to see a marked transformation in that part of the state in which he lived as frontier conditions gave way before an advancing civilization. To him and his wife were born five children: John D.; Mrs. Rose Swan, living in Missouri; James who is a resident of Leavenworth, Kansas; Mrs. Laura Swan, who makes her home in Missouri; and Thomas S., also a resident of that state.

The youthful days of John D. Graham were spent upon his father's farm in Clay county and he remained under the parental roof to the time of his marriage, which was celebrated on the 15th of January, 1875, Miss Elizabeth Atteberry, becoming his wife. She was born in Missouri, a daughter of the Rev. S. Atteberry, who resided in Missouri until 1875 and then removed to Kansas. Four years later he returned to Missouri, where he died in 1890, while his widow is still living in that state. In their family were twelve children, eight of whom are living: Abner A., who is a resident of Oklahoma; Mrs. Elizabeth Graham; Sigel, who is at home; Burl, also living in Missouri; John, of Oklahoma; Mrs. Jane Whitechurch, who makes her home in Oklahoma; William, who is at home; and Thomas, also still under the parental roof.

In early manhood John D. Graham gave his attention to architectural and mechanical pursuits, being thus engaged until he came to Oregon in 1890. He first settled near Hillsboro on a ranch which he purchased and cultivated for two years. He then sold that property and made his home at Riddles, Oregon, where he was engaged in mining gold for two years. In 1894 he took up his abode in Jackson county, where he again followed gold mining for eight years. He afterward devoted two years to raising wheat in that county and subsequently purchased land on Williams creek, where he built a large creamery and also conducted a dairy ranch for two years. On the expiration of that period he sold out and removed to the vicinity of Coquille, purchasing eighty-five acres of bottom land a mile and a half above the town on the Coquille river. He still owns a small tract of land in Josephine county but is concentrating his energies upon the development of his home property and the conduct of a dairy business, in which his two sons are associated with him. His son William is a scientific butter maker and he and his father were instrumental in building one of the finest creameries of the state, conducted under the name of the Graham Company, of which John D. Graham is president, while William Graham has active charge of the butter making. The excellence of their product insures a ready sale on the market and their success is gratifying.

Mr. and Mrs. Graham are the parents of six children. William S., who as previously stated, is associated with his father in business, was born May 1, 1880. He married Miss Olive Dungey, a native of Texas and a daughter of Thomas Dungey. To Mr. and Mrs. William Graham has been born a daughter, Rena M. The next of our subject's family, Arlie W., born in 1883, is in partnership with his father and brother, William. Earl D., born in 1895, is at home. Pearl died at the age of eleven years. Two other children, the eldest of the family, died in infancy. The family are of the United Brethren faith, holding membership in the church of that denomination at Coquille. John D. Graham votes with the democratic party and his fraternal relations are with the Masons, who find in him an exemplary representative of the craft, loyal to its teachings concerning mutual helpfulness and brotherly kindness. He has never had occasion to regret his determination to come to the northwest, for here he has found good business opportunities and has achieved a creditable measure of success.

CHARLES FORTY is a native of England, who has been in Oregon since he was ten years of age. From the time he was fifteen he has been dependent upon his own resources and the training in independence thus acquired has been an important factor in his success. He owns and operates a fine tract of land in Curry county upon which he carries on general farming, stock-raising and dairying, founding a substantial success upon experience and systematic industry. He was born in England, September 1, 1866, a son of George and Caroline Forty, natives of that country, who came to America in 1878, settling immediately in Curry county, where the father took up a home-stead claim on the Elk river which he operated and improved until his death in 1897. His wife makes her home in Coos county. They were the parents of seven children, of whom the following are living: Elizabeth, who is the widow of John Bentz, of Coos county; George, of Port Orford; Anna, the wife of Frank Lang, of California; and Charles, the subject of this review.

Charles Forty received a primary education in the public schools of Oregon and remained with his parents until he was fifteen years of age. At that time he began to earn his own livelihood, working at various occupations until his marriage, after which he proved up a fine farm in Curry county and began general farming. Upon this property he has since lived, specializing in the raising of high-grade stock and in dairying, obtaining a gratifying degree of success by practical and progressive methods. He has invested extensively in town property in Port Orford and gives a great deal of time and attention to its management.

In 1898 Mr. Forty married Miss Olive Freund, who was born in San Francisco, California, August 2, 1879, a daughter of Fredrick and Anna (Downs) Freund, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of New York. They moved to California in the early years and there married. In San Francisco the father followed the trade of painting and decorating and was successful in this line of occupation. Coming to Oregon in 1892 they settled in Curry county and later moved to Coos county where the father died in 1902. His wife makes her home in California. Mr. and Mrs. Freund became the parents of eight children: William, deceased; Elizabeth, the wife of George Bethel of Coos county; Olive, the wife of our subject; Grace, who married Frank Pomroy, of Bandon; Joseph, who resides in California; Anna, who became the wife of Daniel Emmett, also of California; Vincent, of Coos county; and Fredrick, who has passed away. To Mr. and Mrs. Forty have been born three children: Fredrick, who was born in 1899; Anna, born in 1902; and Cecilia, whose birth occurred in 1905. The family are members of the Roman Catholic church.

Mr. Forty gives his allegiance to the republican party but has never been an office seeker. He belongs to the Woodmen of the World, but is not otherwise active in fraternal circles, preferring to devote his time to his own interests. The attractive and modern condition of his farm is evidence of the care and labor which he bestows upon the place, and his practical methods and progressive ideas entitle him to rank among the representative citizens of this section.

WILLIAM M. HEDRICK, proprietor of a farm of one hundred and eighty-eight acres in Douglas county has become, through his practical and efficient methods one of the leading agriculturists in his section of the state. He was born near Drain, Oregon, on May 3, 1863, and is a son of John and Louisa J. (Jackson) Hedrick, of whom more extended mention is made on another page of this work. He was reared at home and educated in the public schools of Drain. He made wise use of every opportunity which he had along this line and added to his knowledge by extended, broad and intelligent reading. When he laid aside his books he taught school for one year and was successful in this occupation. He remained at home until his marriage in 1886 and immediately afterward removed to Ashland, Oregon, where for one year he worked upon a fruit farm. At the expiration of that time he removed to Grants Pass and worked in the employ of the Booth, Kelly Lumber Company. He gave up this position in order to take up again his old occupation of teaching, and three of the six years during which he resided in Grants Pass were spent in this line of work. He returned to Douglas county eventually and went into partnership with three of his brothers, buying two hundred and ninety acres of their father's farm in Hard Scrabble which they operated jointly and with much success for some time. Subsequently however, they divided their property and William M. Hedrick received as his share seventy-six acres which the efforts of the three brothers and himself had brought to a high state of development. He has added to his holdings and at one time purchased one hundred and twelve acres which was formerly the property of his brother Henry. His present farm comprises one hundred and eighty-eight acres of land, nearly all of which is under cultivation. It is yielding harvests which increase in abundance and quality every year and is one of the model and attractive properties in Douglas county.

On December 1, 1886, Mr. Hedrick was united in marriage to Miss Loretta Boots, a native of Iowa and a daughter of William N. Boots, who came to Oregon in 1875 and located at Elkton. Her father subsequently removed to Drain and later to Mouth, Polk county, where his death occurred in 1910. To Mr. and Mrs. Hedrick have been born five children, four of whom are living: Ercell H., who is attending the Oregon State University at Eugene; and Ray N., Opal L., and Ella May, all of whom are living at home. Mr. Hedrick is a republican and has served as deputy assessor of his district for the past ten years. His wife is a member of the Christian church. He is well known in Douglas county where he has spent most of his days and where his friends respect and esteem him for a life which in all its activities has been successful and upright and in all its phases straightforward and honorable.

CYRUS MADDEN owns the Blanco & Blacksand mine in Curry county, which he discovered in 1871 and which he has managed and operated since that time. He is one of the pioneer miners in this section of the state and for fifty years has followed this occupation in various parts of the west, acquiring valuable and extensive properties, principally in Oregon. His long experience in the various details of his occupation, his energy, discriminating judgment and knowledge have all been factors in a success which places him in the front ranks of progressive and successful miners. He was born in Fairfield county, Ohio, May 6, 1832, and both of his parents died in that state, whither the father had come in 1818 from his native state of Virginia.

Cyrus Madden received his education in the public schools of Fairfield county and completed it at Denison University in Granville, Ohio. He remained at home until 1858, when he went upon a business trip to Kansas and from there to Missouri, where he took up land. He found his property, however, barren and unproductive and eventually abandoned it, going to Kentucky, where he taught school for a number of years, during which time he also studied law. He was admitted to the bar in 1860 and located for practice in Bellefonte, but after a short time returned to Missouri and resumed school teaching. On May 2, 1861, he crossed the plains to California, driving a mule team, and reached San Francisco in September of the same year. Here he taught in the public schools and later went to the Salmon River mines, in which he worked for three and one-half years, going to Oregon at the end of that time and spending his first winter prospecting. He has followed mining in Curry county since that time and is today one of the leading men in this line of occupation in the section. He is operating the Blanco & Blacksand mine, which he discovered forty-one years ago and which by practical and progressive labor he has made lucrative and valuable. It is highly improved and efficiently equipped and supplied with water by a four mile ditch and flume. It is one of the most valuable mines in Curry county, having extensive deposits of gold, silver and platinum. Mr. Madden has invested judiciously as opportunity arose and owns three hundred acres of mining land and eighty acres of agricultural property in Curry county. He is one of the prominent and leading men of his section and was active in forming the company which operated the large Lane mine, which eventually proved to be one of the richest ore veins in Oregon.

On October 27, 1872, Mr. Madden was united in marriage to Miss Lucretia V. Kent, who was born in Iowa and who died March 26, 1893. Mr. Madden gives his allegiance to the republican party but has never been an office seeker. He is well known in the Masonic order and active in the affairs of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His religious belief is that of the Eighth Day Adventists. He is a shrewd and practical man whose ability along business lines has made his ventures successful by virtue of his knowledge and practical experience. He knows "pay dirt" when he sees it and is alive to the value of modern methods in getting his ore out of the ground. He is resourceful, able and intelligently active and quick to make use of opportunities as they present themselves.

C. HENKLE, who for sixteen years has been proprietor of a saloon at Lakeview, was born in Lee county, Iowa, June 4, 1847. His parents were Miles and Fannie Henkle. The father died when the subject of this review was but three years of age and he was twenty-three at the time of his mother's demise. He was the second of three children and was but six years of age when, in 1853, his grandfather, C. P. Blair, crossed the plains, traveling by ox team to the Willamette valley. At length they arrived in Corvallis and C. Henkle was a resident of Benton county until 1872, when he came to Lake county, the population of which consisted mostly of ranchmen engaged in raising stock. Mr. Henkle was reared by his grandfather, Mr. Blair, who followed farming in Benton county and was assisted by his grandson to the extent of his ability as determined by age and strength. He was yet but a boy in years when, on the 3d of December, 1864, he enlisted as a member of Company A, First Oregon Infantry, with which he served for eighteen months. He was stationed most of the time at Fort Vancouver, Washington. After being mustered out he again engaged in farming but later conducted a livery stable and worked at various occupations. During the past sixteen years he has conducted a saloon at Lakeview.

C. Henkle is a staunch republican and for two years filled the office of deputy sheriff but does not seek political preferment as a reward for party fealty. He holds membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. As one of the pioneers of southeastern Oregon he is well known, having for much more than a half century lived in this section of the state, so that he has been a witness of practically its entire development and growth. He came to Oregon when the Indians outnumbered the white population, when there were no railroads and when the most farsighted could not have dreamed of the great changes which were soon to occur and place the state within a comparatively brief time on a par with the older states of the east.

CHARLES W. ZUMWALT owns eight hundred and eighty acres of land in Curry county and valuable property in Port Orford and is regarded as one of the prominent and important men of this section. He has been in Oregon since 1850 and is a son of one of the early settlers in Curry county, where practically his entire life has been spent. He was born in Polk county, Missouri, in February, 1847, a son of Henry J. and Elizabeth C. Zumwalt, the former of whom was born in St. Charles county, Missouri, in 1819 and the latter in Tennessee in 1824. Their marriage occurred in Missouri, whither the mother of our subject had come when she was a child, and they remained in that state until 1850, when they came to Oregon and settled in Marion county, fourteen miles east of Salem. Here the father took up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres on the Santiam river which he operated as a stock farm until 1869, when he moved to Curry county and took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres on the Sixes river, upon which property he resided until his death, February 24, 1901. He had added to his holdings from time to time and owned six hundred and forty acres, principally bottom land, which he operated along the most modern, progressive and systematic lines. His wife is residing upon the homestead, in the eighty-eighth year of her age. To Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Zumwalt were born three children: Charles W., of this review; Frances Ella, who became the wife of George W. Junkin, of eastern Oregon, and is now deceased; and Mrs. Mary A. Blackerby, also deceased.

Charles W. Zumwalt received his education in the public schools of Marion county and when not engaged with his books aided his father in the work of the farm, gaining thus at an early date experience which was valuable to him in his independent agricultural career. He remained in association with his father in the operation of the homestead until he was forty years of age but, in 1875, proved up a claim which he now owns. He also operates the home property, which he inherited at the death of his father, and his entire holdings comprise eight hundred and eighty acres, three hundred of which are improved and under cultivation. The land is in excellent condition and shows the results of the owner's care and labor in steadily increasing productiveness. It is equipped with the necessary buildings and fenced into convenient fields and is one of the finest and most intelligently developed farms in the section. Mr. Zumwalt owns besides some fine residence property in Port Orford and is actively interested in the progress and advancement of the section which owes so much to his useful activities.

Mr. Zumwalt has been twice married. In 1868 he wedded Miss Sarah E. Clymer, who was born in Linn county. Her mother came to Oregon in 1848 and here married Henry V. Clymer, who some time afterward was drowned in Columbia county. The mother then moved to Marion county and passed away in 1912. In 1887 Mr. Zumwalt was united in marriage to Miss Agnes Eleanore Blacklock, who was born, reared and educated in New Zealand. She came to America with her parents in 1872 and settled with them in Roseburg, Oregon, where they lived for one year, coming at the end of that time to Curry county, where they purchased land at Blacklock Point. They moved to San Francisco in 1879 but returned to Oregon in the late '90s and settled in Bandon, where the father passed away in 1905, the mother's death having occurred in 1888. They were the parents of four children: William, a resident of Sydney, Australia; Agnes E., the wife of our subject; Mrs. Annie Jane Hawkins, of Langlois, Oregon; and Mrs. Evelyn Richards, of Fort Orford. Mr. and Mrs. Zumwalt have six sons: John Henry, born in 1888, who received a high school and business college education and who is residing at home; Marion R., who was born March 11, 1890, and who received a public-school education; Clarence William, who was born September 7, 1892, and who also received his education in the public schools; Charles P., born June 28, 1894; Raymond B., born in 1895; and Harold Weston, whose birth occurred in 1899.

Mr. Zumwalt gives his allegiance to the democratic party, and has held various important local offices, including those of county commissioner, county assessor and justice of the peace, serving in the latter capacity for fourteen years. He also served as deputy collector of customs at Port Orford, from 1884 to 1887. He is a member of North Bend Lodge, No. 28, I. O. O. F., but is not otherwise active in fraternal circles. He gives most of his time and attention to the management of his farm and residence property and is numbered among the enterprising and representative men of Curry county, interested in agriculture as an occupation along scientific lines and successful in it as a man of practical experience.

WILLIAM W. TUCKER is one of the pioneers of Oregon and is engaged in farming on a beautiful ranch comprising one hundred acres located at Grants Pass, in Josephine county. He was born May 14, 1846, and is a son of William and Nancy (Dailey) Tucker. William Tucker, the father of our subject, was born and reared in Surry county, North Carolina, and as a young man removed from there to Missouri, where he met his future wife, Nancy (Dailey) Tucker. She was a daughter of David Dailey, who was among the well known and enterprising men of Jackson county, Missouri. After remaining a number of years in that state the father and mother of our subject with their family started in 1852 from Jackson county for Oregon, in a train of which the father's team was a part of forty wagons, the entire company consisting of one hundred men.

The captain of the caravan was Job Powell. Their route led them by way of Fort Carny, Fort Laramie, Fort Hall and Fort Boise. They then proceeded by way of the Grande Ronde, Tygh valley and the Barlow Gates, crossing the Cascade mountains by the Barlow road. In crossing the mountains they experienced severe hardships and their teams became so exhausted that they had to be left. Abandoning wagon and oxen, they crossed the mountains on foot, carrying of their supplies as much as could be packed on one or two old oxen. It being late in the season, they underwent severe trials on account of the stormy weather which they endured most of the way. They were compelled to camp at the mountain house at Fort Foster, which they reached on the 5th of November, on which date they had been on the journey exactly six months since starting from Missouri. The family subsequently settled in Spring Water, Clackamas county, where the father filed upon a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres.

William W. Tucker was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools of the district in which he lived. He remained under the parental roof until he had attained his majority and at the age of twenty-one years was employed for one year in the lumber district after which he crossed on the John Day river to the east side of the mountains and spent one year riding the range as a cowboy. He later took up a homestead in Lane county upon which he resided for twenty-five years after which he disposed of that property and settled in Josephine county where he purchased one hundred acres of land upon which he now resides and is engaged in agricultural pursuits.

Mr. Tucker was united in marriage to Miss Ellen Bailey, who is a native of Canada. She emigrated with her parents to Oregon at a very early date. To Mr. and Mrs. William W. Tucker nine children have been born: John R.; Nancy J.; Eva R., who died in 1908; Sara F., who died in 1906; William M., who met death by accidental drowning in 1902; Martha E.; Myrtle A.; James E.; and Charles A.

Mr. Tucker is an adherent of the democratic party but has never sought political preferment of any kind. He is one of the enterprising and highly esteemed citizens of Josephine county and is a man always ready to lend his assistance in the advancement of public measures which seek the improvement of the community in which he lives.

JONAS H. UPTON. Since 1863 Jonas H. Upton has been a resident of Oregon and is now living retired in Langlois. He has been identified with important occupations during the forty-nine years, engaging principally in journalism and general farming and after gaining prosperity in both fields is enjoying a well earned rest, giving his attention to the management of his property. He was born in Miami county, Ohio, March 18, 1832, and moved to Indiana with his parents when he was still a child.

In the Hoosier state Jonas H. Upton received his education and there resided for eighteen years, finally going to Iowa in 1853. In that state he conducted a furniture business for some time and later studied law. Eventually, however, he engaged in journalism and followed that line of occupation until the breaking out of the Civil war, when he volunteered and entered the service with the Tenth Iowa Regiment in August, 1861. While the regiment was stationed in southeast Missouri he was prostrated with serious illness and was finally discharged on account of disability, in 1862, the surgeon's certificate stating, "chronic dysentery and ulcerations of the bowels with spinal difficulties." The latter trouble he has never been able quite to overcome.

His residence in Oregon dates from 1863, when he arrived in Salem and worked for a time in Mr. Barker's cabinet shop on Commercial street, the Chemeketa Hotel finally occupying the site, where Barker's furniture store once stood. In 1864 he moved to Albany, in Linn county, and again established himself in the furniture business and in connection with this followed his trade of cabinet-maker. From Albany he moved to La Fayette, where he opened the office of the La Fayette Courier, which newspaper he published for two years. Moving to Salem, he established the Capital Chronicle, which later became merged with the Salem Mercury and was conducted under that name for several years. Mr. Upton's first purchase of land was made in Yamhill county, where he operated a farm for some time and only abandoned it in 1874 in order to accompany his wife to southern California, where she went for recuperation. Here he lived for five years, returning to Oregon at the end of that time and settling in Coos Bay, whence he came to Port Orford after a short time and established the Port Orford Post which he conducted for two years. He then moved up on one hundred and sixty acres of land in northern Curry county and purchased forty adjoining acres and definitely established himself as a general farmer. Upon this land he lived for twenty-nine years and brought the property to a highly improved and developed state. Eventually, however, he was obliged to retire on account of ill health and has been a resident of Langlois since that time. He is erecting a pleasant modern home in the city and owns other property in Langlois, besides one hundred acres of land in the vicinity.

In 1856 Mr. Upton was united in marriage to Miss Cloey Mitchell, a native of Indiana, and they became the parents of two children: James M., who is practicing law in Marshfield; and Arthur W., who died in China. Mr. and Mrs. Upton have also adopted two orphan children—a son, who is now twenty-five years of age, and a daughter, the wife of James W. Upton, of Norfolk, Nebraska.

In his political views Mr. Upton is an ardent socialist and is intelligently and actively interested in local public affairs. He

E. P. ANDERSON is one of the well known and respected citizens of North Bend where he has for some time filled the office of chief of police. He was born in Roseburg, Douglas county, March 24, 1859, and is a son of Daniel and Marie (Fitzhugh) Anderson. His parents crossed the plains to Oregon with ox teams in 1852 and located in Douglas county where the father took up a pre-emption claim and also a homestead. He established his home upon that property and there continued to live for many years. The mother died in 1891. The father now lives in the Soldiers' Home at Roseburg. He is a veteran of the Rogue River Indian wars of 1855-6 and is eighty-two years of age. To Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Anderson ten children were born, six of whom are living: George A., who resides in Chignik, Alaska; E. P., the subject of this review; John L., a resident of Denmark, Oregon; Phoebe L., the wife of J. D. Wilson, a resident of Coquille, Coos county, Oregon; Eva L., the wife of Mr. Cox of Curry county, Oregon; and Nancy J., the wife of James Stinson, of Myrtle Point, Oregon.

E. P. Anderson was reared in his parents' home and received his early education in the public schools of Douglas county. At the age of sixteen years he started in life independently as a laborer and continued in that occupation for four years. He then went to Bridgeville, California, and while there served as constable and later as deputy sheriff of Humboldt county for six years. During that time he celebrated his wedding and immediately thereafter engaged in farming in which occupation he continued for three years. In 1890 he came to Oregon and was engaged in the cattle-raising business in Curry county for eight years. He then went to Alaska with a schooner and there spent two years. In 1902 he removed to Coquille, Oregon, and was engaged in a sawmill for one year after which he followed the carpenter's trade until 1910. That year he was appointed to the office of chief of police of North Bend, Oregon, and has since continued in that position. He is the owner of fine residence property in North Bend where he resides.

Mr. Anderson was united in marriage in 1884, to Miss Maggie B. Martin of Humboldt county, California, who was a daughter of Augustus and Mary (Frank) Martin. Her father was a native of New York and her mother of Ohio, and both died many years ago in California. To Mr. and Mrs. Anderson two children have been born.

Henry L., who was born in Rohnerville, Humboldt county, California, in 1886, married Miss Lena McAdams of Coquille, Oregon. He received his education in the public schools of Curry county and in the academy at Coquille, Coos county. William P., the youngest of the family, who was born in Bridgeville, California, in 1888, resides in North Bend and received his education in the same institutions as his brother Henry. The mother of this family died November 15, 1897.

E. P. Anderson is independent in the exercise of his suffrage and has held several minor offices in various places where he has lived. He is one of the reliable and highly respected men of his county and is numbered among the enterprising and useful citizens of his part of the state.

JAMES SYLVESTER CAPPS, postmaster of Denmark since 1896, well known in Curry county as a capable school teacher, and prominently identified with farming and business interests in this section, was born in Tennessee, in 1864, a son of William and Susan (Dunning) Capps. His father went to Tennessee in his early years and there became an extensive planter. His death occurred in 1873. He and his wife had six children, all of whom have passed away, with the exception of the subject of this review, and William, who lives in Tennessee.

James S. Capps was nine years of age when his father died. He afterward made his home with an uncle in Tennessee until he was in his sixteenth year, then resided with his sister until he was twenty-one. In the meantime he attended school and engaged in teaching in Tennessee for three years. He was then married and after one year he came to Curry county with his wife, settling in this district in 1888. In the following year, 1889, he homesteaded a place in Curry county. After proving up on this he traded the property for his present place, comprising four hundred and eighty-four acres. Here he operates a dairy. In the meantime he resumed teaching in this county, following the profession until 1904. In December, 1910, he built a store on his farm, in which he placed a stock of merchandise. In 1896 he was appointed postmaster of Denmark and has filled the position to the present time, the postoffice being located in his store building.

In 1887 Mr. Capps was united in marriage to Miss Mary O. Porterfield, a native of Carroll county, Tennessee, and a daughter of James and Nancy (Roland) Porterfield. ROBERT BANKS is one of the well known business men of North Bend, where he is engaged in shipbuilding in company with K. V. Kruse under the firm name of the Kruse & Banks Shipbuilding Company. He was born on Prince Edward Island, Canada, on January 14, 1871, and is a son of Peter and Mary (Morrison) Banks, both of whom were of Scotch and English descent. They removed from their native country and settled in Massachusetts in 1892, where the father was engaged in business as a teamster and was also a professional horse trainer. The mother died in Massachusetts in 1903. To Mr. and Mrs. Peter Banks six children were born, as follows: John, who is deceased; Angus, who is a resident of Medfield, Massachusetts; Margaret, who is the wife of John Whitty and resides on Prince Edward Island; Neal, who has charge of the cabinet-finishing department of the shipbuilding plant of our subject and is living in North Bend, Oregon; Cecelia, the wife of J. A. McDonald, of Roxbury, Massachusetts; and Robert, of this review.

Robert Banks was reared in his parents' home and received his early education in Canada and in the United States. At the age of seventeen he came to this country and spent his first year in the state of Maine, after which he removed to Connecticut, where he worked at shipbuilding for a period of five years and later was engaged in that class of work in Rhode Island and Massachusetts until 1897. In that year he removed to Seattle, Washington, and one year later settled at San Francisco. From 1900 until 1904 he was at Eureka, California. In 1905 he came to Coos county, Oregon, purchased an interest in a shipyard with K. V. Kruse at North Bend and has since continued in the shipbuilding business as senior member of the firm of Kruse & Banks. The firm is the largest of its kind in the county, and builds both small and large ocean-going vessels of all kinds. DONALD FUREY, a well known property owner and business man of Multnomah county, Oregon, was born in this county on February 12, 1868, his parents being Hugh and Kate (McVicker) Furey, both natives of Ireland. They came to America in early life. The father first settled in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, later removed to Ohio and still later to Illinois. During his early business career he sold merchandise in the eastern states. In 1855, however, he decided to try his fortune on the Pacific coast and, crossing the plains, settled at old Hangtown, California, where he was engaged in mining for several years. In 1866 he was married to Miss Kate McVicker, of San Francisco, and in February, 1867, removed to the vicinity of Portland, where he rented a farm in Multnomah county for one year. He then bought twenty acres of land and also took up a government claim of one hundred and fifty acres, seven miles east of Portland, which at the present time is within a short distance of the east boundary of the city. This farm Mr. Furey occupied and cultivated until his death, which occurred May 24, 1886. His widow was called to her final rest on the 23d of March, 1890. At the time of Mr. Furey's death he owned one hundred and forty acres, part of which was in a high state of cultivation. To Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Furey were born two children: Donald, of this review; and Mrs. Mary Gilbert, who lives on a part of the old family homestead.

The youth of Donald Furey was spent in Multnomah county, where he received a common-school education. At an early age, owing to his father's ill health, he took charge of the farm, which he cultivated until his father's death, when he took his place as the head of the family and continued in the cultivation of the farm until his mother's death, when the property was divided between the two heirs. Mr. Furey has since continued to operate his share of the old homestead and at the present time owns thirty-five acres of improved land, with twenty-seven acres in a highly productive state within a short distance of the city limits of Portland, the present valuation of which is about seven hundred dollars per acre.

On the 30th of October, 1902, Mr. Furey was married to Miss Grace E. Clark, whose birth occurred in Idaho in 1873, her parents being Isaac and Emma (Sanders) Clark, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of England. They were married in Rochester, Minnesota, on February 24, 1869, and after living there for several years removed to Idaho, where Mr. Clark was appointed by President Grant as garden and farm instructor of the Indians on the Nez Perce Indian reservation at Lapwai, Idaho. In 1874 he moved to Centerville, Washington, where he took up a government quarter section of prairie land. This land he occupied until 1884, when he moved to the eastern part of Klickitat county, Washington, where he acquired large property interests which he held until his death on January 20, 1910. His wife passed away on the 27th of August, 1903. Their children were seven in number, namely: A. E., who is a resident of Portland, Oregon; Grace E., of Lents, Oregon, the wife of our subject; M. J. and June, both of whom are deceased; and Francis H., James I. and George W., all of whom reside in Roosevelt, Washington. Mrs. Grace E. Furey is a well educated woman and taught school for thirteen years prior to her marriage. She is the mother of two children: Norman A., who was born March 27, 1906; and Lucile K., whose birth occurred on the 17th of July, 1911.

Politically Mr. Furey is a republican but often reserves independence of judgment in regard to public issues. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Rebekahs and is also a member of the Grange at Lents. He is among the many stable business men who have by their efforts made Portland and vicinity what it is. He is well known and respected by a large circle of friends and is highly esteemed in fraternal circles.

JACOB O. STEMMLER, practicing law at Myrtle Point and well known as a representative citizen of Coos county, was born in Sebastian county, Arkansas, March 28, 1874, a son of J. P. and Sarah E. (Howeth) Stemmler. The paternal grandmother of Jacob O. Stemmler was one of the oldest settlers at Fort Smith, Arkansas, and the old home of the family is still standing there. In 1853 J. P. Stemmler first made his way to the coast, going to California, where he lived for fifteen years. He had married and his first two children were born there. In 1867 the family went to Arkansas by way of the Isthmus of Panama and New York city. When they were on shipboard the two children contracted measles and died in the eastern metropolis but the family continued their journey to Arkansas and the children were laid to rest in a cemetery at Little Rock. J. P. Stemmler purchased land in that state and remained there for about fifteen years. He was born on the river Rhine, Germany, March 15, 1834, and his wife's birth occurred in southern Texas, August 28, 1846. In November, 1881, J. P. Stemmler left Arkansas and with his family went to Vancouver, Washington, where he lived until the following spring. He then removed to a farm which he purchased near Dallas, Polk county, Oregon, but after a year sold that property and came to Coos county. Subsequently he purchased a ranch known as the John Shook ranch, near Dora, on the east fork of the Coquille river, about fifteen miles from Myrtle Point. For eight years he engaged in carrying mail over the only route then leading into Coos county, this being known as the old Coos Bay wagon road. At the end of that time he began to cultivate his land, for his sons, who had previously operated the land, began to leave him in order to make homes of their own. The original homestead in Coos county still belongs to the family and manifests by its condition the hard labors, the sacrifices and the efforts of the father, who continued actively in farming until 1908, when he retired. His wife had passed away May 22, 1907. Since that time he has lived in Portland and in Coos county. In his family were nine children: Nelson, deceased; Anna, deceased; Herbert, who is with the L. C.

Smith Typewriter Company at Portland, Oregon; Milton O., a practicing physician at Myrtle Point; Mary Alice, the wife of John B. Luttrell, of Myrtle Point, by whom she has three children; Jacob O.; Garland E. and Laurel A., both deceased; and Susie I., the wife of Benjamin C. Knight, of Arago, Oregon.

When very young Jacob O. Stemmler took charge of the home farm. He acquired his early education in the district schools of Coos county but the necessity of carrying on the farm work made it impossible for him to spend much time in the schoolroom. In 1893 he went to California, where he took up the study of law under Judge C. H. Marks in the San Joaquin valley, there reading for about three years. He afterward returned to the farm, which he operated until 1907, when he went to Myrtle Point and opened a real-estate and insurance office. Here he resumed law reading and in 1910 was admitted to the bar of the state, while on the 22d of May, 1911, he was admitted to practice in the United States courts. He is devoting his attention to the work of the profession and to his real-estate interests and has become the owner of several pieces of good property in addition to his share in a large farm.

Mr. Stemmler was united in marriage to Miss Katherine Argo, a native of Illinois and a daughter of E. G. and Sarah (Parker) Argo, whose family numbered seven children: Florence, who is the wife of Perry Hughes, living retired in Clinton, Illinois, and is the mother of one child; George, a banker of Clinton, Illinois; Charles, also of Clinton, who is married and has three children; John, living in Clinton; Eliza, the wife of John Graham, of Lexington, Oklahoma, by whom she has three children; Mrs. Stemmler; and Minnie, the wife of Horace Flack, of Chicago.

Jacob O. Stemmler votes with the democratic party. He belongs to various fraternal organizations, including the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Woodmen of the World and the Masonic lodge. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias lodge, has passed through all the chairs in the local organization and was its deputy grand chancellor for two years. He enjoys the high regard of his brethren of these fraternities because of his loyalty to their principles, and in the county where he makes his home he has a wide and favorable acquaintance by reason of his lifelong residence in this part of the state and the fact that his life has been well spent.

WILLIAM HILLIS SHORT. The beautiful summer climate brings many tourists to this state during the season and the business of providing for their needs and comforts is becoming more important each year. William Hillis Short, the proprietor of the Lake Side Summer Resort Hotel located on Ten Mile lake, Coos county, Oregon, has reduced this business to a system. He owns and successfully conducts his large hotel and the boathouse in connection with it and his progressive ideas of what constitutes modern inn keeping in its many aspects and his modern and improved methods are rapidly putting the institution with which he is connected in a prosperous and flourishing condition.

William Hillis Short was born in Jacksonville, Jackson county, Oregon, December 14, 1869, and is a son of Draper and Annie E. (Owen) Short. His parents were both natives of Missouri where they married and resided until 1867. In that year they crossed the plains to Oregon with horses and mule teams. They settled first in Jacksonville, Jackson county, where the father operated gold mines for some time. He also established the first paper in that city which is still in existence under the name of the Jacksonville Times. He has spent some years traveling in the west, principally in California, in search of health and died in Jacksonville in 1874. His family remained in that city until 1879 when they removed to Coos county, Oregon, where his widow lives with her children at the age of seventy-six years. Mr. and Mrs. Draper Short were the parents of seven children, four of whom are living: E. H., a resident of Coos county; Mrs. E. G. Flanagan of Marshfield, Oregon; William Hillis, the subject of this review; Draper W., Jr., also a resident of Marshfield; J. O., deceased, who made his home in Marshfield; Grundy M., who died at Myrtle Point, Oregon, leaving a wife and daughter; and Blanch E., who has also passed away and is buried in Marshfield.

William Hillis Short received his early education in the public schools of Jacksonville and at the age of thirteen entered the employ of the Southern Oregon Company at Empire city as a clerk and bookkeeper. He remained in this connection until he went to California. In San Francisco he entered the business college and was graduated in 1891. He then returned to Coos Bay and became bookkeeper for E. G. Flanagan in whose employ he remained for some time. Mr. Short followed the occupation of bookkeeping until 1909 when he removed to Ten Mile lake, bought a piece of property in that district and erected a summer hotel, known as the Lake Side Summer Resort Hotel. He has been active in the operation of this enterprise and a dominating factor in its policy since that time and has met with a gratifying degree of success. He is a firm believer in the future of Oregon and never loses an opportunity to invest in real estate. He owns an interest in the Alder Park addition to Marshfield and expects to realize a large profit from his holdings.

In June, 1902, Mr. Short was united in marriage to Miss Clara M. DeNeven, who was born in 1882, in Madison, Wisconsin. She is a daughter of F. J. and Grace (King) DeNeven, the former a native of Wisconsin and the latter of Chicago, Illinois. Mrs. Short's parents were married in the latter state and moved to Oregon where he became a cashier in a bank and was later auditor for the Coos Bay & Roseburg Railroad. In 1902 he returned to Chicago where he is now auditor for the Chicago branch of the H. J. Heinz Company of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. He is the father of four children: Clara M., the wife of our subject; Virginia, who married Dr. William K. Leake, a practicing physician of New Orleans, Louisiana; Elmer, who resides in Chicago; and Harriett, the wife of George Debold of Chicago, Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. William H. Short are the parents of two children: Blanch Grace, who was born in 1904; and William Hillis, Jr., whose birth occurred in 1907. Mr. Short and his family are devout members of the Episcopal church and are regular attendants.

Politically Mr. Short is not affiliated with any party, preferring to follow his judgment independently and keep his opinions unbiased. He takes an intelligent interest in public affairs but has never been an office seeker. He is a member of the Myrtle Lodge, No. 3, Knights of Pythias, and he has filled several of the chairs in that organization. He also holds membership in Marshfield Lodge, No. 528, F. O. E., and is prominent in the affairs of that organization. His time is principally devoted to the management and direction of his summer hotel. He is doing much for his native state by bringing within its borders hundreds of tourists every summer and by providing for their needs and comforts in so intelligent a way that they anticipate their return with delight.

LOUIS KNAPP is one of the important and well known business men of Curry county where during the course of more than half a century's residence he has become identified with important and representative enterprises. He is conducting a fine hotel in Port Orford which he erected in 1887 and is the owner of two thousand acres of land divided into two ranches and well stocked with high-grade cattle and sheep. This property he is bringing to an excellent state of development and is establishing his large modern dairy upon it. He is well known in business and agricultural circles of his section and is one of the foremost citizens of Curry county. He was born in Baltimore, Maryland, July 4, 1843, a son of John and Rachel Knapp, natives of Germany, who came to America at different times. They married in Baltimore and in that city the father operated a meat-packing plant until 1856 when he sold out his interests and went to California, establishing himself in the butcher business in San Francisco. In this line of occupation he was active and successful until 1858 when he moved to Texas and after a short residence in that state returned to Maryland from which state he enlisted in the Confederate army in 1861. He served only a short time when he was seized with illness and died. In the meantime the mother of our subject had come to Oregon via the Isthmus of Panama and settled in 1859 on the Coquille river near Myrtle Point where she and her son proved up a claim upon which they lived for a short time. They later came to Port Orford and took up land and here the mother died May 13, 1888. Previous to her union with the father of our subject she had married Mr. Bleeckler, and by him had one daughter, Mrs. Catherine Kronenberg, of Coquille.

Louis Knapp was sixteen years of age when he came to Oregon with his mother. He aided in the operation of the farm near Myrtle Point and worked at various occupations after they removed to Port Orford. He eventually took up land near this city and engaged in stock-raising until 1887 when he built a hotel which he has conducted since that time. He divides his attention between the conduct of this enterprise and the management of his two thousand acres of land which forms one of the most important agricultural properties in the county. It is divided into two ranches, both of which are well stocked with cattle and sheep, to the breeding and raising of which Mr. Knapp pays special attention. He is now establishing a model dairy upon one of his farms and keeps a herd of high-grade cows for this purpose. It is modern and sanitary in every respect and forms a valuable addition to his income. Besides his hotel and ranch, Mr. Knapp also owns eighty acres of fine cedar timber on the Sixes river and a number of town lots in Port Orford.

On October 18, 1893, Mr. Knapp was united in marriage to Miss Ella Stagg, a native of Oregon, and a daughter of Nicholas and Adaline (Chaffee) Stagg, both of whom were born in Illinois. They crossed the plains with ox teams in 1849 and settled in Portland where they remained for a number of years. The father died in eastern Oregon but the mother is still living and has reached the age of seventy. She makes her home near Peshastin, Washington. There were seven children born to Mr. and Mrs. Stagg: Sylvester; Sterling; Simeon; Wallace; Ella, the wife of our subject; Ida, the wife of J. J. Lund, of San Diego, California; and Nicholas, of Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Knapp became the parents of four children: Louis, who was born February 13, 1895, and who is attending the Columbia University, from which institution he will graduate in 1913; Orris, whose birth occurred September 8, 1896, who is also attending the university; Lloyd, who was born July 23, 1899, and who is a pupil in the public schools; and Marion, whose birth occurred January 7, 1905, and who passed away March 2, of the same year.

Mr. Knapp gives his allegiance to the republican party but has never been active as an office seeker. For fifty-three years he has been a resident of Oregon and is numbered among the early settlers in the state. His activities have been constantly constructive and have resulted not only in making him prominent but have influenced the growth and development of this section.

FRANK BOWRON is the owner of the Lake Side Inn on Ten Mile lake and is contributing his share to the promotion of the rapidly developing business of taking care of the tourist population of Oregon during the summer season in an intelligent and progressive way. He is also identified with the agricultural prosperity of Coos county where he owns a one hundred and sixty acre ranch and he is active in the management of his wife's business property in the city of Marshfield.

Mr. Bowron was born in Ohio on September 27, 1863, and is a son of John and Mary (Forsythe) Bowron. Mr. Bowron's parents were born in Newcastle upon Tyne and married in that place where the father followed coal mining until he came to America in 1843. He settled first in Maryland and followed his former occupation in that state until he came to Ohio in the spring of 1863. Shortly afterward he moved to California, making the journey by the Isthmus of Panama and settled in Calaveras county where he mined for gold for several years. Eventually his health failed and he was obliged to travel extensively for ten years. At the end of that period he came to Coos Bay, Coos county, Oregon, and retired from active business life. He took up his residence in Marshfield where he remained until his death in 1890. His wife's death had preceded his by nine years and occurred in 1882. Both are buried in the Marshfield cemetery. Ten children were born to this union, of whom six are living: Mrs. Annie Shaw of Oakland, California; Mrs. Hannah Berry of Aberdeen, Washington; Mathew, who resides in Marshfield, Oregon; William, who makes his home on Benson creek, Coos county; Robert of Aberdeen, Washington; Frank, the subject of this sketch; Margaret, who passed away at the age of three years; Margaret, who died in the fifty-sixth year of her age; William, who died in infancy; and John, who passed away at the age of thirty-seven years.

Frank Bowron received his early education in Indiana but laid aside his books when he was eighteen years of age. After his mother's death he worked in the coal mines of Coos county for six years and then in association with his father operated a logging camp for twelve years. At the end of that time he removed to Marshfield and engaged in the saloon business for some time. Subsequently he bought a ranch on Ten Mile lake and was active in its operation and very successful during the eight years of his occupancy. He later retired from his ranch and lived in Marshfield, Oregon, until 1912 when he bought the Lake Side Inn on Ten Mile lake, which he is at present conducting with much success. His property is one of the largest summer hotels in Coos county and its patronage is rapidly increasing each year. It is run along modern and progressive lines of scientific hotel keeping and its appointments and furnishings are noted for their comfort and convenience. Besides his activities in this line Mr. Bowron is also the owner of one hundred and sixty acres of ranch land in Coos county and in association with his wife owns a large amount of property in Bandon. Mr. and Mrs. Bowron also own a one-seventh interest in an eight hundred acre estate and a large amount of stock in the Chandler Hotel of Marshfield. They are also part owners of a modern business block in the same city and are prominently connected with its commercial development.

In 1888 Mr. Bowron was united in marriage in Coos county, to Miss Nellie E. Noble, a native of that district. She is a daughter of W. H. and Mary E. (Rhodes) Noble, of whom more extended mention is made on another page of this work. Mrs. Bowron received her early education in the public schools of Coos county and has always been a resident of this district. She and her husband became the parents of six children: Arthur, who died when he was one year old; Cora, born in 1890, who was educated in Marshfield and is the wife of James Cowen of this place; Maud, born in 1894, who is attending the Marshfield public schools; Jack, whose birth occurred in 1896 and who is attending school; Mary, who passed away at the age of one year; and Ruth, whose birth occurred November 29, 1903.

Mr. Bowron belongs to the Episcopal church and his family are all devoted members of that organization. Politically he is a staunch republican and intelligently interested in public affairs. He is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters and is active in the affairs of the Improved Red Men. He also holds membership in the Fraternal Order of Eagles. He is an intelligent, shrewd and discriminating business man, thoroughly acquainted with the details of inn keeping and he is conducting his summer hotel along progressive and modern lines which have as their chief end the comfort and happiness of the guests of the house.

JAMES WESLEY RIGGS. The record of Marshfield's leading business enterprises would be incomplete were there failure to make reference to the photographic studio of James Wesley Riggs, who for twenty-three years has been a representative of the art in this city, remaining at his present location for two decades. The spirit of advancement has actuated him in all that he does, keeping him in touch with the most progressive and modern methods developed through experimentation, experience and science. He was born in Wheeling, West Virginia, September 5, 1842, a son of William and Lydia Riggs, who were natives of Pennsylvania and of Ohio respectively. The father came across the plains in 1852, the year memorable as the one which brought the greatest number of settlers to the Pacific coast and the year in which their hardships and trials were greatest. Mr. Riggs, however, reached his destination in safety and for seven years was a resident of Douglas county, after which he returned to Ohio and brought his family to Oregon by way of the Isthmus of Panama. He then took up an old donation claim in Douglas county of one hundred and sixty acres and made his home in southeastern Oregon to the time of his death in 1900. His wife still survives at the age of eighty-five years and is a resident of Coquille, Coos county.

James W. Riggs was educated in Ohio and Douglas county, Oregon, having come with his parents to this state in his boyhood days. He assisted his father in the arduous task of developing a new farm, remaining at home until a short time after his marriage. He wedded Miss Josie Margaret Bonebrake, a daughter of Jacob and Levinia Bonebrake. Mrs. Riggs was born in Iowa and in 1862 crossed the plains with her parents, who settled in Jackson county but afterward removed to Douglas county and eventually became residents of Coos county, where both passed away. Mr. and Mrs. Riggs have become the parents of four children but their first born, Armude, died in infancy. The others are: Elsie Elmer, a resident of North Bend, Oregon; H. B., a practicing dentist of Grangeville, Idaho; and Pearl Bonta, who is at home with her parents. Mr. Riggs took up the study of photography about forty years ago and first engaged in business on his own account at Oakland, Douglas county. At various periods he has been located in Jackson county, Oregon, in Walla Walla, Washington, Dayton, Washington, and Lewiston, Idaho, and in 1889 he came to Coos county, opening a studio in Marshfield, where he has since been located. He has a well appointed establishment which he has occupied for twenty years, and the walls are adorned with many fine specimens of the art which are his handiwork. He has made a close study of the effect of light and shade, ever endeavors to secure a natural pose and lifelike characteristics, and his work expresses the latest improvements in photographic processes.

Mr. Riggs' political allegiance is given to the republican party but he has never been an office seeker, supporting, however, measures and movements which he deems essential in good government or which will serve as factors in promoting public progress and improvement. For thirty years he has been a valued member of the Knights of Pythias fraternity and enjoys the high regard of his brethren and of the entire community because of a well spent life.

RUFUS S. MOORE, retired lumberman, active in political circles and prominent by reason of the extent and importance of his real-estate holdings and business affairs is numbered among the valued residents of Klamath Falls and southern Oregon. He is one of the native sons of the state, his birth having occurred near Mount Angel in Marion county, March 7, 1855, his parents being William S. and Margaret Octavia (Meldrum) Moore, natives of Illinois, in whose family were seven children, of whom six are living. Rufus S. Moore, the eldest, was but seven years of age when in 1862 the family became residents of Oregon City and in 1864 they went to Salem, there remaining until their removal to Klamath county in 1874. He supplemented his public-school education by study in Willamette University, and came to Linkville, now Klamath Falls, in December, 1877. His father and brother Charles built a sawmill up the river in 1878 and in 1887 Rufus S. Moore purchased his father's interest. For a long period he was closely identified with lumber and milling interests and in 1906 he and his brother Charles erected a mill at Klamath Falls, which they owned and operated until 1910, when they sold that property. While engaged in the milling business, from 1887 until 1910, the Moore brothers supplied the whole country over a radius of fifty miles with lumber, this being the only mill of the locality for a number of years. They had over half a township of timber land but eventually sold most of the land to the Weyerhaeuser Land & Timber Company. He was also interested in a light and power company, with his brother as partner, which on the 1st of June, 1910, took over the property and business of the Klamath Falls Light & Water Company and the Klamath River Power Company but in 1911 sold out to the California & Oregon Light and Power Company. Mr. Moore still has large property holdings and other investments which rank him among the capitalists of southern Oregon.

In 1900 occurred the marriage of Mr. Moore and Miss Clara A. Shaw, a resident of Portland and a native of England. His lodge relations are with the Elks and the Workmen and his political allegiance has always been given to the republican party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. He was chairman of the county central committee and a member of the state central committee for several years and was a delegate to the republican national convention which met in Philadelphia in 1900. About the only political office that Mr. Moore has ever held was that of county surveyor. He followed surveying for a number of years under the contract system and was United States deputy surveyor, in which connection his duties have taken him to all parts of Oregon. He learned surveying as a boy under an uncle and the skill then acquired proved of value to him in his later years. As he has traveled abroad over the state and seen opportunity for the purchase of property at a low figure he has made extensive investments, and the rise in real-estate values has made him one of the substantial residents of southern Oregon.

CAPTAIN HENRY WADE. The Umpqua and Coquille rivers around Gardiner, Oregon, and for many miles in its vicinity are as open books to Captain Henry Wade, who has been familiar with these streams in their various aspects for many years, as commander of different steamboats plying upon them. His career has been identified with inland navigation during the most of his active life and he has gained prominence and success in this line of activity. He has now retired from river traffic and is giving his time to the management of the comfortable fortune which he acquired through judicious investments during his active work.

Captain Wade was born in Lexington, Indiana, May 6, 1843, and is a son of John and Mary (Stears) Wade, both natives of Hull, England. They came to the United States at an early date and in this country the father followed the sea for many years. He subsequently located in Indiana, settling his family on a farm adjoining the city of Lexington and was successful and prosperous as an agriculturist for many years. He joined the famous band of the Forty-Niners to the California gold fields and prospected in that state for several years. His life was eventful and varied in its aspects. His career included a period of residence in Australia where he mined with indifferent success. Upon his return to this country he brought his family by way of the Isthmus of Panama to Oregon, locating in 1855 in Scottsburg. He remained in this city for three years but in 1858 took up a homestead claim on the Smith river twenty miles above his original place of residence and upon this farm he settled his family and resided until 1869. In that year he removed to the mouth of the Smith river where he farmed successfully until his death in 1871 at the age of sixty-six years. He passed away at the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. H. Butler, of Gardiner, Oregon, and thus closed a career which had been varied and eventful in different parts of the world.

Captain Wade was reared at home and acquired his education in the common schools of Indiana and Oregon. In the spring of 1862 when he was eighteen years of age he ran away from home and went to the Salmon river mining district where he spent one summer working in the mines. He subsequently journeyed to the Columbia river and worked in a sawmill for the Oregon Steam & Navigation Company. He met with an unfortunate accident while employed in this capacity, losing the first finger of his right hand. While he was recovering from his injuries he went to Salem and enrolled as a student in the Willamette Institute, feeling the lack of a thorough education. He pursued his studies for six months and then returned to Gardiner where he worked for a time on the river, thus becoming first identified with inland navigation. He abandoned this field of activity in order to spend three years at ranching and he subsequently resumed it as a sailor aboard the river boat, The Enterprise. This vessel was a product of the local boat yard at Gardiner and some years later while crossing the Umpqua bar burst her steampipes and was completely disabled. In the stock company which was at once formed to rebuild the boat Captain Wade was an influential and prominent factor. His knowledge of navigation had increased by this time to an expert science and it was rewarded by the captaincy of the new vessel which was also named The Enterprise. He commanded the boat for a few months but later resigned his position and purchased the small steamer Argo which he operated on the Umpqua and Smith rivers for four years. He interrupted his career in navigation when he sold his boat and for ten years occupied himself on land. In 1886 he returned to the river traffic as master of The Restless, which vessel he commanded with much success for some time. He subsequently was captain of the Despatch on the Coquille river and later of the Juno plying on the Umpqua which latter vessel he commanded continuously for eleven years. He has now definitely retired from active life and is living in Gardiner. In managing his shipping interests he was always guided by a progressive policy and discriminating business ability. He won success by hard labor and thorough efficiency and attained a foremost place among his fellow citizens. Captain Wade is now giving his entire attention to the management of the estate left by his brother Robert and to the administration of his own affairs.

In 1870 Captain Wade was united in marriage to Miss Lizzie Burchard of Long Prairie, Douglas county, a daughter of Ephraim and Mary J. (Sawyers) Burchard, one of the pioneers in the early settlement of Oregon, who crossed the plains with ox teams from Steubenville, Ohio, to this state in 1853. To Captain and Mrs. Wade have been born four children, three of whom are living: Mary Belle, who resides at home; Myrtle, the wife of A. F. Smith of Gardiner, Oregon; and Marjorie, now Mrs. W. P. Reed of Gardiner, Oregon.

In his political views Captain Wade is a staunch republican and served as justice of the peace and notary public for many years. He did constructively successful work as a member of the school board and to his activities as road supervisor Douglas county owes many of its most efficient public highways. He is a member of Aurora Lodge, No. 59, F. & A. M., and with his wife and daughter Mary Belle, belongs to Martha Chapter, No. 48, Order of the Eastern Star. In this organization Mrs. Wade has served as worthy matron and her daughter as secretary of the chapter. Captain Wade is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church while his wife affiliates with the Episcopalian religion. He is one of the foremost men in Gardiner today, actively and substantially interested in movements looking to the municipal progress, a loyal citizen of Oregon and a firm believer in the future of that state. With him retirement has not meant quiescence but merely a little slackening of a true labor, a rest which was earned sincerely and well, a leisure to devote to the interests of his many friends.

JOHN F. MUNFORD has been for many years one of the most prominent and enterprising agriculturists of Coos county. He has lived in this section for over forty years and his record in business and personal relations has reflected honor and credit on the county where he has so ably assisted in the work of development. He was born in Kentucky October 13, 1844, and is a son of Robert and Sarah (Martin) Munford, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Tennessee. The parents were married in Kentucky and removed some time later to Missouri where the father followed farming until his death. They were the parents of eleven children, seven of whom are still living, Richard, Roland, Joseph, Caleb, John F., Mrs. Robert Seal and Mrs. Louis Brandenburg.

John F. Munford received his education in the public schools of Missouri and California. He remained at home until 1864 when he enlisted for service in the Civil war and remained in the army for nine months. In 1865, after he was mustered out, he returned to Missouri and remained until 1867 when he crossed the plains to California where he engaged in farming for four years. He met with success in that state and continued his residence there until 1871 when he came north to Oregon, settling on the north fork of the Coquille river in Coos county. He later took up a homestead claim on Hall creek of one hundred and sixty acres and began its cultivation. On this farm he now lives. He is counted among the prosperous citizens of the section. He has one of the model properties on the Coquille river and his work is of the practical and systematic kind which always results in success. His farm comprises two hundred acres, some of which is highly improved and developed. He has twenty acres planted in grain and one hundred acres in fine grass and pasture. He has made extensive improvements on the outbuildings, has fenced and tilled his land and installed efficient machinery. In his work of development he has always been actuated not only by regard for his personal prosperity but also by consideration of the growth and welfare of the section in which he resides, and he has gained his reward in the respect and esteem accorded him by his fellow citizens. He has a fine residence on one of the most valuable properties in Myrtle Point and he owns eleven lots in Bandon, Oregon.

In 1878 Mr. Munford was united in marriage to Miss Juliet Benham, a native of Missouri, and a daughter of Peter Benham who came to Coos county in 1875 and resided in this section until his death. Mrs. Munford's mother passed away in 1907. Mr. and Mrs. Benham were the parents of eight children: Juliet; William; Jefferson; Stephen; Eliza J.; Ellen; Elizabeth; and Frances, who passed away at the age of two years. Mrs. Munford received her education in the public schools of California and remained at home until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Munford are the parents of four children, three of whom died in infancy. Their son Robert, who is at home was born in 1886 and received an efficient business education.

John F. Munford is democratic and keeps well informed on current questions and issues, although he never seeks public office. He and his wife affiliate with the Church of the Brethren. Mr. Munford is regarded in Coos county as one of its most representative citizens. By hard work, honesty and business ability he has made his land productive to the highest extent. His earnest and indefatigable labor has been guided always by sound business judgment and supplemented by keen sagacity and he is numbered among the substantial agriculturists of his community.

ROBERT JOHNSTON is living on one hundred and sixty acres of land on the east arm of Ten Mile lake, four and one half miles from Lake Side. He was born in Sheffield, England, September 18, 1844, and is a son of Robert and Mary E. (Roland) Johnston.

J. F. MUNFORD AND FAMILY

The father was born in the north of Ireland and the mother in England. They were married in the latter country and came to America in the '40s, settling in New York city, where the father worked as merchant tailor. Robert Johnston's parents died in New York city. Eleven children were born to them, of whom three are living: Thomas R., a resident of New York; Mary E., who makes her home in the same state; and Robert, the subject of this review. Of the other children in the family, one died in England and the remainder passed away and are buried in New York city.

Robert Johnston received his education in the common school of New York and learned the trade of painting and graining in his youth. He followed this occupation for some time but in 1862 enlisted in Company C, One Hundred Fifty-fifth New York Volunteer Infantry, which was known as Michael Cochran's Irish Brigade. He was eighteen years of age when he entered the army and he served for three years. He was promoted sergeant April 1, 1865, and participated in the battles of Suffolk, Virginia; Spottsylvania; North Anna; Strawberry Plains; Petersburg; Deep Bottom; Ream Station; Boyden Plank Road, and Tolopolamy. He was also present at Appomattox Court House when Lee surrendered. He was wounded in an engagement and now draws a pension. His father and an elder brother were also in the Federal army and both served for three years during the war. When Mr. Johnston was discharged he returned immediately to New York city where he followed the occupation of painting until he met with an accident which prevented him from engaging any longer in this line. He then studied to become an optician and he followed this line of activity for seven years in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. In 1875 he came west and settled in North Dakota where he remained for twenty-one years. During this period he was identified with the drug business for some time and later followed his old trade of painter and grainer. He came to Oregon in 1896 working at his trade in that state until 1911 when he proved up one hundred and sixty acres of land on Ten Mile lake, four and one half miles from Lakeside and upon this he is now living with his family.

In 1896 Mr. Johnston was united in marriage to Miss Emma Bockhorn, a daughter of Abraham and Annie M. Bockhorn. Mrs. Johnston was born in Finland and came to America in 1892. She was one of fourteen children, only three of whom are still living: Gustava, the wife of John Quist, of Massachusetts; Anna L., the wife of A. Anderson of Finland; and Emma, the wife of the subject of this sketch. Mr. and Mrs. Johnston are the parents of one son, Theodore A., who was born at Grants Pass, Oregon, in 1902, and is now attending school in Coos county.

In his political affiliations Mr. Johnston is a firm republican and believes in the principles and policies for which that party stands. He does not take an active part in public affairs and has never sought office for himself. He still follows his occupation of painting and cultivation and improves his land. He has many friends throughout this district who hold him in high esteem as a progressive and enterprising man.

EDGAR C. RAYMOND was prominently identified with railroading in Coos county for many years and has the distinction of having been the first conductor on the first incorporated railroad in the district. He is now the owner of two hundred and forty acres of fine farm land and makes a specialty of dairying and stock-raising. He was born in East Falmouth, Massachusetts, October 13, 1857, and is a son of Newell and Celia (Bradford) Raymond, both natives of Plymouth, Massachusetts. Mrs. Newell Raymond was a descendant of Governor Bradford, who was the first executive of Massachusetts in colonial times and her family have always been residents of that state. Mr. Raymond's mother died when he was a child and his father passed away in Massachusetts in 1881. Mr. and Mrs. Newell Raymond were the parents of six children: Mrs. Leander Baker of Massachusetts; two sons who died in infancy of typhoid fever; Mary, who passed away at the age of twenty years; Joseph, who died when he was eighteen years old; and Edgar C., the subject of this sketch.

Edgar C. Raymond received his education in the public schools of Massachusetts. He laid aside his books at an early age and worked at various occupations until he started as a blacksmith apprentice in New Bradford, Massachusetts, when he was seventeen years old. He remained in this line of activity until he was twenty when he enlisted in the United States army and served for five years. He received his discharge at the Vancouver barracks at Washington and went immediately to British Columbia where he prospected for coal for some years. He then worked upon the construction of a telegraph line in Canada and was active in this connection for a short time. He moved to Arizona but came almost immediately afterward to Coos county, Oregon, locating in this district in 1890. He immediately became identified with railroad work, first as member of a construction gang and later as conductor on the Coos Bay, Roseburg & Eastern line. This was the first incorporated railroad in Coos county and Mr. Raymond was its first conductor. He retired from railroading in 1901 and worked at lumbering until 1905 when he bought the one hundred and sixty acre farm which he now owns. He later took up a homestead claim of eighty acres and added this land to his holdings. He is now engaged in the operation of two hundred and forty acres and makes a specialty of dairying and stock farming. He gives his personal supervision to these branches of activity and carries them on along most modern and scientific lines. The products of his dairy are noted for their cleanliness, purity and the sanitary conditions under which they are made, and they obtain a ready sale on the market. He is the owner of a fine herd of graded cattle and has a number of thoroughbred horses.

In 1895 Mr. Raymond was united in marriage to Miss Lillie Dunham. She was born in Marshfield, Oregon, and is a daughter of Farrel and Margaret Dunham, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Ireland. Mrs. Raymond's parents came to Oregon from Iowa in 1872 and settled at North Bend where her father placed the first machinery in the first sawmill of the district. He followed logging at Coaledo for twenty years and was active in this capacity at the time of his death in 1893. His wife's death had preceded his and occurred in 1891. Mrs. Raymond is one of seven children: Mrs. Joseph Fox of Bandon, Oregon; Robert, who died in 1911, at the age of fifty-one years; Mrs. Lockwood of Santa Rosa, California; Mrs. Bensch of Santiago, California; Mrs. Mills, who makes her home in Sumner, Oregon; Azariah, who is in business in Bandon, Oregon; and Lillie, the wife of our subject. Mr. and Mrs. Raymond are the parents of two children: Blanch I., born January 16, 1896, who is attending school; and Jack L. N., whose birth occurred March 9, 1897, and who is a student in the public schools of Coos county. Mrs. Raymond was the only one of her family who was born in Oregon. She received her early education in the public schools of California and Coos county and has always been a loyal citizen of her native state.

In his political affiliations Mr. Raymond is a consistent democrat but takes little active part in public affairs and has never been an office seeker. His only fraternal relation is with the Order of Red Men. He gives most of his time and attention to his large dairy and his growing stock business and is one of the enterprising and prosperous farmers of the district. He is improving his land in an intelligent way along lines which are scientific and progressive.

CAPTAIN PETER E. OLSEN, of Empire, Coos county, is sole owner of the schooner Rustler, used in Pacific coast trade. He was born in Norway, May 12, 1879, a son of Ingebrigt and Helena Olsen, in whose family were four children: Wilhelmina, the wife of John Peterson, of Empire, and the mother of five children; Mary and Annie, who live with their mother in Empire; and Peter E. The father died in Norway in 1898 and Captain Olsen afterward came to America alone, settling at Empire, where he engaged in shipbuilding, having previously learned the ship carpenter's trade at North Bend, Oregon. He followed that business for five years, at the end of which time he built a gasoline launch which he named the Elmore, and operated on Coos bay in the passenger service for four years. He then sold his boat to the Unipqua Packing Company after which he built a larger launch and engaged in deep sea fishing and in selling the products of his efforts between Coos bay and Rogue river. He continued in that work for three years and is still the owner of the boat although it is not now in service. He afterward had a still larger boat which he built and named the Coaster, but eventually he gave up fishing and engaged in coast trade successfully.

He operated that boat for a year and a half, when he sold out to the Klamath River Can Company and became the owner of a large gasoline schooner of thirty-nine gross tons, which he put in service January 18, 1912, in the Pacific coast trade. This boat is equipped with the latest improved machinery and uses two fifty horse power engines of recent design. It is also equipped with sails. This schooner, called the Rustler, is winning for Captain Olsen a liberal share of the public patronage in the shipping interests of the district.

Captain Olsen is liberal in his political views, not holding strictly to the principles of any party but voting as his judgment dictates. His religious faith is that of the Lutheran church and he is well known in Empire, where he has made many friends.

JAMES WILLIAM JUDD is a native son of Oregon and has always been interested in its commercial and agricultural development. He is the owner of a teaming business in Lakeside. He was born in Coos county, Oregon, November 7, 1878, and is a son of J. W. and Sarah (Dobkins) Judd, the former a native of Boston, Massachusetts, and the latter of Iowa. In their family were six children: John W., who is operating a farm in the state of Washington; Rena, the wife of Edgar Travis, of San Francisco, California; James William; Eva, the wife of Harry Scott, of Seattle, Washington; Alice, who married Edward Archer, of Portland, Oregon; and Myrtle, now Mrs. Ned Galloway, of North Inlet, Oregon.

James W. Judd received his education in the public schools of his native state and was reared at home until he was fourteen years of age. His father was in the timber business in Coos county since he came to Oregon at the age of thirty-three and his son followed the same line of activity for seventeen years. He then came to Lakeside, where he entered the teaming and freight business, operating between North Slough and Lakeside. Mr. Judd built the residence in which he resides at the time when he moved from Marshfield to Lakeside and it is a most pleasant and hospitable home. He has built up by strict integrity and activity along business lines an enterprise which is doing much to promote the commercial prosperity of Lakeside.

In 1904, Mr. Judd was united in marriage in Douglas county to Miss Edith Noel, a native of Oregon and a daughter of John and Emma (Morehead) Noel, in whose family were ten children namely: Glen, of Gardiner, Oregon; Ray, of Marshfield; Ralph, of Gardiner; Edith, the wife of our subject; Eugenia, who is a resident of Marshfield; Margie, who married Harry Graham, of Gardiner; Lloyd, who makes his home with his parents in Coquille; Ethel and James, deceased; and Leigh, who is manager of the Elmira Lumber Company, of Elmira, Oregon. Mrs. Judd received her education in the Oregon public schools and remained at home until the time of her marriage. She and her husband became the parents of three children: Owen, who was born January 25, 1905, and who is attending school; Everett, born June 22, 1906; and Eugene, whose birth occurred on March 7, 1908.

Politically Mr. Judd is a firm republican and always votes the party ticket. He is intelligently interested in public affairs and eager to promote the welfare of his native section but he has never sought office for himself. He is known in Lakeside as one of its most enterprising and representative citizens. He is at the head of a rapidly growing and developing business founded upon his qualities of strict honesty and well tested integrity. The progress of any section of the country depends upon the individual success of its citizens. Mr. Judd realizes this fact and welcomes his personal prosperity as an addition to the development and upbuilding of his native state.

HON. ROBERT A. EMMITT. As road supervisor of Klamath county the Hon. Robert A. Emmitt is giving the major portion of his time to the establishment of good roads and the improvement of the already established highways of this section of the state. He has filled a number of other public offices and as a legislator has aided in forming the laws of Oregon. He has also figured prominently in agricultural circles as one of the extensive land owners of this part of the state and the course which he has pursued in every relation of life is one which commends him to the confidence and high regard of his fellow townsmen.

Mr. Emmitt was born in Logan county, Illinois, May 29, 1850, and from the age of two years has resided continuously in Oregon. He humorously puts it that he brought his parents with him at that time to this state. He is descended from Irish ancestry and is a son of John and Caroline (Thompson) Emmitt. His grandfather, Samuel Emmitt, died in Pulaski, Illinois, in 1869. The father, John Emmitt, was born on the Susquehanna river, in Northumberland county, Pennsylvania, October 20, 1825, and when fourteen years of age accompanied his parents on their removal to Illinois, the family home being established in Logan county, where John Emmitt attended the district schools. He continued to live in that state until the spring of 1852, when he started with his family for the far west, his equipment for the six months' journey consisting of a wagon, five yoke of oxen, two cows and a horse. He arrived in Coles valley, Douglas county, where he secured a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres on which he built a one-room log cabin fourteen by sixteen feet. In that dwelling on a bank of the Umpqua river the family resided for fourteen years and in 1866 Mr. Emmitt built a more modern residence. He continued to cultivate the old home farm until his death, December 16, 1901. The place is situated five miles northwest of Roseburg, in Coles valley, and has since been occupied by his widow and the other members of the family. Prominent in politics, John Emmitt served as a member of the state legislature from 1884 to 1888, being an advocate of the republican party's principles from the time of the Civil war. In Illinois, on the 17th of September, 1847, he wedded Caroline Thompson, who was born in Tennessee, April 29, 1827. She went to Illinois with her parents in 1831, settling in Logan county, where she remained until she accompanied her husband to the west. From time to time Mr. Emmitt added to his original holdings until he was the owner of eight hundred and sixty acres at the time of his demise and in addition to general farming he carried on stock-raising, meeting with gratifying success.

The earliest recollections of the Hon. Robert A. Emmitt have to do with the old donation claim in Douglas county. He was eleven years of age when he first saw a clock, his father returning home from the city with the timepiece. When it struck the hour at night Mr. Emmitt got up to see what the trouble was. His parents resided in Oregon for two years before they had a cook stove in their house, as it was necessary to ship all freight around Cape Horn. They were here twenty-five years before the father owned a spring wagon and there was no farming machinery during the early period of their residence in this state. The pioneer must depend largely upon his own labor for everything and for one winter the Emmitt family had only such flour as was ground in a coffee mill.

As a boy Robert A. Emmitt attended the country school in Coles valley, displaying such aptitude that he was soon able to teach school. He also learned and followed the carpenter's trade. On coming to Klamath county on June 4, 1875, he settled ten miles southwest of Klamath Falls, where he pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres of land, cultivating that tract until 1880, when he sold it and bought other property. To this he added as his financial resources increased and soon was the owner of eleven hundred and sixty acres in three different tracts. All of the improvements upon the land were made under his personal direction and he placed more than five hundred acres under cultivation while the remainder was utilized as a range for his cattle. He continued to cultivate and improve this land until September, 1907, when he leased his holdings near Keno to renters and came to Klamath Falls. He had surveying contracts with the United States government and spent about four months in that work. In 1906 he was defeated for the office of county judge on the republican ticket. In February, 1908, he was appointed postmaster of Klamath Falls and took charge of the office on the 9th of March, resigning after three years and seven months' service. Since January, 1912, he has filled the office of road supervisor of Klamath county by appointment of the county court and now gives the greater part of his time to the supervision of the roads, although he still has ranching interests which he supervises to some extent. While he was postmaster he was ordered to Washington, D. C., to take an examination preparatory to the establishment of the first postal savings bank in Oregon. Klamath Falls was designated as the location for the first postal bank and Mr. Emmitt became the first postal banker in the state. His trip to Washington was the only time that he returned to the east since coming to this section when two years of age.

On the 6th of May, 1875, Mr. Emmitt married Flora Leslie, who was born in Fountain county, Indiana, October 27, 1858, a daughter of Josiah and Mary (Lebo) Leslie, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania respectively, the former of Scotch-Dutch and the latter of Pennsylvania Dutch lineage. The father died in Indiana in 1866 and four years later the mother, accompanied by her two children, came to Oregon, settling near Roseburg. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Emmitt: Kitty Jane, deceased; Georgia, the wife of Henry Gedding, of Siskiyou county, California; Cora Mabel, deceased; Ivy, the wife of K. D. North, of Klamath Falls; and Charmion, the wife of W. P. Johnson, also of Klamath Falls. There are five grandchildren, Mrs. Gedding having two sons and a daughter and Mrs. North and Mrs. Johnson each having a son.

Mr. Emmitt is a consistent republican and for more than two decades held the office of justice of the peace in the Plevna precinct of Klamath county. From 1886 until 1888 he was county commissioner and in 1898 he was made a member of the state board of equalization from the first judicial district. Further honor came to him through his party when in 1900 he was elected to the state legislature from the district comprising Klamath, Lake, Crook, and Wasco counties. On the expiration of his term he was reelected and during his service in the legislature stanchly supported various measures and movements which he deemed beneficial to the community at large. Fraternally he is connected with Linkville Lodge, No. 110, A. O. U. W. His interest centers in this district and he is an enthusiastic champion of Oregon, of which he has practically been a lifelong resident. That state has given him good opportunities but in return he has given it loyalty and devotion manifest in practical efforts for the upbuilding of the district in which he lives.

P. J. LINDBERG is prominent and well known in the general contracting business in Port Orford and is also an active factor in various other important enterprises. He has built during the thirty years of his residence in Oregon, almost all of the business and residence structures in Port Orford, as well as many farm buildings in this and various other parts of Curry county. He was born in Sweden, September 25, 1851, a son of Eric Adolph and Johanna Lindberg, both of whom died in their native country. He is practically self-educated, having received very limited school advantages in Sweden. When he was fourteen years of age he began to earn his own living, following the sea as a sailor for a number of years and visiting over half the countries of the world. He spent three years in Chile, South America, and long periods at various ports, finally landing in San Francisco, California. For one year he sailed out of this port and then learned the carpentering, bridge-building and plumbing trades, which he followed in California for a number of years. In 1882 he came to Port Orford where he has since followed the contracting and building business, founding a distinct and well deserved success upon efficiency, industry, and well directed labor. He is the only contractor in the village and erected most of the principal buildings. He has also been active in the construction of barns, and other farm buildings and has extended his field of labor throughout all of Curry county. He is also engaged in the undertaking business in Port Orford. His home is a fine modern residence equipped with all conveniences and of pleasing design.

In August, 1881, Mr. Lindberg was united in marriage to Mrs. Frances Lane, the widow of William B. Lane, and a daughter of Samuel Barrett. She was born in Kentucky and her parents died in that state when she was still a child. Mrs. Lindberg then went to Missouri with an uncle and in that state her first marriage occurred. She and her husband moved to Kansas where they lived for eight years, going to California in 1877, where Mr. Lane died. Mrs. Lindberg had six children by her first union: James T., of Port Orford; Thomas B., who resides in Coquille; Anna, deceased; Ruth, who died in infancy; and Bertha and Grace, who have also passed away. Mr. and Mrs. Lindberg are the parents of two children: Edward A., born in 1885, who resides in Marshfield; and John Harvey, who has passed away. The family belong to the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Lindberg gives his allegiance to the republican party and is intelligently active in public affairs. He has served as county commissioner, road supervisor, and was also for some time constable of Port Orford. He is interested in education and was a member of the local board of education. He manifests his progressive tendencies in the affairs of the Commercial Club of Port Orford, of which he is a member. However, he gives most of his time and attention to the conduct of his large contracting business and has founded a well deserved success upon long experience, efficiency and conservative standards. His methods are modern and progressive, and his business has expanded rapidly, making him one of the successful men of the town.

CHARLES P. COLEMAN is a firm believer in the cultivation of the soil by a scientific system and is bringing to the operation of his fine farm and dairy in Coos county the most modern and progressive agricultural ideas. He was born in Mills county, Iowa, in July, 1876, and is a son of William J. and Mary Elizabeth (Meadows) Coleman. His father was born in Ohio and the mother in Iowa. They were married in the latter state, where the mother died when her son was three years of age. A few years later the father went to Colorado, where he prospected for gold for six years. At the end of that period he went to New Mexico and engaged in the same line of occupation in that state and in Mexico. He finally settled on a stock ranch on the Rio Grande river and carried on an extensive business in the buying and selling of horses and cattle until the big drought. He then moved to Indian Territory where he leased land from the Indians which he cultivated in cotton and grain for two years. In 1896 he settled in Monmouth, Oregon, later removing to British Columbia. Here he remained only one year, when he came to Coos county and bought land near Ten Mile lake, where he lived until 1906. In that year he removed to Reno, Nevada, where he died in 1907. He and his wife were the parents of three children: Elizabeth, the wife of D. H. Hallock, owner of a twenty-thousand acre ranch in Oklahoma; Lucy A., now Mrs. J. S. Roberts, who lives near her father's home in Coos county; and Charles P., of this review.

Charles P. Coleman after completing his preliminary education entered Tabor College, at Tabor, Iowa, and after spending some time in that institution attended the Iowa State Agricultural College at Ames, where he spent two years gaining a scientific and accurate knowledge of professional farming. After finishing his education he joined his father in business and remained associated with him until 1907. In that year William Coleman died and his son took charge of the homestead in Coos county, in which he had previously owned a half interest. Recently he retired from active life, although he still lives on his farm. He gave special attention to the operation of his dairy and was a professional cheese and butter maker. He still takes an interest in this branch of agriculture and owns six hundred acres of land recognized throughout the county as the best individual dairy ranch in the district. He is also extensively interested in other properties in Coos county and is a firm believer in the future agricultural development of the state of Oregon. In 1908 he leased most of his land with the exception of his dairy farm and is now living retired. He spent three years in Wyoming but returned to Coos county, where he resides five miles south of Lakeside, on Ten Mile lake.

In 1905 Mr. Coleman was united in marriage to Miss Mabel Morgan, a native of Kansas, who came to Oregon in her childhood with her parents, who are still living on Coos river in Coos county. They are the parents of seven children: Mrs. McGee, of Lakeside; Arthur, who resides in Seattle, Washington; Norris, who is married and lives in Coos county; Agnes, of Lane county; Lucy, of Benton county, Oregon; and Gertrude and Willie, both of whom are living at home. Mrs. Coleman received her education in Coos county and after its completion she taught school in that district for two years. Mr. and Mrs. Coleman are the parents of one son, William Norris.

Mr. Coleman gives his allegiance generally to the republican party, but reserves the right to vote for the men whom he considers best fitted for the position. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in Sheridan, Wyoming, but beyond this has no fraternal affiliation. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, to which faith his wife and family also give allegiance. He has been largely successful in the conduct of his farm and his model dairy and his prosperity is based upon his thorough efficiency, his industry and ability along agricultural lines. His success has demonstrated the fact that in the cultivation of the soil, as in other business or professional lines, efficiency and system are sure roads to prosperity.

ALEXANDER CARLSON is one of the substantial and enterprising farmers who are doing much to promote the development of Coos county and the state of Oregon. He owns one of the most productive farms on North lake, five miles above Lakeside. Here he carries on general farming, operates a dairy and does an extensive business in live stock. He was born in Finland, on January 1, 1863, and is a son of Jacob and Annie Carlson. His parents came to America in 1872 and settled first in Michigan, where they remained for ten years. At the end of that time they moved to Colorado and one year later, January 9, 1883, they came to Oregon and settled in Marshfield, Coos county. They subsequently moved to Ten Mile lake, where the father took up a homestead claim and improved and operated it until his death, in 1905. His wife's death preceded his by some years. They were the parents of four children, all of whom are now deceased with the exception of the subject of this sketch. Charles and Mary, the latter the deceased wife of Andrew Kino, both died at Marshfield, while one child died in infancy in Finland.

Alexander Carlson received his education in the public schools of his native country and came to America on June 12, 1880. He settled first in Weber county, Michigan, where he worked in the woods for two years, at the end of which time he went with his parents to Colorado, where he worked upon a railroad for one year. In 1884 he came to Coos Bay, Oregon, and settled in Marshfield, where he lived until 1886. In that year he located at Ten Mile lake and lived in that section with his parents until 1905, when his father died. He then inherited one hundred and sixty acres of land which his father had taken up as a homestead claim. He added to this by purchase one hundred and sixty acres adjoining and he now operates one of the finest farms on the lake. He specializes in dairying and stock-raising and does an extensive business in these two directions. He also owns a tract of land on Haynes inlet.

In 1902 Alexander Carlson was united in marriage to Miss Belle Krick. She was born in Oregon and is a daughter of Fred and Mary Krick, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Missouri. The father of Mrs. Carlson came to Oregon some time before his marriage and was among the early pioneers of this state. The mother crossed the plains with ox teams when she was a child of only three years, and married Fred Krick in eastern Oregon, where Mr.

Krick proved up a homestead claim upon which they lived for six years. At the end of that time they moved to California where they remained for thirteen years, coming to Coos county in 1901. They settled first at Empire city but later bought land on Ten Mile lake where they are still living and actively operating one hundred and twenty acres. They became the parents of nine children, William, Belle, John, Charles, Flora, Thadeus, Maud, Ella and Gertrude. Mrs. Carlson received her early education in the public schools of California and came to Oregon some years ago. She and her husband are the parents of five children: Mabel, whose birth occurred on March 3, 1904; Gertrude, who was born on the 23d of June, 1906; Mary, born April 12, 1908; Fred, born January 3, 1910; and Norman, whose birth occurred on the 26th of September, 1911. Mr. Carlson gives his political allegiance to the republican party but has never sought public office although he takes an intelligent interest in local affairs. He and his family are affiliated with the Lutheran church and are active in religious circles. Mr. Carlson gives his entire time and attention to farming, dairying and stock-raising and has been successful in these lines. Agriculture is the principal industry of Coos county and men like Mr. Carlson who carry it on intelligently and scientifically are contributing their full share to the development and growth of this section.

JONATHAN PAUL DUCKWORTH, for twenty-seven years a resident of Lake county, Oregon, has for the past twelve years been engaged in the livery and transfer business in Lakeview conducting the Lakeview Transfer Company. He was born a Bentonville, Benton county, Arkansas, July 27, 1862, and is a son of Jonathan Paul and Nancy (Alexander) Duckworth, the former a native of Missouri and the latter of Kentucky. The parents were married in Arkansas and settled on a farm, where they reared their family, residing on one place for more than forty years. Both died in the town of Rogers, Arkansas, not far from Bentonville, the mother in 1906, in her seventy-seventh year, and the father in 1908, in his eighty-seventh year. They had seven sons and two daughters: Pulaski Alexander and Marten, both deceased; Joseph W., of San Antonio, Texas; Mary Frances, the wife of T. B. Vernon, of Lake county; G. A., of Washington; G. W. who is in business with his brother; Jonathan P.; A. J., who died leaving a widow; and Nancy Sarah Dorcas, who died at the age of twenty years.

Jonathan Paul Duckworth spent his youthful days in his native state and had the usual experiences of farm life. On leaving home, when twenty-three years of age he came to Oregon, making Lake county his destination. Since that time he has resided in or near Lakeview, working as a farm laborer for several years, although for the past twelve years he has been engaged in the livery and transfer business in connection with two partners under the firm style of the Lakeview Transfer Company. They have a liberal patronage and are well prepared to take care of a large amount of business.

Mr. Duckworth was married, in 1903, to Miss Mabel Young, a native of San Francisco, who died June 8, 1905, leaving a daughter, Mabel Olive, who was but twelve days old at the time of the mother's death. Mr. Duckworth was for many years a democrat but since McKinley was presidential candidate has supported the republican party. He holds membership in the Baptist church and belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World and the Foresters. He displays many sterling traits of character, and is widely and favorably known throughout the county where he has so long made his home.

C. E. A. SIESTREEN. The life of C. E. A. Siestreen has been an eventful one. He has traveled extensively in South America and in the United States. He has mined and prospected in all the principal gold districts of western North America and is now engaged in the operation of one of the most modernly equipped dairy farms in Oregon. He is a native of Sweden, having been born in Stockholm, in 1841. He is a son of Peter and Matilda Siestreen, both of whom lived and died in their native country. His father followed the sea as captain during the greater part of his life and had been practically on all the waters of the world. He and his wife were the parents of six children, all of whom are living in Sweden with the exception of our subject. They are Edwin G., Awina, Laonilda, Laonaid, Charles of this review, and Almgard.

Charles E. A. Siestreen received his early education in the public schools of his native country. He left Sweden in 1859 and went to South America where he remained for two years. In 1861 he came to the United States and settled in California where he stayed only one year. At the end of that time he went to Nevada and mined in the gold fields of that state for two years. He then went to Boise City, Idaho, where he remained for one summer, prospecting for gold and then came to Umatilla Landing, Baker City, and operated a freight wagon between that point and Boise City. In 1865 he came to Ogden, Oregon, where he again mined for gold a short time. He later located at White Pine, Nevada, and went from there to Arizona, prospecting for gold. From Arizona he went to California and then to Jackson county, Oregon, where he spent one winter in the mines of that section. In 1873 he came to Coos county and settled in Marshfield. He remained in that city only a short time and in the same year came to Ten Mile lake where he engaged in farming for seven years. At the end of that period he proved up a preemption claim on Big creek near North lake, which he improved and operated for some time. He later added a one hundred and twenty acre homestead to his holdings and at the present time is the owner of two hundred and eighty-eight acres in Coos county. He is engaged in general farming and makes a specialty of dairying, his products being noted throughout the county for their cleanliness and for the wholesome and sanitary conditions under which they are made.

In 1879, Mr. Siestreen was united in marriage to Miss Jane E. Jordan, a daughter of James and Jane (Stevens) Jordan, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Coos county, Oregon. Her father came to Oregon in 1853 and settled at Applegate where he lived for several years, following the occupation of mining. When he came to Coos county he settled in Jordan's Cove, to which place he gave his name. He took up a one hundred and sixty acre homestead claim on the north side of North Inlet and here he lived for many years, engaging in farming, trapping and hunting. He sold his holdings eventually and moved to Empire, Oregon, and was one of the founders and organizers of that city. He continued in business for some years but subsequently moved to Ten Mile lake and made his home with his son-in-law, Mr. Siestreen, until his death in December, 1902. His wife had died twelve years prior in 1890. Mr. and Mrs. Jordan were the parents of the following children: Mrs. Susie Waters, who is living in North Inlet; Mrs. Annie Sprague, deceased, who lived in Haines Inlet; George, who has also passed away; Mrs. Jane Siestreen of Big Creek, Coos county, Oregon; and James and Mrs. Minerva Douglas, both of whom are deceased. Mrs. Charles E. A. Siestreen is a native of Oregon and received her education in that state. She and her husband have become the parents of eight children, four of whom are deceased: Edwin, who was born in 1884, and who resides in Seattle, Washington; Jane, living at home; James, born in 1891, also at home; Eugene, born in 1893, who occupies the position of government timekeeper, in Siuslaw, Oregon; and Edwina, Mary, Ida and Leonelde, all of whom are deceased.

Mr. Siestreen professes the Lutheran faith and his family are all members of the same church. He is a democrat and has served for many years as member of the school board. His history is intimately connected with the development of Coos county and his family were the first white people to settle on Ten Mile lake. Mr. Siestreen is a valuable asset to the future of the great agricultural region with which he is identified and he has influenced the development of Coos county by promoting his individual success.

WILLIAM HENRY NOBLE who died in Coos county in 1910, was a native son of Oregon, having served his state during the Indian wars and devoted his life to founding its agricultural greatness. His father was a native of Missouri who, in 1844, came to Oregon in the days of its pioneer settlement and the mother came to Coos county with her people when she was a child. She was the first white woman to come to Coos bay, and her daughter, Emma, our subject's sister, was the first white child born in that place. Mr. Noble was a resident of Oregon all his life. He received his early education in the public schools of that state and when he had grown to manhood bought a large tract of land near Marshfield and Empire. He later sold this property with the exception of a private residence in the town of Marshfield which is still owned by his family. At a later period in his life he purchased a farm seven miles from Lakeside on Hopkins creek and improved and developed this land until his death. He was constantly adding to his holdings and gradually accumulated six hundred and forty acres of the finest farm land in the district where he carried on general farming. In his younger days he was extensively engaged in the occupation of logging but abandoned this line of activity to make a specialty of his dairy farm.

Mr. Noble was united in marriage at Jacksonville, Oregon, to Miss Mary E. Rhodes, whose parents both died in the eastern states of America. Mr. Noble and his wife were the parents of seven children: H. C. and Richard, both of whom reside in Marshfield, Oregon; Mrs. Bowron, who makes her home in Lakeside, Oregon; C. A., of Marshfield; W. F. of Portland; C. C., who is now operating his father's homestead claim; and J. G., who lives at home. Mr. Noble was a staunch democrat and a firm believer in the principles and policies of that party. He served as sheriff of Coos county for several terms and was constable for many years. He was active in the Indian wars and received a pension for his services in this respect. At the time of his death he was one of the most prosperous and progressive farmers of his district. His career is a fair example of the value of individual success in the development of any section and Coos county is many times the richer by his life and many times the poorer by his death.

JONAS A. KING is one of the proprietors of the Kentucky Saloon at the corner of Water and Bullard streets in Lakeview. He was born in Elk county, Pennsylvania, June 4, 1865, and is a son of Daniel and Elwinia (Humm) King, who were also natives of the Keystone state. Removing westward to Shelby county, Illinois, when their son Jonas was but a year and a half old they took up their permanent abode there. The father was both a carpenter and farmer. In his family were nine children and with the exception of a sister who died three years ago all are yet living.

Jonas A. King, who was the sixth in order of birth, remained with his parents until 1886. Having then attained majority, he went to Kansas, where he worked as a farm hand, but the same year he returned to Illinois. In February, 1888, he arrived in Oregon and has since made his home at Lakeview. He was a stage driver here for eight years, making trips from Lakeview to surrounding points, and in 1896, he entered the saloon business in partnership with Peter Post, with whom he has since been connected. They own and conduct the Kentucky Saloon at the corner of Water and Bullard streets. They erected a two-story brick building there after the fire of May 22, 1900, and have since occupied it. In addition to this property Mr. King owns six orchard tracts in Modoc county, California, and has three timber claims, while with Mr. Post he owns some town lots.

On the 16th of May, 1908, Mr. King was married to Mrs. Emma Reading. He has a wide acquaintance in the town where he has now resided for almost a quarter of a century. The local organization of the Fraternal Order of Eagles claims him as a valued member and the democratic party receives his political support. The only public office that he has ever held was that of constable in 1896, for otherwise he has preferred to concentrate his attention upon his business affairs.

CAPTAIN ROYAL A. BENSELL, ex-mayor of Newport and twice elected member of the state legislature of Oregon, is one of the most prominent men in Lincoln county and has for many years taken an active and helpful part in promoting the general welfare of this region. He was born at Cassville, Wisconsin, June 4, 1838, a son of Dr. Charles Edward and Juliet (Cottle) Benschell. The grandfather of our subject on the paternal side was also Charles Edward Benschell. He was born in England and was educated as a physician and surgeon. In early manhood he came to America and located at Philadelphia. He was a surgeon in the Revolutionary war and the services which he rendered the wounded after the battle of Germantown were especially appreciated by the friends of the patriot cause. He died in Germantown at the age of seventy-eight years. The father of our subject was born in Germantown, July 4, 1800, and received his preliminary education in the public schools of that place. At the age of sixteen he made a trip to the Pacific coast on a whaling vessel but returned to his native state and entered the University of Pennsylvania, from which he was graduated, after pursuing a course of three years, with the degree of M. D. He began practice in New Jersey but soon afterward went to St. Louis, Missouri. In 1821 he went up the Missouri river with Captain Ashley's second expedition into the Rocky Mountains. The latter was a noted leader among the fur traders, and Dr. Benschell had charge of a wounded man who was left at the trading post at Council Bluffs. He continued his journey to Fort Laramie in the Rocky mountains, a distance of several hundred miles, and returned to St. Louis in the fall of the same year. Subsequently he became connected with lead mining at Galena, Illinois, and for ten years was interested in mining in Illinois and Iowa. He served his country in the Black Hawk war and received as remuneration a hundred and sixty acre land warrant. In this campaign he was quartermaster sergeant and for a time had charge of supplies at old Fort Dearborn and this was the only time that he was in Chicago, Illinois. He was married to Juliet Cottle in Cassville, Wisconsin, and afterward took up a government land claim in Clayton county, Iowa, where he engaged in farming and also practiced medicine. In 1854 he crossed the plains to California with his family and spent seven years as a miner in Amador county. He came to Benton county, Oregon, in 1867 and finally settled in Lincoln county, where he served for four years as government physician on the Siletz Indian reservation under Ben Simpson, agent for the United States government. Dr. Benschell was reared in the belief of the Society of Friends and his early training had a marked effect in shaping his character. He died at Summit, Oregon, in 1879. The mother of our subject was born in Connecticut and removed with her parents to St. Charles, Missouri, when she was a child. She died at Clayton, Iowa, in 1849, leaving three children: Royal A., of this review; Marguerite, who is the wife of W. H. H. Rich, of Toledo, Oregon; and Mary, who married Joseph Skaggs, a farmer of Summit, Oregon.

Captain Benschell possessed very limited advantages of school training, his total attendance including only six months at a log schoolhouse. His education has, therefore been gained mainly by contact with the world. He lost his mother at the age of eleven years and two years later entered the office of the Clayton County (Iowa) Herald as printer's devil. This position he held for three years. In 1854 he came west with his father and engaged in placer mining in Amador county, California. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted as a private in Company D, Fourth United States Cavalry, and served for thirty-seven months. The company was placed on duty in Oregon at Fort Yamhill, Fort Hoskins and also at the Siletz blockhouse but saw no real fighting. In 1865, after having received his honorable discharge, Mr. Benschell was appointed farmer on the Siletz Indian reservation and discharged the duties of this office for three years. He associated with two others in building a sawmill at Millville, Oregon, in 1866 and shipped lumber to San Francisco. He began building a schooner on Yaquina bay in 1870, which he finished in 1873, and followed ship carpentering until 1875. He was then appointed inspector of customs at Yaquina Port, the responsibilities of which office he discharged to the satisfaction of the officials at Washington for four years, and in 1884 was appointed collector of customs at Yaquina, and served four years. In 1880 he became identified with the Oregon Pacific Railroad Company and for twelve years had charge of the right-of-way and other interests of that company in this section. He was for a number of years owner of a steamboat which plied between Newport and Elk City and for seventeen years past he has held a captain's commission.

In 1868 Captain Benschell was married at Millville to Mrs. Mary Sturdevant, who was born in Illinois. She is a daughter of Hiram H. Hall, a native of Connecticut. The father came to Oregon in 1877 and took up his home with Captain and Mrs. Benschell. He died at the advanced age of ninety-one years and six months. Captain Bensell is an active member of the Episcopal church and is greatly interested in Sunday-school work, being at the present time superintendent of the Sunday school. He is deeply interested in education and has most efficiently filled the office of school director. Politically he affiliates with the republican party. He has served as member of both county and state central committees and has been very prominent in promoting the interests of his party. He was elected to the state legislature from Benton county in 1868 and 1876. In 1882 he was a candidate for the state senate from Benton and Polk counties but was defeated by the narrow margin of twenty-three votes. He has at various times occupied a chair in the town council and was for three years mayor of Newport. Under his administration the electric light and city water plants were installed and movements were started which have assisted materially in the development of the town. He has now arrived at the age of seventy-four and for nearly fifty years he has been identified with the growth of Oregon. He is still in possession of a gratifying measure of health and strength and it is the earnest wish of a large circle of associates and friends that he may for many years be spared to enjoy the fruits of his wisely directed labors.

DAVID BOWMAN is a native of Oregon and since he was fifteen years of age has been engaged in various representative industries in different parts of the state. After many years spent in farming, blacksmithing and carpentering, and in many other occupations, he came in 1910 to Curry county, where he opened the first cheese factory in the section and is now operating it successfully, having built up in two years a modern business of considerable importance. He was born in Polk county, in 1870, a son of William and Mary J. (Ball) Bowman, natives of Missouri and pioneer settlers in Oregon. His father crossed the plains when he was eleven years of age and being an orphan, made his home with a Mr. O'Neal until his marriage. The mother of our subject came to Oregon when she was but three years old and settled with her parents on a donation land claim in Polk county in Ballston, a town named after her father. Mr. and Mrs. Bowman were married in Polk county and lived in that section until she died. In their family were eight children: William B., of Polk county; Abbie, the wife of Glen Zumwalt, of Polk county; Babe, who died in infancy; David, of this review; Drusilla, who married T. S. Coffee, of Dallas; Bernice, the widow of Bert Brooks, of Dallas, who resides with her mother; Rodney, of Ballston; and Thomas, who resides with his mother in Dallas.

David Bowman attended the district schools of Polk county until he was fifteen years of age and since that time has been earning his own livelihood, working at various occupations. Until he was thirty he followed the blacksmithing and carpentering trades in eastern Oregon and then purchased four hundred acres of land in the same section which he improved and operated until 1910 and which he still owns. In the latter year he returned to Polk county and after a short stay came to Curry county where he built the first cheese factory in this section of the state. In partnership with his brother-in-law, Henry Miller, he operates this enterprise and also a similar one at Parkersburg, and is known as one of the progressive and enterprising business men of the county.

In 1903 Mr. Bowman was united in marriage to Miss Lillian Berry, a native of Polk county, and a daughter of George and Mary (Huffman) Berry. In their family were eight children: William, a resident of Florence; Nannie, the wife of Elias Connor, of Portland; Ettie, deceased; Frank, of Sheridan; George, who resides in Portland; Lillian, the wife of our subject; Clara, who married Willard Sloan, of Dallas; and Ethel, the wife of Henry Miller, of Parkersburg. Mr. and Mrs. Bowman have one daughter, La Verne, who was born October 28, 1908.

Mr. Bowman gives his allegiance to the socialist party and for three years was postmaster of Clem. He is well known in the affairs of the Woodmen of the World, but his principal interest outside of his business affairs is given to school work. He believes that children should be properly and practically trained and given the advantage of scientific equipment. As school director and school clerk he has applied a knowledge gained by study and thought and has influenced in no slight way local conditions and systems. His activities are all of the same broadly useful kind and make him one of the most worthy native sons of Oregon.

W. R. BEATTIE is the owner of one of the finest ranches in Coos county where he carries on general farming and specializes in dairying and stock-raising. He was born in Pennsylvania on the 16th of March, 1868, and is a son of William and Margaret (Crawford) Beattie, the former a native of England and the latter of Scotland. The father came to America in 1836 and a few years later returned to his native country. In Scotland he married and returned with his wife to America. They settled in Pennsylvania where William Beattie worked in the coal mines for several years. In 1870 they removed to California and a few years later came to Oregon, settling on the Coos river in Coos county. Here Mr. Beattie bought land and operated a farm and dairy until his death, in 1903. His wife is still living on the homestead at the age of seventy-two years. They were the parents of eight children: Mrs. Church, who resides on the north inlet; W. R., of this review; J. C., who makes his home on the Coos river; Mrs. Daniel Quinn, of Seattle, Washington; Mrs. J. W. Ross, of San Francisco, California; Annie, who is deceased; and two children who died in infancy.

W. R. Beattie received his education in Coos county and completed it at the age of fifteen years. He worked as a farm laborer for a number of years and by much saving and strict economy was enabled to purchase eighty acres of land on the Coos river. Later he took up a homestead claim on Ten Mile lake and operated these one hundred and sixty acres for a number of years. He has continuously added to his original purchase until now he has under cultivation six hundred acres of the finest farm land in the district. He makes a specialty of dairying and stock-raising and manages his enterprise in a progressive and scientific way. The products of his dairy are noted for their cleanliness and purity and for the sanitary conditions under which they are manufactured. He owns a fine herd of graded cattle and does an extensive business along this line.

Mr. Beattie gives his political allegiance to the republican party and takes an intelligent interest in public affairs although he has never sought office. He gives his entire time and attention to the management and direction of his dairy and stock farm. He began in a humble way and has built up from a small beginning one of the finest ranches in Coos county, and is recognized in the district as one of its leading and most prosperous citizens.

SAMUEL ANDERSON PATTISON, whose activities in the real-estate field are factors in individual success and public progress at Central Point and in other sections of Jackson and Marion counties has been a resident of Oregon since 1898. He is widely known in journalistic and real-estate circles. He was born November 17, 1860, in Ohio county, Virginia. His father, Thomas Pattison, a native of the same county, was born in 1802, and was a son of John Pattison, who was one of the early settlers of the Old Dominion. The latter was a minister of the Dissenter church and also engaged in teaching. Thomas Pattison wedded Jane Humphrey, whose birth occurred in Ohio county, Virginia, in 1824. She was a daughter of Robert Humphrey and a granddaughter of John Humphrey who was the first actual settler of that part of the state.

Samuel Anderson Pattison is indebted to the common-school system of his native county and also of Washington county, Pennsylvania, for the early educational privileges which he enjoyed. The necessity of aiding in the work of the home farm forced him to put aside his text-books when he was sixteen years of age and to agricultural pursuits he devoted his attention until 1885. In that year he removed westward and in 1889 spent his time in Nebraska, Kansas, and Indian Territory. Through the two succeeding years he was a resident of Wyoming and in 1891 he went to Idaho where he remained for about seven years. During that period he engaged in newspaper publication at Emmett, Idaho. In 1898 he removed to Condon, Oregon, where he published the Condon Globe until 1906. In that year he went to Central Point and there established the Herald. In addition to looking after this publication he engaged in town site and town addition work. He owns real estate at Central Point, Condon and in Marion county, Oregon.

On the 7th of February, 1894, at Boise, Idaho, Mr. Pattison was married to Miss Mattie B. Stone, a daughter of George F. and Mary C. (Owen) Stone, the former a native of Vermont and the latter of Pennsylvania. Both crossed the plains in 1861 and Mr. Stone was one of the first party of miners in the Boise basin after the discovery of gold there. Mr. and Mrs. Pattison have three children, S. Everett, Catherine and Dorothy.

In politics Mr. Pattison is independent, voting as his judgment dictates and supporting those candidates whom he deems best qualified for the office to which they aspire. The only public position he ever held was deputy sheriff of Canyon county, Idaho, from 1894 until 1897. He is a noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which office he filled for a number of terms at Condon as well as at Central Point. In 1902, 1903, 1907 and 1908 he was a delegate to the Grand Lodge. He was consul commander of the Woodmen of the World and is a member of Medford Lodge, No. 1168, B. P. O. E. He has firm faith in the northwest and its future, recognizing the fact that the tide of emigration is steadily flowing westward and this, combined with its rich resources, must eventually become a well settled and well developed country. He is doing his full share in promoting its progress and his position upon any vital question is never an equivocal one.

PAUL RAUBACK was born in Germany and after attaining his majority traveled around the world, becoming acquainted with the opportunities and advantages of other countries. He then came to America and traveled extensively through its western states and is now settled down to the quiet life of a prosperous farmer in Coos county. He was born on May 27, 1870, and is a son of Herman and Charlotte (Bockelman) Rauback, both natives of Germany, where the father died in 1902. His mother is still living in her native country at the age of eighty-five years. Herman Rauback was a wagon manufacturer and followed this line of occupation until his death. He and his wife were the parents of eleven children, five of whom are still living: Paul, of this review; Herman and Otto, now residents of New York; and Johanna and Anna, who are residents of Germany.

Paul Rauback received his early education in the public schools of his native country. He left Germany in 1897 and traveled around the world. He stopped in London for a short time and then came to Canada. He arrived in the United States a short time afterward, traveling through New York, and visited nearly all of the states in the Union, settling in San Francisco in 1900. He spent many years in his travels and gained a broad-minded and liberal outlook upon life. He took an intelligent interest in the conditions which surrounded him in the different countries and especially in those pertaining to agricultural development. He lived in San Francisco for ten years and was interested in the Comstock gold mines which he operated until he came to Oregon and in which he still has large holdings. In 1910 he left California and came to Oregon, where he settled on Ten Mile lake, Coos county. He purchased two hundred and eighty acres of land a mile and a quarter from Lakeside and this he is improving and operating at the present time. He has a firm faith in the future of the state of Oregon and is keenly interested in its rising land values. He also owns property in San Francisco and Nevada and has extensive holdings in Alameda, California. He is one of the prosperous men in Coos county where his broad intelligence and high ability have gained him many friends.

In 1909 Mr. Rauback was united in marriage to Miss Gertrude Ewald. She was born in Berlin, Germany, and came to America with her parents when she was a child. She lived in California until her marriage and came with her husband to Coos county in 1910. She is one of four daughters born to her parents, who, with the exception of Mrs. Rauback, are residents of California. Mr. Rauback gives general allegiance to the republican party and votes that ticket on national issues but prefers to follow his judgment independently in local affairs. He takes an intelligent interest in politics but has never sought public office. He gives his attention entirely to the cultivation of his land in Coos county and to the management of his property in other western states. He brings to his occupation a broad knowledge of soil cultivation, and a liberal mind and a power of concentrating industry which are assets as valuable in farming as in business or the professions.

THOMAS MARTIN is a pioneer miller of Klamath county, where he located in 1884, building the first gristmill within the borders of the county. He now makes his home in Klamath Falls and is still engaged in the milling business, having one of the most thoroughly equipped plants of its kind in southern Oregon. He was born in Dorsetshire, England, September 19, 1845, and is the son of Edward and Mary (Crocker) Martin, who spent their entire lives in England, the father following the butcher's trade.

In their family were ten children, of whom Thomas Martin was ninth in order of birth and the only one who came to the United States. When thirteen years of age he was apprenticed to the millers' trade and was actively connected with that business until seven years ago, when he retired. He is still, however, the owner of the milling property. It was in 1873 that he crossed the Atlantic to the new world and became a resident of Illinois. Five years later he resumed his westward journey and came to the Rogue river valley in Oregon. Up to this time he had always been in the employ of others but here he rented a mill and began business on his own account. In 1884 he came to Klamath county and built the first gristmill within its borders. This was an old burr mill with a capacity of twenty-five barrels in twenty-four hours. He enlarged the property, adding many modern improvements, and five years ago built the present mill at Klamath Falls, which is now operated by his sons, Mr. Martin remaining, however, financially interested in the enterprise. It is a modern roller process mill with a capacity of one hundred and twenty-five barrels. He and his sons also have a mill at Merrill, which he erected in 1894, and which has a capacity of seventy-five barrels. He also owns a ranch of nine hundred and twenty acres in the Spring Lake country.

On July 22, 1872, Mr. Martin was united in marriage to Miss Thirza Puttmon, who was born in Somersetshire, England, in 1848. Eight months after their marriage they sailed for the United States and in this country all their children were born, namely: Mary Ann, who died in 1890, at the age of sixteen years; Samuel Edward, who operates the mill and store at Merrill; Charles J., who conducts the mill at Klamath Falls; Sarah Elizabeth, the wife of Carey Rumsley, of Klamath Falls; John Henry, who is associated with his brother Edward in milling and mercantile interests at Merrill; Nellie, who died at the age of one year; and Maude, the wife of E. L. Hosley, of Merrill.

In politics Mr. Martin has ever been a stalwart republican since becoming a naturalized citizen of the United States. He has never sought nor desired office, preferring to concentrate his energies upon his individual interests. He belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen and has the high esteem of his brethren of that organization. When he came to Klamath county he was in limited financial circumstances and he did practically two men's work in order to gain a start. No grain was grown here when he built his mill and only a few hundred bushels the first year, but this fast became a great grain producing center and milling operations have long been successfully conducted in this district.

CHARLES C. LOW, for some years a member of the police force of Klamath Falls, was born in Des Moines, Iowa, May 19, 1854, his parents being Levi B. and Jane (Cleveland) Low, who were natives of Indiana, born, reared and married in the vicinity of Elkhart. They removed to Iowa about 1850 and in 1864 they crossed the plains to Oregon, residing in the Willamette valley until 1870. The mother of Charles C. Low had died in Iowa when her son was but three years of age, after which the father married again. In 1870 he took up his abode in Jackson county, Oregon, where he died in 1881 at the age of fifty-nine years. He had been a life long farmer. There were two children born of the father's first marriage, of whom Charles C. is the elder, and there were six children by the second marriage.

Charles C. Low spent his youthful days under the parental roof until he reached the age of sixteen, when he started out to make his own way in the world, securing employment in Jackson county. In 1886 he came to Klamath Falls and has since made his home in this district. He followed farming and stock-raising until 1906, when he took up his abode in Klamath Falls in order to provide his children with the excellent educational privileges offered by the public schools here. For two years he conducted a livery stable and feed barn and has since been a member of the police force. At the present writing he has the nomination for sheriff of Klamath county on the republican ticket, which is equivalent to an election. At one time he owned three ranches but disposed of this land and now owns only his home, which is a new residence at No. 421 Oak street.

On the 1st of January, 1883, Mr. Low was united in marriage to Miss Lena Lavenberg, who was born in Phoenix, Jackson county, Oregon, November 19, 1863, and is a daughter of Daniel and Elizabeth Lavenberg. The father was a native of Pennsylvania and of German descent. The mother was born in Germany. At an early day they crossed the plains.

Mr. and Mrs. Low became parents of four children, Royal J., Lloyd L., Elsie E. and Josie M. Mr. Low belongs to the Knights of Pythias fraternity and in politics has been a lifelong republican, giving earnest support to the party because of his firm belief in its principles. He is a self-made man who from the age of sixteen has depended entirely upon his own resources and has gradually worked his way upward. He now occupies a creditable position as one of the representative citizens of Klamath Falls.

GEORGE RITER is one of the well known business men of Roseburg, where he is engaged in the real-estate and insurance business, representing The West Coast Life Insurance Company of San Francisco, of which he is district manager.

He was born in Pike county, Illinois, March 31, 1856, and is a son of Casper and Christine (Shear) Riter, both of whom were natives of Ohio. They celebrated their marriage in Illinois, to which state they had moved with their parents when they were children. The father was by occupation a farmer and, after his wedding, first located in Pike county, Illinois, and in 1871, removed to Kansas, from which state he, some time later, went to Utah, and from there to Denver, Colorado, where he continued to live until the time of his death, which occurred in 1907, at the age of seventy-nine years.

George Riter was reared in his parents' home, and received his elementary education in the public schools of Illinois and Kansas. At the age of twenty years, he went to the San Juan country, Colorado. After a time, he went north where he engaged in mining at Black Hawk, and Central City, Colorado, where he took up the work of amalgamation and milling, at the old Winnebago mine, under Professor John Terry. After completing the required course, he was graduated as amalgamater of gold ores. Immediately after his graduation, he went to Silver Cliff, where born silver had just been found. After remaining at Silver Cliff one winter, he went to the scene of the Leadville excitement, remaining there a year. Here he engaged in mining on Friar hill and then returned to the San Juan country, where he engaged in mining in the vicinity of Silverton. He then went to New Mexico and Arizona, and then returned to Colorado.

During all the time spent in his travels as above cited, he was engaged in the mining business. He crossed Arizona on a mule, with pack animals, twice before there was a railroad across the territory. From Colorado he went to the Wood river country in Idaho, and was there engaged in mining nearly three years, after which he went to the Okanagon district in Okanagon county, Washington, and later to British Columbia, where he was identified with the mining industry for ten years. He then went to the Thunder Mountain district in Idaho, during the gold excitement at that place, being among the first to go over the Dixie trail, and making a second trip over the Warren trail, after which he went into the Bitter Root mountains, in what was known in early days as the Moose City district. He then went to Grants Pass, for a few weeks, and from there to Goldfield, Nevada, where he remained for some time in the mining districts of that state.

After leaving Nevada he went to California, and was identified in mining in Enyo and Mono counties and still has an interest in the Blind Spring Hill Company, which is the owner of the oldest mining property in California. He is also the owner of mining interests in British Columbia and Idaho, and is a stockholder in the Oregon & Washington Underwriters, an incorporated insurance agency of Portland, Oregon. On leaving Enyo county, California, he purchased a team and started overland for Roseburg, Oregon, traveling along the Owens river for a short distance, and crossing the desert and Pummie plains, to Mono lake, at the foot of the Sierra Nevada mountains. Thence he proceeded to Bridgeport and after a few days' travel crossed over into Nevada by way of Garden City, Carson City, Steamboat Springs, Reno, Lovelocks, and old Winnemuckka, Willow Point, Quinn River bridge, and crossed the Nevada-Oregon boundary line at Denio.

Many times on the trip, he was obliged to load the wagon with water and feed for his horses for a two-day trip through the hot sands and Alkali flats which lie between the watering places. From Denio, Oregon, he continued to Andrews, West Fall, Malheur, and Baker City, Oregon, where he rested his team for a few days and again started out for Roseburg, by way of Sumpter, Austin, Prairie City, and down the John Day river, traveling the old military road to Mitchell, and across the Blue mountains, and down Mill creek to Prineville, in Crook county, where he again rested his faithful team for two days.

After leaving Prineville, he continued his journey by way of the Chutes river, and the town of the Sisters, and crossed the lava-capped range of the Cascades, near the snow-capped mountain of the Three Sisters, in a blinding snow storm. Then he descended the lava-covered steep slope to Lost creek, and then to the beautiful McKenzie, and on down the river to Eugene and turned toward Roseburg, by way of Cottage Grove, London Springs, and the Shoestring route to Oakland, and on to beautiful Roseburg. In the month of October, 1908, having traveled over two thousand miles by team, he arrived in that city.

Mr. Riter was united in marriage, August 22, 1909, to Mrs. Marie Seldon Flint. Mr. Riter gives his political allegiance to the republican party, and is just the same age as that great organization. He has never been at any time an office seeker. He was made a Mason at Silverton, Colorado, in 1883, in San Juan Lodge, No. 33. Afterward he affiliated with Laurel Lodge, No. 13, of Lewiston, Idaho, and he and his wife are members of the Roseburg Chapter, No. 8, of the Order of Eastern Star. Mr. and Mrs. Riter are members of the Presbyterian church.

LOUIS STONE is one of the well known and successful farmers of Coos county, operating a highly improved ranch which he owns, located off Catching inlet where he is engaged in dairy farming. He was born in Finland, March 30, 1858, and is a son of Ludveg H. and Anna Magdelina (Kiviniemi) Stone. They were the parents of six children, namely: Louis, the subject of this review; Emil, who is a resident of Coos county, Oregon; Hilma, deceased; Sogfred, a resident of Coos county, Oregon; Edward, of San Francisco, California; and Adelia, of Finland.

Louis Stone was reared at home and received his education in his native country. At the age of twenty years he emigrated to America, settling first in Michigan where he was engaged in logging for two years and then removed to Coos bay and settled in Marshfield, being employed for about thirteen years in logging in Coos county. He later engaged in the livery business in Marshfield and in that business continued for a period of about six years. In 1896 he purchased one hundred and thirty-three acres of improved land and upon that property he subsequently established his home. He has since been engaged in the development and cultivation of his ranch which is one of the most valuable properties of its kind in this part of the state.

Mr. Stone was united in marriage, December 29, 1878, to Miss Johannab Holm, a daughter of Henry Hakalax and Marie J. (Abrahams) Holm. They became the parents of eleven children, five of whom are living, namely: Fred, who is a resident of Marshfield, Oregon, and the father of five children; Sophia, a resident of Finland; Johannab, the wife of the subject of this review; Sanfred, who is a resident of California and the father of two children; and Selma, who resides in Finland. Mr. and Mrs. Stone are the parents of four children: Inga, born August 24, 1889, who became the wife of Andrew Lowland, a native of Finland; Linda, born September 20, 1891, residing at home; Sere, whose birth occurred May 6, 1893, also at home; and Ludveg, who was born January 12, 1899, and is attending school.

Mr. Stone is affiliated with the republican party, but has never sought political preferment. He is a member of Suomi Lodge, No. 1, and also of the Grange. He is one of the thrifty and successful farmers in this part of the state, and a man who is at all times interested in the welfare of the community in which he lives.

OSCAR L. CARTER, who since 1906 has been a resident of Klamath Falls and is now manager of the Klamath Valley Warehouse & Forwarding Company, was born in Clay county, Missouri, August 25, 1860. The same year his parents, E. J. and Isabelle (Baxter) Carter, crossed the plains to Dayton, Oregon. The father was a native of Texas and the mother of Ohio and they were married in Missouri. From 1862 the remainder of their lives was passed in Dayton, Oregon. Mr. Carter always following farming. His death occurred when he was fifty-six years of age but his wife is still a resident of Dayton. In politics he was a staunch republican, joining the party on its organization. He was a staunch advocate of the Union cause during the Civil war and he had two brothers who were soldiers in the Confederate army. In the family were seven sons and a daughter, all of whom are yet living with the exception of two.

Oscar L. Carter, the eldest of the family, resided in Dayton, Oregon, until seventeen years of age, when in 1877 he went to eastern Oregon, where he spent five or six years as a cowboy. He was for fifteen years a resident of Lassen county, California, where he worked as a laborer part of the time and also served as under sheriff of the county for four years. He spent five years on a stock ranch in Nevada, this being a large ranch which he conducted for another party. In the Willamette valley he also engaged in farming until he came to Klamath Falls in 1906. He served for two years here as chief of police and since then has been manager of the Klamath Valley Warehouse & Forwarding Company, under which name he is conducting a growing and profitable enterprise. He is also the owner of one hundred and seventy-five acres constituting a timber claim in Klamath county and he likewise owns a good home at Fourth and Washington streets.

In 1887 Mr. Carter was united in marriage to Miss Rosa V. Haley, a native of Lassen county, California, and a daughter of Nelson Haley. The three children of this marriage are Ralph L.; Myrtle, who is the wife of Arthur Livermore, of Klamath Falls; and James Hardin. Mr. Carter belongs to the Masonic fraternity, having taken the degrees of the lodge, chapter and Eastern Star. He is also connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, while his political faith is that of the republican party. He is numbered among the energetic, enterprising men who are making history in the west and whose labors are no less a source of public progress and prosperity than of individual success.

WILLIAM WILSHIRE BRISTOW was born in Kentucky, July 18, 1826, but when quite young accompanied his parents to Illinois, whence he came across the plains to Oregon, in 1848, settling at Pleasant Hill, Lane county. Like all other young men in Oregon, at that time, he went with the rush to the California gold mines in the spring of 1849, but returning from there in the same fall he commenced the improvement of a land claim. In the spring of 1850 or 1851 he taught the first school at Pleasant Hill, and in fact the first school in the county. In 1852-3 he was the justice of the peace for the precinct, and for a number of years was postmaster at Pleasant Hill. In 1857 he was elected a delegate to the constitutional convention which met at Salem, August 3, 1857, for the purpose of framing a state constitution, and participated in the deliberations of that body until its close. In June, 1858, he was elected one of the first state senators from Lane county, and was a prominent factor in all the scenes incident to setting in motion the machinery of the new state government. In 1872 he was reelected to the same position, serving with credit to himself and constituency through the two sessions of 1872 and 1874. In 1865 he sold his farm at Pleasant Hill, and going to Eugene City, bought a one-third interest in the mercantile business of Bristow & Company, in which he continued until his death, which occurred at his home in that town, December 8, 1874.

In early life Mr. Bristow married Miss Elizabeth Coffey, who with her parents crossed the great American plains from Kentucky in 1846, the family home being established at Aumsville, Marion county, Oregon. Here Mr. and Mrs. Bristow were married and unto them were born four children of whom only one, Darwin Bristow, survives. For his second wife William Bristow married Miss Martha McCall, whose home was near Pleasant Hill, and unto them was born one daughter, Lizzie, who is now the wife of John H. Stevens, congressman at Washington, D. C., from Texas.

Mr. Bristow was a charter member and past master of Eugene Lodge, No. 11, F. & A. M. An important event in his life work was the part which he took as a leading factor in the establishment of the University of Oregon, at Eugene. Both he and his wife were members of the Christian church, the first organization of that denomination having been founded by Elijah Bristow at Pleasant Hill, Oregon.

CHARLES F. STONE, whose position as a leading lawyer of southern Oregon is established by his large law practice at Klamath Falls, represents the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as local attorney and is also legal adviser for various other well known corporations. He was born in Covington, Virginia, November 3, 1863, and is a son of J. P. and Lucinda (Sizer) Stone. His parents were born and reared in Alleghany county, Virginia, and always remained residents of that locality, where the father followed the blacksmith's trade and thereby provided for the support of his family of three children, namely: Charles F.; Joseph J., who is a musician and resides in Alleghany county, Virginia; and Ellen, who has passed away.

Charles F. Stone pursued his early education in the public and high schools of Covington, Virginia, remaining at the place of his birth until sixteen years of age. He entered the University of Minnesota in 1886 and in due time was graduated therefrom, winning the degrees of Bachelor of Art and Bachelor of Law in 1890. He was then admitted to practice upon examination before the supreme court in Minnesota on the 6th of June of that year; was admitted to practice by the supreme court of Idaho, November 19, 1891; by the supreme court of Washington in October, 1896; the supreme court of California, January 22, 1906; and the supreme court of Oregon, May 29, 1906, after having come to this state on the 26th of January preceding. All through the years he has engaged largely in practice, following the profession in Mullan, Idaho, from the 5th of April, 1891, until the 6th of June, 1896; at Olympia, Washington, from October, 1896, until February, 1897; at Eureka, California, from July, 1905, until January, 1906; and at Klamath Falls, Oregon, since the last mentioned date. He was associated here with H. L. Benson under the firm style of Benson & Stone until January 1, 1911, since which time he has been in partnership with J. J. Barrett under the firm style of Stone & Barrett. He ranks today with the foremost lawyers of southern Oregon, enjoying an extensive law practice which includes a large amount of corporation work. In addition he is one of the directors of the Home Building & Loan Association of Klamath Falls and he has proven his belief in the district and its future by making large investments in property here.

Mr. Stone has traveled very extensively. He spent three years beyond the Arctic circle after being admitted to the bar, remaining there from 1896 to 1899, with the exception of a visit to Oregon in 1898, when he was married. He was engaged in hunting big game, hoping that the outdoor life and its experiences would enable him to overcome a certain nervous condition. He also spent five years in China, Japan and the Philippines with General Funston as a war correspondent, being there at the time when General Aguinaldo was captured on the Isle of Luzon. Later he was with the Japanese in Manchuria from November, 1904, until March, 1905, as war correspondent for the Associated Press and was writer for various papers and periodicals. He has resided at different times in Shanghai and in Hong Kong and is one of the comparatively few travelers who have visited the island of Formosa. Broad, varied and interesting have been his experiences, bringing to him that knowledge and culture which only travel affords.

On the 22d of November, 1898, Mr. Stone was united in marriage to Miss Ida Skelton, who is a graduate of the medical college of Portland of the class of 1896, subsequent to which time she practiced in Pendleton, Oregon, Walla Walla, Washington, and Klamath Falls but retired from active connection with the profession about three years ago. Mr. Stone votes with the democratic party and has served as a member of the state fish and game commission, having been appointed by Governor West, May 5, 1911. He is not a political leader, however, in the sense of office seeking, preferring to concentrate his time and energies upon his professional duties and other interests rather than seek in the whirl of office the rewards of party fealty. His life history, if written in detail, would rival many a tale of fiction. Tramping over the mountains and through the valleys of the far north, studying with interest the yellow and brown races of the far east, coming in contact with the life of the Oriental as few people do, Mr. Stone has a mind richly stored with interesting reminiscences of his sojourns in foreign lands, of the habits, customs and manners of the people among whom he has lived. From this store he can call at will for an illustration or an anecdote to enforce a point or illustrate a principle, and association with him has come to mean expansion and elevation.

HENRY SENGSTACKEN is one of the largest landed proprietors of Coos county. He was born in Hanover, Germany, June 12, 1851, and is a son of Henry and Mary Sengstacken. His parents were natives of Germany who were united in marriage in the land of their birth, where they continued to reside until the time of their death. They followed farming as an occupation during their entire lives. To Mr. and Mrs. Sengstacken nine children were born. Five of them emigrated to the United States, of whom one has since died in this country. The remaining four are still living in Germany.

Henry Sengstacken was reared at home and educated in the public schools of Germany. At the age of fifteen he emigrated to the United States and upon reaching this country established his first residence in the city of San Francisco, where he pursued a course of studies in Heald's Business College and from that institution was graduated. He continued to live in the city of the Golden Gate until 1874. He then removed to Coos county, Oregon, and established himself in the general merchandising business at Empire city and Marshfield. To the development and care of this establishment he gave his constant attention for a period of thirty years. In addition to his general merchandising business he was also the agent of the Wells Fargo Express Company at Marshfield for twenty-five years, during which time he had the agency of various lines of ocean steamship companies. In 1905 Mr. Sengstacken disposed of his business and engaged in the abstract, insurance and real-estate business, maintaining his principal office at Marshfield, this state. He is one of the largest individual holders of real estate in Coos county, his total holdings aggregating more than six thousand acres, nearly all of which is located in Coos county. In addition to these holdings he also owns valuable city property in Marshfield, North Bend and Empire, as well as Coquille and Bandon. He maintains a branch office of his abstract business at Coquille.

Mr. Sengstacken has been twice married, his first wife being Miss Lillie Lockhart, to whom he was united in wedlock in 1884. She was a native of this state, and to this marriage two children were born: Henry Alton, now of Marshfield; and Mabel Genevieve, at home. The mother of these children died in 1892 and in 1894 Mr. Sengstacken chose as his second partner in life Miss Agnes Lockhart, a sister of his former wife. To this union one daughter has been born, Doris L., her birth having occurred in October, 1900. She is at home with her parents and in attendance at the public school.

Mr. Sengstacken is affiliated with the republican party and has served as mayor of the city of Marshfield. He is also an active member of the port commission of Coos Bay, having served as secretary for the last three years. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows having filled all the chairs in both lodge and encampment, and with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He and his family are members of the Episcopal church of Marshfield. Henry Sengstacken is one of the most widely known men in Coos county. His long years of business life as one of the leading merchants of that county served to bring him in contact with the representative men of this part of the state of Oregon and since his retirement from the merchandising business his investments and abstract and real-estate interests have brought him in contact with the large corporations and business institutions dealing more especially in agricultural and timber lands. In all his business transactions he is known among his associates as a man of absolute integrity in business matters and is regarded as being one of the safest and most successful among the more prominent owners and large operators in real-estate and lumber interests. He is to be counted among the representative men as one always ready to give his influence and means to the support and advancement of every interest of a public nature having for its object the welfare of the people throughout his state and county.

WILLIAM FRANCIS BOWRON and his brother came in 1877 from California by way of Coos bay to Ten Mile lake, Oregon. The journey was fraught with hardships and dangers of pioneer travel. He and his brother took up a homestead claim on unsurveyed land near Ten Mile lake, cleared the timber, built roads through the surrounding districts, organized and developed the country and cultivated the soil. Mr. Bowron is now the owner of eight hundred acres of highly improved farm land and has a model dairy of fifty cows. His success has developed with the progress of Coos county and has at all times been intimately connected with it. He was born in Lawrence county, Ohio, December 22, 1855. His parents were John and Mary (Forsythe) Bowron, natives of England, who came to America in 1840 and settled in Maryland. They removed to Ohio in 1854 and remained in that state until 1861, when they took up their residence in California. In 1867 they went to Kentucky and after a short period in that state removed to Indiana. The father was a coal miner in Ohio and worked in the gold fields in California. He accumulated a comfortable fortune from his mining enterprises and in 1874 came to Coos bay, Oregon, from Indiana. He settled at Eastport and in 1877 took up a homestead claim on Ten Mile lake. In his family were ten children: Annie, the wife of Matthew Shaw, of California; Hannah, the widow of Richard Berry, of Washington; Matthew J., whose home is in Henryville, Oregon; William and Maggie, both of whom are deceased; Maggie, deceased, who became the wife of H. C. Brainard, of Coos Bay; William Francis; Robert, residing in the state of Washington; John, deceased; and Frank, who is engaged in the hotel business at Lakeside, Oregon.

William F. Bowron was reared at home and remained with his parents until he was eighteen years of age. At that time he left home with his brother, M. J. Bowron, and went to California, where he worked upon a farm for one year. He then journeyed to Coos bay and settled in Marshfield, where he worked along mercantile lines and was engaged in mining until 1877, when he came to Ten Mile lake and in association with his brother took up a homestead on unsurveyed land in that section. He was accompanied on his journey from California to Ten Mile lake by his brother who had been associated with him from the beginning of his active career. They made the journey over elk trails through the wildest sections of the west. In order to get the survey of their land the brothers were obliged to deposit money in token of good faith. When they had proved up their homestead claim they cleared the land, grubbed up the stumps and gradually brought their holdings under cultivation. They built their own homes upon their farms and constructed roads through the outlying districts. They were true upbuilders and organizers, anxious for the development of a new country and eager to promote its progress. All the roads around Ten Mile lake were the result of their skill and energy. Mr. Bowron built his residence with his own hands and had little or no outside help in its construction. When he first arrived at Ten Mile lake there was not a house nor a road within many miles of his homestead and there was scarcely a foot of land which could be traveled over without cutting down the timber with axes. It was a year and a half before a horse and wagon could be gotten upon Mr. Bowron's holdings and all the conditions of life were primitive in the extreme. He still lives on his original homestead and has constantly added to his holdings by purchase until he is now the owner of eight hundred acres of arable land, nearly all of which is used as pasture. Nothing is raised upon his acres except the vegetables needed for his own use. He does a large dairy business and keeps fifty head of Holstein and Jersey cows. He is a progressive and scientific man always interested in new improvements in farm machinery and takes an active part in promoting agriculture along modern lines. His dairy is noted for its cleanliness and its sanitary equipment and its products find a ready sale upon the market.

In 1880 Mr. Bowron was united in marriage to Miss Nancy R. McCulloch, a native of Oregon and a daughter of A. D. and Eudora (Jones) McCulloch, both of whom were born in Scotland. Mrs. Bowron is one of eleven children born to her parents: William, who resides in Templeton, Oregon; Nancy, the wife of our subject; Mollie, deceased; Carl and Alfred X., both of whom reside in Coos Bay; Frank, who makes his home in the state of Washington; Charles, residing in Coos Bay, Oregon; Nelson, whose home is in Douglas county of the same state; Rose, the wife of Robert P. Walker, of San Francisco, California; Eva, who married Hugh Pangborn, of Los Angeles, California; and Daphne, who also resides in Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. Bowron are the parents of two children: William F., born in 1881, who studied pharmacy in Coos county, Oregon, and is now in business in Arizona; and Alfred Roy, born in 1885, who married Miss Margaret E. Sanford, a daughter of Captain Sanford, of Coos county. In his family were the following children: Ernest, who resides in California; Ida, the wife of Claud Knalner, of North Bend, Oregon; Herman, who resides in Sumner, in the same state; Cora, the wife of Richard Sanford, of Alsee, Oregon; William V., of Lee, Oregon; Margaret E., the wife of Alfred R. Bowron; Grace, who makes her home in Alsee, Oregon; and Minnie, the wife of W. G. Simpson, of Coos county.

Mr. Bowron is a republican and interested in politics. He served as councilman in Marshfield, where he did able work for three years. He is now road supervisor of Coos county and is making a record for intelligence and efficiency in this office. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is active in the affairs of that organization. He is one of the sturdy Oregon pioneers who defied natural forces, endured hardships, privations and defeat and evolved out of an uncultivated wilderness and vast timber forests the fertile land, the magnificent farms and the abundant harvests of the great American northwest.

ELI PATTERSON MAST, who by his many friends is known as "Lark" Mast, has a well developed farm property, the excellent appearance of which is largely due to his labors and energy. The land is in Coos county and there he is carrying on general farming and stock-raising. He was born in North Carolina, in 1848, and is a son of Leason and Sarah (Duger) Mast. The father died in 1884. In the family were three children: Charlotte, who is the widow of William P. Mast, of Lee, Oregon; Eli P., of this review; and Hester, who is the widow of L. L. Harmon, also of Lee.

Eli P. Mast spent his youthful days in his parents' home and started out to earn his own living when a young man of twenty-one years. He was brought up on a farm in North Carolina, his father being a large land owner there, and Eli P. Mast became familiar with the best methods of tilling the soil and caring for the crops. After his marriage he took charge of the home place, which he operated until after the birth of two of his children, when, with his family and his parents, he came to Oregon, previously disposing of his business interests in North Carolina. He settled first at Roseburg and there lived for two years. In 1872, however, he had purchased one hundred and twenty acres of land and later the family removed to that farm from Roseburg. The tract was wild and unimproved when it came into his possession and there were no wagon roads in the district. Provisions had to be packed on one of the horses and not an acre had been cleared nor was any brush cut. Mr. Mast at once began the arduous task of clearing the land, on which he built his home. He went into the logging camps where he worked a part of each year and through other portions of the year continued the task of developing his farm. It was by his employment with others that he was able to earn money with which to carry on the work of improvement on his own place. He still owns the original tract and all of the land is under cultivation save twenty acres. His fields are rich and productive, his methods of farming are practical and the results are gratifying. He raises hay, wheat, oats and barley, and in addition is engaged in stock-raising, handling cattle, horses and Chester White hogs for the market.

In 1866 Mr. Mast was united in marriage to Miss Emeline Woodring, a native of North Carolina and a daughter of Daniel and Caroline (Rector) Woodring, in whose family were nine children, of whom four are living: Jacob, a resident of Washington; Mrs. Mast; Mary, the wife of John Walker, of Virginia; and Daniel, of North Carolina. Two brothers of Mrs. Mast, John and William, reached years of maturity but are deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Mast have been born six children, two of whom are deceased. Those living are: William Lee, a farmer residing at McKinley, Oregon, who has four children, Mildred, Milford, Roy and Aldon; Sarah Caroline, who is the wife of J. R. Benham, of Sitkum, Oregon, and has three children, Zilphie, Lennie and Julius; Fred, of Lee, Oregon, who has two children, Harry and Alice; and Jack, who is married and lives at home with his parents.

questions and issues of the day but has never sought nor desired public office. He has served as school director and the cause of education has always found in him a warm friend. He has worked earnestly and persistently since coming to the west, has made each year bring him nearer to the goal of his ambition and has thus advanced to a creditable position among the substantial residents of Coos county.

JOSEPH DAVIS MAGEE. The life of Joseph David Magee has been the varied and eventful career of an active and energetic man. He served in the United States navy for fourteen years, in various capacities, from landsman to captain's clerk. He has been an actor and has toured the country in the dramatic companies of Julia Marlowe and Madame Modjeska. He tried his hand at farming in Coos county and built the first hotel in Lakeside. He is now extensively engaged in the wood business in the latter city and with the exception of a few months has been its postmaster during the entire period of his residence. He was born in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, July 14, 1863, a son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Davis) Magee, both natives of the Keystone state. The father was a practicing physician in Chester, Pennsylvania, and served on the staff of General Meade as army surgeon during the Civil war and was killed in the battle of Gettysburg. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Magee were married at the outbreak of the Civil war and their son, the subject of this review, was the only child born of their union.

Joseph D. Magee was educated in the public schools of Chester and remained with his mother until he was sixteen years of age. At that time he enlisted in the United States navy and served for three years and seven months. He acted as schoolmaster on board his ship and served in this capacity during the entire period of his first enlistment. During the course of his naval service he visited nearly all the ports of the world and his active and energetic mind reaped the advantages of this cosmopolitan life. When he finished his first three years' service he returned to Pennsylvania and attended normal school in that state until his graduation in 1886. He immediately returned to the navy and resumed his position as schoolmaster, serving in this line of activity until, in 1893 he received his honorable discharge in New York and after three months' leave of absence returned to his vessel and again set out upon his travels. In all he served his country as a sailor for fourteen years and seven months, acting in various capacities ranging from the position of landsman to that of captain's clerk. His principal duties, however, were those of schoolmaster and he did efficient and capable work in this line. During his period of service he had studied dramatic art and when he finally terminated his connection with the United States navy he toured the country in the company of Margaret Mather, who became famous for her acting in Romeo and Juliet. Mr. Magee was also identified with the dramatic companies in which Julia Marlowe and Madame Modjeska played and his stage career lasted for two years. Mr. Magee always acted juvenile roles and his work along this line is still remembered.

For a time Mr. Magee was instructor in military tactics and gymnastics in Lincoln, Illinois, but abandoned this field to come to eastern Oregon. Here he spent one year working as a cowboy on the plains and at the expiration of that time went into the Cascade mountains. He then came to Coos bay with the intention of taking up a homestead claim. He located his land on Ten Mile lake and in June, 1897, became the owner of one hundred and sixty acres three miles from the Lakeside postoffice. His land faced North lake and was located on one of the most beautiful sites in this section of the county. Mr. Magee cleared his land and put about eight acres under cultivation. He engaged in the poultry business for some time, but the difficulty in procuring grain and other incidental disadvantages hampered his success. When he started in farming and the poultry business here the country was in an undeveloped state and any time he chose he could go to his door and kill deer and bear and his life in this section was lived under primitive and pioneer conditions. He remained upon his homestead claim for about ten years, at the end of which period he abandoned the poultry business and removed to what is now Lakeside. Here he conducted a hotel, which was the first enterprise of this kind opened on Ten Mile lake. When the postoffice was established Mr. Magee was appointed postmaster and has served in this capacity practically ever since. He is now engaged in the wood business and supplies the city of Lakeside and the outlying districts. He has made a success of this enterprise and his prosperity is founded upon his discriminating business ability and his shrewd common sense.

On May 5, 1897, Mr. Magee was united in marriage to Miss Ida V. Morgan, a direct descendant of the famous leader of "Morgan's Raid." Mrs. Magee is a native of Iowa and the eldest of nine children born to her parents, the other members of the family being: Arthur, a teacher in the Lincoln high school at Seattle, Washington; Mabel, deceased; Agnes, who married Ray Fenton Congdon, of Blackly, Oregon; Norris, who is married and is engaged in farming on Coos river; Lucia D., who is attending college at Plymouth, Oregon; Gertrude, at home; William, also a college student at Plymouth, Oregon; and Ira, who died in infancy. To Mr. and Mrs. Magee six children have been born. Leon, born January 28, 1898, who is studying mechanics; Buell, born November 23, 1899, who is attending school; Mabel, born July 27, 1901, and Elsie, born May 4, 1904, both of whom are attending school; Helen, whose birth occurred on June 23, 1908; and Florence, born May 26, 1911.

In political issues Mr. Magee follows his own judgment independently. He has never been an office seeker although he is interested in movements, to promote the development of his section of the country. He was raised a Quaker, to which faith his parents gave their allegiance, but he is not now a member of the brotherhood. He is broad and fair-minded in his religious views, believing in every man's right to think for himself. He is one of the representative business men of Lakeside. His active, varied and cosmopolitan life has given him a broad and intelligent outlook upon the world, and his energies and activities are directed toward the improvement and development of Coos county.

LUDWIG BIEHN. Thirty-eight years ago Ludwig Bieln came to Oregon and permanently took up his abode in this state in 1884. Since that time he has continuously made his home in Klamath Falls and at present he is living retired, deriving a substantial income from his property holdings. He was born in Rhine, Bavaria, Germany, May 29, 1841, a son of Michael and Louise Bieln. The father spent five years in Pennsylvania prior to the Civil war but the remainder of his life was passed in his native land where through much of his life he was a customhouse officer. The family numbered eleven children, of whom five reached adult age.

Ludwig Bieln was reared and educated in Germany and was about twenty-eight years of age when he crossed the Atlantic to Boston, Massachusetts, joining a sister who is still living in that city. He was married there the same year to Miss Elizabeth Wagoner, who was a native of Bavaria, Germany, and had come to the United States on the same vessel on which Ludwig Bieln was a passenger. Her father had been a civil officer in that country.

For six months Ludwig Bieln remained a resident of Boston and worked in a sugar refinery. He then went to Rock City, Illinois, and was engaged in farming in that locality for about three years. There he thoroughly acquainted himself with the business of raising hogs while working with a brother and later he removed westward and secured a homestead claim in Nebraska. There he improved his property but the grasshoppers destroyed his crops and after some time he sold out. In 1874 he made his way westward to Clackamas county, Oregon, and purchased eighty acres of railroad land but after living upon that place for two years he returned to Nebraska, where he remained through the succeeding six years. Again insects—chinch bugs—destroyed his crops and he removed to Kansas, where he secured an interest in coal mines which he operated for one winter. Later he spent two years in Arkansas, working in a planing mill and running an engine. At length he traded forty acres of his home place for a yoke of oxen and twenty-five dollars and thus he started for Oregon in 1884. He was eight months and six days on the way, accompanied by his wife, three sons and a daughter. The youngest son was taken ill at Klamath Falls and thus, the family being unable to continue their journey farther, settlement was made here. Ludwig Biehn has continued to reside in this place, establishing his home on what is now Main street. He bought two lots for which he paid one hundred and seventy-five dollars which are now worth about five hundred dollars a front foot. He sold off a portion of the property but still has one hundred and five feet frontage on Main street and three lots adjoining on Klamath avenue. After locating here he worked at the mason's trade, being employed in that capacity on the county jail and the courthouse. In fact he did most of the mason work here at an early day for he was an excellent workman, having learned the trade in Germany. He thus became closely associated with the actual up-building of the town and followed the trade for a number of years but is now living retired save for the supervision which he gives to his property interests. He owns two lots in an addition laid out by his son and also one hundred and sixty acres in the Swan Lake district. The appreciation of property values here has brought him substantial returns and indicates the wisdom of his investments.

In 1911 Mr. Biehn was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife, who passed away on the 2d of November of that year, at the age of sixty-nine, her birth having occurred in February, 1842. To Mr. and Mrs. Biehn four children were born: William, who died October 17, 1890, in his twenty-second year; George, who is living in Klamath Falls; Louise, who is the wife of George Humphrey, of Klamath Falls; and Fred, who was born June 23, 1880, and died, leaving a widow and one son, Fred.

In his political views Mr. Biehn has long been an earnest republican, believing firmly in the principles of the party as factors in good government. He holds membership in the Pioneers Association and is well known in this part of the state, where for twenty-eight years he has made his home. He has seen the growth of Klamath Falls from a small town to an enterprising and progressive city and has borne his part in the work of general improvement and progress as the years have passed. He has ever been found reliable and straightforward in his business dealings, worthy of the confidence that is uniformly accorded him.

AUGUST LAKSONEN. The opportunity and enterprise which enabled August Laksonen to claim one hundred and sixty acres of heavily timbered land, burn the stumps and cultivate the soil and to evolve from a wild and unimproved tract one of the most productive and prosperous farms on Ten Mile lake, is a valuable asset in our national life. Mr. Laksonen is a true farmer and his ancestors cultivated the soil for many generations. He was born in Finland in 1870, and is a son of Jacob and Susan Laksonen, both natives of that country. Jacob Laksonen and his wife were the parents of six children: Herman and Michael, both residents of Finland; John, Jacob, and Susan, all of whom are deceased; and August, the subject of this sketch. Mr. Laksonen was reared at home and was brought up on his father's farm. He received his early education in the public schools of Finland and pursued his studies until he was fourteen years of age. He worked in the employ of his father, gaining personal experience in the details of agriculture until he was seventeen years of age. In 1887 he came to America and settled in Red Canyon, Wyoming, where he worked in the coal mines for one year. In 1888 he removed to California and engaged in the timber business until 1889 when he came to Coos bay, Oregon, and settled in Marshfield. He worked at various occupations in that city until 1891 when he took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres on Ten Mile lake. When Mr. Laksonen came into possession it was mere forest land. With indefatigable energy he cleared the property, burnt the stumps and made of his land a well improved and modernly equipped farm. He now has twenty acres under cultivation and operates a small sawmill on his property. He saws lumber to order and this branch of his activities is growing to be one of the most important features of his occupation. He makes a specialty of his dairy and keeps a large herd of cows for milking purposes. He is keenly interested in modern dairy equipment and in progressive methods of sanitation and his milk and butter and other products find a ready sale in the markets of Coos county.

In December, 1900, Mr. Laksonen was united in marriage to Miss Alice Robertson, a native of Oregon. Mrs. Laksonen is of Scotch descent and her father is now living in Millington, Oregon. To our subject and his wife five children have been born: Edward A., whose birth occurred on September 15, 1901, and who is attending school in Coos county; Trinetta, born September 6, 1903, who is also pursuing her studies; Florence, who was born on the 8th of October, 1904, and who is still in school; Edna, born May 25, 1906, who is a student in the Coos county public schools; and Margaret, whose birth occurred January 3, 1908.

Politically Mr. Laksonen is a republican and takes an intelligent interest in the affairs of the local party organization. He has never been an office seeker but is intensely interested in education and has served as a director of the school board. He holds membership in the Lutheran church in which faith he was reared and in which he is bringing up his children. He is prominent in the affairs of the Woodmen of the World, but beyond this connection has no fraternal affiliations. He is one of the farmers who are the strength and hope of the state of Oregon, a man who brings to the cultivation of the soil an intelligence and efficiency which are the basis of sure success.

J. C. AINSWORTH, of Portland, financier and business man, who is identified with many corporate interests, has contributed materially to the development and upbuilding of the Pacific country. Portland is proud to number him among her native sons. He was born in that city, January 4, 1870, of the marriage of Captain J. C. and Fannie (Babbitt) Ainsworth, and completed his education in the University of California, from which institution he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science in 1891. He afterward pursued a special course in electrical engineering in the same institution. His early business training was received in the Central Bank of Oakland, California, which his father had previously established, and in 1894 he entered banking circles in Portland, Oregon, becoming identified with the Ainsworth National Bank, of which he was chosen president. The bank was capitalized for one hundred thousand dollars and as his chief directing force he maintained a safe conservative policy that made it one of the strongest moneyed concerns on the coast. In 1902 he merged the Ainsworth National Bank with the United States National Bank under the name of the latter, which was then capitalized for two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, while later the capital stock was increased to three hundred thousand dollars. He remains president of this bank, which now has a capital and surplus of over two million, one hundred thousand dollars and deposits amounting to about eleven millions and which has always been kept abreast with the most modern and progressive financial policy commensurate with the best interests of the institution.

A man of resourceful business ability, Mr. Ainsworth has improved his opportunity for judicious investment in many other important business enterprises and his efforts have constituted a valuable element in the successful control of various corporations of the west. He was instrumental in organizing the Fidelity Trust Company Bank of Tacoma with capital and surplus of one million dollars, and in 1902 he succeeded Colonel C. W. Griggs as president of the company. He is also the president of the Oregon Telephone & Telegraph Company with a capital stock of five hundred thousand dollars and is assistant secretary and treasurer of the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company which has a capital of fifteen million dollars, while its lines extend from Mexico to Alaska. His keen business discernment has led to his cooperation being sought in the upbuilding of many of the important business projects of the coast. He is treasurer of the Portland Railway Company and his name is on the directorate of the Portland Hotel Company, and Portland General Electric Company, the Portland Street Railway Company, the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Company, the Los Angeles & Redondo Railway Company, the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company and many others.

On the 26th of June, 1901, in Portland, Mr. Ainsworth was married to Miss Alice Heitshu, who is a native of California, and, moving in the highest social circles, their home is the scene of many delightful social functions. Mr. Ainsworth holds membership in the Presbyterian church and the Arlington Club, of which he was formerly president, and his political allegiance is given to the republican party. He is also a thirty-second degree Mason. While he is numbered among the most successful men of the northwest, he has never regarded the pursuit of wealth as the sole end and aim of life but has found time and opportunity for activity in other lines which touch the general interests of society, cooperating in many movements for the public good and upholding at all times those interests which are a matter of civic virtue and civic pride.

M. B. GIBSON has been a resident of Oregon since 1860 and has for many years been identified with some of the representative occupations of the state. He has reached the age of seventy-seven, and is living retired in Langlois where his many friends honor him as an early settler in this part of Curry county and as a business man of undoubted ability whose individual activities have been factors in the general growth. He was born in Hart county, Kentucky, in 1835, a son of Harland and Mary (Turner) Gibson, natives of that state. His father was of Irish parentage, but was born in Kentucky and spent his entire life there. He followed farming and was successful in this line of occupation until his death which occurred in the early '60s. He had long survived his wife who passed away in 1835.

M. B. Gibson is one of a family of five children. He received his education in his native state and remained at home until he was twenty-two years of age. At that time he went to Kansas and remained in that state until 1860 when he came to Oregon and settled in Curry county at what is now known as Gold Beach. Here he worked at the shoe-making trade which he had learned in his youth and for twenty years followed this line of occupation. For sixteen years he also served as county treasurer and gained a reputation for honesty and conscientiousness in the discharge of his duties. Eventually, however, he purchased two hundred acres of land in that section and upon this he lived for a number of years. When he sold his property he moved to Gold Beach where he lived until 1901 and then moved to Langlois where he is now living retired. He owns some fine residence property and is actively interested in the growth of the village.

In 1873 Mr. Gibson was united in marriage to Miss Johanna Bailey, a native of Pennsylvania, who came with her parents to Oregon in 1857. The family settled in Curry county where the father died in 1899. The mother is surviving in the eighty-third year of her age. They had seven children, four of whom are still living. Mr. and Mrs. Gibson became the parents of four children: Mary, the wife of E. B. Thrift of Langlois, who is engaged in the merchandise business; Anna G., who is a sister in the convent at Mount Angel; Jeanette, who resides at home; and Grace, who passed away when she was one year old. Mrs. Gibson died June 14, 1885.

M. B. Gibson is a republican in his political beliefs but independent in his views, voting for the man whom he considers best fitted for the position. He and his family belong to the Roman Catholic church and are active, religious workers. Over half a century ago Mr. Gibson came to Oregon and since that time he has witnessed much of the growth and development of the state, his own activities identifying him with it to a large extent. He well deserves the retirement he is enjoying for he earned it by hard work in the past.

J. FRANK ADAMS is owner of the Poplar farm, situated near Merrill in Klamath county. No resident in all this district has taken a more active or helpful part in promoting its progress and upbuilding. He was one of the pioneer ranchmen here, is well known for his ability in breaking wild horses, has been engaged in banking and irrigation projects and withal is a courteous, genial gentleman. He at all times commands the respect and good-will of those who know him. He was born in Eldorado county, California, March 3, 1855, and is a son of George and Sarah Ellen (Hogue) Adams, both of whom were born and reared in Peoria, Illinois. Following their marriage in that city they crossed the plains to Eldorado county, California, in 1852 and afterward removed to San Francisco. Mr. Adams went to the scene of the Fraser excitement and traveled all through southern California, rambled around much in that state and finally took up his abode in Sacramento in 1868. There he died about forty years ago and his wife later passed away in the same city. He engaged in farming, teaming and general trading and was well known among early settlers of that state. After losing her first husband Mrs. Adams became the wife of L. R. Harris, who now makes his home with his stepson, J. Frank Adams, at the age of eighty-three years. His wife, the mother of our subject, passed away about thirteen years ago. By her first marriage she had three sons, of whom the subject of this review is the eldest. The second son, Joseph Henry, died in Chico, California, and William Walter Sherman is now postmaster and a merchant at Malin, Klamath county.

J. Frank Adams resided with his parents in California until 1872. He spent most of his time as a cowboy. In that year he left with stock to go into the mountains, lured by permanent residents, making it impossible to find grazing land there. He made his way to southern Oregon and rode after stock in Siskiyou county, California, and Klamath county, Oregon, until 1879. He then took up his abode in Klamath valley, where he engaged in handling stock on shares, running stock in that way until twenty years ago, since which time he has carried on business independently. The raising and care of stock has practically been his life work. About 1881 he began securing government land, taking up every kind of claim possible, including preemption, homestead and timber. He secured desert claims, school lands and state lands and added to his possessions until he had twenty-six hundred and nineteen acres when he entered into an irrigation project under the name of the Little Klamath Ditch Company. This he incorporated in 1885. His plan was to include all farmers and each acre was to represent a share in the company, which was originally incorporated for five thousand acres and five thousand shares at two dollars per share. Farmers of the community joined Mr. Adams in this project, which he later extended in its scope, reclaiming ten thousand acres. He became president and manager of the Little Klamath Ditch Company and, as time went on, he bought in other lands and had extensive interests in the company but sold out to the United States government in 1907, when they instituted their five million dollar project for the reclamation of arid lands in this district. He met with difficulties leading to reverses in his irrigation projects, yet the work which he accomplished is of inestimable value to the district. His financial backers in the stock business withdrew their support when he turned his attention to irrigation, which they regarded as unpractical, but with remarkable foresight he realized the value of such an undertaking and time has proven his wisdom. In the cut through from White lake to Little Klamath lake, for two and three quarters miles the ditch being twenty-two feet wide and twenty inches deep, it was necessary to cut through the marsh with a hay knife. Mr. Adams laid off the right-of-way and made the two outside cuts on the eleven feet. With his own hands he did the work on the outside cuts, totaling eleven miles, and he employed from ten to twenty-two men in cutting the center and throwing out the dirt. This was the most strenuous part of his irrigation project and led to his securing a dredge. For the past seven or eight years he has operated the Marion Steam Shovel Dredge, the first work with which was done in building the canal for the Little Klamath Ditch Company. He made several of the first landings for steamboats and he began building the first mile and a quarter of the railroad out of Klamath Falls, throwing up the grade for the company. This was his first dredge work. He then moved the dredge to Upper Klamath lake and made a ditch of seventeen miles for Abner Weed, the average depth being four and a half feet and the width thirty-five feet. This work required about three years. On the 28th of April, 1912, his dredging machine was destroyed by fire but he is now rebuilding an outfit worth about fifteen thousand dollars. There are twenty-two thousand acres in the Abner Weed tract and the work to the present time has been more than half completed. Mr. Adams has been the most active factor in the development of Klamath county, especially in the Tule Lake district.

Thirty-three years ago he began the development of his ranch at Adams Point, two miles east of his present location on Tule lake. When he took up his abode on his present place, twenty-four years ago, it was a desert claim, covered with sage brush, which he grubbed up through his own labor. He has erected thereon a beautiful modern residence about two and three-fourths miles east of Merrill and has set out a grove of English poplars. This land is now all under ditch and constitutes one of the valuable ranch properties of the district. There are good improvements upon his place. He makes a specialty of handling horses and cattle, having, from four to five hundred head of horses and about the same number of cattle. Few men know how to handle as well as he does wild horses and break them in for farm work or driving. He was actively interested in the first annual Rodeo held at Klamath Falls on the 31st of May and the 1st and 2d of June, 1912, for which purpose he furnished fifty of the eighty head of horses used. He attended to the corralling and catching of the horses for the riders and he today catches and breaks a wild horse with the same ease which he did in earlier manhood. He started out in life as a cowboy, empty-handed, and he is today one of the prosperous residents of southern Oregon, yet at all times has been liberal with his means. His beautiful home is the abode of a warm-hearted hospitality and its doors are ever open for the reception of friend or stranger alike. He kept open house for many years when there was no hotel in this district and any guest at his home at the present time is most heartily received and royally entertained. In addition to all of his other business projects Mr. Adams assisted in organizing the First National Bank of Merrill and acted as its president for six months but he did not desire to continue in the office and at the present time is serving as a director.

Mr. Adams has been married twice. On the 3d of May, 1888, he wedded Miss Fannie E. Steele, who was born in Nevada, in 1865, and was reared in Reno, a daughter of William Steele, who was one of the pioneers in the reclamation of this country through irrigation. It was through his work in that connection that Mr. Adams met him and ultimately became a member of his family through his marriage to his daughter. In 1900 Mr. Adams was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife, who died on the 8th of May of that year, leaving three sons: William Walter, who is married and resides on his father's timber culture claim near Merrill; and J. Frank and Robert Steele, both at home. On the 11th of August, 1902, Mr. Adams wedded Miss Martha Cardwell, who was born in Jackson county, Oregon, March 7, 1866. She had formerly been a school teacher and was a friend of the first Mrs. Adams, making her home with them for some time. There is one child of this marriage, John Martin.

Mr. Adams was reared a democrat but takes only a citizen's interest in politics. He holds membership with various fraternal organizations, including the Odd Fellows, the Elks, the Workmen and the Hoo Hoos. He has a wide acquaintance with men of state and national reputation, has led an exemplary life, is a gentleman in every respect and commands the highest regard and confidence of all who know him. He never uses liquor or tobacco and has ever endeavored to follow the golden rule, doing unto others as he would have them do unto him. All acknowledge his worth as a man and citizen. What he has done for his section of the state cannot be overestimated. He was instrumental in bringing a Bohemian colony of about eighty families to this district and located for them a town site, called Malin, giving the land for that purpose. He has disposed of about three sections of land to these settlers, requiring a small payment down and allowing them long time to make their payments. He shows that he has confidence in their integrity and willingness to meet their indebtedness and his confidence in few cases has been betrayed. As the years go on the worth of his work will be more and more highly appreciated. He certainly deserves all the success that has been his and the honor and regard which are freely accorded him.

EDWIN EPHRAIM STRAW, M. D. In every town and city there are men who by the consensus of public opinion are placed in the rank of the most enterprising and useful citizens. To this distinction Dr. Straw is justly entitled among the citizens of Marshfield, this state. He was born February 28, 1877, in Wythe county, Virginia, and is a son of Dr. John B. and Nancy Margaret (Ward) Straw. His paternal grandfather was of German extraction and a native of Pennsylvania and the grandfather on the maternal side was of Scotch-Irish descent. The family of his mother were Virginians, whose ancestors for many generations had maintained their home and family name among the very earliest of the settlers of the Old Dominion, dating far back to the first of the English settlements. To the parents of Dr. Straw twelve children were born: Mary Virginia, deceased; Nancy Margaret, also deceased; Dr. J. Robert, who died at the age of forty-three years; Isaac J., who is engaged in ranching at Klamath Falls, this state; Ella, the wife of William Roneberg, of San Francisco, California, and the mother of four children, Bessie, Clarence C., Charleston S. and Robert H.; James W., who is engaged in dairying at Klamath Falls, Oregon; Henry W., of Klamath Falls, who is engaged in the timber business; Dr. William R., who has passed away; Charles F., of Oklahoma, who is married and has five children; Lula, deceased; Edwin Ephraim, the subject of this sketch; and Walter W., deceased.

Dr. Straw was reared at home and educated in the public schools, and after having passed through all of the grades he became for two years a student at the Virginia Agricultural and Mechanical College, after which he took up the study of medicine and became a pupil of the Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, from which he was graduated on March 28, with the degree of M. D., in the class of 1898. Immediately following his graduation he established himself in the general practice of medicine at Ashland, Wisconsin, where he remained for one year, after which he removed to Klamath Falls, this state, and at that place was occupied in the pursuit of his profession for two years, at the end of which time he removed to Marshfield. In December, 1901, he opened his office and has since been giving his entire attention to the general practice of medicine, in which he has attained an enviable degree of success. His financial rating is very high and his holdings in real estate and other property are extensive in Marshfield and various other parts of Coos county.

Dr. Straw was united in marriage on the 19th of April, 1907, to Miss Sara Lakeman, a daughter of William and Annie (Barrie) Lakeman, who were natives of California. Dr. Straw is affiliated with the democratic party and is now serving his fourth term as mayor of Marshfield. He was first elected to that office in 1905, since which election he has been returned for three consecutive terms. He has been a member of the state board of health and was the marine hospital surgeon for two years and at present is a member of the state naval board. Dr. Straw has made a record for personal success and useful citizenship in Marshfield, such as to place him among the influential and highly respected professional and business men of this portion of the state of Oregon. His natural and acquired abilities have been devoted to the welfare of the people and the general uplift and improvement of society. He is a man whose influence is readily obtained whenever a measure of public interest presents itself which seeks the further advancement of the interests of the people.

JULIUS LINCOLN POOLE, who is a native son of Oregon and a western man by birth, training and preference, is conducting the Midland Hotel in the town of Midland in a manner that has made the hostelry well patronized and popular. His birth occurred at Canyonville, Douglas county, on the 8th of April, 1862, his parents being Napoleon Bonaparte and Sarah (Cordwell) Poole, the former a native of Kansas and the latter of Nashville, Tennessee. They were married in the state of Tennessee and in 1849 crossed the plains with ox teams to Oregon City. Mr. and Mrs. Poole each took up a donation claim of one hundred and sixty acres in the South Umpqua valley, where they have continued to reside to the present time. The former has devoted his attention to the pursuits of farming and stock-raising throughout his entire business career. Our subject is one of a family of nine children, the others being as follows: W. P., who is known as the wealthiest gold miner in British Columbia; James Washington, who is a resident of Adel, Lake county, Oregon; Albert J., who makes his home in Idaho; John W., of Salem, Oregon, who is a section boss manager in the service of the Southern Pacific Railroad; Desty, who is the wife of John Scott and lives in California; Andrew, a forest ranger of Douglas county; Vernon, who lives at home with his parents in the Umpqua valley, in Douglas county; and Umattilla, the wife of Fred Bomanbrake, who follows the profession of teaching in Douglas county.

Filled with the spirit of adventure, Julius Lincoln Poole ran away from home when a youth of eleven years. He came to the Klamath country and on to Fort Harney, where he worked for wages during a period of two years. In 1881 and 1882 he drove a stage from Crow Hollow to Heppner, a distance of one hundred miles. Subsequently he went to Corvallis and then returned home. Later he made his way to the Harney valley and was employed as cook for the buccaro crew of Henry Levens, the present sheriff of Harney county. Going to Washington, he was there married, in 1891, to Miss Anna Sampson, who was born in California, in 1878, and is a daughter of Joseph Sampson, living in the Sacramento valley of California. Following his marriage Mr. Poole was employed as a cook by L. W. Myers in the mines of Washington during the greater part of a period of nine years. Making his way to Douglas county, he operated a rented ranch for two years and then removed to McCloud, California, where he was employed by Mrs. P. Hearst to haul rock for a summer resort on the McCloud river. Subsequently he again returned to his father's home and engaged in ranching. He next came to Fort Klamath, Klamath county, and purchased a ranch of J. Wheeler but eventually sold out. For a few months he then conducted a saloon at Klamath Falls. In November, 1911, he came to Midland and rented the hotel which he is now conducting. Perhaps no one business enterprise or industry indicates more clearly the commercial and social status of a town than its hotels. The wide-awake, enterprising villages and cities must have pleasant accommodations for visitors and traveling men and the foreign public judge of a community by the entertainment afforded to the strangers. In this regard the Midland Hotel, of which Mr. Poole is proprietor, is an index of the character and advantages of Midland, for the hostelry will rank favorably with those of many a larger place, and its genial proprietor neglects nothing that can add to the comfort of his guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Poole are the parents of three children, as follows: Bessie, who is the wife of Winter Knight, of Douglas county; Albert Vernon, still at home; and Alice.

CHARLES F. McKNIGHT is a resident of Marshfield, this state, where he is engaged in the general practice of law. He was born in Marshfield, Coos county, on the 23d of February, 1876, and is a son of William and Mary (Wright) McKnight. His father was born near Richmond, Virginia, and emigrated to California in 1849. After spending two years in the Golden State he removed to Oregon in 1851 and located near Salem and later he removed to Douglas county and in 1865 he settled on this south fork of Coos river, where he purchased the right to the De Cues donation claim, a body of land consisting of three hundred and forty-six acres. William McKnight followed farming during all his life and during the years intervening between 1865 and 1898 was engaged in that occupation in the development and operation of the farm which he purchased on the Coos river. He died on September 8, 1898. His widow is at present the owner of that beautiful farm and is now living, at the age of sixty-eight, at Marshfield, this state. She was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse and Margaret (Hare) Wright and with her parents emigrated to Oregon in the year 1847. Jesse Wright, the father of Mrs. William McKnight, passed away on the plains on the way here, in 1847, and the mother and children located their home near the present site of Eugene in Lane county, where they continued to live for about two years. Mrs. Wright was again married to John Loose and they later moved to Benton county and took up six hundred and forty acres of government land between them, where they continued to reside until about 1858, when they removed to Douglas county and remained there until the early '60s when they came to Coos county and continued to live here until they passed away. Mr. and Mrs. William McKnight were united in marriage in Douglas county, May 1, 1859, and to them were born five children, as follows: Mrs. Fannie Hazard, the widow of S. H. Hazard; Mrs. George W. Loggie, who is a resident of Bellingham, Washington, where her husband operates one of the largest lumber and milling plants of that section; Mrs. C. A. Metlin, of Marshfield, engaged in the hotel business in that city; Mrs. E. W. Dean, who is deceased, as is also her husband; and Charles F., of this review.

The last named was reared at home and received his education in the public schools of this state and after graduating from the high school of Marshfield became a student of the State Agricultural College, from which institution he was graduated in the class of 1898, after which he became a student of law in the office of S. H. Hazard of Marshfield and in the month of October, 1900, was admitted to the bar. Immediately following his admission to the bar he formed a partnership with S. H. Hazard and continued to be associated with him in the general practice of law until the time of Mr. Hazard's death, which occurred in 1901. Since that time Mr. McKnight has continued alone in the practice of his profession. His duties in the general course of practice have been in the different courts of Oregon and the United States court at Marshfield. Mr. McKnight is the owner of his beautiful residence property in Marshfield and also of other valuable business and residence properties in that city and is extensively interested in farm lands in other portions of Coos county.

On the 4th of October, 1911, Mr. McKnight was united in marriage to Miss Lulu Ann Spangler, who was born at Independence, Oregon. The early years of her life were spent at Corvallis, where she resided until the time of her marriage. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Spangler, who were among the early pioneers of this state and are now deceased, her father's death having occurred January 22, 1912, and that of her mother in May, 1908, at Corvallis. To Mr. and Mrs. Spangler were born three children: Mrs. L. L. Porter, of Oregon City; Martin L., of Oakland, California; and Mrs. Lulu Ann McKnight. The last named has the distinction of being a regular graduate of the State Agricultural College. She is a member of the Presbyterian church.

Charles F. McKnight is affiliated with the democratic party. He does not seek political preferment of any kind but devotes his entire attention to the practice of his profession. He is a member of the Masonic lodge of Marshfield and has filled all the chairs therein. He belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen and has filled all the chairs in the local lodge of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Mr. McKnight is one of the trusted and competent attorneys of Marshfield, devoting his entire attention to the interests of his profession. He is a man of public spirit, interested in the welfare and advancement of the community in which he lives. His large and increasing practice has in no sense disassociated him from the social life of his city, and his influence and help are always forthcoming in the promotion of any public measure intended for the betterment of his state and county.

SIVERT E. AASEN, recognized as an expert agriculturist of Coos county and as a man whose wise management of his farm has contributed to the expansion of the district, was born in Norway, May 15, 1846. His parents lived and died in their native country and had ten children, all of whom remained at home with the exception of our subject. Sivert Aasen crossed the Atlantic to America in 1871, settled in San Francisco and for one year followed the sea, making that city his headquarters. He had been a sailor for about fifteen years in his native country and was familiar with the details of navigation. His residence in Coos county dates from 1872 in which year he came north to Oregon and bought land on Hall creek, six miles below Myrtle Point. His original purchase comprised one hundred and sixty acres and upon this property he has since resided. He began its cultivation immediately and has at the present time one of the highly improved and cultivated tracts of land in the district. At one time he purchased forty acres which he added to his homestead, but he sold eighty acres to his son and now has a well improved and prosperous farm of one hundred and twenty acres, all of which is under cultivation. ALEXANDER JOHNSON enjoys the distinction of having originated and organized the Finnish Grocery Company, of which he is president and general manager. This new business venture is established in Marshfield and since its organization has been a gratifying success. On reaching Oregon he found employment in the logging camps in that portion of the state and continued in that occupation for three years. He later was engaged in various positions for nine years, at the end of which time he engaged in the café business to which he devoted his attention for four years. He then sold out

WILLIAM W. HOLLAND is one of the most respected citizens of Marshfield, in Coos county. He is a native of Oregon, his birth having occurred in this county January 19, 1865. He is a son of David and Sarah Holland, natives of Scotland and England respectively. David Holland emigrated to Nova Scotia in the year 1830 and from that country removed to Maryland in 1850, where he continued to reside until 1859. He then removed to Oregon, making the journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and on reaching this state he purchased a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres located near Myrtle Point. Upon that property he established his home and in the following spring suffered the misfortune of having his entire improvements, together with all of his personal property, destroyed by the floods which covered a large section of the territory in which he had located. Immediately after this disaster he went to the East Port coal mines near Marshfield and worked in them as superintendent for a period of ten years. He purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land across the bay from Marshfield in 1872 and two years later disposed of that property and established himself as a butcher in Marshfield. In that business he continued for two years, during which time his wife purchased an interest in the Blanco Hotel at Marshfield. In 1880 he also became interested in that hostelry. He and his wife were associated in conducting that property from 1886 until 1896 when they retired from active business and maintained their residence in Marshfield until the time of their deaths, his demise occurring in 1908 and that of his wife on the 25th of March, 1902. In their family were five children: Mrs. Simpson, of North Bend, Oregon; Mrs. Ross, of Marshfield; Thomas D., of Seattle; William W., of this review; and Parker B., of Marshfield, who is engaged in operating a ranch of four hundred and thirty-seven acres located near Bandon, of which he and his brother William W. are joint owners.

William W. Holland was reared in his father's home and received his early education in the public schools, while later he completed a course in the Rhode Island Business College and was honorably graduated from that institution. He remained at home during the life of his parents and at the age of twenty-two years became an apprenticed shipbuilder in Marshfield, continuing until he had mastered the trade. In 1890 he established himself in the boat-building business at Marshfield and has so been engaged for the past twenty-two years, during which time he has confined his operations largely to the building of boats of various tonnages and capacities for use on the bay and the rivers of this state. To Mr. Holland belongs the distinction of having constructed the first gasoline launch ever built in Marshfield. As a builder of boats he enjoys a reputation second to none in his state and his establishment is one of the largest of its kind in Coos county. He is the owner of a half interest in four hundred and thirty-seven acres of ranch land near Bandon, has large interests in various business enterprises in Marshfield and in the surrounding country and is the owner of his beautiful residence located on one of the desirable residence streets of that city.

ANDREW ANDERSON is the owner of a valuable farm three and one half miles up the Coquille river from Coquille, Oregon, and is bringing to its cultivation a well seasoned knowledge of agriculture the acquirement of which had its beginning when he labored as a boy upon his father's farm. He was born in James county, Iowa, September 6, 1866, and is a son of Thomas and Eliza (Barnard) Anderson, the former a native of Scotland and the latter of England. The parents were married in Canada and lived in that country for a number of years before they removed to Iowa. In that state the father bought land and carried on an agricultural enterprise until 1873 when he removed to Arkansas and followed farming for seven years. In 1880 he moved to Kansas and six years later to Oregon where he bought land on the Coquille river and was active in its development and operation until his death, March 14, 1908. He had survived his wife for seventeen years, her death occurring in 1891. They were the parents of a number of children, four of whom are still living: Annie, the wife of Mr. Gambol, of Canada; William, of Coos county; Thomas, who resides in Bandon, Oregon; and Andrew, the subject of this sketch.

Andrew Anderson received his education in the public schools of Kansas and Coos county, Oregon. He lived with his parents until after his father's death and was identified with agricultural pursuits from early boyhood. When he grew to maturity he entered into partnership with his father in the operation of the home farm and came into sole ownership of the homestead when his father died. The farm comprised at that time one hundred and twenty acres and to its improvement and development Mr. Anderson gave his entire time and attention. He has since added eighty adjoining acres and is thus the proprietor of two hundred acres of the most fertile and productive land in Oregon. His holdings are located three and one half miles above Coquille on the Coquille river.

Andrew Anderson is a democrat, giving a general allegiance to the party, but he reserves the right of following his individual judgment in all political issues. Mr. Hume has attained high rank in Masonry, belonging to Portland Lodge, No. 55, A. F. & A. M., while in Oriental Consistory, No. 2, S. P. R. S., he attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite. He likewise belongs to the Woodmen of the World and to the Royal Arcanum and also holds membership in the Commercial and Apollo Clubs. His religious faith is that of the Episcopal church. While a republican in politics he does not hold to what have become known as the Rooseveltian principles. He is preeminently a business man, alert and enterprising, bending his efforts to the development of the business, which, in its extensive propositions, stands as a monument to his ability and perseverance.

WILLIAM CONSTANT LEEVER. Commercial, agricultural and mining interests claim the attention and demand the energies of William Constant Leever, who has gradually worked his way upward toward success, employing modern and progressive business methods which have commended him to the confidence and patronage of the general public. He is closely associated with commercial and financial circles in Jackson county and at the same time is one of the political leaders of Central Point, where in office he has made a most creditable record, ever placing patriotism before partisanship and the welfare of the community before personal aggrandizement. He is proprietor of a hardware store at Central Point and is also president of the Pearl Mining Company. His birth occurred upon his father's claim two miles west of Central Point, April 4, 1858, his parents being William T. and Elizabeth M. (Constant) Leever, the former born in Ohio, February 27, 1829, and the latter near Springfield, Illinois.

William T. Leever, the father, was educated in the schools of Cincinnati, Ohio, and afterward engaged in teaching in that state. In 1853 he made the long journey across the plains to Oregon but was not so long a period upon the way as many travelers as he drove horses and was thus able to cover the distance in three months. He first took up his abode on a farm near Seio, in Linn county, and engaged in teaching in one of the little old-time log schoolhouses. In 1854 he removed to Roseburg, where he followed teaching for a year, and in 1855 he arrived in Jackson county, becoming identified with the educational interests of this district. At length, however, he concentrated his energies upon agricultural pursuits, purchasing, in 1856, a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres near Central Point. With characteristic energy he began the development of that property which he brought under a high state of cultivation and on which he continued to make his home to the time of his death, on the 2d of March, 1903. He was ever a loyal and progressive citizen and at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war enlisted for service as a member of Company A, First Oregon Volunteer Infantry. He was made first sergeant and did duty under Captain William V. Rinehart until honorably discharged, on the 23d of November, 1864. He was principally engaged in frontier service, fighting the Indians and conducting emigrants to points of safety upon their arrival from the east. He was stationed at different times at Fort Boise, Fort Harney, Vancouver and at other places in Oregon, Washington and Idaho, remaining throughout his life a patriot in his devotion to the country and her welfare. His political allegiance was always given to the republican party and his religious faith was evidenced by his membership in the Baptist church, in which he served as a deacon. He married Elizabeth M. Constant, a daughter of Isaac Constant, who was born in Virginia and in his early boyhood days went with his parents to Kentucky. Subsequently he became a resident of Sangamon county, Illinois, and there enlisted for service in the Black Hawk war in 1832. In 1849 he made the trip across the plains to the northwest and helped to cut the timber for the first gristmill in Oregon City. In 1850 he returned to Illinois for his family and in 1852 once more came to the Pacific coast country, securing a claim one-half mile east of Central Point. Adding to this property from time to time he eventually became the owner of eight hundred acres of land which he devoted to general farming and stock-raising. When in Illinois he had become a personal friend of Abraham Lincoln and during the Civil war he staunchly advocated the Union cause. He did not believe in oppression of or injustice to the Indians any more than he did to the negroes of the south and, about 1884, when he came to know Major Lipton, of Indian war fame, he refused to help him in fighting peaceful Indians. In fact, he always was a friend of the red men and was successful in his dealings with them. That they had perfect confidence in him is shown by the fact that at the outbreak of the Rogue river war Chief Sam dispatched a special messenger—his favorite daughter Mary—to Mr. Constant, assuring him of the safety of himself and family, should they desire to continue on the home farm. Mr. Constant was a mountaineer and scout, and took the first white party to Crater Lake, in Klamath county, now a national park. He died in January, 1890, and thus passed away one of the picturesque figures in the history of Oregon. As stated, his daughter Elizabeth became the wife of William T. Leever and to them were born ten children. The mother passed away at Central Point in 1901.

William Constant Leever was reared upon the ranch, remaining with his parents until he had attained his majority. He then went to western Washington and was engaged in the drug business in that district for some time, being associated with a physician at Renton, Washington. He afterward made his way to Port Blakeley, where he worked in the lumber mills for a few months. In 1883, however, he returned to southern Oregon and was employed on the construction of the Oregon & California Railroad until May, 1884. In that year he returned to Central Point, where he has since lived. He has taken an active interest in the upbuilding of the town and has greatly promoted its welfare and progress through his individual business interests. He was engaged in the grain and lumber trade for four or five years and he also clerked in the hardware store of J. C. Sheridan for three years. On the expiration of that period he bought out his employer and has conducted the hardware business on his own account since May 1, 1893, or for nineteen years, having a well appointed establishment, filled with a large and well selected line of shelf and heavy hardware. He owns the business block, in which he carries on his hardware store and which is located on Pine street. He was also an orchardist of this part of the state for a number of years and he is now well known as a dealer in cement. Moreover, he is actively associated with financial interests, being a director of the Central Point State Bank and its vice president. He is also president of the Pearl Mining Company. His insight is keen, his discrimination sound and his energy has brought him prominently to the front in business connections.

Mr. Leever is also a recognized leader in political circles. The republican party finds him a staunch advocate and he has been a member of the city council more than half of the time since the incorporation of Central Point. He was also president of the council, was elected the second mayor of the town and remained in that office for three years. In that connection he exercised his official prerogatives in support of many progressive public movements. During his administration a first-class municipal water system was installed, covering about eight miles. A sewer system was also inaugurated, which in its ramifying lines covers ten miles. This is known as the storm and sanitary sewer system and covers the entire corporation limits. Eleven blocks were also paved during his administration, which continued until the 1st of April, 1912, when his third year in office expired. He is at this time a candidate for county commissioner. His official connection with Central Point has been of the utmost value to the city and even those opposed to him in his political views have naught but words of praise to speak of his administration.

On the 13th of July, 1887, Mr. Leever was united in marriage to Miss Isabelle Armstrong, a native of Jackson county and a daughter of Reuben Armstrong, living in Susanville, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Leever have been born four children, but Ward and Amy, the second and third of the family, have passed away, the former at the age of seventeen years, and the latter at the age of eight. The surviving children are Wayne and Earl Constant. Mr. Leever holds membership in the Christian Science church, and has attained high rank in Masonry, belonging to Central Point Lodge, No. 135, A. F. & A. M., also to the Knight Templar Commandery and to the Mystic Shrine. He is ever loyal to the teachings of the craft and exemplifies in his life its beneficent purpose. Over the record of his official career there falls no shadow of wrong or suspicion of evil and at all times he is actuated by a spirit of progressiveness that never entrenches on the rights or privileges of others but seeks the good of the majority.

EARL C. WILSON, the superintendent of the Home Telephone Company at McMinnville, has been identified with telegraph and telephone interests throughout his entire business career. His birth occurred in Great Bend, Kansas, on the 22d of October, 1880, his parents being Frank D. and Nellie (Fausel) Wilson, the former a native of Alliance, Ohio, and the latter of Quincy, Illinois. In 1876 Frank D. Wilson removed from the Buckeye state to Kansas, locating at Great Bend, where he has resided continuously since. He dealt in cattle throughout his active business career and is still the owner of six hundred and forty acres of wheat land. Though now living retired, his investments are extensive. He held the office of sheriff for four years and acted in the capacity of chief of police for eight years. The great-great-grandmother of our subject was still alive when the latter was five years of age, so that five generations of the family were living at that time. The demise of Mrs. Nellie Wilson occurred in 1901 and her remains were interred at Great Bend, Kansas. She was the mother of two children: Earl C., of this review; and Dillon, who acts as wire chief of the Bell Telephone Company at Wichita, Kansas.

Earl C. Wilson was graduated from the high school at Great Bend when a youth of seventeen and subsequently spent one year in a business college at Wichita, Kansas. Since putting aside his text-books he has been connected with telegraph and telephone interests, first spending two years at Great Bend. Subsequently he entered the service of the Western Union Telegraph Company, representing that corporation as assistant foreman from Topeka, Kansas, to La Junta, Colorado. Returning to Great Bend, Kansas, he was connected with the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company for one year. Again becoming connected with the Western Union Telegraph Company, he represented them at Enterprise, Kansas, for six months and later spent a year in their service at Rapid City, South Dakota, while for a similar period he remained at Wichita, Kansas. Subsequently he was sent to the city of Oklahoma to do construction work and afterward spent six months in Iowa, then going to Kansas City, Missouri. He was in the service of the Bell Telephone Company in Missouri and Kansas until 1907 and then came to Portland in the interests of the Home Telephone Company, remaining in that city for one year. He then spent six months at Independence, Oregon, and for a similar period again worked at Portland. At the end of that time he came to McMinnville to take charge of the plant of the Home Telephone Company and has acted in the capacity of superintendent continuously since. Mr. Wilson owns stock in the concern, which is now erecting a new plant. He also owns two residence properties in Portland and is widely recognized as a prosperous and enterprising young citizen.

At the age of twenty-five years Mr. Wilson was united in marriage to Miss Frances Hereford, a native of Clinton, Missouri, by whom he has a son, Carter E., a lad of five. In politics he is independent, supporting men and measures rather than party. He attends and supports the Congregational church, while his wife is a member of the Christian church. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias at McMinnville and he likewise belongs to the Triple Tie at Fort Scott, Kansas. All through his life he has been actuated by a spirit of progress, regarding no position as final but rather as a point from which he can work up to higher things.

RANSOM DAYTON WILLIAMS, one of the representative agriculturists and substantial citizens of Scotts valley, owns a ranch of one hundred and twenty-one acres which he leases and devotes his attention to the operation of a farm of three hundred acres as a renter. He was born in Douglas county, this state, on the 14th of April, 1865, the day Abraham Lincoln was assassinated. His parents were George L. and Mary (Harris) Williams, the former a native of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and the latter of Howard county, Missouri. In 1854, when but sixteen years of age, George L. Williams came to Oregon on a vessel which rounded Cape Horn. The mother of our subject crossed the plains in company with her mother in 1852, her father who had planned the trip to Oregon, having passed away and having been buried the day before they began their journey. George L. Williams, who came direct to Douglas county, was fairly well educated for a youth of his years and after continuing his studies here for one or two terms he began teaching, following that profession for several years in the Yoncalla valley and becoming one of the well known instructors of that period. Subsequently he took up a homestead just east of Yoncalla and continued to reside thereon until his demise in July, 1871, passing away as the result of scarlet fever at the comparatively early age of thirty-three years. The maternal grandmother of R. D. Williams also located in Douglas county on coming to Oregon and soon thereafter wedded Thomas Pollock, who erected the first gristmill in that county.

R. D. Williams, who lost his father when still but a child, has depended entirely upon his own resources since the early age of ten. He was practically reared by the Applegate family, finding employment with its members for several years. It was in 1884 that William Schroeder, a prominent stockman, took him into eastern Oregon and there employed him for one year. During the following year Mr. Williams worked for Devine & Todhunter, stockmen of eastern Oregon. In the fall of 1886, in the interests of his employers, he went east with a trainload of cattle shipped to the Chicago market. Returning to the west, he stopped at Shoshone, Idaho, and there entered the service of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, following railroading for four years. In 1891 he returned to Douglas county, where he has since devoted his attention to general agricultural pursuits and where he owns a farm of one hundred and twenty-one acres in Scotts valley. He leases this property, however, and cultivates a rented tract of three hundred acres in the vicinity. As an agriculturist he has won a gratifying measure of prosperity and he has long been numbered among the successful and influential citizens of his community.

In 1892 Mr. Williams was united in marriage to Miss Nellie Wilson, of Tehama county, California, by whom he has four children, namely: Ruth, Roy, Rachel and Ransom. All are still at home. Mr. Williams gives his political allegiance to the republican party and belongs to the following fraternal organizations: Alpha Lodge, No. 170, I. O. O. F.; Umpqua Camp, No. 77, A. O. U. W.; and Yoncalla Tent, No. 63, K. O. T. M. As a native son of Oregon and a representative citizen of Douglas county he well deserves mention in this volume.

WALTER L. TOOZE, JR., is one of the successful members of the legal profession in Dallas, where since 1908 he has held the office of city attorney, while for two years of this time, he also discharged the duties of the same office in Falls City. He is a native son, his birth having occurred in Butteville, Marion county, on February 24, 1887, and his parents are Mr. and Mrs. Walter L. Tooze, of Salem, Marion county, Oregon.

When he was an infant of eight months his parents removed to Woodburn, Marion county, this state, in the public schools of which place he obtained his early education. He subsequently spent one year in Mount Angel College and three years in a military school at Portland, being graduated from the latter institution in 1904. Having decided to become an attorney, he then matriculated in the law department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, that state, being awarded his degree with the class of 1908. Immediately following his admission to the bar of Oregon he opened an office in the Wilson building in Dallas, but he is now located in suite 8 and 9 of the new First National Bank building. He has very attractive and appropriately furnished offices here and is building up a most excellent practice. His preparation has been very thorough, in addition to which he has a pleasing address, discernment and quick reasoning powers, so essential in this of all professions. He gives very careful attention to the preparation of his cases, and takes infinite pains to arrange his arguments in logical sequence, his deductions invariably being true and firmly established.

In 1908, at Somerset, Hillsdale county, Michigan, Mr. Tooze was united in marriage to Miss Ruth Belden Smith, who was born in Eaton Rapids, Michigan, on the 1st day of July, 1887. She is a daughter of Delos and Harriet (Belden) Smith, both natives of Somerset township, Hillsdale county, Michigan. The father was born on the 10th of September, 1849, and was a well-to-do and prosperous farmer, and for fourteen years was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Eaton county, Michigan, but later removed to the old Belden homestead, where his wife had been born and reared. He passed away in Somerset, November 3, 1908, and was deeply mourned throughout the community, where he had spent the greater part of his life. Public affairs always engaged much of Mr. Smith's attention, and he took a deep interest in local politics. During his early manhood he was a staunch republican, but during his latter years he indorsed Bryan's principles, believing that their adoption would solve many of the great problems before the American people at the present time. During his life time, he held various offices of trust in his township. Fraternally he was an Odd Fellow, being past grand of that order, and also a member of the Maccabees. He was a man of high ideals and exalted standards of citizenship, whose irreproachable character and incorruptible integrity fully entitled him to the esteem he was accorded by all who knew him. His parents were Joseph P. and Martha (Grinnell) Smith, the father a native of Webster, New York, whence he removed in his early manhood to Hillsdale county, Michigan. He was married at Adrian and subsequently located on a farm in Eaton county, that state. Seven children were born of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Smith: Montraville, Washington, Marshall, Delos, Carlos, Eugene and Rosette. Mrs. Harriet (Belden) Smith, the mother of Mrs. Tooze, was born in Hillsdale county, Michigan, on August 10, 1857, and is a daughter of Levi and Abigail (Walsh) Belden. Levi Belden was born in Whaley township, Massachusetts, on the 16th of February, 1823, whence he removed as a lad of twelve years with his parents to Hillsdale county, Michigan, where they acquired some government land, which was held in the family until after the death of Delos Smith. Levi Belden was a son of Jeremiah and Anna Belden, while his paternal grandfather was Joseph Belden. Abigail (Walsh) Belden, the wife of Levi Belden, was also a native of Massachusetts, her birth occurring on November 23, 1835. To Mr. and Mrs. Delos Smith were born two children: Floyd Ilmer, whose birth occurred on the 6th of November, 1880; and Mrs. Tooze.

Mr. Tooze's fraternal connections are confined to his membership in Friendship Lodge, No. 108, I. O. O. F., and Marmion Lodge, No. 6, Knights of Pythias. He is a captain of infantry in the Oregon National Guard, commanding Company G, Third Infantry, and is secretary of the Dallas Commercial Club, which position he has filled for two years. He is also attorney for the state land board for Polk county. His attention is almost entirely devoted to his practice, in which he is meeting with such excellent success. However, he is an ardent republican and finds time occasionally to devote to politics, and is now the republican nominee for the office of joint representative in the state legislature for the counties of Lincoln and Polk. As a public speaker of some merit, he is called upon very often to deliver speeches, and has already acquired a reputation as a forceful public speaker and campaigner. Mr. Tooze's future in both his profession and public life gives every assurance of being most promising, as he possesses those powers that invariably pave the way to a successful career in any vocation.

JAMES PALMER, yard superintendent for the Westport Lumber Company and one of the stockholders in this business, has resided at Westport since 1902. Much of his life has been spent upon the Pacific coast and he is a self-made man who at the age of twelve years started out in the business world for himself. His record is another proof of the fact that it is under the pressure of adversity and the stimulus of opposition that the best and strongest in men are brought out and developed.

Mr. Palmer was born in North Carolina, January 13, 1856, his parents being James and Amelia (Shavis) Palmer, the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of Oregon. They were married in the father's native state and there resided throughout their remaining days, Dr. Palmer passing away on the 4th of September, 1858, while his wife survived until 1881. He had devoted his entire life to the practice of medicine and was recognized as a capable physician in the community in which he lived. The family numbered but two sons and the elder, Preston, died in 1866.

James Palmer of this review was only two years old at the time of his father's death and when but twelve years of age was thrown upon his own resources, so that whatever success he had achieved in life is attributable entirely to his labors and determination. For five years he was employed as a farm hand in his native state and then went to Massachusetts, where he worked for his board and the privilege of attending school for four years. He realized the inadequacy of his education and wished to better qualify for business life by promoting his knowledge. He thus availed himself of the opportunity of attending school and when four years had thus passed he took charge of a coal and wood yard in Massachusetts, of which he remained the manager for ten years. He displayed business ability of unmistakable worth but thinking that he would have better opportunities on the Pacific coast, he came to the west, settling first in British Columbia, where he remained for five years. He then went to Washington, where he lived for eight years, working in a sawmill there. He afterward spent three years in a sawmill in California and became thoroughly familiar with the business in its different branches. In 1902 he arrived in Westport, Oregon, where he has been yard superintendent of the Westport Lumber Company and also of the sawmill. He is a stockholder in the business and is giving undivided attention to its development, his labors being a valuable element in the expansion of the trade.

On the 7th of July, 1904, Mr. Palmer was married to Mrs. L. Baldwin, a widow, who bore the maiden name of Rose Morton. She was born in Wisconsin and was a daughter of John and Sarah Morton, both now deceased. In the Morton family were four children, of whom Mrs. Palmer is the only one now living. By her first marriage she had two children: Elizabeth, twenty-two years of age, now at home; and Clayton, who is seventeen years of age and is attending college.

Mr. and Mrs. Palmer are of the Methodist Episcopal faith and he is a republican in his political views. He certainly deserves much credit for the success he has achieved. His laudable ambition was manifest in his effort to secure an education and throughout his entire life he has been an attentive observer of men and events and in the school of experience has learned many valuable lessons. His worth as a business man and citizen is widely acknowledged and he also has pleasing personal characteristics which win him warm regard.

ROBERT U. HOWARD, whose many sterling traits of character made him a respected, worthy and valued citizen of Westport, was born at Crab Orchard, Nebraska, March 26, 1870, a son of J. M. and Sarah E. (Bisby) Howard, the former a native of Polo, Illinois, and the latter of the state of New York. They were married in Abingdon, Iowa, July 4, 1865, and there resided for a short time prior to their removal to Nebraska, where J. M. Howard carried on general farming for a quarter of a century. In 1888 he went with his family to Oregon, where they lived for twenty-one years, and in 1910 removed to Alberta, Canada, settling near Pitcox, where he and his wife are now residing. Of their family of seven children only two are now living: Mary, the wife of F. R. Jones, of Crab Orchard, Nebraska; and D. E., who is living in Calgary, Alberta, Canada. Those who have passed away are: Robert U.; Jennie, who died in 1898, at the age of twenty years; Zilla, when thirty-one years of age; Guy, at the age of twenty-two; and Mollie, when about twenty-five years of age.

Robert U. Howard spent his boyhood days under the parental roof and was a young man of eighteen when, in November, 1888, he came with his parents to Oregon, settling in Washington county. Eleven years later he removed to Westport, where he has since made his home. In March, 1911, he married Mrs. Margaret West, the widow of Robert West, of whom mention is made elsewhere in this work. By her former marriage she had a son and two daughters, Ralph, Maud and Margaret, who reside with Mrs. Howard.

The family attend the Methodist Episcopal church, of which Mr. Howard was a devoted member. He joined the church at the age of thirteen years and his religious belief became the guiding spirit in his life. It was practiced in all his relations and in none more so than in the home circle. He became a father to the West children and was a devoted husband and loyal friend. As a citizen, business man and neighbor he was honored and respected by all who knew him. He was ever upright and his was a genial, social nature that shed around him much of the sunshine of life. He gave generous aid to every worthy cause and he was ever loyal to a principle which he espoused. He held membership with the local tent of the Maccabees and his brethren of that order conducted the funeral services when he was laid to rest after passing away on the 1st of August, 1912. Only words of praise and admiration were spoken of him, because his life was ever honorable and upright.

HENRY ALBERS. Along the line of constructive effort Henry Albers has directed his labors and through the development of one of the important productive industries of Portland has come to be recognized as a leading business man of the city, being now president of the Albers Brothers Milling Company. He was born at Lingen, in the province of Hanover, Germany, April 13, 1866. His father, Hermann Albers was a grain merchant at that place and in 1895 came to America, settling at Portland. He was taken ill while en route so that he did not engage in business here, and his death occurred in this city in 1896. He was accompanied by his family of five sons and one daughter: Bernard, who for a short time engaged in the grocery business and then established the Albers Brothers Milling Company, of which he was president until his death in 1908; Henry and William, both of Portland; George, of Seattle; Frank, of San Francisco; and Mrs. Frank Terheyden, of this city. The mother, whose maiden name was Theresa Voss, had died in Lingen about 1878.

Henry Albers was educated in the public schools of his native city to the age of fifteen years, when he began learning the flour milling business, in which he has since been engaged. Coming to America in 1891, he was associated with his brother Bernard and with Thomas Schneider in establishing in May 1895, a cereal mill across the street from their present location. The business was organized as the Albers-Schneider Milling Company. After three years they removed to their present site and a short time subsequent the Albers brothers purchased the interest of Mr. Schneider. In 1901 George, Frank and William Albers, who had been in the employ of the company since its inception, became members of the firm which was then reorganized under the name of the Albers Brothers Milling Company. Bernard Albers died in 1908, at which time Henry Albers became president. The other officers are William Albers, vice president; George Albers, secretary; Frank Albers, treasurer; and Joseph Demming, together with the other officers, a director. They began the enterprise on a small scale, having a little mill that Henry Albers operated alone, Bernard Albers attending to the office and the business. Three years later they purchased a new mill, which they installed with modern machinery in order to meet the increase in business. In 1902 their plant was destroyed by fire and their present building was erected for them. In 1900 they leased a mill in Seattle, of which George Albers has charge, thus extending the scope of their activities. In 1902 they purchased the mill at Seattle and also one in Tacoma, of which Frank Albers had charge until 1909 and which they are still operating. In January, 1909, they purchased a mill in San Francisco, which is operated under the name of the Del Monta Milling Company, now the Albers Brothers Milling Company, and Frank Albers went to that city to assume the management there. They likewise have a branch store in Oakland and they own a dock in Portland known as the Albers Docks Nos. 1, 2 and 3, covering six hundred feet. Since 1902 they have given their attention principally to the manufacture of cereals, their principal brands being Violet Oats, Pearls of Wheat, Columbia Oats, Columbia Wheat, Violet Wheat and many other package cereals, as well as all kinds of grain products. Their Peacock buckwheat flour is one of the most successful. They are now erecting a new plant at Front and Lovejoy streets, which will have one thousand feet of water front and the building will be six stories in height. This will be the largest enterprise of the kind on the Pacific coast, two hundred and fifty workmen are employed and the business is continually growing along healthful, substantial lines.

Mr. Albers is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Commercial Club and is interested in all projects and plans of those organizations for the development and improvement of Portland and for the exploitation of its resources. He also holds membership in the Rotary Club, in the Elks lodge and with the Knights of Columbus and is a member of the Roman Catholic church. He gives his political support to the republican party but has never been an office seeker. In 1901 he paid a visit to his birthplace and made a trip throughout Europe and he plans to spend more time in travel. Of plain, unassuming manner, pleasant and courteous, his social qualities and genuine work are widely recognized and have made him popular with a large circle of friends. His business ability has placed him at the head of the most prominent milling company of the northwest, the success of which is attributable in no small degree to his efforts, for he has been connected therewith since the inception of the business.

SEVERIN ROGSTAD is the well known and popular owner of one of the best hotels in North Bend, Oregon. He was born in Norway, in 1866, and is a son of Jens Olsen and Gurine (Arnesdatter) Rogstad, both of whom are natives of Norway. To them seven children have been born, as follows: Christian, who makes his home in Norway; Gunder, living in Goldfield, Nevada; Martha, who is a resident of Norway; Severin, of this review; Olena, who is deceased; and Julius and Richard, both of Norway.

Severin Rogstad was reared at home and received his early education in his native land. At the age of eighteen he emigrated to America and settled first in North Dakota, where he stayed for a short time and then removed to Minnesota in 1886, where he was engaged for three years in the lumber and timber business. He subsequently went into the hardware business, in which he continued for two years and then took up work for the Marshall Wells Hardware Company of Duluth, Minnesota, and in that employment he continued for ten years. He then went to Portland and was there employed by the Honneyman Hardware Company until 1906. During the years of his employment for the above named hardware companies he also owned a stationery and confectionery business and his wife looked after the management of their store. He later sold out and moved to North Bend, where he engaged in the hotel business and built the Hotel Oregon, which is the only hotel of its kind at North Bend. He has built up a very profitable hotel business and has an extended acquaintance among the traveling public. The hotel building is three stories high and modern in its construction and when built it was considered to be the finest hotel property in Coos county.

Mr. Rogstad was united in marriage, in 1901, to Miss Bessie Johnson, a daughter of John and Burgett (Hegland) Johnson, both of whom were natives of Norway. Mr. Rogstad is affiliated with the republican party and is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and he and his wife are members of the Lutheran church. Mr. Rogstad is well adapted by temperament and social qualities for the hotel business. His years of association with the business world in various parts of the country have enabled him to establish a very extended acquaintance, especially among the traveling men throughout the northwest, and his hotel, being modern in all its appointments and the only one of its kind at North Bend, has long since been known as the mecca of the traveling public, and its popular landlord and owner never fails to make his guests at home within his well known hostelry. Mr. Rogstad has by his ever-present enterprise, his indefatigable energy and his progressive spirit in conducting a hotel, worthy of its name, considerably contributed toward the up-building of his community and entertains the optimistic views of a true and sincere booster in regard to the future development and prosperity of Coos county and in particular of North Bend.

ARCHIBALD MCGILL, a prominent and prosperous citizen of Oregon, is a partner of M. McDonald in the conduct of the Oregon Nursery Company, one of the largest and most complete nurseries in the United States, extending over eleven hundred acres. This concern also owns the town site of Oreno, which was laid out by our subject and his associate in business. Mr. McGill was born in London, Ontario, on the 17th of January, 1865, his parents being Peter and Isabelle McGill, both of whom were natives of Scotland. They were married in Canada and there spent the remainder of their lives. Peter McGill passing away when seventy-two years of age. His wife, who survived him for nine years was seventy-one years old when called to her final rest. Unto them were born ten children, seven of whom are yet living.

Archibald McGill obtained his education in the schools of his native land and when a youth of fifteen began earning his own livelihood, being employed in the nursery of E. C. Pearson at Waterloo, New York, for four years. On the expiration of that period he embarked in the nursery business on his own account, conducting an enterprise of that character at London, Ontario, in association with his brother for four years. At the end of that time he sold his interest to his brother and went to the state of Washington, where he again embarked upon an independent business career as a nurseryman. One year later he admitted to partnership M. McDonald, who has remained his associate continuously since. After two years they came to Salem, Oregon, in August, 1892, and purchased what is known as the Oregon Nursery, conducting the same until 1909. In that year they bought the present site of Oreno, Oregon, laying out and naming the town. Here they established a nursery covering eleven hundred acres and have since developed and improved the same until it is now one of the largest and most complete in the United States. The business is conducted under the name of the Oregon Nursery Company, which owns the town site of Oreno. This little town lies within twelve miles of Portland and now has a population of one thousand.

On the 22d of March, 1893, Mr. McGill was united in marriage to Miss Blanch Irish, a native of Dresden, Ontario, and a daughter of Egbert and Charity Irish, who were likewise born in Ontario. The father has passed away but the mother is still living. They had five children, four of whom yet survive. Unto our subject and his wife has been born one son, Wayne E., whose natal day was March 20, 1900.

In politics Mr. McGill is a staunch republican but his aspirations have not been in the line of office holding. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Foresters, while his religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church, to which his wife also belongs. His life has been one of diligence and activity, and throughout his entire career he has possessed that determination of character which has enabled him to overcome all obstacles and difficulties and work his way steadily upward. He has never made a false or mistaken move in business and his career illustrates the idea of learning one business and following it to the exclusion of all others. His salient characteristics are those which in every land and clime awaken confidence and good will, and today the circle of his friends is only limited by the circle of his acquaintances.

LUCIEN B. APPLGATE is the owner of the Brookside Ranch, which lies in the vicinity of Klamath Falls. His extensive holdings are the visible proof of a life of well directed thrift and energy and also of keen discernment and sagacity for his was one of the first ranches taken up in southeastern Oregon. He was born in St. Clair county, Missouri, April 24, 1842, the fifth son of Lindsay and Elizabeth (Miller) Applegate, who crossed the plains to Oregon in 1843, joining the first regular emigrant train that came to the Pacific coast. They made the journey with their infant son and at length took up their abode in the Willamette valley near the present site of Dallas in Polk county. At one time the father owned a toll road across the mountains from California to Oregon, and was also a large owner of land upon which Ashland now stands.

Lucien Applegate removed to the Umpqua valley in 1852 and to the Rogue river in 1860. During the Civil war he was commissioned a major in the Enrolled and Volunteer Militia of Oregon and in 1866 he went with his father to establish the Klamath agency. Subsequently he was superintendent of farming interests there and in 1869 took up land in Swan Lake valley. This was one of the first ranches taken up in southeastern Oregon.

Three years before Lucien B. Applegate had married Miss Margaret Ellen Grubb, a native of Iowa, who came to Oregon in 1852 with her parents, Samuel and Elizabeth Grubb. With his wife and two children Mr. Applegate removed to his ranch in the Swan Lake valley in 1870 and has since greatly increased his holdings until they now aggregate five thousand acres. He calls his place the Brookside Ranch, and it has been his home for forty-two years, although he has spent many winters in southern California and in San Jose, California, in order to give his children the advantages of high-school and university educations and musical training as well. Mr. and Mrs. Applegate became the parents of six children: Elmer L., who married Miss Esther Ogden; Minnie A., the wife of Charles C. Chitwood; Fred L., who married Miss Myra Van Brimmer; and Evelyn R., Bessie B. and Elsie T., yet at home.

Lucien B. Applegate holds membership in the Masonic fraternity and also with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. His long residence in southeastern Oregon has made him an authority on matters relating to its history and through the conduct of his business affairs he has contributed in large measure to the work of general progress and improvement, demonstrating what may be accomplished in this district.

ALVA H. AVERILL, president and treasurer of the A. H. Averill Machinery Company, has remained its chief executive since the incorporation of the business in 1902, and, bending his energies to administrative direction and executive control, has succeeded in building up one of the most extensive enterprises of this character in the northwest. Previous to the time of the incorporation of the A. H. Averill Machinery Company he had been connected with Russell & Company in the same line of business, dating from his arrival in Portland in June, 1889, acting as its bookkeeper and cashier, while later he became manager. The enterprise is today largely a monument to his business ability, his keen foresight and unfaltering determination.

A native of Michigan, Mr. Averill was born at Mendon, St. Joseph county, June 8, 1867, his parents being Henry S. and Martha (Hart) Averill. He was a young lad when his father, who was a carpenter and contractor, removed to Angola, Steuben county, Indiana, and in that town the boyhood days of Alva H. Averill were passed. He attended the local schools and the Tri-State College, at Angola, Indiana, from which he was graduated. Turning his attention to the profession of school-teaching, he was for two years connected with the country schools of northeastern Indiana and for three years was a teacher in the Tri-State College of Angola, on the expiration of which period he determined to make his home in the northwest. Accordingly he came to Portland, Oregon, and has since been identified with the interests of this city.

Mr. Averill was married in 1891 to Miss Della A. Light, of Angola, Indiana, and they have one child, Harold L. A few years following the arrival of Alva H. Averill in Portland his parents decided to join him in the Rose City and make it their future home. But shortly after reaching here the father was killed in a street car accident, meeting death in 1901. His widow, however, still survives and resides in Portland.

On coming to the northwest A. H. Averill entered into active connection with the business of which he is now the executive head. He served for some time as bookkeeper, then as cashier and later was promoted to the position of manager. The business was established on a small scale in 1884 under the firm style of Russell & Company. They began dealing in farm implements and heavy machinery near the corner of Front and Morrison streets, occupying a small frame building that formerly stood back of the Esmond Hotel. Later they occupied the four story brick building on Front and Morrison and now occupied by The Fisher-Thornton Company. It was erected for the use of Russell & Company and the business was there maintained until removed to its present location. This occurred in 1897. They now have a well equipped plant extending from 320 to 338 Belmont street. They were one of the first to build in that section of the city. In fact, the Studebaker Brothers were the only firm occupying a building in that vicinity at the time the Russell Company erected their plant. In 1902 the business was reorganized under its present corporate title with A. H. Averill as president and treasurer; E. C. Merwin, vice president; and B. F. Ellis, secretary; with Mr. Averill and Mr. Ellis managing the business. They own their large warehouse, offices and machine shop and have about fifty employes. They are the Pacific coast agents for the Russell thresher, engines and sawmills. The Russell machinery is all manufactured at Massillon, Ohio, where is maintained one of the largest machinery houses in that state. The Portland company has branch houses in Spokane, Washington, Great Falls, Montana and in San Jose, California, the business at each point, however, being supervised by the Portland office.

Aside from his executive interest in this connection Mr. Averill is the vice president and one of the directors of the J. J. Ross Mill Furnishing Company, doing business at No. 65 Front street, and is the vice president and one of the executive board of the Pacific States Fire Insurance Company. The Averill Company is one of the largest machinery houses in the west selling threshers, engines, etc., and maintains a well equipped machine shop for repair work.

In his fraternal relations Mr. Averill is a high Mason and a Woodman of the World. He is also a member of the Commercial Club and of the Oregon Automobile Club. Appreciative of the social amenities of life, he enjoys the comradeship of those organizations and his strongly marked characteristics have gained for him the friendship of many of his associates. His life history is written in the terms of success, for diligence and determination have done for him what inheritance has at times failed to accomplish for others.

EUGENE L. HOPKINS, a well known and successful farmer and stockman of Klamath county, is the owner of Lakeside Ranch, comprising six hundred and thirty-three acres of land on the north side of Little Klamath lake. His birth occurred in Warren county, Ohio, on the 12th of August, 1863, his parents being Jesse Richard and Anna Elizabeth Hopkins, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Germany. Jesse R. Hopkins was reared and married in Ohio and continued to reside in that state until forty-five years of age. At that time he established his home in Daviess county, Missouri, where his demise occurred in 1881, when he had attained the age of sixty-three years. By trade he was a blacksmith. His widow now resides at Hynes, California. Mr. Hopkins was the father of the following children, the first named having been born by a former marriage: Allen B., an undertaker of Fresno, California; Thomas W., who is a hardware merchant of Berkeley, California; Lottie, the wife of Allen Kelsey, of Hynes, California; Eugene L., of this review; and Edna, the wife of William Hayden, of Hynes, California.

Eugene L. Hopkins remained under the parental roof until twenty years of age. In 1882, soon after his father's demise, he journeyed to California with his widowed mother and his youngest sister, locating at Marysville, that state. For a period covering nearly four years he was employed in the Buckeye Flour Mills. In 1887 he came to Klamath county, Oregon, and during the first four years of his residence here was engaged in teaming in connection with ranching but has since devoted his attention exclusively to the latter line of work. He owned and operated a ranch of six hundred and thirty-seven acres north of Midland, his homestead tract comprising one hundred and thirty-three acres and being known as South Midland. This he sold for a town site. His present home place, known as the Lakeside Ranch, embraces six hundred and thirty-three acres of land and covers four miles of lake front. On the property there is a hot sulphur spring which is almost at the boiling point. In Mr. Hopkins' dooryard there is an immense rock which was evidently used by the Indians for grinding purposes, for it has been worn away in many places by mortars. There are numerous other evidences of Indian occupancy on the place. Over two sacks of beads and other relics have been discovered on the mountainside and more than a dozen skeletons have been dug up in our subject's dooryard. This is a good trapping country. There were many otter in the early days and mink, coon, etc., still abound. Mr. Hopkins has about one hundred head each of cattle and horses and in both his farming and live stock interests has won success.

In March, 1906, Mr. Hopkins was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Dewar, who passed away on the 16th of August, 1911. The period of his residence in Klamath county and Oregon covers a quarter of a century and during that time Mr. Hopkins has won a place among the representative citizens and leading ranchmen of the community.

CHARLES WALKER YOUNG. One of the most widely known and highly successful agriculturists of Lane county is Charles Walker Young, who for sixty years has been engaged in the operation of his ranch, located two miles northeast of Eugene. He was born in Lafayette county, Missouri, on May 12, 1830, and is a son of James and Sarah (Wade) Young. The grandparents in both lines were natives of Tennessee, of Irish extraction. James Young removed to Missouri with his family in 1818, and there he engaged in agricultural pursuits during the remainder of his life. St. Louis was their nearest trading post and they were compelled to haul all of their goods to a settlement on the present site of Kansas City. Their family numbered eight, three of whom are still living as follows: Elizabeth, the widow of a

Mr. Rose, who lives at Whitewood, South Dakota, and enjoys the best of health at the age of ninety years; Robert, a resident of Holt county, Missouri, who has attained the age of eighty-six years and is living retired, making his home with his children; and Charles Walker, our subject.

At the age of fifteen years, Charles Walker Young began earning his own living. He had been reared in the country, and while pursuing his education in the district schools assisted with the work of the fields and care of the stock. Not having been trained for any other line of employment on starting out to make his own way in the world he worked as a farm hand. He received his board and twenty-five cents per day for his labor, continuing to work for that wage during the succeeding seven years with the exception of eight months. Just after the close of the Mexican war, he was engaged to drive a team to Mexico for the government, the journey there and back occupying five months. When he was twenty-two he was married, and two months thereafter he and his bride started across the plains with an ox team for Oregon. Four months later, on the 7th of September, 1852, they reached Oregon City. They subsequently resumed their journey to Lane county, locating on a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres, two miles northeast of Eugene, between the forks of the Willamette river. It was all prairie land and was most admirably adapted to grain farming. He immediately set about preparing the soil for planting, and in October, 1852 sowed his first crop of wheat. This was raised from two and a half bushels of Hudson Bay wheat which he had purchased for seed from Mr. Ballinger on the Santiam river. The yield was abundant and of an excellent quality, and he has never changed the seed, but has used the wheat of one harvest for the sowing of the next crop during the intervening sixty years. After placing his land under cultivation, Mr. Young erected such buildings as were necessary for the comfort of himself and wife and the protection of their stock, and on the 2d of February, 1853, they moved into their first log house. Young and hopeful, the hardships and privations incident to pioneering had no terrors for them and they bravely struggled against the obstacles and difficulties which confronted them, having implicit confidence in ultimate victory. Success came as the result of years of self-denial and unceasing labor and twenty-two years later they erected the comfortable two-story frame residence still occupied by Mr. Young. The shingles used on the roof of this dwelling were made by hand, and although thirty-eight years have elapsed since they were put on, it has never been necessary to repair them. Mr. Young has added two acres to his original tract, this having been necessary in order to get a private road, and he has other holdings in the county, his lands aggregating seven hundred acres, while he has several fine pieces of business and residence property in Eugene. His achievements have not been easily attained, but are the result of many years of close application and unremitting diligence, as well as intelligent and capable management, foresight and sagacity.

Mr. Young was married in Missouri, in 1852, to Miss Mary Gillespie, a daughter of the Rev. Jacob and Mrs. Elmira (Hanner) Gillespie, both pioneers of Missouri. Mrs. Young, who passed away on the 7th of June, 1909, was one of seven children born to her parents, of whom two are now living, as follows: Malankin, residing in Lane county in the vicinity of Eugene, who has five children; and Pamela, the widow of Thomas Bratton of Lake county, Oregon, who has four children living, with whom she makes her home. To Mr. and Mrs. Young were born eleven children: Alester, the wife of Thomas Van Dyne, of Coburg, Oregon, who has one daughter, Kate; Amelia, deceased; Baxter, who lives at Fall Creek, Oregon; Benson, deceased; Nellie, the wife of James Shields, of Bellingham, Washington who has two children, Nellie and Charles; Mary, who married Bird Rose of Harrisburg, Oregon, by whom she has had two daughters, Mary and Ruth; Effie, the deceased wife of Thomas Corfield, and the mother of one son, Earl; Marcellus, a widower with one child, Lavelle, who is living in Portland, Oregon; Fannie, the wife of Frank McAlister, of Eugene, and the mother of one child, Mildred; Julia, who married Charles Hays of Oregon; and Flora, who is the wife of Claud Cople, of Hood River, Oregon, and the mother of one child, Helen Young. The family were given the advantage of a district-school education, which was the best afforded in this vicinity at that period. Effie and Marcellus also went to college, and for two years the latter taught in Bishop Scott Academy at Portland.

The political support of Mr. Young has always been accorded the democratic party, but he has never sought public honors nor would he accept any official position save that of school director. He has never been remiss in the duties of citizenship, however, but has at all times contributed his quota toward the development and improvement of the community. He began his life in the west with practically no capital save an inexhaustible supply of energy and the determination of purpose that never recognizes defeat, and is today numbered among the most substantial and prosperous citizens of the county. His residence here covers the great formative period in the state's development, its progress having far exceeded his greatest expectations. He has seen Eugene grow from a mere hamlet, having witnessed the erection of its first store building, to one of the thriving and enterprising cities of the northwest, while the prairies that stretched in miles on every side of his ranch during those early years, have been transformed into beautiful fields of grain and orchards that are second to none in the world.

A. R. DIXON, the proprietor of a well equipped garage at Amity, is likewise the president of the Electrical Light & Power Company of that town. His birth occurred in Lima, Ohio, on the 25th of December, 1887, his parents being Alva H. and Mary Jane (Groe) Dixon. The paternal grandfather, Joseph Dixon, is a native of Pennsylvania and still survives, making his home at Lima, Ohio. He participated in the Civil war as a member of the Union army, as did also Augustus Groe, the maternal grandfather of our subject. Alva H. Dixon, the father of A. R. Dixon, was likewise born in Lima, Ohio. In 1890 he removed to eastern Colorado and after two years took up his abode in Denver, where he continued to reside until 1902. Subsequently he made his home at Montavilla, Oregon, and at Cornelius, this state, and is now living at Forest Grove. Prior to his removal to Denver he was engaged in general agricultural pursuits but in that city became a team contractor. Subsequently, however, he again turned his attention to the work of the fields. Unto him and his wife have been born five children, as follows: A. R., of this review; Kennard, who is a resident of Forest Grove, Oregon; Vivian, Norma L. and Melvin O., all at home.

A. R. Dixon acquired his education in the Boulevard school of Denver and remained under the parental roof until 1903. He spent a year and a half in Washington and afterward took up electrical work in Portland, being employed in that field and also at machine work in various states. In 1909 he came to Amity and opened a machine shop of his own and also built a handsome garage, which he has conducted continuously since with excellent success. He has likewise done electrical contracting. He installed the system and is the president of the Electrical Light & Power Company of Amity. Though but a young man of twenty-four years, his interests are already of an extensive and important character and his business career promises to be one of continued success. In politics he is independent, supporting men and measures rather than party. His fraternal relations are with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Forest Grove.

JEROME SMITH, a native son of Oregon, is one of the substantial and leading agriculturists of the Yonecalla valley, where he owns seven hundred and fifteen acres of valuable land. His birth occurred in the Yonecalla valley, in Douglas county, on the 24th of August, 1859, his parents being Robert and Susan (Applegate) Smith, the former a native of Alleghany county, Virginia, and the latter of Missouri. Their marriage was celebrated in Douglas county, this state. The mother was a daughter of Charles Applegate, who came to Oregon with the Applegate Company in 1843, Robert Smith also being a member of that party. They spent four years in Polk county and in 1847 came to Douglas county. After his marriage Mr. Smith took up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres four miles south of Yonecalla, in the Yonecalla valley. He went to California during the gold excitement of 1849 but returned to this state within two years and spent the remainder of his life on his donation claim. With the passing years he entered and also purchased other lands until at one time he owned about eleven hundred acres. He was identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows for many years and enjoyed an enviable reputation as one of the influential and esteemed citizens of Douglas county. In politics he was a staunch republican but did not care for the honors and emoluments of office.

Jerome Smith was reared at home and obtained his education in the public schools. When twenty-one years of age he went to eastern Oregon and in the summer of 1881 drove a herd of cattle across the plains to Nebraska, spending the following winter, spring and summer in that state. In the fall of 1882 he returned to Oregon and farmed his father's place for two years. On the expiration of that period he removed to Oakland, where he resided for about eight years, being employed a part of the time by stockmen and a part of the time at rail-roading. Subsequently he cultivated land in Coles Valley for a time. In 1894 he returned to the Yonealla valley and purchased seven hundred and fifteen acres of the home farm from the heirs of his father's estate. On this place he has resided continuously since, carrying on his agricultural interests in a manner that has insured him a gratifying annual income.

In 1883 Mr. Smith was united in marriage to Miss Almira Goff, of Douglas county, her father being Johnson B. Goff, one of the pioneers of that county. The two children of this marriage are as follows: Gertrude, the wife of G. F. Jones, of Hood River, Oregon; and Clarence, who assists his father in the operation of the home farm. The son is a member of the local lodge of the Woodmen of the World. Mr. Smith is a republican in politics but has never sought nor desired office as a reward for his party fealty. During the past half century he has seen the work of progress and development carried steadily forward in Oregon and has not only rejoiced in the splendid results which have been attained but has also done his own share in promoting its upbuilding.

LOUIS WILCOX, who follows the pursuits of farming and dairying near Gaston, is widely recognized as one of the substantial agriculturists of Washington county. His birth occurred in that county on the 22d of May, 1859, his parents being Sanford Elias and Mary Ann (Butts) Wilcox, who were natives of New York and Iowa respectively. The father came from Iowa to Oregon by ox team in 1845 and took up a donation claim which is now occupied by our subject, who owns one hundred acres thereof. His demise occurred about 1885, while his wife passed away in this state in 1899. Their children were six in number, namely: John F., who died leaving a wife and five children; Olive Annette, the wife of Rodell Matteson, of Washington county; Louis, of this review; Melya Angelina, the widow of James Page, of Yamhill county; Mary Belle, who is deceased; and Sanford Dudley, who resides with our subject.

Louis Wilcox obtained his education in the common schools of his native county and was reared on the home farm, thus early becoming familiar with the duties and labors that fall to the lot of the agriculturist. The pursuits of farming and dairying have claimed his attention throughout his entire business career and have brought him a gratifying measure of prosperity. He now owns twenty-three head of dairy cows and his well tilled fields annually yield golden harvests as a reward for the care and labor which he bestows upon them.

Mr. Wilcox has been married twice. In 1897 he wedded Miss Josephine Davis, who passed away leaving one son, Sanford. In February, 1904, he was again married, his second union being with Alice Porter, a daughter of Ambrose and Mary Porter. The father is now living retired at Forest Grove, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox have lost a baby. For a number of years prior to her marriage Mrs. Wilcox followed the profession of teaching in Washington county and eastern Oregon.

Since age conferred upon him the right of franchise Mr. Wilcox has supported the men and measures of the republican party, believing that its principles are most conducive to good government. He has acted as road supervisor and has three times been elected school director, while at the present time he is serving his fifth consecutive term as school clerk. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Presbyterian church, while fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World. In the community where his entire life has been spent he is well known and highly esteemed as an enterprising agriculturist and public-spirited citizen.

JAMES A. ALLEN has for many years past been identified with many of the leading business enterprises of North Bend and is at present proprietor of the North Bend News Company, carrying in his store a full line of confectionery, stationery, cigars, tobacco, papers, periodicals, jewelry and notions of all descriptions. He also owns and operates a shingle mill, which makes a specialty of red cedar shingles and has a capacity of two hundred and fifty thousand per day. He was born in Lewis county, New York, June 20, 1866, and is the son of William H. and Cornelia (Anthony) Allen, both of whom were natives of New York. The father was for many years engaged in the lumber business and also owned a farm in New York state. He died in 1888. He and his wife were the parents of one child, the subject of this review.

James A. Allen was reared at home and received his early education in the district schools in New York. He remained under the parental roof until he was fifteen years of age and at that time took up the work of a millwright and continued in that pursuit for over two decades, during which time he traveled extensively throughout the United States. In 1902 he engaged in building large buildings for manufacturing purposes and in 1903, came to Coos Bay, where he was engaged by the Simpson Lumber Company as master mechanic, in which position he remained for one year, remodeling, during that time, the Simpson Lumber Company's mill at Coos Bay. He there built for his own use the shingle mill which he has since successfully operated. He makes a specialty of red cedar shingles and his mill has a capacity of two hundred and fifty thousand per day. He also built the North Bend Lumber Company's mill, in which he was financially interested until 1909, when he sold out and immediately afterward engaged in the mercantile business, which he has since conducted under the name of the North Bend News Company. He is the owner of valuable business lots in North Bend and also owns a number of residence lots in addition to his home, which is located on one of the principal residence streets of that city.

Mr. Allen was united in marriage January 27, 1907, to Miss Jennie Bear, a native of Coos county and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Bear, who were the parents of eight children, of whom three are deceased. The living children are: Charles, who resides in Astoria; Henrietta, who is engaged in business in Centralia, Washington; Ida and Cynthia, twins, who are engaged as governesses in Portland; and Jennie, now Mrs. Allen.

Mr. Allen is affiliated with the republican party and has served as a member of the council of North Bend. His fraternal relations are with the Masonic order, of which he has been a member for many years. He is also a member of the Hoo Hoos. He is one of the substantial business men of Coos county and is numbered among the most enterprising and desirable citizens of this part of the state.

ANDREW FUHRER, whose demise occurred on the 1st of January, 1908, was successfully identified with agricultural pursuits in Oregon for a number of years and at the time of his death lived on a farm of seventeen acres two and a half miles southeast of Beaverton. His birth occurred in Switzerland and in that country his parents passed away. He was one of a family of five children, all of whom are deceased with the exception of Henry, who makes his home in Hillsdale, Oregon.

Andrew Fuhrer obtained his education in the schools of his native land and crossed the Atlantic to the United States in 1885, settling first in Pennsylvania. A short time afterward he came to Oregon and throughout the remainder of his life was a resident of Portland and vicinity. He devoted his attention to general agricultural pursuits throughout his active business career and at the time of his demise owned and resided upon a well improved farm of seventeen acres, ten acres thereof being under a high state of cultivation. He likewise owned a half interest in a tract of eighty acres of unimproved land in Clackamas county and had a lot in Portland.

On the 12th of October, 1893, Mr. Fuhrer was united in marriage to Miss Dora Wayman, who was born in Ohio on the 30th of April, 1878, her parents being John and Anna (Mitchart) Wayman, natives of Switzerland. Emigrating to America, they made their home in Ohio until 1891 and then came to Multnomah county, Oregon, where they continued to reside throughout the remainder of their lives. John Wayman passed away on the 10th of December, 1910, while his wife was called to her final rest on the 28th of September of the same year. Their children were three in number, namely: Mrs. C. J. Ferris, who is a resident of Hastings, Michigan; John, living in Portland, Oregon; and Mrs. Fuhrer. The last named is the mother of nine children, as follows: Andrew A., born in July, 1896, who has completed his education and is now learning the machinist's trade as an apprentice; John H., whose birth occurred in August, 1897; Marguerite G., who was born in April, 1899; Clara M., whose natal year was 1900; Dorothy L., whose birth occurred in 1901; Lena E., Ruth A., Cecelia E. and Viola E., who were born in the years 1903, 1905, 1906 and 1907, respectively.

Mr. Fuhrer gave his political allegiance to the men and measures of the republican party but neither sought nor desired office. His religious faith was that of the Reformed church, to which his widow and children also belong. His demise was the occasion of deep and widespread regret, for he had won an extensive circle of friends during the period of his residence in this state.

ALFRED C. MULLOY is the owner of a farm of forty acres pleasantly and conveniently located not far from Hillsboro, and in addition to its cultivation for the purpose of raising various cereals he is also making a specialty of raising hops and of dairying. He is a young man of but twenty-two years but has achieved success which many an older agriculturist might well envy. His birth occurred in Washington county, Oregon, February 19, 1889, his parents being E. C. and Linda (Ornduff) Mulloy, both of whom were natives of Iowa. The father came to Oregon in 1872 in company with his parents, who settled upon a farm in this part of the state. Linda Ornduff arrived in Oregon in 1884 and two years later gave her hand in marriage to E. C. Mulloy. The following children were born unto them: Mary J., the wife of William Hathorn, of Washington county; Alfred C.; and John W., who is living at home.

The educational opportunities of the public schools enabled Alfred C. Mulloy to gain a knowledge of the common branches of learning and to the acquirement of an education he devoted his boyhood and youth. During vacation periods he assisted his father in the work of the home farm and thus gained the practical experience which has enabled him to successfully carry on farming on his own account. On attaining his majority he purchased forty acres upon which he now resides. It is a well improved tract of land, divided into fields of convenient size by well kept fences, and in addition to raising the crops best adapted to climatic conditions here, he also makes a specialty of hop raising and conducts a dairy business. Earnest and indefatigable in all of his work, he is meeting with well merited success.

On the 15th of January, 1911, Mr. Mulloy was united in marriage to Miss Lydia Heineck, who was born in Washington county December 5, 1893, and is a daughter of Eli and Matilda E. (Suckan) Heineck, both of whom were natives of Wisconsin. The year 1876 witnessed their arrival in Oregon, at which time they settled upon a farm in Washington county, to the cultivation and improvement of which the father devoted his energies untiringly to the time of his death, which occurred in October, 1908. The mother is still living on the old homestead. She has had a family of eight children, of whom three are now deceased, while those still living are: Sarah, the wife of Julius Christianson, of Washington county; Irvin; Roy; Lottie, the wife of Arthur Hill; and Lydia, the wife of Mr. Mulloy.

The young couple have started out in life under auspicious circumstances. They are pleasantly situated on a good farm and the energy and business ability of Mr. Mulloy promise well for a successful future. In matters of citizenship he holds to the attitude and the principles of the democratic party but feels that he has little time for active participation in political affairs, preferring to give his undivided attention to his farming and dairying interests.

DELLROY BARKER has been earning his livelihood since he was fourteen years of age and the search for fortune has brought him along devious and unusual paths. He has penetrated the Arctic regions as an explorer and has lived the stirring life of a soldier. His activities have finally brought him to Coos county where he is dairy-farming on two hundred acres of land on the middle fork of the Coquille river and is meeting with the success which rewards enterprise and progress along the right line. He is a native of New York state, having been born in Watertown, Jefferson county, on January 31, 1847. He is a son of John N. and Mary A. (Powers) Barker, the former a native of England and the latter of Ireland. The mother of our subject was brought from her native country to America when she was but two years of age. John N. Barker came to the United States when he was twenty-one and their marriage occurred in New York state. The father was a captain of a lumber schooner, plying on Lake Huron and met his death in the wreck of his ship, in which all hands were lost. He passed away in December, 1848, and the widow then removed to Michigan and later to Ohio, settling subsequently in Wisconsin and finally in Iowa, where she remained until her death in 1876. She had been twice married. By her first husband she had five children: Dellroy, the subject of this sketch; Mattie, the wife of Lee Tyler of Bandon, Oregon; and three other children, deceased. The eldest passed away in Massachusetts, one brother died in Ohio, and a sister in Minneapolis.

Dellroy Barker was educated in the public schools of various states and was obliged to start active life for himself at the early age of fourteen. He left Iowa at that time and went to the Dakotas, where he worked at different occupations for some time. He was a government scout for two years and traveled over nearly all the northwestern states and thence he enlisted in the Twentieth United States Infantry and, after serving for three years, became a member of the Seventh United States Cavalry. His term extended over five years and was filled with thrilling incidents of warfare. He was a member of every expedition which set out during his period of service and was the one man of his company, which was left behind to take care of the company property, when the entire balance with General Custer were killed by the Indians. In 1873 he had three horses shot from under him and was wounded in both legs. His military service was distinguished by fearlessness and courage of a high order.

When he was thirty-two years of age Mr. Barker started in railway contracting work in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railroad and its various branches for four years. At the end of that time he married and bought land in Edmonton, Canada, where he operated an extensive ranch for four years. He went to the Arctic regions in the famous expedition led by Oglesby and Green, explorers in the employ of the Canadian government and did efficient and courageous work in a difficult position for four years. He came to Oregon from Canada by team, landing in Coos county in 1895. He settled on the south fork of the Coquille river where he took up one hundred and sixty acres of land and began its cultivation. He was successful as an agriculturist, carrying on his activities along modern and progressive lines and during the sixteen years, in which he was a resident upon his original tract brought his property to a highly developed state and made it valuable as an addition to the resources of his section. He finally abandoned agriculture and engaged in the operation of a pack train. He followed this line of activity until 1911, when he again engaged in agriculture, dairy-farming on two hundred acres of land on the middle fork of the Coquille river. To this property he gives his supervision and attention, retaining at the same time the one hundred and sixty acres, which form his original purchase. He is one of the representative and prosperous farmers of the section and has made his influence felt in the development and upbuilding of the farming interests of the state.

Mr. Barker has been twice married. His first union occurred in 1875, when he married Miss Christina Myers, a native of Canada. To this union were born two children: John H. and Mary E., both of whom are living in Canada. Mr. Barker's first wife died in 1883 and some time later he was again married, his second union being with Mrs. Louisa Hillis, a daughter of Thomas Orrison, and the widow of John Hillis. She had nine children by her first marriage: William, who resides in California; Edward, who lives in the southern part of the same state; Robert, a resident of Bandon, Oregon; Harry, who makes his home in Coos county; Roy, of Coos county, Oregon; Glen, who is living at home; and Thomas, Samuel and Alice, all of whom are deceased. Mrs. Barker came to Oregon with her first husband in 1886 and has spent her life since that time in this state. She is a charming and hospitable woman and has many friends in Coos county. Politically Mr. Barker is a democrat but reserves freedom of judgment on national and local issues. In all the various activities of his eventful life he has been distinguished by a high courage and a native sense of honor.

ISAAC TAYLOR WEEKLY. An excellent farm of one hundred and sixty acres, situated three and a half miles from Gravel Ford, has been brought to its present state of improvement through the energy and efforts of Isaac Taylor Weekly, who acquired the same about four decades ago when it was but a wild tract of timber land. His birth occurred in Benton county, Missouri, in the year 1850, his parents being William E. and Irene (Skaggs) Weekly, both of whom were natives of Kentucky. In 1852 they crossed the plains to Oregon with ox teams, reaching this state after a journey consuming six months. Settling at Ten Mile, Douglas county, William E. Weekly took up a donation land claim and continued to reside thereon until obliged to abandon the place because of the hostility of the Indians. Returning later, he there operated a sawmill until 1878. In that year he came to Coos county and took up his abode on a farm of one hundred and sixty acres on the east fork of the Coquille river, making his home thereon until he passed away in 1888. Unto him and his wife were born seven children, as follows: John S., who resides in eastern Oregon, is married and has one child; Isaac Taylor, of this review; Edward, a ranchman of Coos county, who is married and has six children; Lee, acting as road supervisor, who resides at Myrtle Point with his wife and eight children; William, of Myrtle Point, Oregon, who is married and has four children; Shuley, the mother of six children and the wife of J. E. Rose, of Myrtle Point, who is a nephew of Aaron Rose, the founder of Roseburg, Oregon; and Mary, the wife of William Turner, of Portland, Oregon, by whom she has four children.

Isaac Taylor Weekly remained under the parental roof until twenty-three years of age and then took up one hundred and sixty acres of wild land near his father's farm. There were some elk trails but no roads, and the task which confronted him in clearing the property was a difficult one. After a number of years of hard and unremitting toil he had cleared the place of trees and had dug out the stumps. He also helped build the first wagon road to Marshfield and Roseburg. He experienced many of the hardships and privations of life in a pioneer district, having no neighbors and receiving mail but once in three months, for the only postoffices were at Marshfield and Roseburg. With the passing years, however, he has witnessed a wonderful transformation as the work of progress and improvement has been carried steadily forward and pioneer conditions have been replaced by all the evidences of modern civilization. His farm is now well improved in every particular and brings to him a gratifying annual income.

On the 1st of July, 1874, Mr. Weekly was united in marriage to Miss Queen Victoria Krantz, a native of Missouri and a daughter of M. J. and Lucinda (Garrett) Krantz. Their children are five in number, namely: Mattie, a resident of Gravel Ford, who is married and has two children, Oliver and Sis; Onie, who is the wife of J. L. Crosby of Gravel Ford, Oregon, and the mother of four children—Arthur, Clifford, Myrtie and Zelma; Vance, who is at home and has charge of his father's farm; Josie, who is also under the parental roof; and Maud, the wife of J. A. Brockman, of Coquille, Oregon.

Mr. Weekly gives his political allegiance to the democracy and for one term has served as county commissioner, for which office he is again a candidate. He was one of the commissioners at the time that the courthouse was moved from Empire to Coquille. He is a member of the Grange and a worthy exemplar of the Masonic fraternity, which he joined a quarter of a century ago. Isaac Taylor Weekly enjoys the respect of the entire community and no man more fully merits the esteem in which he is uniformly held.

RICHARD ULRICI, who devotes his attention to general agricultural pursuits with excellent results, is the owner of a tract of forty acres situated eight miles north of Banks. His birth occurred in Germany on the 30th of September, 1846, his parents being John and Katrina Ulrici, who spent their entire lives in that country. Unto them were born fourteen children, ten of whom still reside in the fatherland. Those who came to America are as follows: Henry, who makes his home in Rockford, Illinois; John, living at Nokomis, Illinois; Albert, who emigrated to the United States but subsequently returned to Germany and there passed away; and Richard, of this review.

The last-named spent the first twenty-three years of his life in his native land and then crossed the Atlantic to the United States, settling in New York City, where he remained for seven years. On the expiration of that period he returned to Germany but at the end of three years again set sail for American shores, landing in New York. Four months later he went to Tyrone, Pennsylvania, there continuing to reside for a year and a half. He next removed to Nokomis, Illinois, where for a similar period he was identified with the butchering business. Subsequently he spent four years in Rockford, Illinois, being there employed by his brother, who was engaged in the manufacture of pasteboard boxes. Leaving the Prairie state, he made his way to Los Angeles, California, in search of employment but was unsuccessful, working for only a few weeks during a quest of several months. Going to Mount Eden, he obtained employment in the salt marsh and there remained for a year and a half. In 1890 he went to Portland, Oregon, by way of San Francisco and in the Rose city was engaged in building wooden sidewalks for a period of five years. In 1895 he took up construction work on the Astoria & Columbia River Railroad, being thus engaged until 1904, when he came to Washington county and entered a homestead claim of forty acres. The development of that property has claimed his attention continuously since and the many substantial improvements thereon stand as monuments to his enterprise and industry. In the work of the fields he is meeting with a gratifying measure of prosperity, annually gathering rich crops which find a ready sale on the market.

In his political views Mr. Ulrici is liberal, supporting the men and measures that he believes will best conserve the general welfare regardless of party affiliation. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the German Lutheran church. Coming to the United States in early manhood, he wisely utilized the opportunities afforded in a land unbampered by caste or class and has steadily worked his way upward to a position among the respected and substantial citizens of his community.

PETER POST, engaged in retailing liquors in Lakeview, where he is conducting business as a partner of Jonas King, was born in Grafton county, New Hampshire, August 6, 1854, his parents being John and Ruth (Sloan) Post. The parents were natives of New Hampshire and died during the infancy of their son Peter, who was an only child and knows but little of his people because of the fact that he was thus early orphaned. He resided with his grandmother until six or eight years of age. His parents were in limited financial circumstances but his grandfather, Peter Post, was a wealthy man of Grafton county. When a lad of eight years the subject of this review began earning his own livelihood, working at any employment that would enable him to provide for his own support. In 1875 he went with E. F. Cheeney to Santa Rosa, California, and for a short time was employed in lumber mills and at other occupations there. He then came to Lake county, Oregon, settling in Lakeview, where for two years he worked in Snelling's sawmill. During the past thirty-one years he has engaged in the liquor business, conducting saloons for others for some time and later embarking in business on his own account in connection with J. A. King under the firm style of Post & King. They had very little capital when they started out and something of their success is indicated in the fact that they now occupy a brick building which they erected at a cost of fourteen thousand dollars. They lost nearly everything in the fire of 1900, but with characteristic energy set to work to retrieve their lost possessions and prosperity has come to them. Mr. Post is also interested in orchard lands and in town property.

In 1901 Mr. Post was married to Mrs. Mary Brown, a widow, with one daughter, Elsie. Four children have been born by her second marriage, Ross, Roland, Millie and Margaret, the first two being twins. Mr. Post is a democrat and, while not a politician in the usually accepted sense of the term, he has served on the town council. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is a man of benevolent spirit, who gives generously where aid is needed.

JOSEPH P. BISHOP, who has been a resident of the Sunset state for almost a third of a century, has long been numbered among the leading citizens of the Yoncalla valley, owning a ranch of three hundred acres six miles east of Yoncalla. For the past fifteen years, however, he has resided upon a tract of thirty-six acres adjoining that town. His birth occurred in Clay county, Illinois, on the 9th of October, 1857, his parents being Presley and Julia (Lowery) Bishop, who were natives of Tennessee and Virginia respectively. They were married in Illinois, to which state they had previously removed, and began their domestic life in Clay county. In 1859 they removed to Effingham county, where the mother passed away in 1863 or 1864. Though a son of the Southland, Presley Bishop was radically opposed to the institution of slavery and for many years would not support the democratic ticket even on minor issues. He defended the Union as a soldier on the field of battle during the entire period of hostilities between the north and the south, serving as lieutenant of his company. After the close of the war, having lost his wife, he removed to eastern Nebraska and there took up the homestead on which he has since continued to reside.

Joseph P. Bishop attended the public schools in the acquirement of an education, thus equipping himself mentally for the duties and responsibilities of later life. His mother died when he was but little more than six years of age and he was reared to manhood in the household of Mr. Bogges, a neighbor. When twenty years of age he left his foster parents and joined his father in eastern Nebraska, there remaining until May, 1880. At that time he made his way west to Oregon and spent the following summer and fall in the construction of the railroad of the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company through eastern Oregon. In December, 1880, he came to western Oregon, arriving in Yoncalla, Douglas county, on Christmas day of that year. In May, 1881, Mr. Bishop homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres of land six miles east of Yoncalla and lived thereon during the following sixteen years, extending the boundaries of his farm in the meantime until it comprised three hundred acres. Though this ranch is still in his possession, he has since 1897 resided on a small tract of thirty-six acres adjoining Yoncalla. His farming interests have ever been carefully and systematically conducted and the success which has crowned his efforts is but the merited reward of industry and perseverance.

In 1881 Mr. Bishop was united in marriage to Miss Zadie Richardson, of eastern Nebraska, by whom he had six children, five of whom still survive, as follows: Frank L., who is a resident of Astoria, Oregon; Julia R., a trained nurse of South Bend, Washington; May, the wife of Luther Daugherty, of Yoncalla, Oregon; Grace, a high school student; and Jasper, who is attending school and is also still at home.

In politics Mr. Bishop is a prohibitionist, being firmly convinced that the liquor traffic should be suppressed as one of the worst evils which menace the country today. He is one of the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal church, to which his wife and children also belong. His influence has always been found on the side of material, intellectual and moral development and his work has been an element in the advancement of his community.

E. M. NEWMAN. There is no doubt as to the courage and good business sense of thousands of natives of Sweden who have come to America and in a strange country have won honorable positions and also gained financial independence. In this class belongs E. M. Newman, who began near the bottom of the financial ladder after reaching the new world and in the short period of eight years has become the owner of a valuable farm which is yielding a handsome annual revenue. He was born in Sweden January 25, 1870, and in his boyhood possessed advantages of education of which he made wise use. At the age of thirty-three years he left the old country and with his family crossed the ocean continuing his journey westward until he arrived at Portland, Oregon. He made his home in that city for a year and a half and then, believing that the region of Warren held out large possibilities for a man with little capital, he purchased twenty-five acres of land a mile south of town upon which he established his home. He applied himself industriously to the improvement of the place and it is now nearly all under cultivation and yields handsome returns for the labor expended. He paid thirty dollars per acre for the land and it is now worth about two hundred dollars per acre. Mr. Newman had only one hundred dollars in his possession when he landed at Portland. He belongs to that class of people known as self-made men—a class of whom there are unfortunately too few in the world and who are honored and respected in every civilized country on the globe.

Mr. Newman married Miss Matilda Pearson and they have two children: Freda, who is at home; and Signe, who has passed the eighth grade in the public schools. After becoming a naturalized American citizen Mr. Newman accepted the principles of the republican party as his guide in politics and he has seen no reason to change to any other political organization. As a public-spirited man he does not shrink from responsibility and he is serving as road superintendent and discharges the duties of that position in a way that meets with the hearty indorsement of the people. He is a man of decision of character—one who commands respect because he deserves it—and the progress he has made reflects the highest credit upon himself and his chosen state and nation.

ALVA LEE. Three hundred and ninety-six acres of fertile land in Coos county, well drained and scientifically cultivated, are the result of the agricultural activities of Alva Lee in Coos county. He is a native son of Oregon, his birth having occurred in Douglas county, January 19, 1859. His parents were J. D. B. and Marilla (Huntley) Lee, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Missouri. Both came to California. The mother crossed the plains to California in the late '40s when she was only five years of age and grew up in that section of the country. J. D. B. Lee also left his native state at an early date and settled on the Pacific coast. He came to Oregon before 1860 and farmed in Douglas county until his death on December 24, 1903. He was the father of four children: one, who died in infancy; Sylvia C., who passed away at the age of twenty; Milton R., who resides with his wife and seven children at Myrtle Point, Oregon; and Alva, the subject of this sketch.

Alva Lee remained with his parents until he was nineteen years of age. He spent his early boyhood working upon his father's farm and gained a detailed knowledge of modern agricultural methods. He became thoroughly acquainted with soil and crop conditions and with the various duties incident to the cultivation of a farm. When he was nineteen years of age he went into the logging camps of northern Oregon and worked in the timber lands in the employ of others for six years. He spent seven years in ranching and later took up steamboat freighting on the Coquille river. He followed this line of occupation for a number of years and gained a gratifying degree of success. When his father died Mr. Lee returned to the old homestead and took active charge of the management and cultivation of the three hundred and ninety-six acres. He does general farming and his early experience is a valuable asset to him. He specializes in dairying and keeps twenty-five cows of the highest grade for this purpose. He has one hundred and forty acres of his land under cultivation and is constantly extending the field of his activities. His farm is situated two and one half miles up the south side of the North fork and is one of the model properties of Coos county.

On April 15, 1896, Mr. Lee was united in marriage to Miss Lillie May Hoyte, a daughter of W. L. Hoyte. Mrs. Lee is one of fifteen children as follows: Theodosia E., who resides in California; Richard, who is a resident of the same state; Melvin, who maintains his home in Preston, Oregon; James, of San Diego, California; William, who is in business in Alaska; Annie, who married R. S. Knowlton of Coquille, Oregon; Cora, the wife of John Lindebeck of California; Ellen, the widow of John Long of Bay City, Oregon; Edith, who married D. B. Beal, a resident of California; Robert, who resides on the Coos river; Lillie May, the wife of our subject; Wilber, who resides in California; Charles, deceased; O. J., a resident of Brewster Valley, Oregon; and Sarah, who is deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Lee have been born five children: Harold, who is deceased; Clarice May, born June 28, 1901, who is a student in the Coos county public schools; Richard T., born April 18, 1903, who is also pursuing his studies; Verna A., whose birth occurred September 10, 1906; and Joseph M., born November 28, 1907.

Politically Mr. Lee votes the republican ticket, believing in the progressive policy of that party. He keeps himself well informed upon public affairs but has never sought office. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, his only fraternal affiliation. Agriculture is one of the most honorable occupations open to men; it is the base of not only the wealth of Coos county but in a great degree of national prosperity. Mr. Lee has contributed his share to the resources of his district by making the farm which he is developing and operating a modern and progressive enterprise.

BENTON MIRES is a true son of the open west. His birth occurred in that section and his childhood was spent in its great outdoors. He was at home in the saddle from the time when he was seven years of age and he ranged over the Oregon prairies and timber lands long before there was a fence in the state. He was born in Milwaukie, Clackamas county, Oregon, September 26, 1853, and is a son of John H. and Anna (Deardorff) Mires, both natives of Ohio. His mother was born in that state, September 18, 1817, and moved to Indiana with her parents when she was very young. She was married in that state to Fleming Byers and removed with him to Burlington, Iowa, where her husband died in 1848. In 1851 she was again married, her second husband being John H. Mires, the father of our subject. Two years later Mr. and Mrs. Mires began their journey across the plains. They journeyed with ox teams and arrived in Milwaukie, Oregon, after several months' continuous travel. They spent one winter in that city and in the following spring came to Douglas county, where the father bought Robert Steward's interest in a donation claim. After the father proved up his title he established his family upon his holding and remained in this section and was active in the cultivation of the soil until his death in 1888. In his early manhood John Mires had been engaged in the river traffic, plying on the Ohio and Mississippi with his vessel. In his Oregon life he was successful as a farmer and stock-raiser and acquired almost one thousand acres of the most fertile land in Douglas county. He was a staunch republican in politics but never aspired to public office. His wife was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church and survived her husband until 1893.

Benton Mires was reared at home upon his father's farm and acquired his education in the common schools of Douglas county. He was a broad and intelligent reader and in this way acquired a practical and thoroughly efficient education. When he was nineteen years of age he began teaching in the Douglas county schools and followed that profession in eastern Oregon for several years, teaching during the winter months and working upon the neighboring stock ranches during the summer. His early manhood was spent practically in the saddle and he resided in different parts of the state of Oregon, where his duty as a stock rancher called him. He became familiar with every inch of ground in the state of Oregon and became an expert in forestry. Beginning in 1890 he served for three years as a member of the National Guards of this state. In 1890 he engaged in the mercantile business with the firm of Hoover, Watson & Company. He remained in Fossil and was active in this connection for three years. In 1895 he came to Drain from Fossil in order to give his children the benefit of a course in the Central Oregon Normal School located in that city. For three years after his removal to Drain Mr. Mires was engaged in the buying and selling of stock. On June 10, 1898, he was appointed assistant forest agent with headquarters in Idaho. He removed to that state and followed the duties of his office until he was promoted to the position of forest supervisor of the Bitter Root forest reserves in Idaho. He did efficient and intelligent work in this line and his authority was unquestioned in everything that pertained to the trees and forest reserves of the west. In 1904 he established himself in the mercantile business and in the intervening eight years has built up an extensive and rapidly developing business along this line. He is one of the foremost business men in Drain and his activities always have for their object the welfare and progress of his native state. He looks beyond his individual success into the future of Douglas county and the state of Oregon and his undoubted influence is always given to constructive and progressive ideas.

Mr. Mires was twice married. On April 16, 1876, he wedded Miss Ada Putnam, a daughter of Charles F. and Roselle (Applegate) Putnam. Mrs. Mires' mother was a member of the prominent Applegate family and was a daughter of Jesse Applegate, one of the leading citizens of Douglas county. Mr. Mires and his first wife became the parents of five children, four of whom are still living: Harris Frederick, a graduate of the Central Oregon State Normal School, who was appointed by President Roosevelt as supervisor of education in the Philippines and is now serving as government auditor of accounts; Anna Roselle, the wife of D.

BENTON MIREN

V. Kuykendall, the prosecuting attorney for Lake and Klamath counties, with residence in Klamath Falls; Mary Vivian, who married John M. Cool, cashier of the Drain State Bank; and Velma, who clerks in her father's store. Mr. Mires' first wife died on the 22d of July, 1904. In November, 1910, Mr. Mires was again united in marriage. His second union was with Mrs. Sherwood Burr, formerly Miss Laura J. Warner. Mrs. Mires is prominent in the affairs of the Maccabees and is actively interested in this organization. In his political views Mr. Mires is a firm republican and is always actively interested in the policies and principles of that party. On the 14th of September, 1904, he was appointed by Governor Chamberlain as delegate to the third annual convention of the Oregon Irrigation Association but could not accept on account of the pressure of business duties. He likewise declined the proffered appointment of regent of the State Normal School. Fraternally he is master of Sunset Lodge, No. 144, F. & A. M., and also holds membership in Drain Camp, No. 259, W. O. W. He is one of the foremost men in the city of Drain and his prominence extends throughout Douglas county. His boyhood and early youth were spent out of doors and his rugged and hardy living has influenced his character with all the strength and firmness of an open life. He is a true westerner. His business relations are irreproachable and his honor and integrity unquestioned. His hospitality is warm and spontaneous and his life worthy, honorable and free from prejudice.

J. H. CARNAHAN, since the 6th of June, 1911, has practiced law in Klamath Falls. He was born in Detroit, Michigan, December 18, 1880, and the following year his parents removed to Little Rock, Arkansas, with their family. The father was a native of Ireland and the mother of Canada. She died in Arkansas in 1887, but Mr. Carnahan still makes his home near Little Rock, where he has always followed the occupation of farming.

J. H. Carnahan remained at home with his father until he was eighteen and one-half years old, when, on the 22d of July, 1899, he enlisted in the regular army as a member of Company L, Second Infantry, with which he served for three years, having arrived at Manila, September 25, 1899, and being honorably discharged July 2, 1902, at the Cuartel de España, Manila, Philippine Islands. For one year he was connected with the customs service in the Philippines and for three and one-half years with the United States naval service at the navy yard at Cavite, Philippine Islands. In 1907 he went to Washington, D. C., by way of Suez and New York, having practically made the trip around the world since sailing for the Orient. He was employed in the office of the secretary of the navy, at Washington, D. C., from 1907 to 1909, and during the time he was so employed, he graduated from the National University in 1908 and from Georgetown University in 1909, receiving his Bachelor of Laws degree from both schools. He afterward spent two years as special agent in the United States general land office in Arizona, Oregon, Washington and Alaska, and on the 6th of June, 1911, opened an office in Klamath Falls, where he has since engaged in practice.

His political allegiance is given to the democratic party, and fraternally he is connected with the Masons. He also became a member of Henry W. Lawton Post, No. 1, V. A. P., at Manila, Philippine Islands. He is in thorough sympathy with Oregon and the interests of the northwest and is making steady progress along professional lines, while at the same time he is proving his worth in matters of citizenship.

HARDY HOLMAN. The residence of Hardy Holman in Oregon covers more than sixty-four years, during fifty of which he has been identified with various enterprises in Polk county. During the long period of his activity he has manifested rare business sagacity in the direction of his affairs, while as a public official he has given most efficient service. The Holman family has been represented in Oregon for sixty-seven years, the first member having located here in 1844. This was John Holman, great-uncle of our subject, who joined a party coming from Missouri to Oregon across the plains, six months being spent on the journey. He located at McMinnville, Yamhill county, where he acquired six hundred and forty acres of land, which he cultivated until his death. He was joined, in 1845, by his wife and family, consisting of the following members: Daniel; Woodford; F. Dillard; F. Warren, a practicing physician; M. P. Deady, the first United States judge at Portland; and J. D., whose son Fred V., is a well known attorney of Portland.

Hardy Holman was born in Missouri and is a son of James S. and Mary (Bowman) Holman. The father was a son of Isaac Holman, a native of Tennessee, who in his early manhood emigrated to Missouri, where he spent his later days. The maternal grandparents were John and Elizabeth Bowman, who with four of their children crossed the plains to Oregon from Missouri in 1847, locating on a ranch, on a portion of which the town of Dallas now stands, and there they passed away at a ripe old age. Mr. and Mrs. James S. Holman began their domestic life on a farm in Lafayette county, Missouri, whence they subsequently removed to the Platte purchase, Platte county, Missouri. There they resided until 1847 when they decided to come to the northwest and establish a home. They made the trip in a wagon, with an ox team, joining a party composed of a train of fifty wagons of which Nathaniel Bowman, who had crossed the plains in 1844 and 1845, was captain. He held this position until they reached Ash Hollow, when owing to the size of the party another captain was appointed and the train was divided. They spent six months en route and upon their arrival Mr. Holman located on a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres on the Luckiamute river. At that time the family of Mr. and Mrs. Holman numbered five, as follows: Nancy; Hardy, our subject; John; Preston; and Nathaniel. The two youngest children, Amos H. and Mary Huldah, were born in Oregon. Success attended the efforts of Mr. Holman, who became one of the prominent cattle men of the state. He was a very capable business man, possessed of much foresight and sagacity, and during the mining days made a trip to California with a wagon load of supplies which he sold to the miners at a handsome profit. He was always distinguished by unusual powers of organization and executive ability and early became recognized as a leader in his community, taking a prominent part in public life. As a member of the state legislature he most capably represented the interests of Polk county for three terms, his service being marked by a singleness of purpose that characterized his official life at all times. He was sheriff of the county for seven years and filled many minor positions, in each and all of which he fulfilled his duties with a rare sense of conscientious obligation to the public. In matters of faith he was a Baptist and helped to build the church at Dallas, while he was for many years a trustee of the Baptist College at McMinnville. He had pronounced views on the liquor question, and was bitterly opposed to the traffic in intoxicants. In his political views he was a democrat and gave his support to the men and measures of that party until the Civil war, when he gave up his political allegiance, being opposed to the extension of slavery. He was the type of man that makes a most desirable pioneer settler, his high principles, pronounced views on all questions pertaining to the public welfare, particularly of a moral nature, and his strength of character, making him a strong force in the establishment of a community based upon the highest standards of citizenship. During his long period of residence in Polk county he was always a strong factor in promoting the advance of a newer civilization in the development of public interests. His death was deeply lamented not only in his immediate circle but in the county at large, for the interests of which he had worked tirelessly for many years, having the most implicit confidence in its future. Of his immediate family there are now left but his two sons, our subject, and Amos H., the youngest.

As he was only a young lad when his people brought him to Oregon, Hardy Holman's youthful recollections are largely centered about the scenes familiar to his manhood. When old enough to begin for himself he settled on a hundred and sixty acres of land on the Luckiamute river, but he later disposed of this and turned his attention to commercial pursuits. He established a general mercantile store at Buena Vista, on the Polk county line, which he successfully conducted for several years. Next, he engaged in the stock business in eastern Oregon, following which he purchased another ranch on the Luckiamute river, while later he engaged in sheep-raising. A capable business man, he has never hesitated to withdraw from an enterprise, when he saw an opportunity of doing better in something else, even when the undertaking seemed somewhat hazardous. The salient features of his success are enterprise and perseverance, and a determination of purpose that invariably enabled him to attain the thing to which he aspired. The capabilities that stamped him as a business man, marked him as one well able to lead, so he has oftentimes been called to public office and for the last fourteen years has been justice of the peace. The decisions rendered by him during the period of his service have been marked by a rare sense of judgment and a breadth of view that well qualify him for the duties of the office.

Mr. Holman was married in 1861 to Miss Margaret E. Allen, who was born in this state on the 10th of December, 1845, being now the oldest native-born lady in Polk county. She is a daughter of James M. Allen, who located in Polk county in 1845 on Salt creek. Later he removed to the vicinity of Salem and there he passed away at the age of sixty-five years. Of his marriage there were born seven children, three of whom died in infancy. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Holman there were also born seven children, as follows: James Milton, who is Indian government agent at Yainax, Klamath county; Mary E., the wife of F. E. Meyers, who is a farmer; Eva, now Mrs. Woods, the wife of the station agent at Dallas; Addie, who married A. M. Dalrymple, of Salem, Oregon; Andrew, who is a resident of Portland; Alice, the deceased wife of A. S. Lewis; and Meda, the wife of E. Jacobson, of Dallas.

The political views of Mr. Holman coincide with the principles of the republican party, on whose ticket he was elected sheriff of Polk county in 1882, serving for two years. He takes a very rigid stand on the liquor question, and is a strong advocate of temperance. He is one of the strong personalities of the county, whose public career has always been marked by the sound principles and high ideals that have actuated him in all his relations of life.

CHARLES J. VAN ZILE is one of the highly respected men of North Bend, where he is identified with many of the leading business enterprises of that city. He was born in New York, July 20, 1857, and is a son of Abraham and Harriett (Armour) Van Zile, the latter a sister of the late well known Philip D. Armour, who was one of the leading packers of Chicago. To Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Van Zile six children were born, as follows: Samuel, who is a resident of North Bend, Oregon; Abraham, Jr., a sketch of whom appears on another page of this work; Charles J., of this review; William, postmaster at Crandon, Wisconsin; Nelson, a resident of the state of Washington; and Harriett, who is the wife of N. J. Cousins, of North Bend, this state.

Charles J. Van Zile was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools. At the age of twelve years he started in life for himself at farm work. He later went with his parents to Wisconsin, where he remained for some time and then took up work on a stock ranch in the west, where he remained for seven years, after which he returned to his father's home in Wisconsin. The father died in 1872 and shortly afterward Charles J. Van Zile drove a team from Wisconsin to Missouri, where he was engaged in work on a stock ranch for some time and later established an Indian trading post, to which he gave his attention for twelve years. In 1892 he removed to Oregon, settling first at Roseburg, where he found employment with the government as forest ranger for four years. He then engaged in timber cruising and has the credit of having located for settlers many homesteads and timber claims in Oregon. In 1905 he took up his abode at North Bend, where he has since continued to reside. He was one of the charter members of the First National Bank at the time of its organization, of which his brother Abraham is now the president, and he also was identified with the organization of the Oregon Trust Company, of which he is a director. He is the owner of three hundred and eighty acres of timber land and also owns six business lots and many fine residence lots.

Mr. Van Zile was united in marriage to Miss Minnie La Salle, a native of Wisconsin and a daughter of Charles La Salle, who was a resident of Florence, Wisconsin. To Mr. and Mrs. Van Zile nine children have been born, as follows: Edith Mabel, the wife of George M. Sells of North Bend, Oregon; Mary Josephine, the wife of Earle E. Schrimser of St. Johns, Oregon; Harriett W., who is the wife of Andrew Holt of North Bend; Charles J., who is a high-school graduate and still resides under the parental roof; Jenette, who is also at home; and Ruth, Forrest, Hazel and Dorothy, all of whom are attending school.

Charles J. Van Zile is affiliated with the republican party and has been deputy county assessor in North Bend for three years. He was also a county officer during his residence in Wisconsin. His fraternal relations are with the Knights of Pythias, the Maccabees and the Foresters of America. Mrs. Van Zile is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Charles J. Van Zile, since taking up his residence at North Bend, has been identified with many of the leading business enterprises of his adopted city and is a man whose well known reputation for integrity and uprightness of character entitles him to be numbered among the most desirable citizens of this part of the state.

ALONZO W. LAMB has been a resident of Douglas county since 1893 and is a man well and favorably known as an extensive and successful operator in farm and ranch lands in this part of the state. He is at present serving in the office of mayor of Yoncalla with great acceptability to his constituents. He was born in Upton, Massachusetts, September 16, 1846, and is a son of Emery and Phoebe A. (Richmond) Lamb, the former a native of Massachusetts and the latter of Rhode Island. The father, immediately after his marriage, settled in Upton, Worcester county, Massachusetts, and engaged in farming. He later removed to Charlton, in the same county, and there bought a farm which was formerly owned by Dr. Morton, who discovered the anæsthetic properties of ether. On that land he lived until the time of his death.

Alonzo W. Lamb was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools and was later a student in the Charlton high school. On the 20th of August, 1862, when he was sixteen years of age, he enlisted in Company D, Fifty-first Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and served for one year. At the expiration of that time, on account of his extreme youth, his parents refused to give their consent for further service in the army and he was accordingly discharged, July 27, 1863. He returned to his home and for two terms attended the high school, after which he was engaged in work on his father's farm until just before his twenty-first birthday. Shortly before reaching his majority his father gave him his time and he at once apprenticed himself as a machinist at Whitinsville, Massachusetts, and continued in that work until he had completed his knowledge of the trade. He then, as a journeyman machinist, took up work at Holyoke and for several years worked there and at Springfield, Massachusetts. On account of failing health he later purchased a farm in Worcester county, near Brookfield, and engaged in general farming. He later purchased another farm, and while successfully operating his two farms he also worked in machine shops at various times for about twenty years. In 1888 he decided to dispose of his property in Massachusetts and remove to the western coast. For a time he was engaged in selling his real-estate holdings and, in the spring of 1888, he made an inspection trip to Oregon and while there purchased three hundred and twenty acres of land in Columbia county, thirty miles from Portland. He then returned to Massachusetts in the summer of that year and the following year brought his family and seven other people with him to Oregon. The business conditions at that time in this state proved unfavorable and Mr. Lamb, with his family and the entire party, who had come to Oregon, returned to Massachusetts, where he continued to live for four years during which time he occupied himself in the pursuit of his trade in machine shops. In 1893, he again came to Oregon and this time made a permanent settlement in Yoncalla, at which place he built the residence in which he now lives. Since establishing his home in Yoncalla he has been engaged in buying and selling farm and ranch lands in this part of Oregon. He, at one time, owned two hundred and forty acres in the vicinity of Yon-calla, all of which he has disposed of, at a very advanced price, selling a large part of his land near Yoncalla for four hundred dollars per acre.

Mr. Lamb was united in marriage June 20, 1869, to Miss Mary Prest, of Whitinsville, Massachusetts, and they are the parents of three children, one of whom survives, Gertrude H., the wife of C. H. Daugherty, an extensive prune grower of Yoncalla. Mr. Lamb is affiliated with the republican party and has served twelve years as a member of the school board. He was elected clerk of the board at the time the new schoolhouse was erected and was one of the dominant factors in securing the building, which was eventually completed after a severe and prolonged contest. He has served repeatedly as a member of the town council and as town recorder and town clerk and is the present incumbent in the office of mayor of Yoncalla.

Alonzo W. Lamb, since taking up his residence in Oregon, has been identified with the development of the agricultural and business interests of the section in which he lives and is a man who is held in high esteem by all who know him.

RICHARD LYSER. Six hundred acres of land fifteen miles up the Smith river from Gardiner, Oregon, intelligently developed along modern lines, an extensive stock-raising enterprise directed with conspicuous ability, and a dairy business of rapidly expanding proportions are the contributions which Richard Lyster has made to the progress of Douglas county and have been the means of placing him among the foremost citizens of that section. He was born on the Smith river, near Gardiner, Oregon, and is thus numbered among the native sons of this state. His natal day was June 29, 1868, and his parents were John and Elizabeth (Elliott) Lyster, the former a native of Canada and the latter of New York state. John Lyster came to California from Canada when he was a young man and for several years was engaged in the logging business in that state in partnership with Solomon Perkins. In 1865 they came to Oregon, arriving in Gardiner on May 1, of the same year, and continued their partnership in the lumber business for twenty years. John Lyster subsequently bought a ranch five miles up the Smith river from Gardiner but retained this property only a short time. He disposed of his holdings in order to purchase a ranch lying across the river from his son's present property, fifteen miles up the river from Gardiner. He later bought three other ranches on the north fork and owned and operated these with remarkable success until his death, in 1894, when he was fifty-seven years of age. His wife is still living and resides in Corvallis, Oregon, where she is well known and popular.

Richard Lyster remained at home during his childhood and acquired his education in the common schools of Douglas county. He had but limited opportunities in this line and was able to pursue his studies only three months in each winter. At the early age of sixteen he began life for himself, working in the lumber woods and for many years was identified with the logging industry when he was not needed in the operation of the home ranch. Upon his marriage, in May, 1891, he rented a ranch on the north fork of the Smith river, which he operated with much success for a few years and in 1900 was able to purchase the old home farm from his mother, on which he resided for seven years. He gained in this time a practical knowledge of modern and progressive agriculture in the aspects which it assumes in the American northwest and was prosperous and successful as a farmer. He sold the homestead eventually and purchased a portion of his present ranch. His original holdings comprise one hundred and seventy-two acres lying just across the river from his father's homestead. He has made extensive improvements upon his property and has added to his holdings at different times. He now operates five or six hundred acres of the most fertile and productive land in Douglas county and rents adjoining tracts. He is engaged in stock-raising on a large scale and this branch of his activities forms a valuable source of income to him. He also specializes in dairying and has built up a flourishing and rapidly expanding business in this line. He bases his success on progressive and sanitary methods, efficient modern equipment and intelligent and persevering labor.

On May 18, 1891, Mr. Lyster was united in marriage to Miss Gertrude Dewar, a native of Minnesota and a daughter of William Dewar, who came to Oregon and located on Schofield creek, Douglas county, in 1875. Mr. and Mrs. Lyster have six children: Sherman; Hazel, the wife of Nelson McCullough, of Marshfield, Oregon; Virginia; Geneva; Lyle; and Harry. All of the children are living at home with their parents except the eldest daughter, Hazel.

In his political views Mr. Lyster gives his allegiance to the socialist party, being a firm believer in the principles which he advocates. He has served as road supervisor of his district with much success and his political life has always been distinguished by strict integrity and intelligent activity. Fraternally he is a member of Sunset Lodge, No. 109, A. O. U. W., and of Gardiner Lodge, No. 132, I. O. O. F., in which organization he is connected with Encampment, No. 69. Mrs. Lyster is a member of the Riverside Lodge of Rebekahs, No. 100. Mr. Lyster is one of the substantial and well known men who own productive ranches on the Smith river. Intelligent activity always results in success and when it is combined, as in the case of Mr. Lyster, with industry and concentrated purpose it inevitably results in general expansion and development.

REV. THOMAS A. YOST is a regularly ordained and qualified elder of the United Evangelical church, to which organization he has given many years of successful ministerial labor. He was born in Armstrong, Pennsylvania, April 7, 1847, a son of Reuben and Sarah Yost. His paternal grandparents were natives of Germany and his maternal grandparent was of Scotch descent. The father, Reuben Yost, was a native of Pennsylvania and in early life became proficient as a blacksmith and carpenter. During his early years he was alternately engaged in the pursuit of the crafts of his trades and in later years became a partner in a merchandising business in his native state. In his family were nine children: Susanna and Mary, both deceased, the former having passed away in infancy; Thomas A., of this review; Francis M., who is engaged in farming in Reno county, Kansas, and is married and has six children; Rebecca and Emma, both deceased; Aaron, who is a sawmill operator of Black Rock, Oregon, and is married and has five children; Maggie, deceased; and William, a mill man of Polk county, Oregon.

MR. AND MRS. RICHARD LYSTER

Thomas A. Yost was reared at home and educated in the public schools. During the early years of his life, after completing his studies, he became an apprenticed wheelwright and blacksmith under the direction of his father and continued to be so engaged until he had fully mastered each of the above named crafts. He remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-one years of age, at which time he engaged independently in the blacksmith business, to which he continued to give his entire attention for a period of fourteen years, after which he removed to the west and settled near Lewisville, in Polk county, Oregon, where he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land and was there engaged in farming for three years. During the time he was engaged in agricultural pursuits he became a qualified and licensed preacher of the United Evangelical church and to the work of the ministry he consecrated his entire time for a period of sixteen years. During all of that time without interruption he served in the regular appointments of his church, being engaged as pastor on four separate fields of labor. Since his retirement from the active ministry he has been engaged in varied business interests and is now devoting his attention principally to the occupation of nurseryman. He, however, often supplies the pulpits in and about the neighborhood of his home. At the time he established his home in Oregon he preempted a claim of one hundred and fifty-one acres, located on the Siuslaw river, and afterwards purchased one hundred and sixty acres, which he later sold to the Siuslaw Boom Company. Immediately thereafter, he invested in one hundred and forty-three acres of excellent agricultural land, which he is now engaged in developing into a model nursery, which includes all of the varieties of apples and small fruits suitable for culture in the intermontain district of the Pacific coast.

On May 6, 1868, Rev. Yost was united in marriage to Miss Eliza A. Shick, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Valentine Shick, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania. To Rev. and Mrs. Yost nine children have been born. Jesse W. is a dairyman of Polk county, and holds the record of having the largest output of cream in his community. He is married and has three children, George, Hazel and Mabel. Clara passed away at the age of twelve. Ida died at the age of three and Reuben at seventeen. Mattie is the wife of Richard Hensley, a dairyman, and they reside on the north fork of the Siuslaw river. By her marriage she has become the mother of four children. Sadie married William Jeffcoth, a dairyman of Stayton, Oregon. William A. is a teacher in the public schools of Glenada and is also engaged in the building of boats. He is married and has two children. Wilkie C. and Francis M. reside at home with their parents.

Rev. Thomas A. Yost was for many years a consistent and loyal adherent of the republican party. Later in life, however, he has divided his support between that great political organization and the prohibition party. Fraternally he is associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which benevolent association he has been a member since twenty-one years of age, and he also belongs to the Masonic order. He is a regularly licensed and ordained elder of the United Evangelical church and has indeed accomplished much during his lifetime for the improvement and uplift of mankind. Sixteen of the strongest years of his manhood were devoted to work of the gospel. Failing health necessitated a change of vocation, however, and since that time he has been a successful agriculturist of Point Terrace in Lane county, this state. He is a highly respected man and is now engaged in laying the foundations for a first-class nursery, which bids fair to give a strong impetus to fruit culture in this state.

J. W. LINDSAY is now living retired in Klamath Falls but is still the owner of good ranch property in southern Oregon. He was born in Saline county, Missouri, June 29, 1849, a son of David and Julia Ann (Mullens) Lindsay. James W. Lindsay is understood to be a scion of the old Lindsay family of Maryland and Kentucky and hence descended from the powerful Lindsay clan of Scotland, which was more powerful in some periods of Scottish history than even the royal family, to which it was closely related. Its Viking blood, coming down the centuries from Niord, king of Sweden, gave virility to many old Scottish clansmen and to many of their descendants in America, among whom may be mentioned General and Governor Spottswood of pre-Revolutionary times; and the Lees, Tuckers, Moores, Dandridges, Randalls and other leading families of Virginia. General Robert E. Lee, son of "Light Horse Harry" of the Revolution, was a lineal descendant of Rachel, daughter of Sir David Lindsay, lion king at arms of Scotland, chief of the knights. The three Applegate brothers, Charles, Jesse and Lindsay, who were leading men in the great emigration from Missouri to Oregon in 1843, were sons of Rachel Lindsay of Kentucky and cousins to General Jesse Lindsay of the War of 1812. J. W. Lindsay is also distantly related to the Applegate family, one of the oldest and most numerous families in southern Oregon. His father, David Lindsay, was born in Dearborn county, Indiana, and in Saline county, Missouri, wedded Julia Ann Mullens, a native of Cooper county, Missouri. In 1849 he crossed the plains to California, going first to Hangtown, now Placerville, where he engaged in mining for about a year and a half. He then returned to Missouri by boat and suffered shipwreck off the coast of Acapulco. At length, however, he reached home in safety and remained a resident of Missouri until 1864, when he crossed the plains to the Grande Ronde valley of Oregon. In 1865 he removed to Lane county and in 1868 became a resident of Josephine county. He died at Grants Pass, December 3, 1907, when in the eighty-sixth year of his age, his birth having occurred on the 1st of May, 1822. Most of his life had been devoted to farming and stock-raising. He served as a soldier in the Mexican war and also under General Price in the Civil war and thus rendered valuable aid to his country in two of her most important military contests. He held membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and also in the Methodist church, South. His widow, who was born January 1, 1832, still survives him and is living at Grants Pass, Oregon. In their family were nine children: J. W., who was born while his father was in California in 1849; Martha, who is the widow of Si Messenger, of Grants Pass; Mrs. Emma Twigg, of Portland, Oregon; Luella, the wife of T. Y. Dean, of Grants Pass; Mrs. Belle Herbie, of Grants Pass; Mrs. Bessie Carr, of Portland; David La Grande, of Grants Pass; Richard; and Jefferson.

J. W. Lindsay resided with his parents until twenty-four years of age. He accompanied the family on their westward removal and in 1873 became a resident of Klamath county, where he has since made his home. Here he was engaged in the stock business until May 26, 1911, when he retired to Klamath Falls. Year after year his live-stock interests were carefully conducted and brought to him substantial financial returns. He now owns a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres forty miles east of Klamath Falls and in addition has some city property. He was in the employ of the United States government here during the Modoc Indian war of 1873, although not regularly enlisted for the service. He has been a witness of all the various changes which have transformed Klamath county from a pioneer district into a thickly populated and prosperous section of the state. As a stock-raiser he showed sound judgment, a thorough knowledge of the best grades of stock and put forth earnest effort to improve on the kind of stock raised in this part of the state.

In 1873 Mr. Lindsay was united in marriage to Miss Mollie Witt, a native of Oregon. They have two children: Dora, the wife of Joseph Lane, of Lakeview; and Addie, the wife of John H. Zwald, of Oakland, California. On the 19th of February, 1900, Mr. Lindsay married Mrs. Alice Campbell, widow of Joseph Campbell and a daughter of Partlett Oberchain, who was a native of Virginia and in 1861 came to the Rogue river country of Oregon, where he died four years ago. He had twelve children, eight of whom are now living, and Mrs. Lindsay had six children by her first marriage. She was one of the first students in the first academy in the Rogue river valley, located at Ashland.

Mr. Lindsay has led an active life, so that his present rest from labor is well deserved. He has seen great changes since coming to the coast, having lived here for forty-eight years. Realizing the trend of events along the line of progress, he has cooperated in the work of general improvement and is justly accounted one of the representative and valued citizens of Klamath county.

GEORGE W. VOGEL. Through indefatigable effort and judicious investment George W. Vogel has won the right to be classed with the representative citizens and men of affluence in Rainier, where he is now engaged extensively and successfully in the real-estate, loan and insurance business, handling both city and country property on his own behalf and for others. With keen insight he recognizes the possibilities of a situation and so places his investments that good returns are achieved.

Mr. Vogel was born in Hollidaysburg, Blair county, Pennsylvania, April 15, 1860. His father, Frederick Vogel, was born in Alsace, Germany, April 12, 1828, and in the year 1846 crossed the Atlantic, establishing his home in Pennsylvania. He was there residing at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war and in 1864 he espoused the cause of his adopted country, enlisting with a regiment of Pennsylvania volunteers. He participated in several engagements and was with Grant in front of Richmond when Stonewall Jackson surrendered. He never made his way farther west than Minnesota, where he took up his abode in 1878, there giving his attention to general agricultural pursuits until his death in 1901. He wedded Mary Schmidt, who was born in Germany in 1840 and was brought to the United States when only a year old. In their family were twelve children, nine sons and three daughters.

George W. Vogel pursued his education in the common schools of Pennsylvania and in the normal school of St. Cloud, Minnesota, from which he was graduated with the class of 1888. Previous to that time, however, he had engaged in teaching school and thus provided the funds necessary to enable him to continue his own course. Following his graduation he turned his attention to the real-estate business in St. Cloud in company with Captain West. There he remained until 1893, when he came to the Pacific coast country, making his way to Washington, where he engaged in teaching school and music for several years after devoting one year to mining in that state. In 1896 he went to Circle City, Alaska, and engaged in the packing business, making trips to the mines from Circle City, which was then a very extensive town composed entirely of log cabins. Mr. Vogel remained in Alaska for seven years, opened up the first big tent restaurant in Dawson and also introduced the first moving picture show there. After his experience in that northern country he returned southward and in 1902 located in Seattle, where he was engaged in the real-estate business for about five years or until 1907, when he came to Rainier. Here he opened a real-estate, loan and insurance office and has since been accorded a large clientele, conducting an extensive business in all branches. He handles his own property as well as real estate belonging to others and his wise investment has brought him a substantial return. He has firm faith in the future of Rainier, which is growing steadily in population, a number of manufacturing interests being here established at a recent date, which has brought a considerable number of people to the town and promises well for its future prosperity.

On the 7th of June, 1909, Mr. Vogel was united in marriage to Miss Exel LeDuc, who was born in L'Anse, Michigan, a daughter of Joseph LeDuc, a timberman of that district. Both Mr. and Mrs. Vogel are members of the Catholic church. His political allegiance is given to the republican party and he has served as president of the water board but is not an active politician in the sense of office seeking, preferring to concentrate his time and energies upon his business affairs, which, carefully managed, are bringing to him success.

CHARLES E. FLATMAN has for the past twenty-two years been employed by the government as a carpenter at Fort Stevens. His birth occurred in Suffolk, England, on the 3d of April, 1838, his parents being Eastgate and Harriet Flatman who spent their entire lives in that country, the father passing away in 1869 and the mother in 1848. Eastgate Flatman followed carpentering and contracting throughout his entire business career. He was the father of nine children, of whom Charles is the only survivor and the only one who came to America.

Charles E. Flatman spent the first thirty-one years of his life in the land of his nativity and in 1869 emigrated to North America, settling first in Belleville, Canada, where he worked at the carpenter's trade for one year. He next spent six months in Brantford, Canada, and then crossed the border into the United States, locating at Fort Gratiot, Michigan, where he remained for a similar period. Subsequently he removed to Detroit, Michigan, and there was employed in the ear shops of the Michigan Central Railroad as a builder of passenger cars for a period of fifteen years. In 1889 he came to Clatsop county, Oregon, and has since remained in the government service as a carpenter at Fort Stevens. He has maintained his residence at Hammond for the past eleven years, but prior to 1900 his family lived at Jordan, Linn county, Oregon. In addition to his home he also owns some property at Portland.

In 1860, in London, England, Mr. Flatman wedded Miss Mary A. T. Thompson, who was there born on the 24th of December, 1843. Her parents, George and Mary Thompson, were likewise natives of England and celebrated their marriage in that country. Mrs. Thompson passed away when her daughter Mary was but four years of age, leaving a family of three children, as follows: George, whose demise occurred in the Bermudas, West Indies; Mrs. Flatman; and Robert, who is also deceased. Unto our subject and his wife were born six children, namely: George, a native of London, England, who now resides at Hammond, Oregon; Charles W., who was likewise born in England and now makes his home at Grand Rapids, Michigan; Arthur, a native of London, England, who now resides at Mill City, Marion county, Oregon; Frank, who was born in Michigan and now lives at Hammond, Oregon; Robert, who is deceased; and one who died in infancy.

Mr. Flatman gives his political allegiance to the republican party but has never sought office as a reward for his party fealty. He is an Episcopalian in religious faith and fraternally is identified with the Red Men at Hammond. In the community where they reside both Mr. and Mrs. Flatman are well known and highly esteemed as people of genuine personal worth.

JOHN B. COFFEY, occupying a position of leadership in the ranks of the republican party in Oregon and known in business circles of Portland as an enterprising and successful merchant tailor, has throughout his entire life been identified with the interests of the state. He was born in Salem on the 13th of September, 1867. His father, James Coffey, a native of Massachusetts, became a member of the United States army and came to Oregon with Captain Augur, afterward brigadier general, about 1852. He remained for some time at Fort Hoskins, but subsequently went to Corvallis and afterward to Salem, where he spent his remaining days engaged in the furniture business. He was police judge and justice of the peace for about fourteen years in that city, which service won him the title of Squire Coffey. His decisions were strictly fair and impartial and that his incumbency in office was satisfactory to his fellow townsmen is indicated by his long retention in the position. He died December 31, 1888, at the age of fifty-two years. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Hannah Harrigan, removed from Massachusetts to California. Like her husband, she was a native of Ireland, both having come to the new world in early childhood days. Their marriage was celebrated at San Francisco and Mrs. Coffey is still living in Portland at the age of seventy-three years. For a considerable period and at the time of his death he was a member of the Pioneer Society.

John B. Coffey was educated in the public schools of Salem and in Willamette University and entering business life occupied the position of telegraph operator at Salem until the 11th of September, 1886, when he was transferred to Portland. Here he continued in a similar position until 1887, when, feeling that the opportunity for advancement in that direction was limited, he turned his attention to the clothing business, in which he was associated with A. B. Crosman until 1899. In that year he opened his present merchant tailoring establishment, to which he has given the greater part of his attention since. He continues one of the leading merchants of this character in Portland and draws his patronage from among the best residents of the city.

In other fields Mr. Coffey has become widely known. He is a leading member of the Portland Lodge of Elks, of which he is a past exalted ruler, while at the present writing he is filling the office of treasurer. He has remained in office continuously for nine years. He also belongs to the Royal Arcanum, the Tribe of Ben Hur, the Knights of Columbus and the Knights and Ladies of Security. He, moreover, cooperates in the movements instituted by the Commercial Club for the development of Portland's interests and the promotion of her growth.

In political connections Mr. Coffey is perhaps even more widely known. He is recognized as one of the efficient workers in the ranks of the republican party and in 1906 was elected to represent his district in the state legislature. The following year he was a candidate for mayor and ran second among four contestants. Still higher honors awaited him, however, for in 1908 he was elected to the state senate for a term of four years. He gives to each question which comes up for settlement his earnest consideration and his indorsement of any measure is an indication of his honest belief in its efficacy as a feature of good government or as an element in the promotion of the best interests of the commonwealth.

Mr. Coffey was married in Portland, November 8, 1893, to Miss Marie Boire, a daughter of Ludger Boire, of this city. They have four children: Genevieve, fifteen years of age; Marian, aged fourteen years; Valiere, nine years; and James, seven. The family residence is at No. 449 Benton street. The advancement of Mr. Coffey either in business or political circles is not due to any fortunate combination of circumstances but is the direct and legitimate result of his own efforts and ability whereby he has come to be known as one of the foremost residents of Portland.

HON. BENJAMIN HUNTINGTON, Jr., is one of the foremost business men of Drain and is also active in the educational and political life of Douglas county. He is a native son of Oregon, having been born in Scotts Valley, Douglas county, on September 22, 1881. His parents were Benjamin and Mary (Miller) Huntington, of whom more extended mention is made on another page in this work.

Benjamin Huntington Jr., spent his early life at home and acquired his education in the public schools of his native state. He later attended the Central Oregon State Normal School at Drain and was graduated from this institution with the class of 1901. He immediately took up the study of pharmacy, entering the drug store of Joseph Lyons. He spent two years acquiring the details of this science and during the same period acted as assistant postmaster of the city and was prominently identified with one of its banking institutions. In the fall of 1903 he entered the State University of Oregon, from which he was graduated with the degree of B. A. in 1908. Mr. Huntington has always been an earnest student, a lover of good books and a deep reader. The efficient education which he has obtained was entirely the result of his efforts. Although he had the privilege of drawing upon his father for funds in order to pursue his studies, he never made use of this advantage, preferring to make his way independently. He worked his own way through college and made such a brilliant record in his work that upon his graduation he was offered the chair of United States history and civics in the Eugene high school, Eugene, Oregon. When he accepted the position he was put in charge of classes in his two special subjects and was also appointed coach of the debating team. He did such successful work as a teacher that in the second year of his connection with the school he was appointed assistant principal, still retaining, however, his position as instructor in debating. He severed his connection with the Eugene high school in 1910 and came to Drain in June, of that year. In the May previous to this, he with his brother, C. P. Huntington, and his father had purchased the drug business of E. R. Applegate and upon Benjamin Huntington's arrival in Drain he took in charge the entire direction of a most flourishing enterprise. He has since retained the active management of the business and under his control and policy it has developed and grown into one of the largest pharmacies in Douglas county. The interests in the business which his father and brother hold are purely financial and the entire charge of the enterprise rests with Benjamin Huntington. He carries on his business along progressive and scientific lines. He is an expert pharmacist and well acquainted with the chemical combinations of drugs. His knowledge is accurate and he is rapidly obtaining a reputation throughout the city of Drain as a careful and conscientious worker in his chosen field. He has, however, never slackened in his interest in education and has done remarkable work in this line. He is a member of the county educational board and in connection with his duties in this respect is the author of the supervisory law which provides for deputy superintendents of schools in counties having more than fifty districts. This law has done more good in Douglas county than any other one enactment passed in the last five years and has been a dominating influence in the promotion of general education throughout the state.

Politically Mr. Huntington gives his allegiance to the republican party. He is a staunch supporter of the local organization and has been prominent in public affairs of his county and state for several years. In November, 1910, he was one of six candidates for the nomination for state representative on the republican ticket. He was elected by a large majority over his nearest competitor. His public life was distinguished by marked ability and a political sense which is rare and which always makes for its possessor a brilliant public reputation. His influence was always given to the cause which he believed to be just and in all his political career his actions were influenced by a careful regard for the wishes of the people he served.

Fraternally Mr. Huntington holds membership in Drain Camp, No. 259, W. O. W., but beyond this has no connections of this kind. He is a member of the Christian church of Drain and is a well known figure in its affairs. As a politician and as an educator he does the real and active work of his life. Intelligent ability and a broad tolerance mark his public service. His work on the educational board has been distinguished and eminent and he may be ranked among the men whose careers have been conspicuously useful in raising their fellow citizens to a broader and more liberal educational life.

ABRAHAM VAN ZILE is among the widely known and highly respected citizens of North Bend, Coos county, where he is successfully engaged in the banking business, being at the present time the president of the First National Bank of North Bend. He was born in 1854, in New York city, and is a son of Abraham and Harriett (Armour) Van Zile. The father's people were of Holland origin and the founder of the family settled in America in 1620. Abraham Van Zile, Sr., was an expert ship carpenter and at one time was in the employ of Commodore Vanderbilt. His wife was a sister of the late Philip D. Armour of Chicago. To them were born six children, as follows: Samuel, a furniture dealer of North Bend; Abraham, of this review; Charles, engaged in the timber business at North Bend; William, postmaster at Crandon, Wisconsin; Nelson, residing in Ancordis, Washington; and Harriett, the wife of N. J. Cousins, of North Bend. Both the father and mother of this family died many years ago.

Abraham Van Zile was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools. He remained under the parental roof until nineteen years of age and then engaged in logging in Wisconsin, in company with a partner, and continued in that business for ten years. He next opened a merchandising business in Crandon, Wisconsin, having some time previously received the appointment of postmaster. On April 6, 1903, he removed to Oregon and settled in Roseburg, where he remained for a short time and then came to Coos bay, where he later purchased property at North Bend. He was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of North Bend and is the holder of the first stock certificate issued by that corporation. He has been a member of the board of directors since the bank was established and in 1910 was elected president.

On settling in North Bend he engaged in the real-estate and insurance business and purchased twelve thousand dollars worth of land as an initial investment and has since continued to operate in property in that city and in Coos county. He organized the Coos Bay Tide Land Company, of which he is president, and also organized the Oregon Trust Company, of which corporation he is also the president. He is the owner of many valuable business properties and uses all his private funds for investment purposes at North Bend.

Mr. Van Zile was first united in marriage to Miss Arika Parsons, a native of New York, who removed with her parents to Wisconsin at an early day, where she celebrated her marriage and died in 1890. She was the mother of one child, Harriett, who is the widow of the late E. Le Roe of Seattle, Washington. Mr. Van Zile was later united in marriage to Miss Caroline Parsons, who is a cousin of the first Mrs. Van Zile. She is a native of New York and they are the parents of two children. Ethel, who is employed by her father, has an excellent business education, and graduated from the commercial course at Mount Angel Academy of this state. Eva Van Zile is attending school.

Mr. Van Zile is affiliated with the republican party and held the offices of constable, county supervisor, county treasurer, assessor and county commissioner and served on the school board for fifteen years in Wisconsin. During his residence at North Bend he has been a member of the school board for three years and councilman for two years and for business reasons refused to run for the office of mayor. He was formerly identified with the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. His religious sympathies are with the Presbyterians and Lutherans. Abraham Van Zile is a man of unquestioned integrity and one of the most enterprising citizens of this portion of the state.

HORACE M. MANNING is engaged in the general practice of law in Klamath Falls. He was born in Jacksonville, Oregon, September 20, 1879, and is a son of J. W. and Belle (Galloway) Manning, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Mississippi, both of whom crossed the plains at an early day with their parents and later were married at Jacksonville. In 1883 they came to Klamath county, where they now reside. They are the parents of eight children, six of whom are living.

Horace M. Manning was reared in his parents' home and received his early education in the public schools. In 1897 he was graduated from the high school at Klamath Falls and from 1897 to 1898 he was a student in the State Normal School at Ashland. In March, 1898, he went to Chicago, where he remained until 1899. He then entered the law department of the Northwestern University at Evanston, from which institution he was graduated with the class of 1908 and later admitted to the bar of Illinois. In March, 1909, he returned to Oregon and was admitted to the bar in this state and has since continued to be actively engaged in the practice of law at Klamath Falls. He and John Irwin have their law offices in common but their interests in the practice of law are entirely separate.

Mr. Manning was united in marriage in 1903 to Miss Emily Louise Pooley, a native of Columbus, Ohio. She is a daughter of Dr. Pooley, who was the founder of the Toledo Medical Institute. He is known to be a man to whose care the interests of his clients may be safely entrusted.

CHARLES S. WINSOR has for many years been among the most active and successful men of North Bend, in which city he resides and is engaged in the banking business, being at present the president of the Bank of Oregon. He was born in Pennsylvania, July 15, 1865, and is a son of William and T. C. (Whyte) Winsor, the former a native of New York and the latter of England. The father emigrated to Oregon with his family in 1871, making the journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama. During his early life in Oregon he did volunteer service in the Indian wars. He had a family of four children: Anna, the wife of William Gauntlett of Seattle, Washington; Mary, who married A. H. Gauntlett, of Gold Beach, Oregon; Charles S., the subject of this review; and Harvey, deceased.

Charles S. Winsor, with his parents, emigrated to Oregon when he was a child of six years. He was reared at home and received his elementary education in the public schools. He remained under the parental roof until he was sixteen years of age, at which time he engaged in work for R. D. Hume, who was the owner of an extensive salmon-canning business. Mr. Winsor continued in the employ of Mr. Hume for a period of twenty-three years, during which time his first work was that of putting fish into cans and later he was promoted to the position of manager of the entire business. At the time of this promotion he was only eighteen years of age. In that position he continued to serve for a period of twenty-one years, during which time he lived at Gold Beach and also at San Francisco and had charge of three canneries, one in Alaska, one on Rogue river and one on Klamath river. Each establishment had connected with it a general store and Mr. Winsor had entire charge of all the business connected with both the canning and mercantile interests of Mr. Hume. Upon the organization of the Bank of Oregon he accepted the position as cashier and later was elected to the presidency, in which position he has served for the past eighteen months. The Bank of Oregon was organized with a capital stock of fifty thousand dollars and has since done a growing business. The present officers and directors of the bank, all of whom are stockholders, are as follows: C. S. Winsor, president; L. J. Simpson, vice president; Henry Hewitt, Jr., and Seymour H. Bell, vice presidents, residing in Tacoma, Washington; and E. H. Jones, cashier. In addition to the above C. R. Smith and Captain A. M. Simpson are stockholders in the bank.

Mr. Winsor was united in marriage, in 1892, to Miss Kate Anthony, a native of California. They are the parents of two children: C. Joseph, who is attending school in North Bend; and Helen Charlotte. Mr. Winsor is affiliated with the republican party and has been city treasurer of North Bend for the past four years. He is now in the midst of his second term. He was also port commissioner for one term. His fraternal relations are with the Masonic order, in which he is a thirty-second degree Mason and also a Knights Templar of Marshfield, Oregon. He is among the well known, influential men of Coos county and is in every way entitled to be numbered among the enterprising and desirable citizens of this part of the state.

H. A. CLODFELTER, commercial traveler for the Mitchell, Lewis & Stover Company, of Portland, Oregon, is a native of Iowa, and a son of a pioneer of that state. He was born in Albia, February 19, 1873, his parents being N. O. and Clara E. (Scott) Clodfelter. On both sides the family is of German extraction and his father was for some time a surveyor in his native country. The father came as a pioneer to Iowa when the entire state was prairie land and most of the inhabitants were Indians. The section in which he settled was infested with rattlesnakes which, however, formed only one of the many dangers of those early times. With the sturdy determination which distinguished the first settlers in the state, N. O. Clodfelter developed his land and gradually became successful as a general farmer. At the outbreak of the Civil war he offered his services to the Federal government as a member of the Seventeenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry and remained in that regiment until honorably discharged. He came to Oregon October 2, 1885, and the latter years of his life were spent in Portland, Oregon. He was an employee of the postal department of the United States under the civil service act. He died July 21, 1908. His wife is still living and her father D. H. Scott, is also a veteran of the Civil war, having served as Lieutenant of the Forty-third Indiana Volunteers.

After completing the collegiate course at Monmouth, Oregon, H. A. Clodfelter began his business life as an employe of Klemson & Clodfelter Brothers at Talmage, Oregon in the flour milling business. Soon afterward he became connected with the Mitchell, Lewis & Stover Company, of Portland and has acted in their interest in various capacities for many years. Through successive stages he worked his way upward becoming first superintendent and finally commercial traveler in which capacity he acts at the present time. His position is one of responsibility and trust and he has proven himself fully able to meet its demands. His integrity, enterprise, and progressive spirit have been well tested and they have brought him the confidence and esteem of his employers and the respect of his many friends.

At Independence, Oregon, January 4, 1893, Mr. Clodfelter was united in marriage to Miss Minnie O. Johnson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Orlando Johnson, of Wauconda, Illinois. Mrs. Clodfelter's father died when she was very young and her mother afterward married Mr. S. O. Darrell, of Wauconda, who was a volunteer in the Civil war, serving during the entire period of hostilities. Mr. and Mrs. Clodfelter have two children, V. Lucille and Nolan A. Mr. Clodfelter has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows since 1903. His grandfather was a whig for many years and joined the republican party upon its organization. Loyalty to its principles has become a tradition in the family through the generations and Mr. Clodfelter is an earnest upholder of republican doctrines although never active as an office seeker.

ANDREW ANDERSON has been identified with agricultural interests on North lake since he took up a homestead claim in that section in 1905. He learned the details of his occupation in his native country of Finland where his father was engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was born in 1866. His parents were natives of Finland and had twelve children, six of whom are living: Jack, who resides in Finland; Alex, a resident of Michigan; August, who makes his home in his native country of Finland; Mary, of Michigan; Annie, who also resides in Michigan; and Andrew, the subject of this review.

Andrew Anderson received his early education in the public schools of Finland and left his native country in 1887. When he was twenty-one years old, he came to America and settled in Michigan where he worked in the copper mines for one year and a half. At the end of that period he removed to Astoria, Oregon, where he followed the occupation of fishing for about two years. He then came to Coos bay and worked in the coal mines and in the timber woods for about fifteen years. In 1905 he took up a homestead claim on North lake near Lakeside and is still engaged in active operation of one hundred and eight acres of land in that section. He uses scientific and intelligent methods in farming and his dairy, to which he gives special attention, is conducted along modern and sanitary lines. He makes system and sanitation his principal considerations and is very successful.

In 1904 Mr. Anderson was united in marriage to Mrs. Hannah Stonelake, a native of Finland. She was the widow of Matt Stonelake and had five children by her first marriage: Stanford, who is attending school and living at home; and Victor, Emma, Mathew and Esther, who are living on the home farm. To Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Anderson have been born five children: Edna, whose birth occurred in 1906; William, Arthur and Ernest, who are living with their parents; and Andrew, who has passed away.

Andrew Anderson gives his allegiance to the republican party. He has never sought public office, preferring to give his entire attention to dairying and farming.

GEORGE M. JONES. All honor is due to the pioneer settlers who braved the hardships, trials and dangers of frontier life and planted the seeds of civilization in hitherto undeveloped and unimproved regions. To this class belongs George M. Jones, "a big-hearted pioneer stockman," who stands high in the regard of his fellow citizens. He is the owner of about forty-three hundred acres of land and his success has been honorably won through his own labors. He was born July 3, 1838, in Cooper county, Missouri, a son of Abraham and Matilda (Crum) Jones, who were natives of Kentucky and Virginia respectively. They went to Missouri in childhood with their parents, were married there and both died in that state, the mother passing away when her son George was about eighteen years of age, while the father died at the age of eighty-four. He had married again and there were two children by the second marriage, while four sons and one daughter were born of the first marriage.

George M. Jones continued a resident of Missouri until 1859, when at the age of twenty-one years he crossed the plains to California with ox teams. He first worked for wages on a farm and later began the cultivation of rented land. In the spring of 1864 he went to Idaho with his uncle, driving a band of sheep, and in that state he worked in the mines until the fall of 1865, when he came to Oregon, settling in the Wilamette valley, twelve miles below Salem. For a year he was employed on a ranch and then spent a year in Cottage Grove, making rails and working in a sawmill. In the spring of 1867 he went to Idaho with sheep in company with J. H. McCarty, with whom he continued to be associated for several years, and in partnership with whom after three years he purchased a bunch of cattle. They traveled back and forth between Idaho and Nevada with cattle for a number of years and in the spring of 1876 Mr. Jones came to the Chewaucum valley. In 1881 he settled on a homestead on the river and is still the owner of that property. In the fall of 1895 he bought a ranch of seven hundred and eighty-seven acres, three miles south of Paisley. He has eight hundred acres in the ranch where he homesteaded. He also owns a tract of one hundred and sixty acres adjoining the home place and one hundred and sixty acres two miles south of his homestead, together with two tracts in the mountains comprising eighteen hundred and fifteen acres, and a ranch of four hundred and eighty acres. Thus, in all he has about forty-three hundred acres of land in Lake county. He ran cattle until 1911, when he sold eighteen hundred head and retired from that business. He is one of the best known stockmen and ranchers of southern Oregon and his business ability is evidenced in the success which has come to him as the years have gone by. He has worked earnestly and diligently, has displayed keen sagacity in controlling his interests and is now comfortably situated in life as the result of his energy and perseverance. He stands high in the regard of his fellow townsmen and merits the confidence accorded him.

On July 9, 1878, Mr. Jones was united in marriage with Mrs. Florence (Avery) Johnson, who was born in Illinois, March 5, 1845, and crossed the plains with her parents, Joseph and Martha Avery. There are two children of this marriage: Frances J., who is the wife of W. B. Snyder, of Lakeview, sheriff of Lake county; and Anna F., at home. George M. Jones is a Master Mason and has always been loyal to the teachings of the craft. He is a large, fine looking man who bears his seventy-four years lightly. For more than a half century he has remained upon the Pacific coast and in the different localities in which he has lived has borne his part in the work of public progress, while at the same time he has controlled his business affairs in a manner that has gained for him a place among the prosperous residents of southern Oregon.

MAJOR MORTON TOWER is one of the distinguished and respected citizens of Empire and is at present filling the office of collector of customs. He was born in Massachusetts, February 23, 1840, and is a son of Isaac and Minora A. (Brackett) Tower, the former a native of Massachusetts and the latter of Vermont. In their family were seven children of whom four are living. Adelia is the widow of Seth Mann of Freeport, Illinois, and has one child, Ida. Ella, the widow of Stillman S. Mann, of San Francisco, California, has two children, Charles S. and Fred A. Charles W., who is engaged in the practice of medicine at Marshfield, Oregon, is married and has three children: Jay B., Isaac R. and Nellie B. Morton, who completes the family, is the subject of this review.

Morton Tower was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools. After passing through the lower grades he was graduated from the high school at Randolph, Massachusetts. At the age of twenty he engaged in the jewelry business at Boston and was thus occupied for one year. On the 17th of April, 1861, he enlisted in the Union army and was mustered into service in the Fourth Battalion of Rifles, Massachusetts Militia, in which he served for three months. On July 16, 1861, he reenlisted in the army and as sergeant of his company was mustered into service in the Thirteenth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry and remained in active duty until September 30, 1864, at which time he received his honorable discharge. During his time of service he was promoted to the rank of second lieutenant, then first lieutenant and later to that of captain of his company, after which he was brevetted major, holding that rank at the time when he was honorably mustered out of the army. He was wounded at the battle of Bull Run and also at the battle of Fredericksburg, and was taken prisoner at Gettysburg, July 1, 1863, and was confined in Libby Prison. He has the distinction of having been one of the one hundred and nine men who tunneled their way from the cellar of the old prison underground for some distance, reaching the surface at a point sufficiently far from the prison to give them a chance for liberty. Of the one hundred and nine officers who made their escape he was one of the fifty-three who succeeded in reaching the Union line. At the close of the war, being in a disabled condition physically, he devoted much of his time to travel in various parts of the country. In 1874 he settled at Empire, where he has since continued to reside. For six years after establishing his home in Oregon he was employed in the United States engineering corps and was later appointed deputy collector of customs and continued as such until 1902, when he was appointed collector of customs and has since held that position, devoting his entire time to the duties of his office. He is one of the real-estate owners of Coos county and is the owner of the very fine residence, in which he lives, at Empire.

On February 23, 1869, Major Tower was united in marriage to Miss Anna M. Loudon, a native of England and a daughter of Thomas and Margaret (Lawson) Loudon, both of whom were born in Scotland. Mrs. Tower emigrated with her parents to America and with them settled in Boston in 1850. Major and Mrs. Tower are the parents of a son, Morton L., who was born in Boston, January 5, 1870, and who married Cornelia Smith, a native of New York, but whose parents are now residents of San Francisco, California. To Mr. and Mrs. Morton L. Tower have been born three children: Gladys, born at Coos Bay, November 5, 1896, who is a student in the high school at San Francisco; Ella Gwynedde, born October 20, 1897, who is attending school at Eureka, California; and Cornelia M., born October 27, 1908. The father of these children received his elementary education in the public schools of Coos Bay, Oregon. He later pursued a scientific course in engineering in a San Francisco college, from which he was later graduated. At the age of eighteen he entered the services of the United States government and is at present a member of the engineering corps and assistant engineer in the United States army, department of engineers.

MORTON TOWER

Major Tower is a loyal member of the republican party. He is one of the honored veterans of the Civil war and a man who as an officer for many years in the United States service has earned the respect of his fellow officers and comrades in the field. He now holds one of the most responsible positions in the gift of the government as collector of customs and is a man identified with every public measure intended to improve the conditions of the people in his county and state.

GEORGE A. WOLF, who since January, 1911, has owned and conducted a hotel at Sandy, Clackamas county, was born in Pennsylvania, August 4, 1858. His parents were Michael and Susan (Solada) Wolf, both of whom were born in Pennsylvania, of German ancestry. They always made their home in their native state, where the father passed away, June 7, 1892, and the mother, November 17, of that year. The father was a butcher and an extensive stock dealer. In their family were eight children: Mary, who is the wife of James Solada, of Gratz, Pennsylvania; Elizabeth, who is the wife of Charles Keener, of Denver, Colorado; Susan, who married Frank Ritzman, of Pennsylvania; George A., of this review; Louisa, who is Mrs. Edward Wolfgang, of Pitman, Pennsylvania; Kate, who is Mrs. Harvey Fidele, of the same state; Alice, who is the wife of Newton Schminky, of Sandy, Oregon; and Amanda, who died at the age of six months.

George A. Wolf grew to manhood in his native state, receiving a common-school education, and later took a business college course. When twenty-two years of age he took up coal mining in his native state and spent seven years in that work at Turner and Williamstown. He then followed various occupations for two years, after which he engaged in the produce business at Gratz and in that vicinity for seven years. Subsequently he learned the mason's trade and stone-cutting, at which he worked until 1900, when he removed to the state of Washington settling at Stella, where he was employed in the lumber woods for one and one-half years. Afterwards he came to Oregon and purchased near Dover one hundred and sixty acres of land, on which he resided until January, 1911. He improved his farm and now has sixty acres under a high state of cultivation. At the present time he owns and conducts a hotel in Sandy, meeting with excellent success. Also he owns other business property here, has some factory lots and is a stockholder in the Clackamas County Bank. He is interested in horses and owns a share in a thoroughbred stallion.

On December 27, 1879, Mr. Wolf wedded Miss Ellen Cerby, who was born in Pennsylvania, a daughter of Henry and Sarah Cerby. Both parents were natives of Pennsylvania and have always made that state their home. The mother is still living there but the father passed away in 1878. In their family were ten children: Frank, of Sunbury, Pennsylvania; Ellen, deceased, who was Mrs. George A. Wolf; Savilla, who became the wife of Newton Baughman and passed away in 1886; Elizabeth, who married George Foust and both are now deceased; John, of Shamokin, Pennsylvania; Edward, of Center county, Pennsylvania; Polly, the wife of Canara Artz, of Kansas; Charley, of Herndon, Pennsylvania; Malinda, the wife of George Wolf; and Cora, who is the wife of Israel Byerly. On the 23d of December, 1893, Mr. Wolf again married, his second union being with Mary Wedle, who was born in Perry county, Pennsylvania, in which state her parents still reside. She is the second in order of birth in a family of eight children. The others are: Kate, who is the wife of Thomas Green, of Perry, Pennsylvania; Augusta, who is the wife of Felix Leshner, of Perry; George, of Pitman, Pennsylvania; Thomas, of Allentown, Pennsylvania; Annie, the wife of Donald Herb, of Pennsylvania; and Harry and Enis, both of whom reside with their parents.

In his political views Mr. Wolf is a republican and he has always taken an active interest in local party issues. He has been a member of the city council of Sandy ever since this town was incorporated and has given much attention to the interests of education and served on the school board for several years. In his business affairs Mr. Wolf is recognized as a man of high ability, executive force and keen discernment, who has carefully placed his investments and is capably managing them. He is meeting with much success in the hotel business by reason of his honorable methods and his earnest desire to please his patrons.

ADOLPH LINDROS is numbered among the intelligent and active farmers who are so largely responsible for the development and progress of Coos county. He was born in Finland in 1876, and is a son of K. A. and Hannah Lindros. His parents were natives of Finland and to them six children were born: Kusta B., who married in her native country and is still residing there; Carl F., a resident of Finland; Adolph, the subject of this review; Edward V., who lives with his family in Corvallis, Oregon; and Hannah and Sana, both deceased.

Adolph Lindros was educated in his native country and remained at home until he was fourteen years of age. He was born upon his father's farm and worked in a general merchandise store for four and one-half years before he came to America. He settled in Michigan and was active in various occupations for a year and a half. In 1897 he came to Oregon and settled in Marshfield where he worked in the government employ, helping in the construction of the jetty at the mouth of Coos bay. After six months he hired out as a farm laborer on Ten Mile lake and worked in the employ of others for one year. He afterward spent three years in the timber business and then took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres near Lakeside. He proved up his right to the land and engaged in farming, at the same time being active in timber cruising. He now devotes his entire time to general farming and dairying. He gives special attention to the care of his cows and keeps a large herd for milking. He has made all necessary improvements on his land, has cleared fifteen acres and has installed modern farm machinery. His land is three miles from Lakeside on North lake and is known as one of the best improved properties in that district.

Mr. Lindros was united in marriage on March 11, 1905, in Coos county, to Miss Annie Nieminen, a daughter of John Nieminen, a native of Finland, who now resides in California. Mrs. Lindros is one of two children born to her parents, the other being Oscar, who resides in Coos county, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Lindros have been born six children: Sima W., born December 14, 1905, who is attending school in Coos county; John E., born December 24, 1906, who is also attending school; Lizzie M., born in 1908; Carl William, born in 1909; Leo whose birth occurred in 1910; and Jennie, who was born in 1911.

Adolph Lindros gives his allegiance to the republican party and is a firm believer in the principles of that organization. He has never sought political office, preferring to give his entire time and attention to the work of his dairy. He is a devout member of the Lutheran church. In developing into a beautiful and highly cultivated farm a tract of wild brush country land Mr. Lindros has shown a steadfastness and a dominating ambition which are characteristic of the Finnish nation and which have been leading influences in the development and progress of Coos county.

E. B. RAMSBY, of Klamath Falls, was born in Lagrange county, Indiana, near Logansport, June 11, 1848, his parents being R. C. and Mary (Reynolds) Ramsby, who were natives of Ohio and were married there, after which they removed to Indiana. In 1868 they came to Oregon by way of New York and the isthmus route and settled on the Molalla prairie near Oregon City, where they made their home until 1873. At that time they removed to Silverton, Oregon, and in 1896 went to Portland, where the father passed away in April, 1909, at the age of seventy-six years. The mother still resides in Portland at the very advanced age of eighty-four years. Mr. Ramsby was sheriff of Noble county, Indiana, for eight years, filling that position during the Civil war. He was engaged in the stage business while in Silverton, running a stage line from that place to Portland by way of Damascus. In 1880 he was elected sheriff of Marion county for a term of two years and while residing in Silverton was also elected to the state legislature, in which he served for one term. Politically he was a republican, staunch in his advocacy of the party principles but never countenancing underhand methods in the attainment of success.

E. B. Ramsby is the eldest in a family of four sons and three daughters, all of whom are yet living. He made his home with his parents until 1870 but when only fourteen years of age enlisted for service in the Civil war, becoming a member of Company B, Twelfth Indiana Infantry, which was attached to the Fourth Brigade, Fourth Division of the Fifteenth Army Corps. He served for two years and eleven months or until the close of the war and took part in all the engagements with his company. He claims to be the youngest Civil war veteran that carried a gun and he was not only the youngest but the smallest member of his company. He enlisted as a musician but was mustered in as a regular and his comrades of the regiment nicknamed him Babe. He was indeed the babe and pet of the company and was allowed many privileges not accorded to others. He also did his full share of the fighting, his bravery and loyalty being equal to that of many a soldier of twice his years.

When the war was over Mr. Ramsby returned to his parents on the 25th of July, 1865, and came with them to Oregon. In 1870 he married Sophia Woodcock, who was born August 6, 1852, and is a native of this state, her parents being W. D. and Allice Anna Woodcock. Mr. Ramsby started out in the business world with his father and for several years they conducted a stage line. In 1876 he left Silverton and went to The Dalles and in 1883 he removed to Grant county, Oregon. He was then engaged in the live-stock business until 1887, when he went to John Day and was engaged in breaking horses until 1890. He then returned to Portland and for two years was foreman of the city stables. He next purchased a livery stable in Barlow, Oregon, but sold out in 1896 and came to Klamath Falls. For a number of years he was engineer at the flouring mills at Merrill and for three years he was on the police force at Klamath Falls. For the past four years he has been engaged in the express business here and thus a life of activity and usefulness continues, in which he has accomplished much that he has undertaken. He is the owner of a fine home in the Hot Springs addition and is accounted one of the representative residents of this part of the state. Mr. and Mrs. Ramsby became parents of a son and daughter: Carey M., of Klamath Falls; and Myrtle, who is the wife of S. E. Martin, of Merrill, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Ramsby hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal church and are earnest, consistent, Christian people whose well spent lives have gained them high regard. He is a lifelong republican and fraternally is connected with the Grand Army of the Republic, thus keeping in close touch with his comrades of the Civil war. There are indeed few men of his years who can claim to have been actively connected with the long, sanguinary conflict which established the Union on a firmer basis than ever before. The same spirit of loyalty has been manifest throughout his entire life in all of his relations to the community.

CAREY M. RAMSBY, game warden of the sixth district of Oregon and a resident of Klamath Falls, was born in Clackamas county, in the Willamette valley, April 3, 1874, and is a son of E. B. Ramsby, whose sketch precedes this. He acquired a common-school education and in early life worked at various occupations. He was engaged in the hop business for a time and in 1897 he came to Klamath Falls, Oregon, where he conducted a blacksmith shop for four years. He then worked as a miller in the employ of Martin Brothers until May 1, 1912, when he was appointed game warden for the sixth Oregon district and now devotes his entire time and attention to the duties of the office. He has real-estate interests in Klamath Falls and is well known in various public connections. His political allegiance is always given to the republican party and his fraternal relations are with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and with the Elks lodge, of which he is a charter member. He was also connected with the Klamath Falls Military Band for about ten years.

On the 30th of May, 1901, Mr. Ramsby was married to Miss Elizabeth Martin, a daughter of Thomas Martin, and their two children are Martin Ephraim and Myrtle Elizabeth. Both E. B. and Carey Ramsby are well known in southern Oregon and have gained many warm friends in this part of the state.

FRANK K. HUBBARD, who resides on his twenty-seven acre fruit farm on the hill overlooking Falls City, Oregon, was born in Pleasant Hill, Pike county, Illinois, July 6, 1844. He is the son of the Rev. David and Mary L. (Thurman) Hubbard, the former a Baptist minister, who died in 1868. David Hubbard was twice married. He first married Hanah Morru, and to them ten children were born, only one of whom, Mrs. Jane Venable, of Wasco, Oregon, survives. His second marriage was to Mary L. Thurman, and to them the following sons were born: I. W., deceased; G. W.; Frank K.; E. B.; D. P.; J. C.; and James R. The daughters were: L. R.; I. E.; and Mary, deceased. Rev. Hubbard left his home and charge at Pleasant Hill, Illinois, for the west, April 18, 1853, with a family of six children. As there were about thirty wagons in the train, the journey across the plains was particularly free from Indian attacks, the only trouble being the occasional efforts of marauders to steal the stock of the travelers. The following November the party arrived in Oregon City and David Hubbard immediately took up a claim, where Clackamas Station now stands. After remaining there for two years he came to Polk county and located on a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres, one mile southeast of where Falls City is now situated. At all times he was much interested in schools and devoted much time to their welfare in addition to his regular duties as a minister. He acted as minister to the people throughout this section and for a time had a charge at Dallas.

Frank K. Hubbard received his education in the pioneer schools of Oregon, spelling, arithmetic and the third reader comprising the curriculum. In those early days there were few opportunities for an advanced education. He remained at home until he was twenty-three years of age, when he began farming on his own account on the Luckiamute river, eight miles east of Falls City. After living there for about two years he returned to the homestead and remained with his mother for about a year and a half.

On the 10th of October, 1869, Mr. Hubbard was united in marriage to Miss Mina C. Alderman, who was born in Dayton, Yamhill county, April 5, 1851, a daughter of A. L. and Mary Alderman. Mr. Alderman crossed the plains in early manhood and his wife came west in the early '40s. After their marriage they made their home in Yamhill county during the remainder of their lives.

After his marriage Mr. Hubbard moved to Yamhill county in 1870 and engaged in agricultural pursuits for eight years, removing at the end of this time to Falls City, where he purchased one hundred and eighty-two acres of raw land, one and one-half miles northeast of the town. He cleared and improved this land until it is now one of the finest ranches around Falls City, a task which called for determination and indefatigable labor. He made this place his home until he retired from agricultural pursuits on an extensive scale and purchased the twenty-seven acres, upon which he now resides and which is looked upon as the most attractive fruit farm and residence in Polk county. As a reward for the hard labor he has persistently carried on, he has this home, a place where comfort and pleasing surroundings are the first consideration.

In politics Mr. Hubbard is a republican. He has twice been elected mayor of Falls City and has served as a justice of the peace. Since 1869 he has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and both he and Mrs. Hubbard are members of the Evangelical church. Mr. Hubbard's life record shows how much may be accomplished, when effort and courage are directed along progressive and practical lines, even though the obstacles to be overcome are very great.

WILLIAM F. WALKER, who owns and conducts the only undertaking parlors in Springfield, was born at Pleasant Hill, Lane county, in May, 1879, and is a son of Albert Shields and Sarah (Higgins) Walker, the father a native of Missouri and the mother of Massachusetts. The parents are both mentioned at greater length elsewhere in this work.

Reared at home, the preliminary education of William F. Walker was received in the public schools of this city. After laying aside his text-books, he worked at various occupations, before establishing himself in the undertaking business. He is a graduate mortician, having pursued his course in the establishment of J. P. Finley & Son at Portland, and he also took a course of lectures under Professor W. P. Hohenschuh, of Iowa City, Iowa, and is in every way qualified for the duties of his profession. In 1907, Mr. Walker opened his present place of business, which is the only establishment of the kind not only in Springfield but in this immediate vicinity. He carries a complete line of caskets, and his hearses are appropriately fitted up. Mr. Walker is in every way qualified for the duties of his vocation and is highly thought of in his community. He owns a very pleasant residence in the city and a timber claim of one hundred and sixty acres in Grant county, this state, which is covered with a good growth of commercial timber.

On the 10th of August, 1909, Mr. Walker was united in marriage to Miss Alberta A. Kester, who was born in Canada, on the 13th of April, 1883. She is a daughter of Nelson and Sarah Kester, likewise natives of Canada, whence they came to Oregon in 1902 and have ever since made their home in Springfield, where the father is living retired. Mr. and Mrs. Kester are the parents of eight children. Mrs. Walker being the seventh in order of birth. She was educated in a college in Canada and for several years prior to her marriage engaged in teaching.

Mr. Walker is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the encampment, in which he has held all of the chairs. He is likewise a member of the Woodmen of the World, United Artisans and Knights and Ladies of Security, and has passed through all of the chairs of the two former orders. For professional reasons he holds membership in the Oregon State Funeral Directors' Association, of which organization he was elected vice president in August, 1911, and is in line for election to the presidency in 1914. Mr. Walker gives his political support to the republican party and accords his indorsement and enthusiastic support to every movement that will tend to promote the development of public utilities. He is one of the popular and highly regarded young business men of Springfield and a most worthy representative of one of the estimable pioneer families.

HON. JOHN SHERMAN GRAY is numbered among the men of central Oregon who have left their impress upon the history of the state in its legislative enactments as well as upon its business interests. He has resided in Gardiner continuously since 1887 and is identified with the lumber interests of this section as superintendent of the planning department of the Gardiner Mill Company and also of the retail trade of the mills. He was born in the town of Embden, Somerset county, Maine, on the same place where his great-grandfather settled in the eighteenth century. His natal day was September 15, 1849. He is a son of John Gray, which name was also borne by his grandfather and his great-grandfather, the latter a brother of Captain Robert Gray, who sailed the good ship Columbia across the bar and discovered the Columbia river, which was named for the ship. Both the father and grandfather were tillers of the soil but the old original homestead passed out of possession of the family some forty years ago. John Gray, the father, was one of the influential men of his town and for several years served as postmaster and as one of the selectmen of the town, a position similar to that of county commissioner and county judge in the west. He and his wife died at the old home in New England, the former at the age of sixty-six years and the latter at the age of eighty-four years.

John Sherman Gray acquired his education in the town schools and at North Anson Academy. On reaching manhood he engaged in farming in Somerset county, Maine, and was there identified with agricultural interests until the fall of 1883, when he came west to Oregon, spending the following year in Gardiner. In the fall of 1884, however, he returned to the Pine Tree state, where he remained through the three succeeding years, coming in 1887 with his family to the northwest. Again he located in Gardiner, where he has remained to the present time. Soon after his arrival he was placed in charge of the planing department of the Gardiner Mill Company and has since occupied that position, also having charge of the retail trade of the mills. His long retention in this connection proves conclusively his capability and his fidelity and he is justly classed with the representative business men of the community whose worth and enterprise are regarded as valuable assets in the business circles of Douglas county.

Mr. Gray was married on the 12th of January, 1876 to Miss Clara A. Jewett, a daughter of Walter G. and Flavilla (Wilson) Jewett. Both parents were natives of Maine, their ancestors being New England pioneers of colonial days. To Mr. and Mrs. Gray, was born a son, Walter Sherman Gray, who died January 7, 1908, aged twenty-one years. Mr. Gray is a valued member of various fraternal organizations. He belongs to Aurora Lodge, No. 59, F. & A. M., and that he is one of its most prominent and exemplary representatives is indicated by the fact that he has been its master for the past six years. He was made a Mason in May, 1883, and is now a member of Arago Chapter, No. 22, R. A. M., and both he and Mrs. Gray belong to Martha Chapter, O. E. S., of which he is worthy patron. He is also a charter member of Gardiner Lodge, No. 132, I. O. O. F., and both are charter members of Riverside Lodge, No. 100, of the Daughters of Rebekah.

Mr. Gray is deeply interested in all matters relative to the welfare, progress and up-building of his district. For twenty years he has served as a member of the Gardiner school board and the cause of education finds in him indeed a staunch champion. While living at Bingham, Maine, he was for two terms chairman of the board of selectmen, resigning that position upon his removal westward to Oregon. He has always voted with the republican party and has been prominent in its councils since coming to the northwest. He has twice represented his district in the state legislature of Oregon, having been first elected in 1904, while in 1906 a reelection gave indication of public commendation of his first term's service. His nomination was without solicitation on his part and in fact he was not at the convention at the time. His constituents insisted on his allowing his name to be used for a second term, and while he has never been an office seeker he does not believe any individual has a right to shirk public duty, and accordingly he obeyed the will of the people and gave to the state efficient service in office, seeking ever the welfare of the commonwealth and the progress of the state along lines of practical benefit and improvement.

AMOS HARING, deceased, was for many years one of the most successful farmers in Lane county, this state. His highly developed property, consisting of one hundred and sixty acres upon which he established his home, is located eight miles northeast of Florence, up the north fork of the Siuslaw river, where he was engaged in the successful conduct of a modern dairy farm at the time of his death, which occurred February 25, 1909. He was a native of New Jersey, having been born in that state, April 2, 1846, and was a son of David and Rachel (Bozeth) Haring, in whose family were ten children: Tillie, deceased; Eliza P., of Cambridge, Maryland; Benjamin, deceased; Annie, the wife of John Johnson, of Seaside, New Jersey; Ella, deceased; George, a resident of Seaside, New Jersey; Julia, who is the widow of Joseph Reed and also resides in Seaside, New Jersey; Amanda, deceased; Tyler, who became a volunteer soldier in the Civil war and who in the midst of his duties met his death in one of the battles of that struggle, in 1864; and Amos, of this review, who died at his beautiful home on the Siuslaw river, February 25, 1909.

Mr. Haring started in life for himself at the early age of nine years. His father was by trade and occupation a carpenter and was employed as a ship carpenter on a merchantman plying between the West Indies, America and European seaports. The birth of Mr. Haring occurred on board the ship on which his father was employed during one of its trips from the West Indies to the states. At the age of nine years he went to sea as a sailor boy with his uncle, with whom he continued until he was nineteen years of age. At that time he made the passage around Cape Horn and the ship upon which he sailed docked at San Francisco. On reaching that city he decided to discontinue seafaring life and spent his first year on the Pacific coast in and about the vicinity of San Francisco and then removed to Coos bay, where he continued to reside for five years following, after which he changed his residence to the north fork of the Siuslaw river, where he filed upon a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, upon which he established his home and engaged in farming, making a specialty of high-grade dairy products. In addition to farming and dairying he successfully engaged in fishing and while thus occupied with these diversified interests, in the very midst of a promising and successful career he passed away on February 25, 1909, leaving to mourn his loss a widow and eight children.

At Coos bay, this state, in 1874, Mr. Haring was united in marriage to Miss Clara Gamble, a daughter of William and Emma (Hanman) Gamble, both of whom were natives of England. The parents emigrated to America when their daughter Clara was a child of eight years. On reaching the new world they made their first location in the state of Iowa, where they continued to live for four years, during which time the father was engaged in general farming. He afterwards removed with his family to Missouri and in that state was engaged in farming for a period of seven years, settling in Coos bay in 1873. In the year 1893 he removed to the north fork of the Siuslaw river and there resided until his death, which occurred in 1896. Mrs. Haring has the distinction of being the first white woman to have lived on the north fork of the Siuslaw river and her daughter was the first white child born in that locality. To Mr. and Mrs. Gamble were born eight children: Clara, who married Amos Haring, of this review; Katie and Annie, both deceased; Francis Joseph, of Astoria, Oregon, who is married and has two children, George and Ella; William, who married and died leaving a family of three children, Sherman, Frank and Emma, all of San Francisco; and Sherman, Charlotte and George, all of whom are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Haring became the parents of the following children: Walter, of Astoria, who is married and has five children, Nora, Alice, Evelyn, Diehless and Walter L.; Clara, who is the wife of Elmer Johnson, of Idaho, and the mother of one child, Ralph; Emma, who married Charles Russell, of Portland, Oregon, and died, leaving one child, Alberta; Iona and Bennie, both deceased; Albert, who resides with his mother and is engaged in operating the home farm; Josephine, who is the wife of Eugene McCormick, of Florence, and the mother of two children, Edna and Emily; and Loretta and Agnes, both at home.

Mr. Haring was a loyal and devoted member of the republican party. He was a man universally esteemed for his integrity in all business transactions with the people among whom he associated and was characterized for his devotion to the interests of his home and family. His beautiful estate of one hundred and sixty acres, located eight miles from Florence up the north fork of the Siuslaw river, is a monument to his industry and economy. He left for the support and protection of his family a highly developed farm upon which his widow resides. The farm is now cared for and operated by Albert, her youngest son, whose training under his father's supervision has equipped him for the responsibilities and successful conduct of the beautiful property, to whose development he had given many years of devoted service, so that his family might have a comfortable home and a competence.

JAMES W. HIGGINS. The name of no single individual is perhaps more closely associated with the development, upbuilding and improvement of Montavilla than that of James W. Higgins, for he located here when the town contained only one hundred and fifty inhabitants. He has lived to witness the growth of its population to eight thousand and in all the material improvement of the city he has taken active part. He was born in Brunswick, Missouri, November 20, 1857, and is a son of Robert H. and Rebecca A. (Henderson) Higgins, in whose family were six children. Fannie, the eldest, is the wife of George Brannon, of St. Louis, Missouri, the oldest engineer on the Missouri river, having entered the steamboat service a long time prior to the Civil war. He was engineer on the first boat that went up to Fort Benton and he has a very wide acquaintance along the Mississippi and the ports to which his work has taken him. Unto him and his wife have been born four children, Cora, Lee, Joe and Edna. Arbelia Higgins, the second of the family, became the wife of Major J. H. Townson, of Gallatin, Missouri, and they have three children, Walter, Robert and Bessie. John, the next of the family, is living in Arleta, Oregon, and has one child, Mabel. Charles G. is a resident of Guthrie, Oklahoma. James W. is the next of the family. Minnie is the wife of W. E. Osborn, of Gallatin, Missouri, and they have three children, Robert, Margaret and Edwin.

The youthful days of James W. Higgins were passed in the manner of most boys of his locality and period and when sixteen years of age he began learning the carpenter's trade in Missouri, in which state he resided until the spring of 1879. At that date he went to Leadville, Colorado, where he worked for a short time, receiving fifteen dollars per day as his wage for carpentering. He next proceeded to Canon City, Colorado, where he also spent but a brief period, and later was located for a time in Colorado Springs and afterward in Kansas. From the latter point he returned home, continuing in Missouri until the spring of 1880, when he went to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, where he worked for the government for four years. On the expiration of that period he removed to Harrisonville, Missouri, and while living there was married.

He wedded Miss Emma Abbott, a daughter of Silas and Mary J. (Webb) Abbott. Mrs. Higgins is a native of Illinois, but the family had removed to Harrisonville, Missouri, ere her marriage. Three children have been born to them: Blanche, who is engaged in dressmaking and makes her home with her parents; Lee R. S., who is engaged in the plumbing business in Montavilla and is married and has two children, Elnergy and Dorothy; and Roy, who is at home.

Following his marriage Mr. Higgins continued to reside in Harrisonville for a year, after which he located in Oberlin, Kansas, where he lived for two years. He then returned to Colorado Springs, where the succeeding four years were passed, after which he came to Oregon, making his way at once to Portland. He chose Montavilla as the place of his residence, arriving here in 1891. He found a small town of about one hundred and fifty inhabitants. There was a little grocery store owned by a Mr. Johnson, now deceased, a small meat market owned by Murray & Sloan and a little water plant, which was the property of Warren Burden. School was held in a hall and the only car service was a motor car running to Mount Tabor every thirty minutes. A year later a car line was built out Glison street to Eighty-fourth. The town has enjoyed substantial and rapid growth, having now a population of eight thousand. There are six handsome churches, a fine school, built in an attractive style of architecture, and the improvements of the town include electric lights, cement sidewalks, water works and a thirty-minute car service to Mount Hood and seven-minute service to Portland. After living in Montavilla for a few months Mr. Higgins purchased property and built a home, erecting the first house on Eightieth street. He has continuously engaged in contracting and building, erecting the first house in Hawthorne's first addition and carrying on his building operations throughout the town. He has been an active participant in the growth and progress of the city and he owns business as well as residence property in Montavilla, which has increased largely in value since he made his first investment.

In his political views Mr. Higgins has always been a stalwart democrat and has taken an active interest in politics but not as an office seeker. He has been offered political positions in the city of Portland but would not accept, preferring to concentrate his energies upon his business affairs. He and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and fraternally he is connected with the Woodmen of the World and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In the latter organization he has filled all of the chairs in the subordinate lodge and he is ever loyal to the teachings of the order and faithful to the high principles for which it stands. His upright and honorable life has gained for him the high respect and good-will of those with whom he has come in contact during the twenty years of his residence in Montavilla.

WILLIAM W. WILSON. In his active, useful and upright life as one of the leading agriculturists of the Yoncalla valley William W. Wilson is carrying on the honorable traditions of his father who founded the family in Oregon in the early days of pioneer settlement. He is engaged in the operation of one hundred and one acres of land, which was a part of his father's holdings, and he is devoting his entire attention to agricultural pursuits. William W. Wilson is a native of Oregon and was born July 5, 1869, on the farm on which his brother, John D. Wilson, now resides.

William W. Wilson was reared upon his father's farm and received his education in the common schools of Douglas county. His advantages in this respect were limited as the school term at that time lasted only three months of the year. On attaining majority he began farming for himself and followed this occupation until 1906, when he entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad. He worked for that company for twelve years. He made a success of railroad work and gained a local reputation for carefulness and accuracy. On September 30, 1912, he retired permanently from railroad affairs and located on his present home farm two miles south of Yoncalla, where he is giving his entire attention to agriculture. His holdings comprise one hundred and one acres and are a part of the original Wilson donation claim. Mr. Wilson is a progressive farmer and has improved and developed his land to a great extent during the short period of his occupancy. He is intelligently interested in scientific farming. His farm equipment is modern in every respect as he uses the latest labor-saving devices and farm machinery.

On January 26, 1896, Mr. Wilson was united in marriage to Miss Bernice McDole, of Cottage Grove, Oregon, a daughter of J. M. McDole, one of the prominent farmers of Lane county. To Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have been born six children, Wanda Verle, Ada May, Leota, Velma, Alberta and Joseph D., all of whom are living with their parents on the home farm.

Politically William W. Wilson is independent, preferring to keep his opinions and judgment unbiased by party ties. In 1898 he was a candidate on the people's party ticket for the office of state representative and was elected by a large majority. He served in the eighteenth general assembly of the state of Oregon with honor and credit and made a record for broad-minded and intelligent service. Fraternally he holds membership in Elkton Lodge, No. 68, F. & A. M., and in Yoncalla Camp, No. 284, W. O. W. He and his wife are members of the Christian church and are active workers in religious circles. Agriculture is one of the flourishing industries of Douglas county and as a successful farmer Mr. Wilson is a representative and useful citizen. His father was a pioneer and frontiersman and his son in the next generation is making the land, which he cleared and wrested from the wilderness, fertile and productive.

ERICK ERICKSON. At the age of nine years a little Finnish boy, just beyond babyhood, was left entirely alone in the world by the death of his parents. Since that time Erick Erickson has pursued his career with an unflinching trust and a firm determination and has attained in the sixtieth year of his age a prominent and enviable place among his fellow countrymen in Coos county. He is the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of improved land and is numbered among the substantial and enterprising citizens of his district. Erick Erickson was born in Finland in 1842 and is a son of Erick and Narki Erickson. He is one of four children born to his parents, the others being Henry, Jeremiah and Gustus, all of whom are living in Finland.

Erick Erickson was obliged to earn his own livelihood when only nine years of age. He worked in the employ of others in his native country until he was twenty-eight years of age, and then sailed as ordinary seaman. He later became able seaman and followed the sea on practically all the waters of the world for a number of years. He finally landed at San Francisco, California, and worked on a coast schooner for two years. At the end of that time he came to North Bend, Oregon, and worked in the woods. He later took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres and in 1882 proved up another homestead claim on North lake which he has been operating since that time. He has added to his holdings and is now the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of Coos county land. He has made all necessary improvements upon his farm, has built barns and outbuildings, cleared the portions of land which were covered with timber and has made of his property a model Oregon ranch.

In 1878 Mr. Erickson was married in Finland to Miss Annie Tapio, who is a native of that country, and to their union five children were born: Martin, deceased; Simon, who is engaged in farming in Coos county; August, who is active in the operation of his father's property in Coos county; Emil, who lives with his parents; and Oscar, who also resides at home. Politically Mr. Erickson is a staunch republican and he has served as school director for two years. That, however, was his only public office as he prefers to give his attention to the affairs of his farm. He attends the Lutheran church and to that faith his family also adhere. Mr. Erickson has truly been the architect of his own fortunes and the same unflinching trust in himself which distinguished him at the age of nine, makes him successful and worthy now and greatly endears him to his many friends.

MATT HERMAN REIHER is one of the successful farmers of Coos bay, located on Haynes inlet, ten miles from Marshfield, where he is owner of a farm of one hundred and ninety-five acres, to the cultivation of which he gives his entire attention. He was born in Finland, in 1867, and is a son of Matt Raiha and Sophia (Sund) Reiher, in whose family were eight children: Matt Herman, of this review; Victor, who is a telegraph operator in Finland; Julius, Alexander and Otto, deceased; Selma Sophia, of Finland; Oscar A., deceased; and Hilma Marie, a telegraph operator. The father of this family was a government pilot. He passed away many years ago, at the age of seventy-three, but the mother is still living in her native land.

Matt H. Reiher was reared at home and received his early education in the schools of Finland. At the age of twenty-one he emigrated to the United States and settled in California, where he was engaged as employe in lumber mills for some time. He then removed to Coos bay, where he invested in the rafting business, to which he gave his attention for a short period and was then employed in a shipyard for some time, after which he purchased a piece of land in Marshfield, for which he paid one thousand dollars and sold the same afterward for seven thousand dollars. He then bought a farm of one hundred and ninety-five acres located on Haynes inlet, where he established his home and has since continued to devote his attention to the development of that property. He is very successful in his agricultural operations and is at present making a specialty of dairy farming.

Mr. Reiher was united in marriage on December 28, 1896, to Miss Ida Kotka, a native of Finland and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Kotka, who were the parents of a large family, seven of whom survive: Herman, of Marshfield; Ida, now Mrs. Matt H. Reiher; Ina, the wife of Matt Johnson, of Finland; Hannah, who is the wife of Alfred Lundstrom, of Coos county, and the mother of one child; Hugo, of Marshfield; and Mary and Victor, both of whom reside in Finland. Mr. and Mrs. Reiher are the parents of nine children, Ida, Hugo, Esther, Rudolph, Albert and Ina, all attending public school; and Gunard, Ellen and Leonard.

Mr. Reiher is affiliated with the republican party and for the past six years has served as one of the directors of the school board of his district. He is also one of the charter members of Soumi lodge and was for some time a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran church of Marshfield. Mr. Reiher is one of the well known and successful farmers of Coos county and is a man to be relied upon to give his assistance to the advancement of any public measure, seeking the improvement of the people of his county and state.

LIEUTENANT WILLIAM PENN MAST, who passed away December 10, 1889, was for a number of years actively and successfully identified with general agricultural pursuits in Coos county. His birth occurred in North Carolina, on the 6th of June, 1834, his parents being Reuben and Nancy (Webb) Mast, both of whom were natives of Watauga county, that state. Their children were seven in number, namely: Wyley, Jennie, James, Caroline, Eliza, Elandor and William Penn. All have passed away.

William Penn Mast remained on the home plantation until a year after his marriage and then made his way to Texas, there cultivating rented land for a period of three years. On the expiration of that period he returned to North Carolina and enlisted for service in the Confederate army under General Bragg, holding the rank of first lieutenant. He was captured and taken to Camp Chase. After the cessation of hostilities between the north and the south he purchased a farm and continued its operation until 1872, when he came to Douglas county, Oregon. There he operated a rented farm for one year and then came to Coos county, settling on a tract of one hundred and eighty-two acres for which he traded a wagon. Only a quarter of an acre of the land had been cleared and the only building thereon was a board shanty. One hundred and forty acres thereof are now cleared, and the property is one of the beautiful show places in Coos county. Mr. Mast and his wife did most of the work incident to the clearing and improvement of the farm and were later assisted by their sons. The sons have extended the boundaries of the place until it now embraces about four hundred acres. They have been engaged in the logging business for the Johnston Lumber Company and have also cleared their own land. They raise wheat, oats and barley and have recently embarked in the dairy business on an extensive scale. William P. Mast was long numbered among the enterprising and prosperous agriculturists of Coos county, and in his passing the community lost one of its representative and esteemed citizens.

On the 5th of March, 1857, Mr. Mast was united in marriage to Miss Charlotte Helen Mast, a native of North Carolina and a daughter of Leason and Sarah (Duger) Mast, the father a native of North Carolina and the mother of Tennessee. Mrs. William Penn Mast has one brother and one sister: Eli who is an agriculturist residing in McKinley, Oregon; and Hester, who is the widow of Leason L. Harmon. To Mr. and Mrs. William P. Mast were born five children. Reuben H., whose natal year was 1859, is cashier of the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Coquille, Oregon. He is married and has three children, Leta, Reuben and James. William L. born December 21, 1864, is a diver in the employ of the government dredge department. James W., whose birth occurred on the 10th of October, 1866, is engaged in merchandising at Bandon, Oregon, and also acts as mayor of that town. Webb, who was born February 11, 1868, operates the home place in association with his brother Hardy. On the 14th of June, 1908, he wedded Miss Bessie Dernberger, a native of West Virginia and a daughter of Benjamin and Martha (Boso) Dernberger. Mrs. Bessie Mast is one of five children, the others being as follows: Orra, who is the wife of M. R. Buffington, of West Virginia; and Conway, Gladys and Gordon, all of whom are residents of West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Webb Mast have one daughter, Helen Webb, born January 15, 1912. Hardy W. Mast, who was born on the 26th of January, 1873, resides on the old homestead and operates the same in association with his brother Webb. He is married and has three children, William W., Lloyd C. and Myrtle H.

MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM P. MAST

William P. Mast gave his political allegiance to the democratic party which organization the family has ever supported. For one term he served as commissioner of Coos county. He also established the postoffice at Lee and his widow is still in charge thereof. Mrs. Mast has now resided in Coos county for about four decades and is well known and highly esteemed throughout the community.

ALBERT C. HILL, who is living retired in Dallas, was for many years successfully engaged in hop growing in Polk county. He is a native of Tennessee, having been born in Claiborne county in May, 1833, and is a son of John and Polly (Merrill) Hill, natives of the same county, where they spent their entire lives. Mr. and Mrs. Hill were the parents of twelve children, six sons and six daughters, all of whom are deceased with the exception of two sons and one daughter.

In the period of Albert C. Hill's boyhood the common schools of his native state offered only a limited education which constituted all the advantages in that line his parents could give him. Reared in the country he was early trained in agricultural pursuits and after laying aside his text-books engaged in farming until the breaking out of the Civil war, when he enlisted in the Confederate service with the Tenth Missouri Cavalry. When peace was restored he returned to his native state, where soon thereafter he was married. Subsequent to this event, he and his wife located on a farm in the vicinity of Knoxville, Tennessee, in the cultivation of which he engaged for nearly twenty years. In the '80s Albert C. Hill and his family removed to Oregon, locating six miles south of Dallas, where he purchased sixty-eight acres of land. The greater part of this tract he devoted to hop culture, in which he was very successful, his enterprise netting him gratifying financial returns. He still owns this ranch but has for several years been living retired in Dallas, in the enjoyment of an income, sufficient to supply all of his needs.

For his wife Mr. Hill chose Miss Beeky Haines, and they became the parents of three children: Mabel; Maggie; and John, who died at the age of five years. Mrs. Hill is also deceased, her death having occurred soon after she passed the sixtieth anniversary of her birth.

His political support Mr. Hill has always given to the men and measures of the democratic party, but he has never actively participated in public affairs, preferring to give his entire attention to his private affairs.

DICK J. WILCOX is assistant cashier and one of the directors of the First National Bank of Lakeview and in addition to the creditable position which he occupies in financial circles he is well known as an extensive land owner, his holdings embracing two thousand acres. He was born in Nevada county, California, April 16, 1869, and is a son of N. and Mary (Talent) Wilcox, who were natives of England and were married in San Francisco in 1849. The father, eighty-five years of age, resides in Lakeview, where the mother passed away in 1889. They came to the United States a short time prior to their marriage, the father being one of the early gold seekers of the Pacific coast, in which connection he both made and lost fortunes. In 1878 he became a resident of Lakeview, Oregon, where he became owner of a ranch which he capably managed up to the time of his retirement, twenty years ago.

Dick J. Wilcox was the fifth in the order of birth in a family of seven children, four sons and three daughters, of whom all are yet living with the exception of one daughter. He came to Oregon with his parents from California in 1878, when a lad of nine years, and has since resided in Lakeview. He was employed as clerk in a store for a number of years after starting out in the business world, and for eight years filled the position of postmaster during the administrations of Presidents McKinley and Roosevelt. Since his retirement from that office he has been connected with the First National Bank, serving as assistant cashier for six years, and eventually becoming one of its directors. He has thoroughly acquainted himself with the banking business in principle and detail and is proving a capable representative of this institution while at the same time he wisely controls his landed interests, comprising two thousand acres, six miles from Lakeview. Upon his place he has a shearing corral where shearing is done for the public. He is also the owner of four dwellings in Lakeview which he rents, his property interests bringing to him a gratifying income.

In 1899 Mr. Wilcox was married to Miss Amelia Sehlagel, a native of Yreka, California, and a daughter of M. Sehlagel, deceased. The Wilcox home is a hospitable one, proving a center of social interest in the town. In politics Mr. Wilcox is a republican, having for three years served as a member of the town council. He is always interested in everything pertaining to the welfare and progress of his community and his cooperation and aid are freely and generously given where he believes the best interests of his city may be served.

MRS. CARRIE B. BURNS, who is the wife of Charles E. Burns, of North Bend, is one of the well known and highly respected women of the city, in which she resides. She was born in Missouri, September 3, 1867, and is a daughter of J. W. and Evelyn (Hunter) Morrow, both of whom were natives of Missouri and of Scotch-Irish ancestry. The grandparents of Mrs. Burns were among the early settlers on the Atlantic seaboard and her great-grandfathers were veterans of the Revolutionary war, one great-grandfather Rock, serving on the staff of General Washington. The father died in Missouri in 1903 and the mother is still living at the age of seventy-six years. They were the parents of six children, all of whom are living: Mrs. Carrie B. Burns, the subject of this review; Mrs. Lulu Duffly, of Waverly, Missouri; Dora, the widow of Milton Hager, of Chicago, Illinois; Mrs. Ella Baer, who is engaged in the millinery business in Kansas City, Missouri; John R., a resident of Denver, Colorado; and May, the wife of James Harris, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Mrs. Burns was reared at home and received her early education in the public schools of Missouri. She remained under the parental roof until the time of her first wedding, which occurred November 25, 1881, when she married W. J. Ellis of Montgomery City, Missouri, and to that union three children were born: W. H. Ellis, who is in the employ of the United States navy; Myrtle L., who is the wife of R. A. Taylor of North Bend, Oregon; and Hallie M., still under the parental roof. All of the children have a good business education. Mrs. Burns was united in marriage, in 1904, to Charles E. Burns, who is a native of Michigan and a son of Milton and Charlotte Burns, both of whom are deceased.

Charles E. Burns was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools of Michigan after which he attended Michigan Agricultural College, at Lansing for one year. He was married on July 30, 1890, to Allie B. Gray, of Tecumseh, Michigan. By this union two children were born: Elon L. and Helen Dean. A separation in 1895 led to a divorce in 1900. For about ten years Mr. Burns lived in Detroit, Michigan, where he was employed by the United States and American Express companies and later by the Michigan Central Railway. He removed to Oregon in 1907 and has since been engaged in a box factory at North Bend, in which place Mrs. Burns for some time successfully conducted a barber shop. Mrs. Burns in joint partnership with her husband owns a number of valuable properties at North Bend and they are also the owners of property at Point Richmond, California. She and her husband are affiliated with the democratic party but never seek political preferment. Mrs. Burns is a member of the Eastern Star, Coos Chapter, No. 99, and Mr. Burns has his fraternal relations with the Masonic Lodge of Ypsilanti, Michigan.

ADAM J. HARTMAN. A man who has achieved an honorable destiny by courageous battling against adverse conditions, who has risen unaided through difficulties, first, to a respectable place in the world and, finally, to one of prominence and distinction, is Adam J. Hartman, whose careful management of the Orpheum Theater in Bandon, Oregon, forms only one of his varied and representative interests in that city. He is prominently connected with almost every legitimate line of activity and is numbered among the forces in the country's advancement. Mr. Hartman was born in Germany, September 29, 1856, and is a son of John and Isabella (Rodriguez) Hartman. His father was born in Germany and his mother in Spain. She was a daughter of the secretary of the Spanish legation in Germany. To their union were born three children:

Adam J., the subject of this sketch; William, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; and Frank, also a resident of Philadelphia.

When Adam Hartman was twelve years of age his father died and our subject left his native country alone to come to America. He remained in New York until his money was gone with the exception of eight cents but he was ambitious and energetic, and his strong will was unconquered even by these desperate straits. He set out to seek his fortune, tramping to Philadelphia where, after a hard and long journey he arrived with no assets beyond his characteristics of hope and industry. He received employment in a confectionery shop and worked for a dollar and a half a week and his board. He subsequently went to San Francisco, California, where he worked at anything he could find to do for a year and a half. He then obtained a position in the employ of the government and during the next twenty years traveled at various times in its interests over almost all the countries of the world. During this time he was placed in charge of the government lighthouse at Fort Canby, Washington, where he remained for four years and a half, and then was transferred to the Umpqua River territory and after one year was put in charge of the lighthouse on the Coquille river. Here he remained for seven years and a half and was considered among the most valuable and useful of the government employes in this section. At the end of twenty years' faithful service he left the employ of the government and engaged in the general merchandise business in Bandon, Oregon. He was successful and had soon acquired a comfortable fortune, which he invested judiciously. He erected the first concrete building in Bandon, and this was for a long time the only substantial structure in the city. His careful business management and by conservative buying and selling Mr. Hartman soon owned one of the prosperous mercantile enterprises in Coos county. He disposed of his establishment in 1909 and built an attractive residence in the city, with the intention of retiring. At this time he took a long trip to various parts of the world, renewing acquaintances with foreign conditions. Upon his return to Bandon his energy and activity would not permit his retirement from all identification with business life and he built a large box factory, which he operated with much success. Eventually, however, he leased the building and built the Orpheum Theater, and after a short period took charge of the enterprise himself. He is now sole owner and manager and has built up a creditable and prosperous establishment. Mr. Hartman is one of the worthy and prominent citizens of Bandon, Oregon, and is a man who is interested in many different lines of activity. He owns the hospital building and has invested largely in residence and business property. His constructive intelligence and the careful administration of his investments have increased his prosperity every year. Besides his property in Oregon he owns large interests of various kinds in Philadelphia, and these form an important part of his income.

In 1887 Mr. Hartman was united in marriage in New York city, to Miss Elizabeth N. Wilkinson, a native of Manchester, England. She is one of four children born to her parents, of whom Ada is a principal in a public school in Bath, England, and two others also reside in that country. To Mr. and Mrs. Hartman have been born two children: Florence, whose birth occurred in Portland, Oregon, and who is the wife of Edward Nieman, of San Francisco, by whom she has one child, Bub; and Walter, whose birth occurred in Fort Canby, Washington, and who is associated with his father in business in Bandon, Oregon.

Politically Mr. Hartman is a consistent republican but has never sought public office. He is prominent in fraternal circles and holds membership in the Masons, of which organization he was senior dean for eight years; in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; the Improved Order of Redmen; the Modern Woodmen of America; and the Owls. He is a man of metropolitan experience. His judgment has been broadened and deepened by contact with various sorts and conditions of men, and developed along diversified lines without impairing his force of personality or the power of his energy, which are the essential qualities of his public spirit.

JOSEPH ALBERT JANELLE, one of the progressive business men of Douglas county and a member of the firm of Reed, Janelle & Company, general merchants at Gardiner, Oregon, was born in the province of Quebec, Canada, April 9, 1877, and is a son of Thomas and Athela (Bourgeois) Janelle, the former a native of Quebec and the latter of New Orleans. Mrs. Janelle was left an orphan at an early age and came to Canada to make her home with relatives in that country. She was later married to Mr. Janelle and her death occurred in Quebec in October, 1910. Her husband is still living and resides on the farm which has been his home for over forty years.

Joseph A. Janelle was reared at home, acquiring his education in the public schools of Canada and receiving a thorough course in practical farming at an agricultural college. He has been entirely dependent upon his own resources from an early date and is essentially a self-made man. His residence in Gardiner dates from 1898, in which year he came to this city in order to take charge of the creamery business conducted by A. W. Reed. One year later the death of A. W. Reed brought into the firm his nephew, W. P. Reed, and Mr. Janelle was retained as manager. His success in this line of business was the direct result of intelligent activity and scientific methods. Under his able management the business of the concern expanded from year to year and it is now one of the most important enterprises of its kind in Douglas county. Mr. Janelle interrupted his connection with the creamery business in order to enter the general mercantile establishment of Mr. Reed, and in April, 1911, had achieved such conspicuous success in this line, that he was offered a partnership and the firm was incorporated under the name of Reed, Janelle & Company, under which title it still operates.

On October 20, 1904, Mr. Janelle was united in marriage to Miss Mary R. Reed, a daughter of J. W. Reed, of Gardiner, Oregon, and to this union has been born a daughter, Florette. In his political views Mr. Janelle is a consistent republican and votes the party ticket on national and local issues. He is a member of Marshfield Lodge, No. 1160, B. P. O. E., and of Gardiner Lodge, K. O. T. M. He is affiliated with the Roman Catholic church, while his wife gives her allegiance to the Episcopal church. Mr. Janelle is typically a self-made man, the builder of his own fortune and the molders of his own destiny.

GUS CARLSON is one of the many natives of Finland who left that country to seek their fortunes in America and are now prominent in the agricultural development of Coos county and the surrounding districts. Mr. Carlson lives on the boundary line between Douglas and Coos county, his house being in the former section and his farm in the latter. He was born in Finland in 1842 and is a son of Charles and Annie Carlson, who were also natives of that country. His father followed the occupation of farming for many years and he and his wife were the parents of twelve children, all of whom are deceased with the exception of our subject and one brother, who resides in Finland.

Gus Carlson received his early education in the public schools of Finland and at the age of eighteen, shipped as a deck hand. He sailed on various vessels, putting out from Finland, for eighteen years, visiting many of the important ports of the world. He made a journey from Glasgow to New Orleans and was there paid off. He then immediately shipped on another vessel bound for Cape Horn and sailed up the Pacific coast to San Francisco. He later came to Coos bay and worked in a sawmill there for three years. At the end of that time he moved to Ten Mile lake and settled on the north shore, taking up a homestead claim on the boundary line between Douglas and Coos counties. He now owns four hundred acres of land in this district and does a large dairy business to which he gives his personal attention and almost his entire time. He has equipped his dairy with modern and sanitary machinery and owns and milks a herd of forty fine cows. The output of his dairy is increasing yearly and its products sell readily. Mr. Carlson's house is in Douglas county, five miles from Lakeside on North lake, but most of his land is in Coos county.

In 1885 Mr. Carlson was united in marriage to Miss Ada Miller, a native of Coos county, born in 1870, and to them seven children have been born: Henry, George, Herman and Gus, all of Coos county; Lizzie, who is living in North Bend; Minnie, who resides with her parents and is attending school; and Jennie, who is also pursuing her studies and living at home. Gus Carlson gives his allegiance to the republican party and served as school director for two years. He is intelligently interested in local affairs but never seeks public office. He belongs to the Lutheran church and in this faith he has reared his children. He is an active and intelligent farmer and because of his thorough and effective methods is known throughout the countryside. His well cultivated land gives evidence of his ability as a farmer and his many friends are always ready to attest his qualities of citizenship.

JOHN RICKARD. There has occurred little of real importance to Oregon during the last six decades with which John Rickard is not familiar, for throughout this entire period he has been a resident of the state and has therefore been a witness of its changes, its progress and its upbuilding. He now makes his home in Corvallis and is one of the most substantial citizens of this part of the state. He was born in Herefordshire, England, December 31, 1830, his parents being Richard and Rachael Rickard. The father passed away in England and in 1840 the family arrived in Brown county, Illinois where the mother also died. In their family were two sons and five daughters, of whom John, the eldest, and Mrs. Rose Nichols, of Eugene, Oregon, who is the youngest, are now living.

In 1852 John Rickard came to Oregon from Illinois in company with two neighbor boys, John McDonald and Charles Estis. The former was drowned in the Snake river while en route and the latter afterward went to California.

John Rickard made the trip across the plains with ox teams, he and his two companions each having a yoke of oxen and owning a wagon in partnership. He bought land four miles south of Corvallis and since the fall of 1852 has resided in this county. Here he followed farming and stock-raising for many years but at length determined to retire, at which time he gave his wife and each of his sons a ranch, dividing more than three thousand acres among them. To his son Roy he gave one thousand acres four miles south of Corvallis and to his son Bayard two thousand acres near Paloma. The property owned by the family is considered one of the best farms in all Benton county. Mr. Rickard was the second largest property owner in the county, at one time having thirty-two hundred acres. He made farming and stock-raising his life work and met prosperity as the years went by. When he retired to Corvallis he built his present home at No. 704 South Third street. He began farming in a small way and during the first winter spent in this state worked with a surveying party. In the summer of 1853 he and Joseph Lyford made brick at Corvallis, which was the first and only brick made here. He also took contracts for making rails and he freighted with ox teams to The Dalles, to Portland, to eastern Oregon and to Washington. He worked for a number of years at contract work along different lines and about 1861 or 1862 he purchased his ranch, after which he followed farming until his retirement in 1903. His agricultural interests were most carefully conducted and brought to him gratifying returns, so that he is now one of the substantial citizens of the county.

Mr. Rickard was married to Mrs. Ella (Dorr) Ranney, a native of Springfield, Illinois, who came with her parents to Benton county, Oregon, in 1852. She is a daughter of Dudley and Eliza Dorr, who settled about eight miles south of Corvallis. The father died in Walla Walla, Washington, and the mother in San Francisco. By a former marriage Mr. Rickard had three children: Bayard, of Corvallis; Roy, living on the old home farm; and Annie, who died at the age of sixteen months. By her first marriage Mrs. Rickard had six children: George Ranney, of Lake county, Oregon; Walter, deceased; Maude, the wife of Sherman Wade, of Gilliam county, Oregon; Edwin, who has passed away; Dell, of Corvallis; and Lillian, at home.

Mr. Rickard now has his second sight and reads without glasses. He is a well preserved man for one of his years, having nearly passed the eighty-second milestone on life's journey. He has always been active and his useful and well spent life has brought him the merited reward of labor, so that in the evening of his days he can rest in the enjoyment of the fruits of his former toil, his possessions being sufficient to supply him and his wife with all the necessities and many of the luxuries of life for years to come.

JONAS E. NORIN. The home of Jonas E. Norin is a beautiful bungalow, the first residence of that style of architecture to be erected in Lakeview. A mile and a half distant is his ranch of five hundred and fifteen acres, which he purchased in 1909 and which is known as the Eagle Point ranch. He has other business interests also, inasmuch as he is the vice president of the Lakeview Wool Storage & Warehouse Company, but his attention is chiefly directed to the production of hay and the raising of stock. He was born in Sweden, July 30, 1867, and is a son of Erick and Martha (Modig) Norin, who spent their entire lives as farming people of Sweden save that the father served for about twenty-five years in the army, becoming an officer. They had nine children, one of whom died in childhood. Two sons passed away after reaching maturity, while six are now living. Jonas E. and his brother Andrew were the only members of the family who came to America. Andrew later returned to Sweden and there passed away.

Jonas E. Norin pursued his education in the schools of his native country and remained a resident there until in his twenty-fifth year, when, in 1893, he came to America, reaching Iowa on the 3d of March. He worked as a farm hand until January, 1896, when he came to the northwest and has since been a resident of Lakeview, Oregon. He was employed as a sheep herder and farm hand for about three years but, carefully saving his earnings, he was at length able to purchase sheep, which he began running over the range. Later he leased his sheep, and removed to the town, where he purchased an interest in a planing mill. After three years he sold out and began building bungalows for speculative purposes. He was the first to erect a bungalow in Lakeview, building a house of that character after traveling quite extensively over California to get ideas concerning bungalow architecture. In 1909 he purchased his present ranch, comprising five hundred and fifteen acres, pleasantly and conveniently situated about a mile and a half south of Lakeview. At that time the Eagle Point ranch was meadow land, but with characteristic energy he began the development and improvement of the place, where he is now engaged in raising hay extensively and also in raising stock. He puts up about four hundred tons of hay annually. He has about thirty-five hundred head of sheep and keeps his sheep on the desert and the lambs on the ranch. His farm home is a fine bungalow and upon this place there are splendid outbuildings, all especially adapted for the purposes for which they are used and built with regard to comfort and convenience. His interest in sheep-raising led to his becoming identified with the Lakeview Wool Storage & Warehouse Company, of which he is the vice president.

In 1903, in Los Angeles, California, Mr. Norin was married to Miss Fannie Pamell Carr, who was born in Kansas in 1880, and when four years of age was taken to Los Angeles by her parents, Martin and Anna Carr. The mother is now deceased and the father resides with his daughter. Mr. Norin is a republican and staunchly advocates progressive citizenship. A spirit of progress has actuated him throughout his entire life and has been manifest in his business career and also in his connection with community affairs, his labors proving an element in general development and improvement.

ROBERT E. LEE BEDILLION. The city of Bandon, Oregon, owes much to the constructive talents and organizing power of Robert E. Lee Bedillion, who, as organizer and directing manager of the only woolen mill in the city, is one of the greatest individual forces in the industrial expansion of his section of Oregon. He is a man of ready adaptability, intelligent public spirit and a comprehensive grasp of present-day needs in business and political life, and his activity along various constructive lines, centralized by business intelligence, is a controlling factor in the growth of the state. He was born in Olympia, Washington, October 5, 1864, and is a son of William and Jeanette (Bedillion) Bedillion, whose parents were among the earliest settlers in the state of Washington. The paternal grandfather of our subject was selected to keep peace with the Indians on account of his remarkable success in dealing with the tribes. The maternal grandparents were natives of Kentucky and came to Washington in the early '40s.

William Bedillion, the father, was born in Virginia and was educated in the public schools of that state. He was a graduate of a military school in his native state and was an ardent southerner. During the war of the rebellion he was honored by a commission in the Confederate army given him personally by General Robert E. Lee, and he named his son, the subject of this sketch, after this famous general. To Mr. and Mrs. William Bedillion were born two children: Ida, who passed away in her girlhood; and Robert E. Lee, our subject.

When Robert Bedillion was three years of age his father died. He remained at home until he was twelve years old and attended school. He then laid aside his books and obtained employment on a ranch in California. Here he remained until 1882, in which year he again entered the public schools of California, and although he was then eighteen years of age, spent three years complementing his early education. He took a commercial course in the Tyrrell's high school and immediately afterward went into the butcher business, which he followed for a number of years. He was later active in cattle raising and dairying, and obtained a gratifying measure of success in this line of work. In 1888 he enlisted in the United States army in the First United States Infantry under the command of General W. R. Shafter, and served for two years. At the end of that time he came to Bandon, Oregon, locating in that city in 1890. In the following year the municipality was incorporated and Mr. Bedillion was elected as its first marshal. He held that office and did his duty ably and well until October 14, 1891. At that time he was arrested for desertion from the United States army, was court martialed and sentenced to one year at hard labor. After three months he was pardoned through the influence of friends in Washington, and received the most honorable of any discharge ever granted a prisoner in the institution where he was confined. Petition for his pardon was carried over the head of the secretary of war and received the signature of President Harrison and J. G. Blaine. Immediately following this event Mr. Bedillion returned to Bandon where he followed salmon fishing for a number of years. He was later identified with jetty construction work and subsequently took charge of the management of the Hotel Gallier, of which he was the proprietor for six years. During the time he operated the hotel he organized a stock company among the leading business men of Bandon, and built a large woolen mill within the town limits. This is the only enterprise of its kind in Bandon and the only one south of Salem and north of the California line. This factory Mr. Bedillion has operated with rapidly increasing success since that time. He owns fifty-five per cent of the stock, and has always been a forceful influence in directing its policies. His success is the more remarkable because he had not even seen a woolen mill before he took charge of his present enterprise. His factory is now working night and day and is expanding along the most modern and progressive business lines. It is a three-set mill and has been in operation for seven years, its special product being all-wool head lining. Mr. Bedillion is also interested in business property in Bandon and has many town lots. He is the proprietor also of the city graveyard.

In 1897 Mr. Bedillion was united in marriage to Miss Caroline E. Feiger, a native of Arizona, of German parentage. Her father was a veteran of the Franco-Prussian war and was treasurer of the city of Osberg, Germany. He came to the western part of the United States about 1870 and located in Oregon in 1892. He and his wife were the parents of four children: Minnie, who is the wife of William Tinbrook, of Bandon, and the mother of two children; Fred, a resident of the same city; Thomas, also of Bandon; and Caroline E., the wife of our subject. To Mr. and Mrs. Bedillion has been born one child, Ida, who passed away when she was five years of age.

Mr. Bedillion, prosperous and successful in business life, has also won prominence in political circles. He was nominated and elected to the state legislature in 1909 and served with ability and distinction for one term. At the end of that time he refused to sign the renomination ticket and later declined the nomination as congressman from his district. He is not an office seeker but has an active and energetic public spirit which impels him always to do his duty in a political way. He holds the record of having introduced more bills than any new member in the session of legislature in which he served, and a large percentage of the legislation which he favored was passed by gratifying majorities. His politics are democratic, and beside holding state offices he has served for many terms in the city council. He is an ardent lover of base ball and organized and managed one of the most successful teams, which ever played in the county. This organization gained a local reputation which soon extended beyond the limits of the state. The business men of the city of Eureka, California, paid the expenses of the team to that city in order that they might compete with a selected team from Humboldt county. Mr. Bedillion's men met and defeated the professional players from California.

Mr. Bedillion is one of the most progressive and enterprising citizens of the city in which he lives and is keenly interested in its growth and expansion, and willing to take a share in promoting progress. He has given large tracts of business property to new plants and factories in order to induce them to locate in Bandon, and has been instrumental, in a conspicuous way, in the upbuilding of the city. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and one of the oldest members of this organization in the city in which he lives. He has filled all the chairs and has actively influenced the policy of the body. He possesses the unusual power of scattering his energies without destroying their force. He is an earnest and progressive citizen of Bandon, and the best and most forceful years of his life are given to its upbuilding.

SWANIE PETERSON is successfully engaged in the cultivation of a highly developed ranch located on Haines slough, ten miles north of Marshfield, in Coos county. He was born in Sweden, February 26, 1864. His parents were both natives of that country, where they died many years ago. In their family were two sons: John, who was captain of a ship, which was lost at sea in 1900; and Swanie, of this review.

Swanie Peterson emigrated to America in the early '80s and settled in Illinois. He later removed to Oregon, stopping first at Portland, where he remained for a short time, and came to Marshfield in April, 1882. After reaching that place he purchased a boat and necessary equipment and engaged in fishing. Some time later he became interested in a lathmill at Porter, Oregon, and devoted his attention to that property for a period of three years. He then went to Astoria and for a number of years was engaged in fishing on Coos bay during the spring season. In 1909 he retired permanently from the life of fisherman. His experience during that period of his life abounds in many dramatic events. Among others he saved from drowning the lives of Mabel Weybright, two children and three men, one of whom was Geo. Mackintosh. In 1907 he purchased one hundred and sixty-six acres of land located ten miles from Marshfield, on what is known as Haines slough. There he established his home and has since continued to devote himself to the cultivation and improvement of that property, specializing in dairy farming. He is also the owner of three valuable lots at North Bend.

On January 25, 1896, Mr. Peterson was united in marriage to Miss Annie Olson, a native of North Bend and a daughter of Andrew and Deborah Olson, the former of whom was born in Sweden and the latter in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Andrew Olson was before her marriage Deborah Steen and a niece of the late J. H. Jones, mayor of Camden, New Jersey. The parents emigrated to Oregon at an early date in their history and celebrated their marriage later at Empire, where they lived for two years and then removed to North Bend. The father was engaged in farming and was also head sawyer in one of the sawmills of the Simpson Lumber Company. The mother died in 1891 but the father is still living and resides at Lakeside, Coos county. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson are the parents of three children: Shirley A., born March 16, 1897, who is a talented musician and artist; Russell A., born April 12, 1900, attending school; and Irvin L., who was born in September, 1909.

Mr. Peterson is a loyal adherent of the republican party, and belongs to the Knights of Pythias lodge at North Bend. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran church. He is one of the successful agriculturists of Coos county and a man respected by his friends and acquaintances for his integrity of character and the zeal and enterprise which he manifests in bringing about improvements in the community, in which he resides.

JAMES MERRITT McDOLÉ is justly numbered among the highly enterprising and successful ranchmen of Lane county, where he has acquired five hundred and fourteen acres of fertile land, four and a half miles south of Cottage Grove, on Pass Creek road, where he is engaged in stock-raising. He is the younger of the two sons born of the marriage of Samuel and Mary (Cripps) McDole, his birth having occurred in Dane county, Wisconsin, on the 4th of September, 1849. The other son, Milton J., was born at the same place in August, 1847, and is now residing in Colorado City, Colorado. The father passed away during the infancy of our subject and the mother subsequently married George Van Gasbeek, and to them were born three children: Malissa, the wife of George McNorton, of Jefferson, Kansas; Dora, a widow, who resides at Scranton, New York; and Otto, a resident of Texas, also deceased, who married Sheby Brunce and became the father of fourteen children. The mother of our subject was the second in order of birth in a family, of whom the others were as follows: Mrs. Adelaide Sparks, of Wisconsin; Maria, the wife of Daniel Rials, of York Center, Wisconsin; Samuel, who was a resident of Kansas but is now deceased; and Dave, Henry, Charles and Thomas, all living in Wisconsin; Benjamin, who is deceased; and Eland, also living in Wisconsin.

James Merritt McDole received a common-school education and was early trained to the duties of an agriculturist. At the age of fourteen he left the home of his mother and step-father and started out to make his own way in the world. During the succeeding four years he worked out as a farm hand, and during that period managed to save from his small wages enough money to enable him to purchase eighty acres of land near Holton, Jackson county, Kansas. After cultivating this for three years he sold it and bought one hundred and twenty acres southeast of his former location. There he continued his agricultural pursuits for five or six years and then sold and rented one hundred and sixty acres of land four miles west of his former location. After farming this tract for two years he bought forty acres in the same locality, situated ten miles west of Valley Falls, Kansas. He resided on this place for four years, but during that time his health began to fail and in 1881 he came to Oregon. Upon his arrival in this state he first purchased fifty-one acres of land that formed the nucleus of his present ranch. At the same time he filed on one hundred and forty-nine acres of timber land adjoining, from which he cut twenty-five hundred cords of wood, which he sold to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. He subsequently cleared this land and used it for grazing purposes, having always made a specialty of stock-raising. About 1897, he again extended the boundaries of his farm by the purchase of another quarter section of timber land, sixty acres of which has been cleared and converted into pasture. He bought another one hundred and sixty acres in 1904, which was also in timber and he has cleared twenty acres of it for pasture, his holdings aggregating five hundred and twenty acres. From this he has sold six acres, his ranch now embracing five hundred and fourteen acres. There is still some good timber on his tract, but much of it has been turned into pasture and eighty acres are under high cultivation, two of this being in orchard which is bearing. Mr. McDole makes a specialty of breeding and raising thoroughbred sheep, and is the owner of five full blooded animals from which his herd was started. He also raises cattle and hogs and receives gratifying financial returns from these sources. His ranch is well equipped and improved, having been provided with everything essential to its successful operation during the period of his ownership, including the erection of five fine barns, two granaries, a fruit cellar and various sheds and outbuildings. He has also built a comfortable residence and has installed many modern conveniences on his place to lessen the labor and expedite the work.

On the 4th of December, 1868, Mr. McDole was united in marriage to Miss Luvenia Gordon, who was one of eight children. The others are as follows: Frank, James and John, all of whom are residents of Kansas; Anee, who lives in Valley Falls, Kansas; Hampton; Louisa, who is deceased; and Sally Ann, the wife of William Griffith. To Mr. and Mrs. McDole have been born six children, as follows: Bertram, whose birth occurred on the 9th of March, 1870, living at Cottage Grove; Bernice, who was born on March 18, 1873, the wife of W. W. Wilson, a farmer of this state; Addie, born on December 29, 1875, the wife of J. W. Veatch, a dealer in live stock at Cottage Grove; Oscar, whose natal day was April 13, 1878, a rancher in the vicinity of Cottage Grove; Harry, who was born on the 11th of April, 1880, farming at Marias, Montana; and Jessie, who is attending high school.

The family attend the services of the Christian church, in which the parents hold membership, while Mr. McDole accords his political support to the republican party. Although he has never held any public office save that of school director for two terms, he is not remiss in matters of citizenship but always cooperates in every progressive movement, and is one of the highly estimable men of his community.

WILLIAM FRANKLIN RAY is one of the respected and well known men of Coos county, living upon his well developed ranch of one hundred and sixty acres, located three miles from Cooston up Willancho inlet. He was born in Mercer county, Missouri, in 1854, and is a son of Wade Hampton and Mary E. (Clenkenbeard) Ray, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Kentucky. The parents of the father and also of the mother removed at a very early day and settled in southwestern Missouri, where Mr. and Mrs. Wade Hampton Ray celebrated their wedding, after which they removed to northeastern Missouri, at which place occurred the birth of the subject of this review. They became the parents of twelve children, four of whom died in infancy. The eldest of those living is James S., a resident of New Windsor, Colorado, who is engaged in farming, is married and has nine children. John M., a resident of Leon, Kansas, is a blacksmith by trade, and has one son. Mary E., the widow of James H. Hurst, of Almena, Kansas, is the mother of six children. William F. is the subject of this review. Richard B., a resident of Norton, Kansas, is married and has five children. Calvin J., a resident of Norway, Oregon, who is engaged in farming, is married and has eight children. Sarah E., the widow of Ede F. Milton, is engaged in farming in Weiser, Idaho, and has eight children. Wade L., the youngest member of the family, who is engaged in farming at Myrtle Point, Oregon, is married and has six children.

William Franklin Ray was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools. At the age of thirteen years he started in life for himself obtaining as his first employment, a position as cattle herder, for which he received a compensation of eight dollars per month. He continued in that employment for two years and then was engaged as laborer on a farm for a number of years. In 1876 he rented eighty acres of land for one year and engaged in farming. The following year he rented forty acres, to the cultivation of which he gave his attention for one year and in 1878 he took up a timber claim in Kansas, which he kept for sometime and later filed upon a preemption claim and also a homestead. In 1887 he disposed of his real-estate holdings in Kansas and removed to Garfield county, Washington, and was there employed for one year in a sawmill. The next year he was engaged in the butcher business, and later he and his wife successfully conducted a boarding house in Spokane, Washington, immediately after the destruction of that city. In 1890 he removed to Coos bay and settled in Marshfield, where he worked for E. A. Anderson in the livery business for four years. He then rented a ranch located on Isthmus inlet and was engaged in general farming for one year. In 1895 he rented the ranch belonging to Judge Watson, of Coos City, for whom he established a well equipped dairy. In 1896 he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of choice agricultural land located on Willanche inlet and there established his home and has since continued to reside. He makes a specialty in the raising and marketing of poultry and is also heavily interested in the raising of pure bred angora goats and beef cattle.

In 1884 Mr. Ray was united in marriage to Miss Laura H. Rouse, a native of Iowa and a daughter of John and Hannah (Straight) Rouse, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of New York. They became the parents of ten children: Joanna, deceased; J. Smith, named in honor of Captain John Smith, who came over in the Mayflower and was the captain of the Plymouth Colony settlement made in Plymouth, Massachusetts in 1620; O. T., of Spokane, Washington; Mary, who married George Finley, of Finley, Washington, and by him has one child; Andrew M., deceased; James P., a resident of Jennings, Kansas, who is married and has five children; William M., who resides in Nebraska; Laura H., who is the wife of the subject of this review; Frank, who resides in Greenwood, Nebraska, and has five children; and Ella, who married Mr. Sims, of Washington, and by him has four children. Mrs. Ray has the distinction of being a direct descendant of Captain John Smith of Mayflower fame. Mr. and Mrs. William Franklin Ray have a son, Austin A. Ray, who was born in 1885.

Mr. Ray gives his political allegiance to the socialist party and served for three years as road supervisor of his district and has also been one of the directors of the school board for a number of years. He is also a member of the Grange. Mr. Ray is one of the enterprising and valued citizens of the community in which he lives. He is a man of strict integrity in all business transactions and highly respected by his friends and associates.

HENRY B. STEWARD, the efficient and popular postmaster of Myrtle Point, Coos county, not only became a well known figure in industrial circles of this section but is also prominent in politics and well known in fraternal circles of the community in which he makes his home. The width of the continent divides him from the place of his nativity, his birth having occurred in the state of Maine, on the 21st of January, 1859. His parents, Joseph and Sarah Steward, were also natives of the Pine Tree state but in 1876 sought the opportunities of the far west, making their way to California. Upon arriving in that state they took up their abode in Inyo county, which remained the place of their residence throughout their remaining days.

Henry B. Steward, who was the only child born unto his parents, received a good public school education and remained at home until twenty-one year of age, when, determining to seek his own way in the world, he left the parental roof and went to southern California. There he became identified with mining and farming operations and was variously engaged in that section of the country for a period of fourteen years. On the expiration of that time he disposed of his interests in California and came north to Oregon, locating in Coos county, and here took up the occupation of a contractor and carpenter, in which line of activity he met with most gratifying success. He was thus actively connected with the material development and growth of the county until 1907, when he withdrew from industrial circles to take upon himself the duties of public office.

Early in life Mr. Steward became interested in the politics of the country and, forming his own opinions and rules of conduct, has given support to the republican party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. For seven years he served as constable and has occupied the position of postmaster for five years, his reappointment to that office in 1911 indicating his popularity among his fellow citizens and the capable and efficient manner in which he performed the duties that devolved upon him in this connection.

It was in the year 1898 that Mr. Steward established a home of his own by his marriage, on the 14th of December, to Miss Estella Volkmar, who was born in Coos county on the 2d of September, 1870, a daughter of William and Wilhelmina (Defenbaugh) Volkmar. Her parents were both natives of Germany, the father's birth occurring on the 19th of April, 1816 and the mother's on June 22, 1830. They crossed the Atlantic in early life, Mr. Volkmar coming to this country when nineteen years of age, arriving in Baltimore in 1834. There he worked for some time at the tinners' trade and later, in connection with his brothers, took large contracts for the covering of stations and bridges belonging to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company. He was also employed by Samuel Morse, the inventor, in installing the first telegraph line ever constructed between Baltimore and Washington, D. C., and was present when the first message was sent over the line. He was married in Baltimore and in 1859 sailed for California, via the isthmus of Panama, with San Francisco as his destination. He did not long remain in that city, however, but in 1860 came north to Oregon, being a member of the first colony to settle along the Coquille river in Coos county. The party came by boat as far as Port Orford, where they landed, and from which place they made their way up the beach with ox teams, continuing their journey until they reached the Coquille valley. There they procured scows upon which they loaded their effects, and thus they came up the river to their future homes. The journey was not without its perils for on one occasion a member of the party was drowned and on another one of the scows sank, causing a great loss of property. Finally, however, they reached their destination and Mr. Volkmar established his home on the south fork of the Coquille river. He had brought with him a millstone and a small engine, and later he purchased a fifty-two inch saw. He erected a sawmill and also a grist mill, which was operated successfully for some time, and in addition to the lumber which he manufactured for his own use and that of the colony he shipped considerable white cedar lumber to San Francisco, where it sold for twenty-two dollars and fifty cents per thousand. He continued to reside in that section of the county until 1884, when he came to Myrtle Point and here became identified with the tinning business, while later he added a hardware department. He thus continued until his death, which occurred in January, 1909, having survived his wife for seven years, her death occurring in 1902, when she was seventy-one years of age. In their family were eight children, of whom three are deceased. Those living are: J. M., of Oregon City; William F., a resident of North Yakima, Washington; Albert L., a hardware dealer of Myrtle Point; Mrs. Steward; and Henry G., also engaged in the hardware business in Myrtle Point. Those deceased are Carl H., and Tillie V. Greene, and one who passed away in infancy. Mrs. Steward received her education in Myrtle Point and previous to her marriage was successfully engaged in teaching school for a short time. She and her husband have become the parents of three children, namely: Harry E., who was born on November 18, 1899; Melba H., born January 13, 1902; and Darrell C., whose birth occurred on January 16, 1905.

Mr. Steward is a prominent and popular figure in fraternal circles of Coos county, holding membership in the Masonic order and the Woodmen of the World, in both of which bodies he has filled all of the chairs. He has also served as delegate to the grand lodge of Masons and belongs to the Eastern Star, while he is also identified with the local Grange. He and his family live in a fine home situated on six acres of land located partly within the city limits of Myrtle Point. Aside from his home place he also owns one hundred and sixty acres of timber land on Catching creek and valuable property in the town of Bandon, while his wife is the owner of thirty-five acres of land on the south fork of the Coquille river. The family is one of the well known and prominent families of Myrtle Point, popular in the social circles in which they move, and few citizens are held in higher esteem than is Mr. Steward. He has done much in the past toward the material development of the community and his record in public office has ever been of the highest order, winning for him the confidence and good-will of all concerned.

EMERY ALLEN was for almost four decades identified with the drug trade in Corvallis, and the years that covered his active business career chronicled his success as the result of determined and persistent purpose and close application, so that he is now able to live retired, enjoying in well earned rest the fruits of his former toil. The width of the continent separates him from the place of his nativity, for he was born in Ontario, Wayne county, New York, on the 30th of December, 1832. He first opened his eyes to the light of day in a log cabin, which was then the abode of his parents, Henry S. and Annie (Hill) Allen, both natives of the Empire state, the former born in Washington county, in 1803, and the latter in Wayne county, in 1805. They were married in the latter county and there reared their family and spent the remainder of their lives. Early in the life of Emery Allen the family went from Ontario, a small town near Rochester, New York, to a small tract of land which the father had purchased in Wayne county, containing a log cabin, surrounded by a few acres. The removal was made in the winter and the first recollections of the little son were the hardships and difficulties encountered during that season, which was an extremely severe one. During the journey, which was made in a wagon, the father lay on a bed, for he had suffered the loss of one leg, a tree having fallen upon it, necessitating its amputation. Thus the brunt of the labor rested upon the mother and her little family, who, however, bore their part nobly. On reaching their new home the family's possessions consisted of a cow, a pig, a little corn and a few potatoes. Some of the corn was fed to the pig until it was fat enough to butcher, and that furnished the meat for the family during the winter. The rest of the corn was sent to the mill, a bushel at a time on a horse, but whether the proverbial stone was placed in the sack or not Mr. Allen does not remember—he was certain, however, that there was no lack of stones upon the little farm. The snowfall was unusually heavy that winter, the snow often drifting into the cabin through the top of the windows and the doors, and neighbors dug a passage from the house to the shed in order that the mother might go to milk and feed the cow. When the father had sufficiently recovered from his accident he made himself a wooden leg and was thus able soon to cut firewood, which grew thick all around the cabin. Thus the parents and their five little children passed through that terrible winter, but in the spring conditions became much better. The father cleared his little tract and among the stumps planted an orchard which within a few years was bearing apples as good, Mr. Allen claims, as any he has ever seen in Oregon. As he prospered he bought more pigs and cows and also secured some chickens. The family made their own maple sugar and exchanged butter and eggs in payment for groceries. Thus the parents reared their family, which ultimately numbered eight children, of whom, however, only three now survive, namely: Alonzo, a resident of Charlotte, Michigan; Mrs. Emma Holtam, of Ontario, New York; and Emery, of this review. The father passed away at the age of seventy-eight years, while the mother lived to the ripe old age of eighty-six years. They were earnest, hard-working people, and in spite of hardships and difficulties gave their children as good opportunities as could be obtained.

For three months during the winter seasons Emery Allen attended the district schools in order to gain an education, and during the summer he assisted his father in the operation of the home farm. By constant study at home he was enabled, at twenty years of age, to take up the profession of teaching, which he followed for two years in his home locality. During the vacation periods he worked as a farm laborer, earning fifteen and sixteen dollars per month, while his salary as a teacher was from eighteen to thirty-two dollars per month. Thinking to find better opportunities west, he went to Michigan in 1855, and, locating in Eaton county, continued teaching school until the spring of 1859. In the meantime he had heard the call of the far west, which proved irresistible, and, returning to New York, he bade adieu to friends and family and embarked on the steamer Northern Light, bound for San Francisco, California. The voyage was made via the Panama route, and upon arriving in the Golden state Mr. Allen found employment on a ranch in the San Jose valley, where he worked until the following spring, during which time he had been able to save three hundred dollars. Again he set sail, his destination this time being "God's country," to use his own terms, and in March, 1860, he arrived in Portland. On the following day he made his way by boat up the Willamette river to Corvallis, reaching the latter city on the same day on which a murder occurred. The murderer was convicted and hung in June, 1860, on the flat river bottom land in front of Mr. Allen's present residence. He was the only man ever hanged in Benton county. Mr. Allen at first rented a farm and later became the owner of four hundred and ninety acres, which he cultivated and developed, while during the winter months he followed his old profession of teaching school. Thus his time was fully occupied until in February, 1866, when, on account of failing health, he sold his farm and removed to Corvallis, where he purchased a half interest in the drug store owned by John W. Souther. Their original location was on the present site of the Occidental Hotel, but after two years they removed to Fisher's block and E. Woodward purchased the interest of Mr. Souther. The relationship between Mr. Allen and Mr. Woodward continued for thirty years, and then, when the business was moved to the Kline building in 1899, Mr. Allen bought out his partner and continued alone in business until succeeded by his son John, about 1906. For thirty-nine years he was identified with the drug trade and in that period success in large measure came to him, enabling him now to live in retirement, enjoying all of the comforts and many of the luxuries of life. He is the owner of a fine farm located near Philomath, Oregon, consisting of two hundred acres valued at twenty thousand dollars, and a brick building at the corner of Second and Adams streets, both of which are a source of a gratifying annual income, while he is also the owner of the fine residence at 738 Third street in which he now makes his home and which he erected in 1882. All of these are but the visible evidence of a life of indefatigable industry and earnest endeavor, crowned by success in a substantial measure.

It was on the 14th of December, 1862, that Mr. Allen was united in marriage to Miss Mary Ellen Barker, who was born in Lee county, Iowa, on the 24th of January, 1846. Her parents, Clement and Christina (Henkle) Barker, were pioneers of Iowa and in 1833 crossed the plains to Oregon as a part of the Henkle train. Mrs. Barker was a daughter of Jacob Henkle, who brought all of his children to this state, and the representatives of the name are numerous and prominent in the Willamette valley. For many years they have held a family reunion on the 1st of October of each year. Mrs. Allen's parents are now deceased, the father passing away in Washington and the mother at the home of our subject. Mr. and Mrs. Allen have become the parents of six children as follows: Alonzo W., a druggist of Portland; Ira E., who is employed in the capacity of bookkeeper in Portland; Henry C., a resident of Portland, who has been in the government employ for the last ten years; Anna, who married Eldred Kuizenga of Bakersfield, California; John F., residing in Corvallis, who is the president of the Commercial Club of this city, and his father's successor in the drug business; and Edna, the wife of Charles Shenefield, of Portland. On the 14th of December, 1912, Mr. and Mrs. Allen will celebrate their golden anniversary, having traveled life's journey happily together for a half century.

Since age conferred upon him the right of franchise Mr. Allen has stanchly supported the republican party, having voted for Fremont and all party candidates since that time, while at present he is serving as president of the Taft Club of Corvallis. He served as a member of the city council for a few years, but otherwise has held no public office. He was elected county surveyor but did not qualify and has been offered the nomination for state senator but has always declined, preferring to render his service in a private capacity, although deeply interested in the welfare of the party and doing everything in his power to further its influence. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to all of its various branches. He has watched the growth of Corvallis from an early day, witnessing the organization of many of its important institutions, and has ever felt great interest and pride in the work of development and improvement, doing all in his power as a business man or private citizen to further the general upbuilding. He has been a subscriber for the Oregonian for fifty-one years, of which fact mention was made in that paper in its fiftieth anniversary publication. Oregon numbers him among its representative and valued adopted sons, and he has the esteem and respect of all who know him.

THOMAS L. DUGGER is well known in business, fraternal and agricultural circles of Linn county and has won this prominence by active, able and useful work along these lines during his forty-one years' residence in the section. He has been one of those who have developed Oregon's journalism and has devoted much of his time to newspaper work throughout the state, being at the present time the proprietor and publisher of the Lebanon Tribune. His activities have also included work as a school-teacher and as a general farmer and his career has been useful and valuable as well as upright and worthy. He was born in Macoupin county, Illinois, December 17, 1846, a son of Leonard W. and Sarah Dugger, the former a native of Illinois and the latter of Tennessee. Mr. Dugger comes of old Revolutionary stock, his great-great-grandfather having come to the United States from France with General Lafayette and served as a soldier in the Revolution, while his great-grandfather served with General Jackson at New Orleans. His grandfather was one of Illinois' earliest pioneers, having come to that territory about 1800, settling in Madison county, near the present city of Highland, Illinois, and each generation has furnished a large quota of soldiers to the country's various wars. The father followed farming in Illinois, where he owned two hundred and forty acres of land. He died upon his homestead and the property is still in possession of the family. Mr. and Mrs. Dugger had ten children, four of whom are still living: George W., a resident of Los Angeles, California; Thomas L., of this review; Mrs. Mary Hulme, whose home is in southern California; and Samuel B., who resides on the old homestead in Illinois.

In the acquirement of an education Mr. Dugger attended the public schools of Macoupin county and later attended Blackburn University at Carlinville, Illinois. At the age of seventeen he enlisted in Company M, Eleventh Missouri Cavalry, in September, 1862, for a term of three years. He served, however, only two years and ten months, being discharged with honor at the close of the war. After he was mustered out he returned home and supplemented his early studies by a college course, after which he taught school for two years in Illinois. In 1870 he came west and settled in Portland, Oregon, where for one year he taught in the public schools, coming to Lebanon, Linn county, at the end of that time. Here he took charge of the Santiam Academy and after one year added to his activities by the operation of a tract of land which he has developed and improved at intervals since that time. He, however, kept up his teaching and for four years worked in the public schools of Linn county and also taught vocal music privately. Eventually, he became identified with the Albany Herald, which was established by Messrs. Pottinger, Barnes & Steele, and was employed in its editorial department for several months. Some time afterward he and O. T. Porter established the Albany Bulletin, in which Mr. Dugger was interested for one year. In 1890 he purchased the Scio Press, in Linn county, and this paper he published with much success for seven years, selling out his interests in order to establish the People's Press of Albany. Six months later he sold this paper and spent six years upon his farm. In 1904 he returned to Scio and purchased the Santiam News, which he operated for seven years, selling it in 1911. He came to Lebanon in January of the following year and here established the Lebanon Tribune, which he is still publishing, doing also job printing. During the course of his many years' connection with local journalism he has had a distinct influence upon public thought and action and since he advocated always the highest and soundest doctrines, this influence has tended toward growth and advancement. The Lebanon Tribune is in a flourishing condition both from an editorial and business point of view and its large circulation is a tribute to Mr. Dugger's ability and energy. He and his wife own a farm of three hundred and ten acres located five miles from Lebanon and he is the sole proprietor of his large and modern printing plant.

In 1872 Mr. Dugger was united in marriage to Mrs. Georgia A. Henderson, the widow of Philip P. Henderson, by whom she had two children: William J., of Oakland, California; and George C., whose death occurred in Albany. Mr. and Mrs. Dugger became the parents of two children: Samuel W., who was born in August, 1874, and who is now a member of the Naval Station training band at Goat Island, California; and Ella, who died at Scio when she was fifteen years of age. Mrs. Dugger is a native of Illinois and a daughter of Dr. G. F. Crawford, who came to Oregon in 1852, in pioneer times, and took up a donation claim five miles west of Lebanon, which is still owned by members of the family. Dr. and Mrs. Crawford passed away in Benton county. In their family were five children: Georgia, the wife of our subject; J. G., who is engaged in the photographer's business in Albany; W. W. and O. A., both of whom reside on the old homestead; and Helen V., who resides in Lebanon, and who is the owner of fine English walnut and peach orchards. Mr. Dugger was reared in the Methodist Episcopal faith but he and his family are now devout adherents of the Spiritualist religion.

Mr. Dugger gives his allegiance to the democratic party but has never been active politically in the sense of office seeking. He is a charter member of Leonidas Lodge, No. 36, K. P. of Scio, and a charter member of McPherson Post, G. A. R., of Albany. During his forty-two years' residence in Oregon he has won a high place in the respect and esteem of those who are associated with him. His work along many different lines has been progressive and useful and his influence one of the important factors in local development.

JOHN WEST is engaged in general merchandising at Westport. Oregon numbers him among her native sons, his birth having occurred in Clatsop county, August 13, 1872. His parents were David and Viola (Howe) West. His father and grandfather were among the pioneers of this state, coming to Oregon more than fifty-seven years ago. The father was born near Quebec, Canada, in 1841, but was married in Westport, Oregon, where he resided until called to his final rest on the 27th of April, 1909. In the early period of his residence here he was owner of a sawmill and logging camp but later turned his attention to mercantile pursuits, conducting a general store until his demise. Since his death Mrs. West has removed to Haley, Idaho, where she is living at the age of fifty-six years, her birth having occurred in 1855. In their family were four sons and three daughters: Mrs. Eva A. Smith, a widow living at Westport and the mother of three children, May, Mabel and Merle; Mrs. Ellen M. Johnson, of Astoria, Oregon; John, of this review; Alonzo D., who is living in Garibaldi, Oregon; and Roy L., Agnes, and Clyde W., all of whom are deceased.

John West started in the business world on his own account when twenty-six years of age. He began dealing in liquor and continued in that line for six years, when he sold out and took up general merchandising in Westport. He has since conducted one of the two largest stores of the town and has built up a good business, being accorded a liberal patronage because he carries a well selected line of goods and meets the demands of his patrons. He owns the store building and also a residence here.

Politically a republican, Mr. West has never sought public office yet he has served for some years as postmaster of the town and is still filling the position. His grandfather was the first postmaster of Westport and was succeeded by his father, David West, who for many years served in that capacity. John West holds membership with the Foresters of America, Camp No. 8, of Astoria, and he is also identified with Clatskanie Aerie, No. 1795, Fraternal Order of Eagles. From an early period in the history of this state the family has been identified with its material progress and upbuilding, and the work which was begun by his grandfather and continued by his father is now being carried on by John West, who is loyal to the best interests of the community.

XAVIER ARZNER, of Lakeview, is a member of the firm of Arzner Brothers, blacksmiths and wagon makers. He was born in Baden, Germany, near the Black Forest, March 12, 1865, and is a son of John and Christiana (Wasmer) Arzner. The mother died in Germany in 1884 and in 1887 the father came to Oregon, his last days being spent in Lakeview, where he passed away in August, 1895. He was a blacksmith by trade in Germany but after coming to the United States lived retired, making his home with his son, whose name introduces this review. In the family were four sons: Gabriel; Xavier; Joseph; and John, who is a carpenter. All are residents of Lakeview.

Xavier Arzner was the first to come to the United States, arriving in 1886, and the other sons came with their father in the spring of 1887. The three eldest learned blacksmithing in the old country with their father. Gabriel has retired from that business and is conducting a ranch, while Xavier and his brother Joseph still continue to follow blacksmithing. Xavier Arzner started his present shop immediately after his arrival in partnership with James Gibbs, the business being conducted under the firm style of Arzner & Gibbs, for one year. Following the arrival of his brother the firm of Arzner Brothers was formed in 1887 and has maintained a continuous existence to the present time. They own a shop on Main street, opposite the courthouse, and are doing general blacksmithing and wagon making and all kinds of general repair work in that line. During the past three years they have been dealers in blacksmiths' supplies and their business has reached large proportions. They own a tract of seven hundred and sixty acres of land in Goose valley, about twelve miles northwest of Lakeview. All of the Arzner brothers are republicans and Xavier has served as a member of the city council for four years, giving active aid to many progressive movements which he deemed beneficial in municipal affairs. Fraternally he is a Mason, a United Workman and a For-ester and is also connected with the Eastern Star and the Degree of Honor.

In 1896 Mr. Arzner was married to Miss Belle Pratt, who was born in Santa Cruz, California, April 5, 1870, but was reared in Lake county, Oregon. She is a daughter of C. C. Pratt, who was killed in an automobile accident in 1911. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Arzner are five in number: Lena May; Ivan and Evan, twins; Cecil; and Robert Lee. For more than a quarter of a century Xavier Arzner has resided in Lakeview, taking a helpful interest in everything pertaining to the upbuilding of the town and to its business advancement. The record which he has made for diligence and reliability has brought him high regard and he is justly accounted one of the representative citizens of Lake county.

JOHN G. REED. No history of the settlement and development of Linn county would be complete without the record of the life of John G. Reed, who as a boy of fourteen, crossed the plains with ox teams and settled in this section in pioneer times. His mature life has been closely identified with agricultural interests and today he is one of the most extensive land owners in the county and active in the management of his property, although he is past the age when most men retire. He was born in Des Moines county, Iowa, August 31, 1838, a son of James N. and Hester (Morgan) Reed, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Illinois. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Reed moved to Iowa and were among the early settlers in that state. The grandfather of our subject followed the contracting and building business and erected for Jonathan Morgan one of the first houses in Burlington. Three generations of the Reed family were represented in the emigrant train which in 1852 crossed the plains from Iowa to Oregon and the uncle of our subject was the first man to succumb to the plague of cholera which raged upon the trails. Arriving in Linn county Mr. Reed's parents and grandparents took up donation claims and the elder people died upon their property some years later. The father of our subject, however, operated and developed his land until 1857 and then sold it and moved to eastern Oregon and finally to Washington, where he took up a large tract upon which he resided until his death when he was eighty years of age. His wife survived him for three years. In their family were eight children, five of whom are still living.

John G. Reed was fourteen years of age when he came with his parents to Linn county. After one year's schooling he began active life for himself, obtaining a position as a driver of an ox team between Oregon and California. He made several trips in this capacity, bringing each time quantities of fruit into California, where he obtained twenty-five dollars a bushel for apples. For some years after this he engaged in mining and finally in 1860 began his agricultural career, buying one hundred and twenty acres of land near Albany which he developed and improved for twenty years. At the end of that time he disposed of his holdings and purchased three hundred and twenty acres on the Santiam river, four miles above Lebanon, which he has operated since that time.

Under his management it has become one of the finest farms in the district and is a model in every particular for other agricultural enterprises, being equipped with fine barns and outbuildings and every variety of farm machinery. This property, however, forms only a small portion of Mr. Reed's extensive holdings. He owns besides one hundred and fifty acres near Maxwell, large tracts in Olympia, Washington, and fine residence property in Lebanon.

In 1859 Mr. Reed was united in marriage to Miss Anna Bond, a native of Illinois and a daughter of Nathan and Elizabeth (Traylor) Bond. Mrs. Reed's father went to California alone in 1850 and three years later returned to Illinois and brought his entire family to Oregon. After spending one winter in Marion county they removed to Linn county, where the father bought land seven and one-half miles east of Albany. This property he developed and improved for a number of years along systematic and scientific lines, constantly adding to his holdings until he possessed seven hundred and forty acres of the finest and most productive land in Oregon. He died upon this farm in 1890 at the age of seventy-two and his wife survived him until 1896. Both are of fine old southern stock, the father a native of Tennessee and the mother of Kentucky, and they can trace their descent in a direct line to Revolutionary times. Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Bond became the parents of five children, two of whom are still living, namely: Mrs. Reed and Albert Bond, a farmer of Linn county. Dr. B. F. Bond died in Dallas, Texas.

Mrs. Reed is a fine example of the best type of pioneer woman. For forty years she practiced medicine and did work of incalculable value in relieving the hard conditions of that early time. The scope and extent of her interests and activities may be judged from the fact that in 1880 she served as census enumerator and takes an active interest in the various charitable movements of the community.

Mr. and Mrs. Reed became the parents of four children: Austin N., who is operating the donation claim in Linn county taken up by Nathan Bond in pioneer times; Effie, now Mrs. E. M. Bodwell, of Lebanon; Elizabeth Reed, now Mrs. Dr. M. J. Denny, who previous to her marriage taught school and is a graduate physician; and Clifton N., the youngest son, who met an accidental death when fourteen years of age.

Mr. Reed is a member of Spring Bank Grange, No. 409, Patrons of Husbandry, and Mrs. Reed is a Daughter of the American Revolution, the Maccabees and the Women's Relief Corps. He spends most of his time in his comfortable home in Lebanon but is active in the supervision of his extensive farm lands. A long and useful career as a farmer in a country to which he came as a pioneer has brought him into important relations with agricultural interests and his activities have been powerful forces in promoting development and progress. Although seventy-four years of age he seems yet in his prime in spirit and interests, for his integrity, force of character and business ability are still as powerful as they were in the beginning of his career and they have made his name honored and esteemed wherever it is known.

EDGAR BAKER BARRON is one of the well known stock men of Jackson county, being the owner of sixteen hundred acres of ranch and agricultural land located near Ashland where he is successfully engaged in sheep-raising. He was born on his father's home ranch in Jackson county, Oregon, January 23, 1859, and is a son of Hugh Franklin Barron. More extended mention of the parents is made in another part of this work in connection with the review of Major Hugh F. Barron.

Edgar Baker Barron was reared in his parents' home and received his early education in the public schools and also at the Ashland Academy. From the early years of his manhood he was associated with his father in the cattle-raising business but for the past four years he has been interested in the sheep industry. He is the owner of sixteen hundred acres of good land, located near Ashland in Jackson county.

Mr. Barron was united in marriage in November, 1886, to Miss Stacey Payne, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Payne, who are residents of Ashland. To Mr. and Mrs. Barron one child has been born, Austie Alice, who is the wife of A. R. Brown, who is engaged in the butcher business in Ashland.

Edgar Baker Barron belongs to the republican party but has never sought political preferment. He is a member of Ashland Lodge, No. 944, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and is one of the successful and highly esteemed citizens of his section of the state.

EVERETT BLANCHARD CURTIS is extensively engaged in fruit cultivation on forty-seven acres of land in Coos county and is also successful in the operation of a modern and sanitary dairy. He was born in Searsport, Maine, in 1855, and is a son of Samuel and Eliza (Griffin) Curtis, both natives of the same state. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Curtis were well known in religious circles of their native city and gave their allegiance to the Methodist church. They were the parents of nine children: Emma A., the widow of E. D. Nickels of Maine; Benjamin F., Samuel and Elizabeth, all of whom are deceased; Henry G., who maintains his residence in Searsport, Maine; William B., who is postmaster of Marshfield, Oregon, and of whom more extended mention is made elsewhere in this work; Everett Blanchard, the subject of this sketch; Clifton, a captain of a sea vessel sailing from San Francisco; and Samuel, the second of the name, who is now deceased.

Everett Blanchard Curtis was educated in the district schools of Searsport, and remained with the parents until he was twenty-five years of age. When his father died he took entire charge of the management and direction of the home farm and operated it in the interests of his mother for some years. In 1880 he left Maine and came to Leadville, Colorado, where he followed mining in that city and its vicinity for three years. He later removed to Idaho, where he took up a homestead claim in Custer county, cleared and developed the land and brought it to a high state of cultivation. He was extensively engaged at this period of his life in breeding, feeding and selling live stock of all kinds. He became an expert judge of values in this direction and owned some of the finest cattle in the state. For twenty-three years he resided in Idaho upon his original claim and his agricultural operations were rewarded by prosperity and success in all lines. He made extensive improvements upon the three hundred and twenty acres which he owned in Idaho and was responsible for the irrigation of his entire tract. He sold out at a good price and removed to Coos county, where he located on Larson's inlet. He purchased one hundred and seventy acres of unimproved land and began its cultivation. He developed and expanded his holdings along modern lines, built model barns and outbuildings, diked in his property from the rising tides and made the land fertile and productive. At the end of three years he disposed of his holdings and came to Myrtle Point, where he bought forty-seven acres of stump land. He cleared his property and gave his entire time and personal supervision to its cultivation and improvement. He now has one of the finest farms in this section of the country and does sanitary dairying on a large scale. He has most of his land under cultivation in fruit trees of all sorts, suitable to the soil and climate. He now has four hundred trees planted upon his holdings and every year extends his activities along this line. He is interested in local real estate and his judicious investments in Marshfield town lots have added considerably to his income.

On January 22, 1910, Mr. Curtis was united in marriage to Miss Laura Rich Curtis, his cousin, and a daughter of Libeans and Jane (Porter) Curtis. Mrs. Curtis' parents were natives of Maine and reared a large family of children, only three of whom are living: Eben, a seal captain, with headquarters at Alameda, California; Joseph P., a resident of Everett, Massachusetts; and Laura, the wife of our subject.

In his political views Mr. Curtis is a consistent republican of the progressive wing and always votes the party ticket, believing its policies and principles most conducive to public welfare. He never seeks public office and his one term as county commissioner in Idaho was served under protest. He is affiliated with the Grangers but beyond this has no fraternal connections. His farm is situated one and one-half miles from Myrtle Point, Oregon, on the road leading to the old Lee ranch and is recognized throughout Coos county as a model agricultural property. Mr. Curtis is one of the many farmers near Myrtle Point, whose individual activities, directed along modern lines of development and expansion, are vital forces in making agriculture a progressive science.

JOEL VAIL. When Joel Vail died upon his farm in 1907, Oregon lost a sturdy pioneer in its settlement, and agricultural interests of Linn county were deprived of an eminently successful representative. For almost fifty years he had been identified with farming in this section and was probably one of the most important forces in the development of the industry. He was born in Ohio in 1828, one of a family of five children, all of whom have passed away.

Joel Vail received his education in the public schools of his native state and was twenty-four years of age when he came to Oregon. He settled near Hillsboro in 1852 and a short time afterward came to Linn county, where he took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres near Sodaville, whereon he resided for five years. At the end of that time he moved to Lane county and taught school in that section for some time, returning in 1866 to Linn county, where he took up a homestead claim a few miles northeast of Sodaville and developed and improved it until his death in 1907. He cultivated this property along systematic and practical lines, built barns and other necessary structures and made general improvements, keeping always in touch with modern advancement. He owned at the time of his death two hundred acres of fine land and was numbered among the substantial and deservedly prosperous farmers of the district.

In 1857 Mr. Vail married Miss Mary E. Lee, who was born in Iowa in 1839, a daughter of Philester and Eliza A. Burge Lee, natives of New York state. Their marriage occurred there and they later went to Ohio and from there proceeded to Illinois, whence they removed to Iowa, where they lived until 1847. In that year they crossed the plains to Oregon with ox teams and from The Dalles took boat to Portland, where they spent the winter. In the following spring they located on a farm east of the city and there remained until 1848, when they moved to Tualatin plains. A short time afterward Philester Lee went to the gold fields of California and spent one year in mining, but returned at the end of that time to his farm near Salem. Afterward he moved into the city and opened a dry-goods store, which he operated until 1852, when he sold out his interests and moved to Linn county. Here he proved up a donation claim upon the place where the village of Sodaville now stands and developed his three hundred and twenty acres for a number of years. Disposing of his holdings in the latter part of the '70s, he retired from active life and made his home with his daughter Mrs. Vail until his death, in 1892. To Mr. and Mrs. Lee were born eleven children, four of whom are still living, namely: Mary E., the wife of our subject; Mrs. Lucinda Matthews, of Sweet Home, Oregon; Norman, a resident of Junction City; and Mrs. Sarah Hoge, of Grants Pass. Mr. and Mrs. Vail became the parents of eight children, five of whom are deceased. Those who survive are F. N., Mrs. Kate Stevens and Fred L. Mrs. Vail is residing upon the homestead. She is a member of the Christian Adventist church, of which religion her husband was a devout adherent.

Mr. Vail gave his allegiance to the republican party and while never active as an office seeker was yet intelligently interested in the growth and advancement of the section to which he came as a pioneer. He was seventy-nine years of age when he died. His earlier career was active, useful and valuable, his old age was a benediction to all who came in contact with him, and his entire life was an encouragement to his associates and an example well worthy of emulation by the young.

HENRY A. CANFIELD, JR., M. D., is one of the most progressive physicians in Drain, Oregon, and brings to the practice of his profession youthful energy, a comprehensive scientific education and all the most modern ideas along medical and surgical lines. He was born in Watkins Glen, New York, April 6, 1887, and is a son of Henry A. and Mary E. (Murphy) Canfield, both natives of New York state. His father's birth occurred in Bath and the mother's in Watkins Glen. They were married in the latter city and lived there until 1892 when they removed to Los Angeles, California, where they remained until the fall of that year. They spent the years from 1893 to 1896 as residents of Florida and subsequently removed to Phoebus, Virginia, where they resided until 1898. In that year they went to Seattle, Washington, where they have since made their home. Henry Canfield, Sr., is a fire inspector for the Lumbermen's Indemnity Exchange of Seattle and is one of the prominent business men of that city.

Dr. Canfield received his early education in the public schools of California and Florida. He is a graduate of the Seattle high school which institution he left with the class of 1907. He early determined to make the practice of medicine his life work and in pursuance of this ambition entered the office of Dr. M. E. A. McKechnie in Seattle and studied under that able tutor until the fall of 1907 when he entered the medical department of the University of Oregon, at Portland. He was graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1911. Previous to this time he had served for five months as interne in the Fannie Paddock hospital at Tacoma, Washington, and following his graduation held a similar office in the Good Samaritan hospital at Portland. The practical experience which he gained in these institutions is of great value to him in his present practice. Dr. Canfield opened an office in Drain, Oregon, and started upon the practice of his profession. During the short time in which he has been active in this line he has demonstrated his ability as a practitioner and has built up a lucrative practice. He is recognized as one of the most promising of the younger physicians in Drain and his success is the inevitable result of his expert knowledge and his conscientious work.

Dr. Henry A. Canfield is a republican but has never sought public office, preferring to give his entire attention to the work incident to the building up of a large professional practice. He is identified with Drain Camp, No. 259, Woodmen of the World and holds membership in Pacific Circle, No. 20, Women of Woodcraft. He is a devout Episcopalian and a regular attendant at church. In the medical profession he has already attained a degree of success for which he might well be envied by an older man. Thorough efficiency in the groundwork of attainment in medicine and is the underlying secret of Dr. Canfield's success.

MRS. DORA MAY SALTMARSH is the widow of Arthur B. Saltmarsh, who died October 21, 1911. Mrs. Saltmarsh was born in Ohio on the 21st of November, 1864. She is a daughter of Arthur Poole, who emigrated at a very early date to California, making the journey in company with a train consisting of fifteen wagons. After spending one year in California he removed to Ashland, Oregon. Mrs. Saltmarsh was reared in her father's home and educated in the public schools of the district in which her parents lived. She was married at Jacksonville, Oregon, April 10, 1886, to Arthur B. Saltmarsh, whose birth occurred at Sterling, Oregon, on the 25th of February, 1861. He was an active and successful farmer and in addition to his agricultural interests he was also engaged in packing supplies throughout the settlement adjacent to his home. Unto him and his wife were born five children, namely: Osie; Lee; Dean; Glenn; and Ottie, who died in infancy.

Mrs. Saltmarsh makes her home on one hundred and twenty acres of excellent ranch land, having personal charge of all of the development work and business interests connected with this property. Since the death of her husband she has bravely shouldered the additional burdens that have fallen to her lot and in the conduct of her affairs has proven herself to be a competent and successful business woman. She is held in high esteem throughout the community in which she resides and is closely identified with the social betterment of the people.

THOMAS J. COYLE is the son of an Oregon pioneer and has been in the state since he was two years of age. His entire active life has been devoted to agricultural pursuits in Linn county and his success in farming has been closely connected with the development of the section. He was born at Peoria, Illinois, in 1845, a son of Reuben S. and Hannah (Carroll) Coyle, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Illinois. Their marriage occurred in the latter state and they lived upon a farm there until 1847, when they came west to Oregon, settling four miles south of Lebanon, in Linn county. Here the father took up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres and developed and improved it until the death of his wife in March, 1870. At that time he moved to California, where he died in January, 1888. In their family were nine children, three of whom are still living, namely: T. J., of this review; John H., a resident of Lebanon; and Mrs. Emmeline Klum, of Portland.

Mr. Coyle was only two years of age when he came with his parents to Linn county and consequently his education was received in the public schools of the district. After he was eighteen years old he spent two and one-half years in California and then returned to Linn county, to assume charge of the operation of the homestead, upon which he has lived continuously since that time, with the exception of three years spent in raising stock, east of the Cascade mountains. His farm comprises one hundred and ninety acres of the family homestead and three hundred and sixty acres which he has added to it. Of this property two hundred acres are tillable and under cultivation and the entire tract is improved and in excellent condition. Mr. Coyle does general farming but specializes in raising stock, having obtained some local prominence as a successful breeder.

Mr. Coyle has been twice married. His first union occurred in January, 1868, when he wedded Miss Ann E. Kirkendall, who was born in Missouri. She died twenty-seven years later and in 1897 Mr. Coyle was united in marriage to Mrs. Annie Merriam, a native of Iowa and a daughter of Philander and Jane Hazen, who were both born in the eastern part of the United States. In their family were five children: Harry, deceased; Mrs. Coyle; James, of Iowa; Anelia, the wife of Thomas Chesshir, of Linn county;

MR. AND MRS. A. B. SALTMARSH

and Mrs. Mary Wilson, of Crook county. Mrs. Coyle has two sons: Wilber Merriam, born in June 1888, who is residing in Linn county; and Jerry Jefferson Coyle, born February 23, 1898, who is attending school. Mrs. Coyle is a member of the Evangelical church.

Mr. Coyle is independent in his political views and votes for the man whom he considers best fitted for the office without regard to party affiliations. He is a member of the Grange. Although he has never been active politically in the sense of office seeking, probably no man has done more in his private capacity to promote growth and advancement. The nature of the activities to which he has devoted his life has made him an important factor in development, and his progressive agricultural methods and straightforward standards have made this influence useful and beneficial.

HENRY C. McTIMMONDS, early settler in Polk county, honored veteran of the Civil war, and for over forty years a force in the agricultural development of this part of Oregon, was born in Missouri, October 26, 1842. He is a son of Lambert and Ann (Burns) McTimmonds, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Ireland. Their marriage occurred in Pennsylvania and they later moved to Illinois and then to Missouri, where they remained until 1845. In that year they crossed the plains with ox teams and settled in Polk county, Oregon, in the spring of 1846, among the very earliest Oregon pioneers. The father took up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres, which he developed and improved until his death when he was eighty-one years of age. In their family were ten children, the two eldest of whom, twins, died in infancy. The others are: James, who has passed away; H. C., of this review; Thomas B., Francis M. and Alexander R., who have also passed away; Erastus, of Polk county; Joseph L., deceased; and Charles, who makes his home in southern Oregon.

Henry C. McTimmonds was only three years of age when he came with his parents to Polk county. His education, therefore, was received in the public schools of that section and when he laid aside his books he aided his father in the work of the farm. In 1864 he enlisted in the First Oregon Volunteer Infantry and served until the end of the war, obtaining his discharge June 30, 1866. After he was mustered out he returned to Oregon and began his agricultural career. For over forty-five years he has been active and prominent as a general farmer and his work has had its influence upon methods and standards. At the present time he owns twenty acres of land four miles from Lebanon, a farm which is valued at three hundred dollars per acre and has a half interest in a quarter section in Lincoln county. He resides upon his first farm, specializing in raising fruits and vegetables. The labor which he bestows upon the place has made it a well improved and valuable property which in its attractive appearance indicates his careful supervision.

In 1866 Mr. McTimmonds was united in marriage to Miss Louisa E. Smith, who was born in Polk county, a daughter of James and Elizabeth Smith. Her parents came to Oregon in 1846 and settled in Polk county, where they proved up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres upon which they resided until their deaths. They had a large family of children, six of whom are still living: J. D., of Dallas; B. F., who resides in Polk county; George W., a resident of Marion county; F. M., who makes his home in Dallas; Rachel H., also of Polk county; and Louisa, the wife of our subject. Mr. and Mrs. McTimmonds have five children: Francis T., who is married and resides near his father's farm; James T., of Springfield, Lane county; Ethel, the wife of F. W. Kau, of Polk county; Ralph, who is married and resides at home; and Homer, also at home.

Mr. McTimmonds gives his allegiance to the republican party and has served ably and efficiently as assessor of Polk county. He has held membership in the Grange for many years. He is well known in this section of Oregon, having been a resident here for a number of years during which time his genuine worth, his active life and his high principles have commended him to the goodwill, trust and respect of all with whom he associates.

GEORGE W. WOOLLEY. One of the largest and up-to-date grocery stores in Drain, Oregon, is owned by George W. Woolley, a representative business man of that city. His enterprise is conducted along modern and progressive lines and the effect of the cleanliness and arrangement of his stock is felt in the amount of business handled. Mr. Woolley has been identified with this activity in Drain since 1908 and during the past four years has built up a flourishing and lucrative business. He was born in Los Angeles county, California, October 16, 1876, and is a son of George C. and Nancy (Harer) Woolley, the former a native of Missouri and the latter of Arkansas. Our subject's parents were married in California, to which state they had removed with their parents in the early days of the California gold excitement. They remained residents of the Golden state until 1884, when they came north to Oregon and after a short period of residence in Oakland they came to Drain, where they have since resided.

George W. Woolley received his early education in the common schools of California and Oregon and remained at home until he was twenty years of age. He began his active business career as a stock-raiser. He bought a ranch on the Smith river in Douglas county and operated this until 1908. During this period he engaged extensively in the breeding of high-grade cattle and was one of the prominent stock-raisers of the district. In 1908 he came to Drain and established himself in his present grocery business. He is one of the progressive young business men of this city. His stock is kept up to the highest standard of cleanliness and purity and his store is attractive in every way. It is well arranged and has the aspect of a metropolitan enterprise.

In 1904 Mr. Woolley was united in marriage to Miss Dolly Haney, a daughter of Ross Haney, a prominent ranchman on the Smith river, and to their union has been born one child, Vera Viola. George W. Woolley is a republican, active in the local party organization. He is candidate for sheriff on the prohibition ticket and has many loyal supporters in Drain. He is a member of Drain Lodge, No. 770, M. B. A. He and his wife are members and regular attendants of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Woolley is among the most estimable and promising of the younger generation of business men in Drain. He is interested in the growth of his enterprise and active in promoting commercial progress in his city. His energy, ambition and clean business methods cause him to be regarded as one of the representative and enterprising citizens of Douglas county.

PETER N. REBERG is one of the well known business men of North Bend, at which place he organized the North Bend Hardware Company, a corporation of which he is secretary. He was born in Minnesota in 1869, and is a son of Nels and Kren (Johnson) Reberg, both of whom were natives of Norway, who emigrated to America in 1867. They settled in Minnesota, where the father has since been engaged in farming. The mother died in 1910. They were the parents of ten children, seven of whom are living: Cristine, who is the widow of Halvor Oleson, of Minnesota; Ingebright, who is a resident of Minnesota; John, of Memphis, Tennessee; Nora, who is the wife of James Brink of Minnesota; Augusta, of California; Helen, who resides with her parents in Minnesota, where she is engaged in the general merchandising business; and Peter N., of this review.

Peter N. Reberg was reared in his parents' home and received his early education in the public schools. He remained under the parental roof and was engaged at work with his father on the latter's farm until he was twenty-two years of age, at which time he started in life for himself, following various occupations in Minnesota for a period of two years. He then found employment with the Street Railway Company of Duluth, Minnesota, and continued in the employ of that corporation for six and one-half years. He next became an employe of the Marshall-Wells Hardware Company in Duluth for four years and was with the firm in an executive capacity for one year. He engaged in the hardware business in North Dakota in 1902, after which time he sold out and returned to Minnesota and again entered the employ of the Marshall-Wells Hardware Company with whom he continued for one and one-half years. In July, 1905, in the interest of that company, he came to Oregon and continued in their employment until March of that year. He then settled at North Bend, where he organized the North Bend Hardware Company, of which he is the secretary and to the interests of that corporation he has since continued to give his attention.

Mr. Reberg was united in marriage July 11, 1895, to Miss Catherine McCallum, a native of Canada. Her parents were natives of Scotland. Mr. Reberg is independent in his political views and is in no sense an office seeker. He is a member of the Masonic order and of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and he and his wife are members of the Protestant church of North Bend. Peter N. Reberg is one of the enterprising and successful men of his adopted city and is always to be relied upon to give his aid and influence to the advancement of every worthy cause intended to improve the condition of the people.

HARVEY C. ROSE. For over a quarter of a century Harvey C. Rose has been identified with agricultural interests of Linn county where he owns three hundred and thirty acres of improved land. His farm is one of the finest in the section and he has demonstrated his ability as an agriculturist and business man in his able conduct of the enterprise. He was born in Missouri, September 24, 1854, and is a son of Andrew J. and Elma (Rubel) Rose, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Virginia. The parents of our subject came to Oregon in 1856 and spent two years in Polk county before they came to Linn county where the father purchased three hundred and twenty acres of land four miles above Lebanon which he developed and improved until the time of his death which occurred in 1893 when he was seventy-three years of age. His widow resides at Newberg, and is eighty-six years of age.

Harvey C. Rose was only two years of age when with his parents he crossed the plains with ox teams to Oregon by way of California. He was educated in the public schools of Linn county and remained at home until he was twenty-four years old, working for a part of the time as a farm laborer. When he was twenty-five he made his first purchase of land, buying a valuable property which he later sold in order to gain possession of the three hundred and thirty acres which he now owns and operates. This entire tract is improved and developed and seventy acres are under cultivation. Substantial improvements have been made upon this land, necessary buildings have been erected and labor saving machinery installed so that Mr. Rose's farm is in all its aspects a valuable and modern agricultural enterprise.

In 1884 Mr. Rose was united in marriage to Miss Jennie K. Gibson, of Butler county, Pennsylvania, in which section her parents passed away. Mr. and Mrs. Rose have become the parents of five children: Elma, who died at the age of ten years; Linn W., who was born in 1889, and who is living at home; Luella, who was born in 1891, and is also with her parents; Clarence, who was born in 1894; and Velma, born in 1897. All received an excellent education in Linn county. The family are members of the Presbyterian church.

Harvey C. Rose is a democrat and is interested in movements which tend to promote general welfare and advancement, although his public spirit never takes the form of office seeking. He is a member of the Spring Bank Grange, No. 409, Patrons of Husbandry. During the entire period of his active life he has been engaged in general farming and has become through his long experience and his knowledge of local conditions, one of the most successful and prosperous agriculturists of the section and one of the most potent forces in its development.

GEORGE D. MANDIGO is numbered among the enterprising and successful business men of North Bend, where he is engaged in the grocery business as one of the stockholders in the Coos Bay Grocery Company, of which corporation he is secretary. He was born in Florence, Michigan, and is the son of David and Margaret (Cole) Mandigo, both of whom are natives of Michigan. The father in early life was engaged in the drug business and after leaving Florence, Michigan, he moved to New Mexico, where he was engaged in general merchandising for two years and then moved to Park Rapids, Minnesota, where he established himself in the general merchandising business, in which he continued for ten years, and in 1893 he sold out. Mr. and Mrs. David Mandigo were the parents of two children: George D., the subject of this review; and Eva, who died at the age of six years.

George D. Mandigo was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools. At the age of twenty-one years he started in business for himself, in company with his father, with whom he continued until 1893, at which time they disposed of their merchandising business in Minnesota. Immediately thereafter George D. Mandigo built the city electric plant in Park Rapids, Michigan, which he operated for a period of six years. He then sold out and came to Oregon, settling first on Coos bay. He was engaged in mining on the Sixes river for one year and then effected his permanent settlement at North Bend, in 1906, where he purchased a grocery business, which he operated for two years and then sold out. The two following years he spent in investing in timber land and real estate and in April, 1911, he purchased an interest in the Coos Bay Grocery Company, of which he was elected secretary, and to the interests of that business he has since continued to give his attention. The Coos Bay Grocery Company was incorporated in 1906 with a capital stock of ten thousand dollars and, since it opened its doors for business, the company has enjoyed a very gratifying trade and is one of the well known and substantial business houses of North Bend.

Mr. Mandigo was united in marriage February 16, 1882, to Miss Mary Heisel, a native of Michigan. Her parents were natives of Germany and to them six children were born:

Mary, the wife of the subject of this review; Agnes, who is the wife of Charles Harvey of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; Kate, the widow of C. H. Chapman of Denver, Colorado; Wilhelmina, the deceased wife of Fred A. Kribs of Portland, Oregon; Frank, of Minnesota; and Dora, the wife of Harry Arnold.

To Mr. and Mrs. Mandigo two children have been born. Eva A. is the wife of A. B. Dutch, a dentist of Constantine, Michigan, and they are the parents of three children, Dorothy, Mary and George. Gertrude A. resides with her parents at North Bend, Oregon. Both daughters were educated in music while residing in Minnesota.

Mr. Mandigo gives his political allegiance to the democratic party and was mayor of Park Rapids, Minnesota, for two terms and has been a member of the city council of North Bend for two terms. He also filled the unexpired term of Mayor L. J. Simpson in 1909, at which time Mr. Mandigo was president of the council. He is a member of the Masonic order and is a thirty-second degree Mason, a Shriner and a member of the Eastern Star. He is also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. Both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church. George D. Mandigo is one of the well known business men of Coos county and is numbered among its most reliable, successful and desirable citizens.

LOUIS EDWARD WARNER began his active career at the age of only fifteen years when he heard the insistent call of the spirit of adventure and left home to seek his fortune. He is one of the prosperous and substantial farmers of the Yoncalla valley and one of the enterprising and representative men of this district. He was born in Syracuse, New York, August 11, 1858, and is a son of John H. and Catherine (Rusher) Warner, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Alsace, France. John H. Warner came to the United States when he was twenty-two years of age and was a prominent railroad man on the New York Central line for fifty-one years. His wife made the journey to America with her parents when she was still a child and their marriage occurred in Onondaga county, New York, where they lived and died.

When only fifteen years of age Louis Warner left home and went westward to Michigan. From Michigan he removed to Illinois and in the fall of 1876 went to California remaining in the San Jose region until 1881. During the period of his residence in California Mr. Warner followed the railroad business and was thus active for six years. He took up the same work when he came to Oregon in the fall of 1881. He made his headquarters in Goshen and Albany and remained at railroading until 1888. In the fall of that year he removed to a farm in the Yoncalla valley, Douglas county, Oregon, where he has since been engaged in the cultivation of the soil. His farm comprises one hundred and sixty acres and is bottom land. It lies three and one-half miles southeast of Yoncalla and is one of the most valuable and fertile farms in the valley. Mr. Warner is also the proprietor of one hundred and thirty acres of farm land two miles south of his home farm and is actively engaged in the cultivation of both properties. He is one of the many intelligent and broad-minded men who are doing so much to raise the standard of scientific agriculture in the state of Oregon.

In 1883, Mr. Warner was united in marriage, in Yoncalla, Oregon, to Miss L. Ellen Smith, a daughter of Robert Smith, one of the pioneers of 1843, who came across the plains with the famous Applegate Company. To Mr. and Mrs. Warner have been born four children, two of whom are living: Hugh Edward, who lives with his parents on the home farm; and Louis Ernest, at home.

Louis Edward Warner is a consistent republican but has never been an office seeker. Fraternally he holds membership in Alpha Lodge, No. 170, I. O. O. F., and in Yoncalla Camp, No. 284, W. O. W. He is one of the foremost men in his section of the county and his prosperity is the result of his own efforts. The boy who forty years ago went out into the world to gain his fortune, has found what he went to seek. His path did not lead along a royal road and his success is the outcome of indefatigable industry and of conscientious living.

HENRY W. WILKINS. Farming and dairy interests, in Coos county, are well represented by Henry W. Wilkins, who is the proprietor of seven hundred and twenty acres of land in that district, and is operating his property along intelligent and progressive lines. He was born in Hanover, Germany, in 1865, and is a son of William and Maggie (Dode) Wilkins, both of whom are natives of the province of Hanover. Mr. Wilkins, of this review, is one of five children born to his parents, the others being: Henry, who has five children, and resides in Germany; Helena, who is living in Hanover; and Theodore and John, both of whom are deceased.

Henry W. Wilkins received his early education in the public schools of his native country, but laid aside his text-books at the age of eleven years. His father had been a shipbuilder in Hanover and upon his death, in 1869, his son was left alone. Our subject attended school until he was eleven years old and then went to work upon his uncle's farm where he remained for three years. He followed the sea from 1879 to 1890. He first shipped as a cabin boy, in which capacity he served for one year before he was made ordinary seaman. He gained his second advancement at the age of seventeen, when he sailed as able seaman from Boston and remained in that capacity for some time. He then enlisted in the German navy and served for three years. At the expiration of that period he came to America and settled in Philadelphia, sailing from that city to Cuba and Pensacola, Florida, on the ship which brought the first load of molasses from Cuba to Philadelphia. He sailed the Great Lakes for about five years and in 1890 came to Coos bay and was active in the life-saving station for a year and a half before he bought one hundred and sixty acres of fine timber land, to which he soon added another tract of one hundred and sixty acres. He took up a homestead claim of a similar size and later bought eighty acres of timber land which he added to his holdings. He still has this land and is also the proprietor of a large timber tract adjoining it, owning in all seven hundred and twenty acres. He has a small portion of his land under cultivation in potatoes and other garden truck and makes a specialty of the raising of a fine grade of hay. His farm is one of the most extensive in Coos county and owes its development entirely to the efforts of Henry Wilkins. It was a wilderness when he purchased it, and he has made all the necessary improvements and has erected many buildings. His methods are scientific and intelligent and have resulted in making his farm one of the model properties of the district. He has a large dairy and gives personal attention to this branch of his business. He milks fifty cows and spends much time in taking care of his stock in an intelligent and efficient way. He is the most successful dairyman on Ten Mile lake and is known throughout the county as a man who has done a great deal for the agricultural interests of his district.

Henry W. Wilkins is a staunch republican and although greatly interested in local affairs takes very little active part in politics and has never sought public office. He has, however, been actively interested in education and has served as director of the school board for twelve years. He is a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles and active in the affairs of the Red Men. His early life upon the sea gave him energy, industry and integrity, and these qualities have been valuable assets to him in his agricultural career. He has been a dominating influence in the development of Coos county for many years, and through the medium of his fine farm, cultivated along scientific lines, has done much to raise the standard of agriculture in his district.

ERNEST J. WITTICK, deceased, will be remembered as one of the valued and highly esteemed citizens of North Bend, where for many years he was successfully engaged in business. He was born in Finland and was one of six children born to his parents: Otto, Harriman, Amiel, Selma and Manda, all of whom reside in Finland; and Ernest J., of this review.

Ernest J. Wittick was reared at home and received his early education in the excellent public schools of his native land. At the age of nineteen years he emigrated to America and settled at once at Coos bay, where he engaged in logging for some time and later attended school in Marshfield for one year. He then established himself in business at North Bend, in which he continued until the time of his death which occurred August 22, 1908. He was the owner of fine business property at North Bend and also his home in that city and two valuable vacant properties and also owned lots in Bangor, Oregon.

Mr. Wittick was united in marriage in May, 1895, to Miss Bertha Findstrom, a native of Finland, who emigrated alone to America in her young womanhood. Her parents were natives of Finland and in that country died many years ago. Their family consisted of five children: Matthew, John, Annalise, and Sophia, all of whom reside in Finland; and Bertha, the widow of the subject of this review. To Mr. and Mrs. Wittick three children were born: Ernest Rudolph, born May 15, 1896, who is attending high school at North Bend, Oregon; John Andrew E., who was born July 6, 1902, and is a pupil in the public schools; and Mabel, whose birth occurred February 8, 1906.

Mr. Wittick was affiliated with the republican party but was never an office seeker. He was a member of Suomi Lodge and his religious faith was shown in his membership in the Lutheran church, of which his widow and children are members. Mrs. Wittick resides in her home, which is located on McPherson street, near Park avenue at old North Bend.

Ernest J. Wittick was a man who had many friends among all classes of people and was distinguished for his charitable deeds and consistent life, and his death removed from North Bend one of its most esteemed and useful citizens.

WILLIAM L. BRISTOW is successfully engaged in stock-raising two miles east of Pleasant Hill, where he owns a fine ranch of two hundred acres. He was born in Lane county, on January 10, 1859, and is a son of Abel K. and Almira K. (Gooch) Bristow. The paternal grandparents were Elijah and Susanna (Gabbert) Bristow, to whom were born eleven children: John K., who was born on the 26th of March, 1814, later a resident of Eugene, Oregon; Betsy, born October 9, 1815, the wife of James M. Hendricks, also of Eugene; Sarah, whose natal day was the 11th of May, 1817; Abel K., the father of our subject, whose birth occurred on the 6th of January, 1819; Mary, born October 28, 1820, the wife of Robert Callison of Pleasant Hill, Oregon; Delila, born January 26, 1822, the wife of John T. Gilfroy, of Creswell, Oregon; Henry G., whose birth occurred on the 21st of August, 1824, a resident of Macomb, Illinois; William W., who was born on the 18th of July, 1826, of Eugene; Katherine, who was born September 21, 1828, the wife of Jonathan Baskette, of Rickreall, this state; Elija L., who was born January 2, 1833, a resident of Salem; and Zilphia, born on the 9th of September, 1834, the wife of Steven Rigdon, of Pleasant Hill, Oregon. Elijah Bristow the grandfather of our subject was born in Taswell county, Virginia, on the 28th of April, 1788, and was the eldest of four children born to James and Delilah (Elkins) Bristow. The others are as follows: Sally, the wife of a Mr. Miller; Betsy, who became Mrs. Massey;

and Abel. The mother of these children died and James Bristow took for his second wife Miss Betsy Clevenger and they became the parents of a large family, some of the children of their son Wesley having become residents of Oregon. Elijah Bristow was reared in the state of his birth but in his early manhood he went to Kentucky, going from there to Illinois. In 1845 he crossed the plains to California and the next year he became a resident of Oregon. He erected the first house built in Lane county, which was located in the vicinity of Pleasant Hill, where the chimney still stands. He had the added distinction of being the first postmaster of the first postoffice in Lane county and he also organized the first Christian church in the northwest, and donated land for the first district school in the county in district No. 1. He was early recognized as a leader of men and was intensely patriotic and apparently absolutely fearless, and was known far and wide because of his bravery as well as his wonderful marksmanship. He went to the front during the War of 1812 and also during the Black Hawk Indian war, and was asked to take the command of a regiment during the latter conflict, but preferred to go as a private. His death occurred on the 19th of September, 1872, at the venerable age of eighty-four, his natal day being the 28th of April, 1788. Mr. and Mrs. Abel K. Bristow had seven children as follows: Samuel E.; Mary Jane, who died in infancy; John H.; Alice H., the wife of L. J. Cornelius, a farmer of Pleasant Hill; Isabel G., the widow of William Robinett, of Creswell; William L., our subject; and Delilah A., the wife of Aurelius Todd, of Mexico. Mrs. Almira Bristow, the mother of our subject, was born on the 30th of May, 1826, the elder of two daughters born to Samuel and Ruth (Powers) Gooch, her sister's name being Malvina. Mrs. Almira Bristow was born in Illinois where in after years Beardstown was founded. She was the second white child born in those parts. Her paternal grandparents were of English and Irish birth respectively, and in 1801 came from England to America. Her father, Samuel Gooch, was born on the very day they landed on American soil. He passed away after a lingering illness on June 19, 1838, and her mother died November 9, 1859. Mrs. Almira Bristow with her husband removed to Oregon in 1848, making the trip by ox team. They took up a donation land claim on Pleasant Hill the following year. Abel K. Bristow died May 31, 1881, but the mother still lives and makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. William Robinett, of Creswell, on a part of the old homestead, and in the same house in which she has raised her family. She is eighty-six years of age, yet is well and active and her hearing and eyesight are excellent for one of her age. She leads a Christian life in the best implied sense of the word and seeks inspiration from her Bible, which she reads through once every year and has done so for years past.

The boyhood and youth of William L. Bristow were passed in very much the same manner as those of other lads who were reared in Oregon during the pioneer period. He remained at home assisting with the cultivation of the ranch until he was twenty-one and then joined a party of United States surveyors in the capacity of chain man. He followed this occupation for two years during the spring season, while in the winter he attended the normal school at Monmouth. In 1883, he began teaching vocal music and at the same time he was employed on a farm. In the spring of 1884, he began his commercial career as a clerk for Dr. Scarbrough, but he withdrew at the end of a year, in order to assume management of his mother's farm. He operated this for four years and in the spring of 1889 became clerk in a general mercantile store. The next year he was married and about the same time he took a position with J. D. Matlock, who was also engaged in the general mercantile business. In August, 1891, he returned to Pleasant Hill and opened a store, which he conducted with very good success for seven years, and during that time he also served as postmaster. Believing that Creswell was a better location, he, in 1898, removed there and continued his mercantile pursuits. The next year he disposed of his store and went to Polk county, where he was engaged in business for seven years. In 1906, he returned to Lane county and turned his attention to agricultural pursuits. He still owned his portion of the old homestead, consisting of one hundred acres, and to this he added another hundred by purchase. Sixty acres of the latter was cleared and under cultivation and he now devotes eighty of his two hundred acres to the raising of grain. Mr. Bristow takes great pleasure in the quiet farm life, and enjoys the privilege of living in the country, after serving the public for many years and meeting many people in commercial life.

On the 23d of July, 1890, Mr. Bristow was united in marriage to Miss Luella Handsaker, a daughter of Samuel and Sarah (Cannon) Handsaker. The father was born in Hatten, England, November 19, 1831, and was one of ten children born to his parents. The paternal grandfather died from a dog bite, when his son Samuel was a child of only three years, and the mother, who was left in impecunious circumstances, met with much difficulty in rearing and educating her large family. In his early manhood Mr. Handsaker emigrated to the United States and in 1853 he crossed the plains from Edwardsville, Illinois, to the northwest. The following spring he located in the Napqua valley in the vicinity of Oakland, where he resided for seventeen years. At the expiration of that time he came to Lane county and bought a ranch near Dexter and later he also engaged in the mercantile business operating both his ranch and store until 1887. He next removed to Yaquina and opened a store, but the next year he disposed of this and came to Pleasant Hill and purchased his son's mercantile business. In 1891, he withdrew from active commercial pursuits and went to Eugene, where he lived retired until his death on the 4th of October, 1909. Mr. Handsaker was one of the widely known and highly esteemed pioneers in this section of the state. He was a well read and widely informed man and early recognized the wonderful development that must ultimately take place in the northwest. During his latter years he wrote a most entertaining and valuable account of pioneer conditions, which was published under the title "The Pioneer Life." It was really a narrative of his early experiences and those of his associates and because of its intimate, personal nature and simple style had an extensive circulation throughout the state. He is survived by the mother, who crossed the plains from Iowa in 1854 and was married to Mr. Handsaker on the 27th of November, 1856. Eight children were born to them: George W., whose birth occurred October 10, 1859; Mary S., who was born on the 30th of October, 1861; Edward B., born December 13, 1863; Martha E., whose natal day was the 20th of August, 1866; Mrs. Bristow, who was born February 5, 1868; Henrietta, born January 17, 1871; Thomas S., born on the 31st of May, 1873; and John J., whose birth occurred on the 29th of December, 1875. The mother is now residing in Eugene. Mr. and Mrs. Bristow had four children. Arlo B., who was born August 31, 1893, and is going to enter the ministry, will continue his education in the Oregon Agricultural College, taking his theological course in the Bible College at Eugene. Elda G., who was born June 24, 1897, and Morton L., whose natal day was March 21, 1899, are both attending the public school. Dwight L. was born February 12, 1909, and died on the 16th of March, 1910.

The family are active workers in the Christian church. Fraternally Mr. Bristow belongs to Pleasant Hill Camp, No. 271, W. O. W., and also carries a policy in the Bankers Life Company. In politics he is a republican. Both he and his wife are held in high esteem in Pleasant Hill, where they have been known from childhood and have many close friends.

HON. W. LAIR THOMPSON, whose position as a distinguished attorney is indicated by the fact that he has the largest law practice in southern Oregon, is perhaps equally well known as a leader in politics and as one who has marked influence in promoting legislation of value to the entire commonwealth. Close and discriminating study of the issues of the day has led to his indorsement of various important measures looking to the development of the state and the utilization of its natural resources. He is a native of Oregon and is yet a young man for his birth occurred on the 1st of January, 1880, on a farm in Linn county. His parents, Rufus and Adaline (Hill) Thompson, were natives of Tennessee and Kentucky respectively, the latter coming to Oregon, in 1852, with her parents, Dr. and Mrs. R. C. Hill. Rufus Thompson arrived in 1854 and in Linn county was married. The parents live in Albany, the father having retired from the ranch, to which he devoted his energies for a long period. In his family were three sons and three daughters: Reuben C., a teacher in the University of Nevada; Fred H., a practicing physician of Salem, Oregon; W. Lair; Mary, the wife of F. N. Parent, of Portland; and Cassie and Ruth, both at home.

During the period spent under the parental roof, W. Lair Thompson attended the public schools and later began learning the printer's trade in the office of the Albany Herald, where he remained for three years. Recognizing the value of education as a factor in success he availed himself of the opportunity to continue his studies, entering McMinnville College in 1897. There he completed a classical course by graduation in June, 1902, when the Bachelor of Arts degree was conferred upon him. During his college days he won first place in the state oratorical contest in 1900. Following his graduation he returned to the Albany Herald which he managed for a short time, its editor having been made state printer. It was Mr. Thompson's desire, however, to enter upon the practice of law and with this end in view he began reading, being admitted to the bar in 1904. The following year he was made chief clerk in the house of representatives and again served in 1907. This brought him intimate knowledge of the work that was being done in the legislature and proved of much value to him when he was subsequently called to represent his district. In December, 1905, he was elected city recorder and police judge of Albany and thus served until May 1, 1907, when he came to Lakeview. The same year he was chosen city attorney and capably filled that position until May, 1912, when he resigned. He has a very extensive private practice, his success being based upon his comprehensive knowledge of law and accurate application of its principles. He is thorough and painstaking in the preparation of his cases and his arguments show convincing logic and strong reasoning.

All through the years Mr. Thompson has continued a factor in political circles and in 1910 was elected to represent his district in the state legislature, taking his seat in the session of 1911. At the present writing he is the republican nominee for the state senate from the seventeenth senatorial district, and there is practically no doubt of his being elected. He was the leader of the republican forces on the floor of the house in 1911 and was an influencing factor in legislative matters. Through his efforts the bill (later vetoed by the governor) was passed to reclaim the beds of the lakes of the state of Oregon, where practical use the water for irrigation and the lake beds for agricultural purposes. He is a close student not only of politics as relating to the science of government, but also of all questions which have to do with the material welfare and progress of the people at large. He worked for four years in securing the vote of the people to support the question of bonding the town in which he lives in order to build a sewer system. It is well known that he ever stands for progressive movements and measures and his efforts are productive of substantial results.

On the 19th of September, 1906, at Eugene, Mr. Thompson was united in marriage to Miss Elsie Hobbs, a native of Indiana and a daughter of Hon. J. W. Hobbs, of Eugene. They became parents of two children, Harold Douglas and Alice Lair, but the former died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson make their home in Lakeview.

Mr. Thompson owns some ranching property in this part of the state. He is a member of the Masonic lodge at Lakeview, of the Elks lodge at Klamath Falls, and of the Knights of Pythias lodge at Albany. Attractive social qualities render him popular and he has an extensive circle of warm friends not only in southern Oregon but throughout the state, wherever he is known. He is a self-educated and self-made man in the highest and best sense of the terms. Recognizing the value of education he made possible his own college course and he has ever followed in the path where laudable ambition has led the way, bringing him into professional and political prominence.

WILLIAM JAMES is one of the prosperous business men of North Bend, Coos county, Oregon, where he is successfully engaged in the contracting and building business. He was born in Quaker Hill, Canada, and is a son of John and Rachel (Widdefield) James, both of whom were natives of Canada. The paternal grandfather, Ezekiel James, was a native of Bucks county, Pennsylvania, and was one of the early settlers of Quaker Hill. He was careful and well versed in business affairs and upright and just in all his dealings with his fellow citizens, and was looked upon as a leader among his Quaker friends and neighbors. At the time of his settlement at Quaker Hill he brought with him a number of Quaker families, who also established their homes at that place. After a long life of usefulness Ezekiel James passed away at the home of his son John, at Quaker Hill, in 1872. John James purchased a farm at Quaker Hill near the farm owned by his father and there established his home. His brother, Isaac James, was killed near Quaker Hill by a man who worked for his father. The motive for this deed was the hope of escaping with a fine team—the envy of all who saw it—which he had stolen from Isaac. The thief and murderer was caught and he was the first man hung in the city of Toronto. To John James and his wife ten children were born. Henry, deceased, was engaged in missionary work at Vancouver, British Columbia, and in the interest of that cause expended over ten thousand dollars. He was a man of noble character and was an effective force for good in that community. He established homes for the unfortunate and his work is now carried on by his wife, who survives him. Alonzo is married and also resides in British Columbia, and he and his wife are interested in missionary work and are able assistants of Mrs. Henry James in that field of labor. Rachel is the widow of Chauncey Connor, of Vancouver. William is the subject of this review. The other members of the family are all deceased.

William James was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools. He remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-one years of age. As a young man he learned the blacksmith's trade and starting in life for himself he engaged in the blacksmithing and manufacturing business. He later moved to Toronto, Canada, where he engaged in the real-estate business and is there known as the "Father of Toronto Junction." He lived at that place for nine years, after which he moved to Montreal, where he lived for five years during which time he built up Montreal Junction. Finally he sold all of his interests in Montreal and moved to British Columbia, where he was engaged in mining for a year. He then went to Honolulu, Hawaii, where he remained for six months, after which he came to San Francisco, California, and there continued to live for three years. He later moved to Oakland and purchased a machine shop in that city and continued to give his attention to that business for three years. In 1899 he settled at Myrtle Point, Coos county, and purchased a farm on which he lived for two years and then took up contract work with the L. J. Simpson Lumber Company. He later established himself in the contracting and building business at North Bend, and has since continued in that business, having met with gratifying success.

On June 21, 1872, Mr. James was united in marriage to Miss Euphemia Johnston, a daughter of Jabez and Hannah (Lundy) Johnston. The parents were Quakers and residents of Pine Orchard, Ontario, Canada. The father was one of the leading and influential men of his community and his family numbered five children: Euphemia, who became Mrs. William James; Harriet, deceased; Mary Ann, the wife of Duncan McFarland, of Manitoba, Canada; Priscilla, who is the widow of Chauncey Connor, Jr., and resides at Newmarket, Canada; and Washington, deceased. Mrs. James died May 10, 1909. She was the mother of six children: Mary Ann, who became the wife of William Wilson, of Toronto, Canada, and is now deceased; Hannah Rachel, the wife of C. B. Blair, of North Bend; Eli Wilton, of Myrtle Point; George Washington, of Santa Rosa, California; Edwin Arthur in the employ of the street railway company at San Francisco, California; and Sarah Ella, who is the wife of John Orr, of Metrolis, Oregon. The children of this family all received the benefit of a high-school and business-college education and Hannah graduated with highest honors.

William James is affiliated with the republican party but is not an office seeker. He is a member of the Quaker church and maintains his residence on Mead street, between Washington and Virginia streets, at North Bend. He is one of the substantial, enterprising citizens of North Bend and is a man highly esteemed for his consistent life and unquestioned integrity in all matters of business.

JEFFERSON DAVIS BENHAM. The state of Oregon is among the foremost fruit-producing sections of the country and Coos county is one of its important orchard districts. It has attained this distinction through the individual efforts of many men, prominent among whom is Jefferson Davis Benham, who has ten acres of fertile land planted to fruit trees and is accounted one of the most successful orchardists in his district. Mr. Benham was born in Missouri, March 18, 1864, and is a son of Peter and Nancy J. (Casteel) Benham. The father was born in Tennessee and the mother in Indiana. They were the parents of eight children: Francis A., deceased; Malinda, who married B. B. Teaters, of Fairview, Oregon; Eliza J., the widow of J. M. Reid, of Lake county; Juliette, who married John F. Munford, of Arago, Oregon; William E., of Lake county; Jefferson, the subject of this sketch; Nancy E., who married Howard Colver, of Coquille; and Peter S., a resident of Lake county.

Jefferson Davis Benham was educated in the public schools of Oregon, his parents having settled in the Willamette valley in 1864. His father purchased a small farm after arriving in the northwest and followed agriculture in the Willamette valley for five years. He later sold out and moved to California, where he lived for seven years, following farming. He eventually returned to Oregon, settling in Coos county, where he purchased a homesteader's rights and farmed until the time of his death. This occurred shortly after his purchase and his wife was obliged to prove up his claim. The elder Mr. Benham died on July 22, 1882. His son our subject, was at that time only eighteen years of age but the entire responsibility for the development and improvement of one hundred and sixty acres of land which comprised the homestead rested upon his shoulders. He later purchased the place from his mother and made it his home for a number of years. He spent five years in sheep and stock-raising in Lake county and returned to his father's homestead, two and a half miles from Fairview, Oregon, in 1902. Here he is carrying on scientific orchard farming and gardening. He has ten acres planted to fruit trees and is successful in their cultivation.

On October 31, 1888, Mr. Benham was united in marriage to Miss Carrie Edda Brownson, a native of Iowa and a daughter of H. H. and Melissa L. (Woodruff) Brownson, the father a native of Ohio and the mother of Illinois. To her parents were born ten children: Carrie E., the wife of our subject; Harriette D., the wife of Hiram Hatcher of Bridge, Oregon; Kittie L., who married P. S. Benham, a brother of our subject and a resident of Lake county; George and Solomon, both living at Bridge; Amelia, the wife of Charles Hill, of Coquille; Henry, of Bridge; Eugene, deceased; and Elmer and

MR. AND MRS. J. D. BENTHAM

Harry, whose homes are in Bridge, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Benham have been born six children: Nancy L., whose birth occurred on August 14, 1889, who was educated in the district schools of Coos county, and is living at home; Myrtle Irene, born May 24, 1891, who is the wife of Charles Holverstott, of Fairview, by whom she has one child, Curtis, H.; Thomas Henry, born January 25, 1893, who is at home; Raymond David, whose birth occurred on February 19, 1895; Edda Amanda, born February 15, 1897, who is attending school and living with her parents; and Elmer Ernest, born on the 14th of September, 1904, attending school.

Jefferson Davis Benham is a consistent democrat and is interested in educational affairs. He has held several school offices and is now clerk of his school district. He belongs to the Christian church, in which his wife also holds membership. His career is representative of one of the principal industries in the state of Oregon and has been distinguished by an intelligent grasp of local conditions and by a business discrimination of a high order which have resulted in his owning the finest orchard in Coos county and have made his private property a public resource.

H. A. COX is living retired in Langlois after an active and useful life spent in worthy enterprise. He is a veteran of the Civil war, having served throughout the entire period of hostilities and has spent most of his time since his discharge from the army in Oregon. He is well known in business circles in Curry county. He was born near Hennepin, Illinois, September 23, 1840, a son of William and Michel (Wilson) Cox, the former of Scotch ancestry and the latter of Welsh descent. The parents were married in Ohio and later moved to Illinois whence after a few years they returned to Ohio where the mother of our subject passed away. The father later farmed in Illinois and died upon his holdings in that state.

H. A. Cox is the only living member of a family of four children. He received his education in the public schools of Illinois and when he was nineteen years of age started to earn his own livelihood. He worked upon neighboring farms by the month until 1861, when he enlisted in Company F, Fourth Illinois Volunteer Cavalry and served until the end of the war. He acted as non-commissioned officer on several occasions and did a great deal of scout work. He was present at many of the important engagements of the war, seeing the battles of Fort Henry, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, and the siege of Vicksburg. He was honorably discharged at the close of hostilities and returned immediately to Hennepin where he farmed for four years, moving at the end of that time to Missouri. After a year and a half spent in that state he returned to Illinois and purchased a small farm which he improved and developed for a number of years. Afterward he went to Nebraska where he took up a homestead claim and for ten years carried on general agricultural pursuits. In 1891 he sold his property and came to Douglas county where he farmed and ranched for six years before he went to Coos county. There he conducted a dairy and raised high-grade stock for the market until 1900 when he moved to Idaho where he spent two years. Returning to Coos county he opened a grocery store in Bandon and was successful in its conduct for a number of years. At the end of that time his wife's health failed and he was obliged to go to southern California where he spent two years. Upon his return to Oregon he settled in Curry county and here he again established himself in the grocery business, operating his store for two years, at the end of which time he retired and made his home with his son at Langlois, where he now resides. He is interested financially in the Langlois Hotel and is well known in the city.

In March, 1861, Mr. Cox was married in Illinois, to Miss Mary J. Cramer, a native of Pennsylvania, and to this union were born four children. George, the eldest son, owns a sawmill in Bandon. Frank is associated with his father in the conduct of the Langlois Hotel. He married Mrs. Neil, a native of Oregon, and the widow of Top Neil, by whom she had four children: Ina; Una, the wife of Douglas Cook, of Langlois; and Thomas and Edward, who live at home. Frank Cox and his wife have two children: Frank H., who was born September 12, 1903; and LaVerne, whose birth occurred on the 21st of April, 1911. The two youngest children born to Mr. and Mrs. Cox were Elizabeth and Bertha, both of whom have passed away.

H. A. Cox gives his allegiance to the republican party but is not an office seeker. He and his family are adherents of the Quaker religion and he is a member of the Grand Army post of Bandon. He has many friends in this section, who respect him for the qualities of industry and discrimination which have marked his business career and for his personal characteristics which gain him the esteem of all with whom he comes in contact.

JOHN M. COOL. Northwestern America is a land of opportunity and its present and future are, to a large extent, in the hands of its young men. An example of what true western energy can accomplish is found in the career of John M. Cool, cashier of the Drain State Bank. He was born in Roulette, Pennsylvania, June 7, 1888, and is a son of Norman D. and Jane (Morgan) Cool. His father was a native of Pennsylvania and was a successful carpenter and builder until 1890, when he entered the hardware business in Costello, Pennsylvania. He was identified with that line for seven years and at the end of that time removed to Galeton, Pennsylvania, where he conducted a store until 1906. In that year he came to Drain, Oregon, and was one of the organizers of the Elk Creek Lumber Company, with which enterprise he was identified for about a year. He subsequently sold his interest in it and purchased the mercantile business of

T. E. Bledsoe, which he has since conducted. His wife is a native of New York state and was married in Pennsylvania. She is a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal church, with which institution her husband is also identified. Norman D. Cool is superintendent of the Sunday school affiliated with that church and has done efficient work in this line. He is one of the prominent business men in Drain and was active in the founding and organization of the Drain State Bank, with which his son is now identified. He has never given up his connection with that institution and is its vice president.

John M. Cool was reared at home. He received his early education in the public schools of Galeton, Pennsylvania, and is a graduate of the high school of that city. He came to Oregon with his parents and entered the Central Oregon State Normal School at Drain. When he completed his studies at that institution he was appointed assistant postmaster of Drain and he served in that capacity for four years. His banking career began in January, 1910, when he was appointed cashier of the Drain State Bank. He is, at the present time, doing accurate, systematic and intelligent work in this position, and his well known trustworthiness is his most valuable asset. A banking institution is almost entirely dependent upon the integrity of its employes and officials and Mr. Cool has never misused the confidence reposed in him.

In November, 1910, Mr. Cool was united in marriage to Miss Mary Mires, of Drain, a daughter of Benton Mires, a leading merchant in that city, of whom more extended mention is made elsewhere in this work. To Mr. and Mrs. Cool has been born one child, Norman M. John M. Cool is a staunch republican and is intelligently interested in political affairs although he has never been a candidate for public office. He is a member of Drain Camp, No. 259, W. O. W., and is active in the affairs of that organization. Mr. Cool has used his opportunities worthily and well and although yet a young man, has attained a gratifying degree of success.

J. FRANK STANDISH is one of the well known, enterprising citizens of North Bend, where he is engaged in the lumber business, being the owner of a one-fourth interest in the North Bend Lumber Company, of which he is the superintendent. He has the distinction of being a direct descendant of Miles Standish, the famous captain of the Plymouth colony. His birth occurred at Glens Falls, New York, November 22, 1863, and he is the son of John H. and Emeline (Day) Standish, the former a native of Vermont and the latter of New Hampshire. They were the parents of three children. Miles, who is married and has one child, Allan, resides in California. J. Frank is the subject of this review. Mattie A., the youngest of the family, who was educated in Grand Rapids, Michigan, is now engaged in kindergarten work in Munich, Germany.

J. Frank Standish was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools of Michigan. He started in life for himself at the age of eighteen years, at which time he took up work with a railroad company in Muskegon, Michigan, and continued in that occupation for a period of three years. He then accepted a position as bookkeeper for a lumber company and in that work he continued to be engaged for three years, after which he established himself in the abstract business, with which he was connected for one year after which time he sold his interests in the business. He was then employed as traveling salesman for a large flour mill for one year and then moved to Wisconsin, where he found employment as a superintendent in one of the large lumber companies of that state and continued for one year to give his attention to that business. He then moved to Seattle, Washington, and engaged in the lumber business there for a short time, after which he took up his abode in California and was there employed by a large lumber concern with whom he remained for a brief period and for the twenty years following was employed by various lumber concerns throughout the Pacific coast states, during which time he built a number of sawmills. In September, 1909, he settled in Coos Bay and there purchased a one-fourth interest in the North Bend Lumber Company and has since given his entire attention, as superintendent of the company, to the interests of the business.

Mr. Standish was united in marriage in January, 1885, to Miss Evalyn C. Mason, a native of Indiana, as were also her parents, to whom four children were born: Truman, a resident of Indiana; Tillie, the wife of a Mr. Sagert, of Indiana; Flo, the wife of Judd Frazee, a resident of Indiana; and Evalyn, the wife of the subject of this review.

To Mr. and Mrs. Standish three children have been born: Helen M., born July 1887, who is a graduate of the Portland high school and has a business education; James H., who is in the employ of the government in the Philippine Islands; and Margaret, who is attending school in Portland, Oregon. Mr. Standish is affiliated with the democratic party but has never sought political preferment. His wife is a member of the Baptist church and Mr. Standish is a member of the Masonic order. J. Frank Standish is one of the successful business men of North Bend, where he is highly esteemed for his enterprising and public-spirited activities in all measures intended to improve the business, educational and religious conditions of the people of the city in which he resides.

THAD S. STIPP, who lives on the Molalla road, three miles west of Molalla, is the owner of one of the best improved ranches in Clackamas county, where he successfully engages in general farming and stock-raising. A native of Oregon, his birth occurred at South Salem, on the 2d of June, 1866, his father being Hezekiah Stipp. The father was born on Christmas day, 1821. In 1855 he came overland to Oregon, filing on a donation claim upon which he settled. He resided here for a number of years, engaged in agricultural pursuits but later in life retired from active work and made his home for a time with his children. He was living in Oregon City at the time of his death, which occurred at the venerable age of eighty-four years. The mother, a Miss Goldsmith, who was a member of a family of fourteen children, crossed the plains from Illinois, her native state, to Polk county, Oregon, with her parents, the father dying en route. Here she met and subsequently married Mr. Stipp and they became the parents of the following children: John, who died at the age of nineteen years; James; Thad, our subject; Lina; Clifford; May; and Ada, who is deceased. The mother passed away in 1877.

The first four years in the life of Thad S. Stipp were passed at South Salem. The family then removed to Lane county, where they resided for a year, after which they became residents of Waldo. At the end of a year they left the latter place and returned to Lane county and there the mother passed away, when our subject was eleven years of age. Thad Stipp remained at home for about a year thereafter, when he went to live with Sam Howard. He remained a member of that household for a year, after which he went to work for ranchers in various parts of the county, following this occupation until he was in a financial position to buy a place for himself. As he became self-supporting when he was a lad of thirteen years, Mr. Stipp is entitled to much credit for what he has achieved, his success being entirely attributable to his own efforts. He began in a small way, first buying five acres of timber land which he grubbed and prepared for cultivation by hard and consistent labor. Later he added to his tract another two acres, the purchase price of which he earned by grubbing. He applied himself closely to his undertaking, using intelligence and good judgment in the direction of his endeavors, and soon extended the boundaries of his farm by the addition of forty acres and later of three and a half, while his last purchase was a five-acre tract, which he grubbed from raw timber land. His land is under high cultivation and Mr. Stipp specializes in raising high-grade stock, making a specialty of Jersey cattle, meeting from this source with gratifying financial returns. During the period of his ownership he has judiciously expended a portion of his funds in improvements and is now the owner of a well equipped and highly improved farming property. Three years ago he erected a fine barn forty by seventy-six feet, fitted with twenty-six boxing and patent stanchions, at a cost of twelve hundred dollars. He has also recently finished an eleven-room modern residence, piped for running water and equipped with an acetylene lighting system, as well as all other conveniences and comforts deemed essential in the homes of the present day. It is one of the finest farm houses in the community and the second in the county to be provided with an acetylene lighting system, its erection necessitating an outlay of thirty-five hundred dollars. Mr. Stipp takes a great deal of pride in his ranch and has provided ample barns and outbuildings for the protection of his stock, vehicles and machinery and also grain. He is a man of progressive ideas and his place is fully supplied with all implements and modern appliances that will save labor or expedite the work.

In 1898, Mr. Stipp married Miss Helen Case, a native of Ohio, and a daughter of Morton and Emily Case who reside a half mile from the home of their daughter. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Stipp numbers four, as follows: Gladys, Inez, Homer and Vesta.

The family affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church. Fraternally Mr. Stipp is an Odd Fellow, belonging to Molalla Lodge, No. 184, while his political support is given to the republican party. Mr. Stipp is highly regarded in the community where he resides, his enterprise and energy not less than his fine principles and upright conduct winning him the respect of all who make his acquaintance. Self-reliant and efficient, his success is recognized by all who know him as the well merited and highly deserved reward of tireless energy and determination of purpose.

GEORGE T. SEARS is numbered among those who have passed over the Great Divide, but whose memory lingers and will continue to abide with their loved ones on earth, like a halo of blessing and encouragement. His widow, Mrs. S. Ann Sears, is widely known in Lane county and resides in the beautiful family residence in Creswell, where her husband died, and the fourteen hundred acre farm near that place, which he left and which the widow owns is now operated by the son, George Ralph Sears.

George T. Sears was born September 10, 1844, in Arkansas, a son of Carroll Jackson and Jane (Carter) Sears. The parents were both natives of Tennessee but removed from that state to Arkansas in early life, continuing to make their home there until in 1852, when they removed to Oregon and took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres, two and a half miles northeast of Cottage Grove. The father followed farming and stock-raising and, being a man of ability and thrift, was successful in his business and enjoyed an excellent reputation. He lived on the Oregon claim until the time of his death, which occurred in January, 1901, the mother having passed away in 1890. To the parents six sons and three daughters were born, namely: James, of Cottage Grove; George T., of this review; Sarah, who died in infancy; Sarah Ann, the wife of James Jones, of Pendleton, Oregon; David W., of Woodburn, Oregon; John H., on the old homestead at Cottage Grove; Lewis, residing at The Dalles, Oregon; Charles W., also on the old homestead; and Amanda J., who first married John Southwell, by whom she had five girls and two boys, and after his death, which occurred February 18, 1904, wedded, in 1910, George Ganger, of Pendleton.

Mr. Sears remained with his parents on the home place until he attained the age of twenty-six years. He was then married and took up farming on his own account. Possessing energy and business ability, by wise management he increased his holdings from time to time and improved his farm until it became one of the finest properties in Lane county. He paid special attention to stock-raising and was successful in that line of endeavor. He continued improving the farm from year to year, getting it continually into a better state of cultivation and adding to his holdings until at the time of his death the fourteen hundred acre farm, on which he passed away, was splendidly developed and improved.

Mr. Sears was married September 18, 1870, to Miss S. Ann Wallace, who was born in Platte county, Missouri, April 15, 1844, a daughter of John N. and Sarah E. (Hamilton) Wallace. Her parents were both natives of the south, the father being born in North Carolina in 1809 and the mother in Tennessee in 1808. Their wedding was celebrated in the latter state, January 6, 1829, and after living there for two years they removed to Randolph county, Missouri, and later to Platte county, that state, where they remained until 1850, when they settled in Davis county, Iowa. They remained in the latter state until 1864 and then migrated to California and after residing there for three years came to Lane county. Oregon, in 1868, settling near Cottage Grove. The father lived there for six years and then returned to California, where death overtook him, June 7, 1882. His wife only survived until the 17th of August, following. The father was an agriculturist, although by trade a brick mason, and spent considerable of his time at his trade. To them eleven children were born, namely: Mary E., the wife of John Bunch, of Stockton, California; Charles H., of Cottage Grove; William M., deceased, of Centerville, Iowa; John C. and Joseph B., who passed away in Cottage Grove; Francis F., who died in infancy; M. T., living in Deuba, California; Sarah A., who became the wife of Mr. Sears; Nancy M., who married Joseph Osborne, of Stockton, California; Benjamin C., of Cottage Grove, who is deceased; and Lucy C., who died at that city when nineteen years of age.

George T. Sears, who since his eighth year was a resident of Lane county, residing all that time on his farm near Creswell, was one of the most valued, respected and beloved citizens of the community. Although his extensive business interests monopolized his time to a great degree he gave considerable attention to civic, political and social matters, so that he not only was a very successful business man who by his own endeavors built up a fortune, but he was also identified with those interests which make for the highest class of citizenship. Throughout his business career he pursued a policy of strictest integrity and his word was at all times considered as good as his bond. He made and kept many friends who deeply felt the loss caused by his death, and who will continue to cherish his memory and count themselves as fortunate for having been known as his friends. In his political views Mr. Sears was a democrat and took great interest in politics although he was never an office seeker. He greatly believed in the good work of churches and assisted them in many ways although he was never connected with any religious organization.

PUNDERSON AVERY. No citizen of Corvallis has so long resided here or is better acquainted with its history than Punderson Avery. His business interests have been of a character that have largely contributed to its prosperity and advancement, and his record has at all times been such as has won for him the good-will and confidence of those with whom he has come into contact. Success has crowned his intelligently directed efforts and at one time he was actively and extensively engaged in the manufacture of flour but is now giving his attention merely to the supervision of his investments. He was born in Stark county, Illinois, in 1843, a son of J. C. Avery, who was the founder of Corvallis and is mentioned elsewhere in this work. He was four years of age when the mother brought her three children to the northwest, the father having preceded them and prepared a home for them in Benton county. He had secured a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres and it was upon this land that the city of Corvallis was laid out.

On the old homestead there, Punderson Avery was reared and as his father was the first merchant of the town he, too, early became connected with merchandising. In the meantime he had pursued his early education in the district schools and he afterward became a student in the Baptist College at McMinnville. He afterward spent eight years in his father's store but in 1872 removed to Lake county, where he engaged in the cattle business, having a large ranch on which he herded his cattle. He also put up hay and feed for the market. He spent fifteen years in the Chewaucan valley of Lake county in the cattle business, beginning with a small bunch of cattle—not more than one hundred head—but when he retired from the business he was the owner of fifteen hundred head of cattle and fifteen hundred acres of land. His father had been made one of the commission of three, to select a site for the state agricultural college and they had made choice of the meadow land in Lake county. While looking over the state they gained considerable knowledge concerning favorable locations and the reports which Punderson Avery heard concerning Lake county, its rich fields and its promising future, decided him to remove to that district. He bought one thousand acres of the college land which he fenced and improved. He was living there at the time of the Modoc war and he and other settlers of that locality built Fort Chewaucan, which they occupied for four months or until the trouble with the Indians had subsided.

In 1887 Punderson Avery disposed of his business interests in Lake county and returned to Corvallis, where in 1889 he established a mill, forming a partnership with Mr. Smith and Mr. Rickard. They built the Benton County Mills and five years later the business was incorporated under the name of the Benton County Flouring Mills Company, of which Mr. Avery became president. The mill was erected in 1889 and has since been operated by steam power, the plant having a capacity of two hundred and twenty barrels per day. From the standpoint of excellence their output was unequalled in the state and they received the highest award at the Oregon state fair in 1902 and again, in 1903, on the Benton and Snow Fall brands. They also won other prizes at different times and their manufactured product included not only wheat but also graham flour and cereals. The capacity at the outset was one hundred barrels but this was increased with the growth of their trade and, improving their property, they became owners of one of the largest and best mills in the northwest, thoroughly equipped with modern machinery and operated according to most modern methods. In 1906, however, Mr. Avery sold his flour mill here and lives now as a retired capitalist. In addition to his milling business he has been the owner of two fine farm properties in Benton county devoted to the raising of grain and stock, one comprising four hundred acres a mile and a half south of Corvallis, while the other of three hundred and twenty acres is about twelve miles south of the city. Mr. Avery and his brother have also laid out two additions to Corvallis which are now attractive districts of the city.

It was here in December, 1864, that Mr. Avery was married to Miss Elizabeth Mobley, a native of Missouri, who accompanied her parents to California in early life, and in 1860 came with them to Benton county, Oregon. Her father, William Mobley, was a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Avery have become the parents of five children: Chester, engaged in the cattle business in Klamath county; Clarence W., who is a graduate of the Oregon Agricultural College and is now manager of the sawmill near Weston, Oregon; Mattie, the wife of Professor Fulton, of Corvallis; and Grover and Virgil, both residing on their father's farm near Corvallis.

Mr. Avery has not only figured prominently in business circles but has also been a political leader of his community. In 1870 he was elected treasurer of Benton county and served for one term. He was long a member of the city council and for a number of years was its president. He has always been a democrat and for many years acted as chairman of the county central committee and has served on the state committee. He also was a member of the upper house of the Oregon legislature. He belongs to the Oregon Pioneer Association and to the Corvallis Business Men's League. His wife is a member of the Presbyterians church. One of his public acts worthy of mention is that he succeeded in getting mountain water for Corvallis while a member of the state senate. Previous to that time the town was supplied with river water but now an excellent system brings pure mountain water into the city. He remembers the first federal court held in Benton county, as it was held in his father's home by Judge C. C. Pratt, and the only ones present were his mother and her children, the judge and Jo Meek, United States marshal. The business transacted was the sale of an old boat on the river near Oregon City. Not only by reason of his long residence but also of the value of his public services and his creditable business record, Mr. Avery is accounted one of the foremost residents of Benton county, honored and esteemed alike by all who know him.

HENRY S. POPPELBAUM learned the banking business thoroughly in his native country of Germany and has spent most of the eight years of his residence in America, engaged in that line of work. He was born in 1877 and is a son of William Henry and Caroline (Hesse) Poppelbaum, both natives of Germany. The father came to America some time ago and was active here as a sea captain for many years. Both of our subject's parents are deceased. In their family were six children, namely: William and Hans, residents of New York; Thomas, who has been in business in Oklahoma for twenty years; Henry, the subject of this sketch; Adelle, who resides in New York city; and Marie, deceased. All were educated in the public schools of Germany, and finished the high-school course in that country. They could read and write English before they came to America.

Henry S. Poppelbaum left his native country in 1904. He had learned the banking business in Germany and followed it in that country for some time. When he arrived in America he settled first in New York city, where he entered the employ of a German importer, with whom he remained for a short time. He spent the next two years in the grocery business and then took up banking. In the course of about three years, he was identified with three different financial institutions in New York; the National City Bank; the Phoenix National Bank; and Hollgartner & Company, bankers. When he came west he settled in Portland, Oregon, and his first employment in that city was with the Portland Trust Company. He remained in this connection for a short time and then removed to Hood River, Oregon. Here he spent a short period and then returned to Portland to take a position in the United States National Bank of that city. He resigned that, to go to Medford, where he remained for about one year, before removing to Oklahoma, where he was employed in the First National Bank of Watinga. He remained in that connection for about one year and then came to Lakeside, Oregon, where he settled on a rented farm of two hundred and eighty acres and where he now lives. His home is located on an arm of Ten Mile lake, and he has practically retired from active business life. He gives his allegiance to the republican party but has never sought public office. He belongs to the Lutheran church and is active in the affairs of that organization. During the time of his residence in New York, Mr. Poppelbaum acquired much valuable property on Long Island but is selling his holdings in the east to invest in Oregon land, believing that property in a new and rapidly developing country offers the best investment opportunities. He is actuated in his operations by a desire for the welfare of his adopted section and by a loyal belief in the future of Coos county.

J. QUINCY WILLITS. Throughout the greater part of his life Professor J. Quincy Willits has engaged in teaching music and yet has always figured prominently along other educational lines, being the present superintendent of schools of Lake county. Ability to impart clearly and readily to others the knowledge that he has acquired has been one of the potent elements in his success. At all times he has held to high standards, progress being his watchword. He makes his home in Lakeview, hundreds of miles separating him from his birthplace, for he was born in Center township, Cedar county, Iowa, about three and a half miles southwest of Tipton, on the 26th of May, 1852. He is a son of Amos and Sarah Ann (Thornton) Willits, both of whom were natives of Indiana. Left an orphan, at an early age, his father went to Iowa in his boyhood and there met Sarah A. Thornton, who was taken to that state by her parents in 1836. Both grew to maturity in Iowa, were there married and resided in that state until 1875, when they came to Oregon, settling in Jackson county. The mother died in Ashland in 1898, the father surviving until 1899. The latter followed farming in Iowa but after coming to the northwest operated a sawmill and carried on a lumber business in Ashland.

J. Quincy Willits, the fifth in the family of five sons and three daughters, came to Oregon in 1875, when a young man of twenty-three years, taking up his abode in Ashland. Nine years later he came to Lakeview. In the acquirement of his education he attended Cornell College, at Mount Vernon, Iowa, and in the spring of 1875 he was a student in the Chicago Musical College. He began teaching school when eighteen years of age and has since been identified with educational interests, both as a teacher and as superintendent. For four years he followed the profession in Cedar, Tama and Muscatine counties of Iowa, and for nine years he taught in Jackson county, Oregon. For six years he was teacher in the schools of Lakeview and he also taught in other parts of Lake county. He is now county superintendent of schools, to which position he was first elected in 1898. He has altogether served for more than ten years, having been elected for a term of two years, and then for two terms of four years each, while in October, 1911, he was appointed to fill a vacancy. He has taught all of the time when not acting as superintendent and part of the time while the incumbent in that position. At this writing he is the republican nominee for the same office and the record he has already made would indicate that no more capable official could be chosen. He believes that the work of the teacher should be characterized by progress, so that the pupil may be better fitted for the responsibilities and duties of later life, and that each year may bring him a clearer understanding of what life means; that the individual should recognize, that he is a factor in society to which he has obligations, and that he has opportunity for use of individual effort which, intelligently directed, should bring success. Professor Willits has always been deeply interested in music and has cultivated his talents in that direction. Moreover, he has been a teacher of both vocal and instrumental music, during the greater part of his life, and for more than a quarter of a century has played with the band at Lakeview to a greater or less extent. He is today the veteran teacher of Lake county, no other member of the profession having been so long actively engaged in that profession as he has.

Professor Willits has been married twice. In 1877 he wedded Amy L. Dunn, a native of Jackson county, Oregon, who died in 1883. In 1887 he married Minnie L. Whorton, a native of Lane county, Oregon, and they have three children: Docia L., who was graduated from the state normal school with the class of 1908, and has been a teacher for part of two years; Leland, at home; and Hallie May, seven years of age.

Professor Willits votes with the republican party and is a firm believer in its principles. He served as justice of the peace for one term. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Woodmen of the World, and is appreciative of the social amenities of life, enjoying the companionship of people of kindred tastes and interests. His home is the center of a cultured society circle and because of his broad reading and study, and his high ideals, association with him means elevation.

JOSEPH B. WILSON. The name of Wilson has stood in Douglas county, since early pioneer times, for honor in business and for fairness and integrity. The career of Joseph B. Wilson has not detracted in any way from the luster of a worthy and honorable name. He is one of the most extensive owners of ranch land in Douglas county and is applying modern and scientific methods in the cultivation of the soil. He was born on the old Wilson donation claim in the Yoncalla valley, Douglas county, Oregon, August 6, 1871. He is a son of William H. Wilson, one of the most prominent pioneers of Oregon and a dominating element in the upbuilding of the state. A more extended review of the life of William Wilson appears elsewhere in this work.

Joseph B. Wilson was reared to sturdy, rugged and honorable principles. He was educated in the common schools of Douglas county and from the time he reached majority was employed by others in various occupations in that district. In 1897 he went to Astoria, Oregon, and served as engineer in the employ of the war department for seven years. He was subsequently associated with the police department of Astoria, for five years. At the end of that period he again took up engineering and worked in the employ of others until February, 1911, when he returned to the Yoncalla valley and located on his farm of one hundred and thirteen acres. Eighty acres of Mr. Wilson's present holdings are a part of his father's original donation claim and thirty-three acres formerly belonged to the Robert Cowans tract. Mr. Wilson acquired his land in 1900 and it is now one of the most valuable farms in the Yoncalla valley. He brings to the cultivation of the soil a thorough and scientific knowledge and a keen love for farm life. His land is operated along progressive lines and his success is the result of his efficiency.

In 1901 Mr. Wilson was united in marriage to Miss Fannie F. Wagner, of Drain, Oregon, a daughter of John Wagner, who came to this state from Iowa at an early date.

Joseph B. Wilson is independent and unprejudiced in politics and always votes for the best man regardless of party affiliations. He is a member of Beaver Lodge, No. 35, I. O. O. F. of Astoria and is active in the affairs of that organization. He is one of the substantial and influential men of the Yoncalla valley and his career is influencing its development. The work which his father began by conspicuous pioneer work, he is carrying on, in a quiet and unassuming but none the less useful way.

FRED MOSER is a native of Switzerland and entered the creamery business, in which he is at present engaged in Coos county, as a natural step following his activities in connection with his father's dairy in his native country. He owns and operates forty acres of rich land and in connection with this line of occupation is successful as proprietor of a general store and as postmaster of the village of Gravel Ford. Mr. Moser is a son of Christian and Elizabeth (Moser) Moser, both of whom were natives of Switzerland. He is one of ten children born to his parents, eight of whom are still living. The surviving members of the family are Annie, Fred, Lena, John, Frank, Herman, Ernest and Elizabeth, all of whom were born and reared in Switzerland. The father died in his native country in 1895.

Fred Moser was reared upon his father's farm and received his education in the public schools of his native country. He early acquired familiarity with the details incident to the operation of a modern and sanitary dairy by assisting his father in his leisure hours. He served an apprenticeship in the creamery business in Switzerland and attended an agricultural college in that country, which he attended two years. When he laid aside his books he established an independent creamery, which he operated successfully for one year before he journeyed to Italy, in order to take charge of a creamery in that country. His knowledge gained by personal experience and by study along technical lines was an invaluable asset to him in his early career as it aided and promoted his progress. When he returned to Switzerland he was not satisfied with his already splendid attainments in agricultural details and took a special course of study in the dairy business for one year and a half. In 1893 he came to America and settled first in Idaho, where he remained only a few months. He went to California where he worked at different occupations, spending most of his time, however, in the dairy business until 1894, in which year he came to Oregon and Washington. After a few months' residence divided between those two states he again returned to California. In 1895 he made his second journey to Oregon and established a creamery near Myrtle Point. He rented a farm in this vicinity and was successful in general agriculture in connection with butter and cheese making. In the spring of 1896 Mr. Moser came to Gravel Ford, where he bought his present creamery and forty acres of land which he improved and cultivated. In 1900 he added to his activities by opening a general merchandise store and in 1907 was appointed postmaster of the village. Mr. Moser's creamery has grown and expanded along scientific and progressive lines. Founded as it is upon expert knowledge and efficient and sanitary methods, its development has been a mere matter of time. It owes its growth entirely to the energy, activity and straightforward policy of Mr. Moser. He makes a specialty of fine grade cheese and sells his product in Portland and San Francisco. In the operation of his enterprise his wife assists him and her able efforts have added greatly to its success.

In 1895 Mr. Moser was united in marriage to Miss Ida Segessenman, a native of Switzerland and a daughter of Jacob and Catherine (Luthy) Segessenman, who were also natives of that country. Mrs. Moser is one of seven children, namely: Lena and Feronia, both residing in Switzerland; Jacob, who lives in Chicago; Elizabeth, who has passed away; Emma, a resident of California; Christ, also deceased; and Ida, the wife of our subject. Mr. and Mrs. Moser's marriage occurred in Oakland, California, and to their union have been born four children: Clara, born in 1896, who is attending the Gravel Ford Academy and preparing herself for a commercial career; Frank, born in 1898, who is attending school; and Annie and Ernest, whose births occurred in 1901 and 1904, respectively, and who are in school.

Politically Mr. Moser is a republican, being firmly convinced of the honorable principles of that party. His religious affiliations are with the United Brethren church, of which he is a member. In this organization he also serves as superintendent of the Sunday school. He holds membership in the Grange and that constitutes his only fraternal affiliation. He is widely known throughout Coos county as a man of exemplary character, and as a man of wide experience and special knowledge he has attained rapid and well deserved success. The honorable business principles upon which he has founded his enterprises have distinguished his policy from the beginning and have made his activities in the commercial world and his life as a private citizen a credit and honor to his community.

EMERY S. BARZEE is a son of one of the pioneer settlers of the American northwest and is a true westerner. He was born in a tent in Utah and spent his early boyhood amid the primitive scenes common during the settlement of Oregon. He was for many years prominent in agricultural circles of Marion county and is now living in a beautiful home in North Bend, where he is well known and is popular with his many friends. He was born a half mile from Sulphur Springs, Utah, on August 18, 1861, and is a son of Clark B. and Mary Ann (Stewart) Barzee, the former a native of Canada and the latter of Philadelphia. Mr. and Mrs. Clark Barzee were married in Iowa, where they resided for a short time before they removed to Kansas. They subsequently returned to Iowa and spent some years in that state. In 1861 they crossed the plains to Oregon, making the journey with ox teams in Buchanan's train. They located in Jefferson City and in 1867, the father purchased one hundred and twenty acres of land eight miles south of Salem, on the state road, and cultivated his holdings until 1900, when he retired and moved with his wife and family to Turner. Here the mother died on December 28, 1906, and was survived by her husband until February 27, 1910. They were the parents of twelve children: Francis S. and William, both of whom are living in Portland, Oregon; Emily, who died in infancy; Amanda S., the deceased wife of Joseph T. Robertson, of Salem, Oregon; Charles, who makes his home in Portland; Emery, the subject of this sketch; Emerson, the latter's twin brother who lives in Corvallis; Louis and Lucy, twins, the former a resident of Montana and the latter the wife of William Seigmond, of Salem; Ellis, who married Harry Arnold, of Spokane, Washington; Elmer, a resident of Moro, Sherman county; and Ada, who married B. B. Herrick, who was county surveyor for Marion county for seventeen years.

Emery S. Barzee received his education in the district schools of Marion county, Oregon, and remained at home until his marriage, in 1881. In that year he engaged in farming upon his father's holdings and remained there for two years. At the end of that time he took up a homestead claim of one hundred and fifty-five acres in Linn county, Oregon, which he improved and operated for about seventeen years. He specialized in stock-raising and had a fine herd of graded cattle. He carried on agriculture along scientific and modern lines and made his farm one of the model properties of the district. He sold his land in 1899 and spent two years traveling with his wife. In 1901 he settled in Coos county upon the site where the town of North Bend now stands. Here he worked as a carpenter and in various other capacities for two years and then purchased four town lots upon which he built the beautiful home in which he is residing.

On October 9, 1881, Mr. Barzee was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Caywood, a native of Knox county, Indiana, born November 23, 1861. Her parents were Moses E. and Martha A. (Crooks) Caywood, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Indiana. They were married in Vincennes, Indiana, where the father died on January 2, 1863. The family continued to reside in that city until 1876, when Mrs. Caywood and her daughter, the wife of our subject, came to Oregon, in which state the mother died on January 24, 1910. She had two children: Mrs. Jennie Barzee; and a daughter who died in infancy. Mrs. Barzee is the mother of one daughter, Lela May, born October 7, 1885. Lela May Barzee received her early education in the public schools of Coos county and supplemented that, by a course in a normal school. She later became the wife of Max Timmerman, a launch builder of Marshfield, Oregon. Emery S. Barzee is a republican but reserves his right to vote for the men whom he considers best fitted for the offices to which they aspire. He takes no very active part in political affairs and has never sought public office. Mr. Barzee is one of the substantial and progressive citizens of North Bend, interested in its progress and eager for its development, and always ready to give what aid he can to promote its municipal growth.

EDWARD H. LENOX is a native of Oregon and a grandson of one of the very earliest pioneers in the state. He has engaged in farming in Douglas county and has also been bookkeeper in a business house in Roseburg. He has now abandoned both occupations and is serving his second term as county clerk, gaining the respect and esteem of his constituents and fellow citizens by reason of the able and effective way in which he discharges the duties of his office. He was born on the 15th of August, 1866, fifteen miles west of Portland on the old Lenox homestead, and is a son of David and Sarah I. (Campbell) Lenox. The family was founded in Oregon by the grandfather of our subject, who crossed the plains with ox teams in 1843 and settled first near Hillsboro, where he purchased the claim, which is now known as the Joe Meeke farm, upon which he lived for a short time. He later took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres and carried on general agricultural pursuits upon this property until a short time before his death. He passed away in eastern Oregon at an advanced age.

MR. AND MRS. E. S. PARZEE

He was among the early settlers in this state, coming here from Missouri. He was a native of New York and spent some time in that state, in Illinois, and in Missouri, before finally settling in Oregon. The father of our subject was eight years of age when he crossed the plains with his parents. He grew up on the homestead and cultivated the soil until 1878, when he removed with his family to Douglas county, Oregon, residing there until his death which occurred on the 9th of June, 1897. He was a native of Illinois, having been born in that state, March 24, 1835. His wife also came from Illinois and her parents lived in that state in early pioneer times. She came to Oregon with the family of James Smith, making the journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama. Upon their arrival James Smith purchased a large portion of the David Lenox donation claim and farmed upon this property for a number of years. To Mr. and Mrs. David Lenox were born five children: Edward H., of this review; David H., who is well known in business circles of Roseburg; George F., of San Francisco; Charlotte L., who married Oscar Agee of Meadows, Idaho; and Clara Edith, the wife of P. C. Ream, who is in business in Ontario, Oregon. The mother of our subject passed away in January, 1879, at Looking Glass, Oregon, and some time afterward David Lenox was again married. His second wife was Mrs. Margaret A. Bolsinger of Looking Glass, Oregon, and to this union was born one daughter, Leona C., who married J. J. McDonald of Marshfield. Mr. Lenox's second wife died in May, 1890, at Roseburg, Oregon.

Edward H. Lenox was educated in the public schools of Washington and Douglas counties and graduated from the Portland Business College in 1885. He worked upon his father's farm until about 1891 when he went to Portland in order to accept a position as bookkeeper in a mercantile establishment of that city. After a short time he resumed farming upon a tract of land nine miles south of Roseburg and was successful as a general agriculturist until the fall of 1900 when he moved into the city and became a bookkeeper for the Roseburg Lumber Company, following this line of occupation until July, 1904, when he was appointed deputy county clerk and served two terms with ability and efficiency. In July, 1908, he was elected county clerk and was re-elected in 1910 and is now discharging the duties of his office in an able and straightforward and systematic way.

On July 2, 1891, Mr. Lenox was united in marriage in Roseburg to Miss Emma J. Benedick, a daughter of Philip and Elizabeth (Buchanan) Benedick, natives of Ohio, who came to Oregon about the year 1877. To Mr. and Mrs. Lenox have been born five children: Eva May, whose birth occurred in Portland, in September, 1892; Elbert L., born in Brockway, in July, 1895; Osmond, born in Brockway, in July, 1898; Ray, whose birth occurred in the same city, in September, 1901; and Lucile M., who was born in Roseburg on the 6th of August, 1905. Mrs. Lenox gives her allegiance to the Presbyterian church and is well known in religious circles of this city.

In politics the subject of this review is a consistent democrat and is actively and intelligently interested in the progress and welfare of the state, where he was born and reared, discharging the duties of the office which he holds, in a manner which reflects credit upon his ability, efficiency and public spirit.

ALBERT SHIELDS WALKER, who is successfully engaged in the real-estate and insurance business in Springfield, is one of the well known pioneer residents of Lane county, where his family has resided for fifty-nine years. He was born in southwestern Missouri, on the 1st of January, 1846, and is a son of William and Mary (Shields) Walker, who were born, reared and married in Georgia, where they passed the first fifteen years of their domestic life. At the end of that time they went to eastern Tennessee, subsequently locating in southwestern Missouri. They resided in the latter state for seven years, and at the expiration of that period, in 1852, started across the plains to Oregon. When they reached the Kaw river in Kansas they met some returning emigrants from Oregon and California, who reported that they had experienced much difficulty in crossing the plains, owing to the prevalence of cholera and other contagious diseases. In consequence thereof Mr. and Mrs. Walker decided to abandon their journey for that year and returned to Missouri for the winter. The next April, however, they again started westward, making the journey without experiencing any particular difficulties, other than those encountered by the majority of the travelers who took the overland trail, but they had the misfortune to lose the greater part of their stock. They never saw a house from the time they crossed the Missouri river until they reached Lane county, where they arrived in the month of October, 1853. The father immediately filed on a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres eight miles south of the present site of Springfield, which he cultivated for four years. He left this claim in 1857 and went to Eugene where he opened a drug store. Three years later he disposed of his store and invested the proceeds in a farm, and he also sold part of the lot where the First National Bank now stands and bought sixty acres of land in the river bottom adjoining town. He retained this latter property for twelve years, when he sold it and bought two hundred acres at Pleasant Hill, this state. He located upon this place in 1871 and remained there for ten years removing to Springfield in 1881. He died the same year and was survived by the mother who passed away in April, 1882. Of their children three are now living: Eliza A. the wife of Robert Robe, of Brownsville, Oregon; Tryphenia L., who married William Tiffany, of Eugene, and Albert Shields, our subject. Those deceased are: Hugh M., Mat-threw E., Mary J., Margaret, Amelia, Martha and one who died in infancy.

Albert Shields Walker was only a child of six years when he accompanied his parents to Oregon, receiving his education in the common schools of this state. After leaving school he learned the blacksmith's trade, and he was also trained in farm work, having assisted on his father's ranch during his boyhood. He left home at the age of twenty-two, at which time he was married, and began his independent career as an agriculturist. His parents lived with him during the latter years of their lives. For ten years he operated a ranch at Pleasant Hill, this county, but later located in Springfield, where he opened a blacksmith and carriage shop, which he conducted for twenty years, but at the end of that time he disposed of his business and established a real-estate and insurance office here. He has ever since continued in this business and has met with very good success, having handled nearly every piece of property in the town. He has acquired extensive realty interests in both the residence and business portions of the town, and also owns the place where he lives, one of the attractive properties of the community. Mr. Walker has been associated in business with his son, Herbert E., until quite recently, but is now alone.

On the 18th of June, 1868, Mr. Walker was united in marriage to Miss Sarah L. Higgins, who was born in Massachusetts, a daughter of Selden and Susan (McClench) Higgins, natives of Maine. She emigrated to Oregon as a child in 1851 with her parents, who located in the vicinity of Salem, on a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres. They continued to reside there until their deaths, the father passing away in 1883, and the mother in 1887. Mrs. Walker is the eldest of six children all of whom are living. Mrs. Walker is also a niece of Samuel R. Thurston, who was the first United States senator from Oregon after the state had been admitted to the Union. The other members of the family are as follows: Susan, the wife of J. H. Smith of Salem; John, who is living in Union county; Cranston, who is residing on the old homestead near Salem; Ella, the widow of W. H. Anderson, now living in Spokane, Washington; and Mrs. Ida Porter, who lives in California. Nine children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Walker: Alva J., who died in infancy; Herbert E., who is married and operates a planing mill in Springfield; Fred, who is also married and engaged in the undertaking business in this city; Bertha, the wife of O. C. Wolfe, of Albany; Ralph and Jessie, who are at home; Grace and Ida, who are teaching; and Joy, who is attending school. They have all been given the advantages of good, practical educations.

The family affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church, in which the parents hold membership. Mr. Walker belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which organization he has held all of the chairs, and the Woodmen of the World. His political support he accords to the republican party and during the period of his residence here has held all of the city offices and has had the added distinction of having been the first mayor of the town, in which capacity he served for two terms. Mr. Walker has always been one of the foremost citizens of the town, and enthusiastically cooperates in promoting every progressive movement, taking an active and helpful interest in the welfare of the community. He enjoys the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens by reason of his straightforward manner and the efficiency and capability he has manifested in the discharge of his public duties.

S. F. AHLSTROM. In an attractive home, surrounded by beautiful grounds, in Lakeview, S. F. Ahlstrom has resided for twenty-six years. He early established himself in business here, and the extent and importance of his commercial and industrial activities have made him one of the leading citizens. Moreover, he has figured prominently in fraternal circles, nor is he unknown as a local political leader. He was born in Christianstad, Sweden, May 12, 1850, a son of J. F. and Johanna (Warling) Ahlstrom, who spent their entire lives in Sweden, the father always following the cooper's trade, which he learned in youth. In the family were nine children, of whom two died in early life, while seven reached years of maturity. Four of the number came to the United States; S. F.; John F., a resident of Los Angeles, California; Mrs. Augusta Nelson, of Marysville, California; and Frank, a lumberman of Truckee, Nevada.

S. F. Ahlstrom was the first of the family to cross the Atlantic to America, arriving in 1869 and making the trip to the Pacific coast on the first regular train to cross the mountains over the Union Pacific Railroad. He had spent much of the summer, before sailing for the new world, in traveling in Europe and considerable time was also spent on the way to the west. Mr. Ahlstrom accompanied his uncle, O. Warling, on his second trip to America. The latter had previously been in this country, and had returned to Sweden. Our subject settled first in San Jose, California, and worked for his uncle in the saddlery business learning the trade. In the spring of 1873 he removed to Marysville, California, where he followed his trade for nearly thirteen years, and in 1886 he came to Lakeview, where he has resided continuously since. In Marysville he worked for H. M. Harris, with whom he entered into partnership on his removal to Lakeview, this relation being maintained for three years, at the end of which time Mr. Ahlstrom purchased his partner's interest in the business which they conducted. Subsequently he bought a harness shop from C. C. Maltby, and has since engaged extensively in the manufacture of harness and saddlery. His output includes a saddle that bears his name and has become famous in this and other countries. In 1909 Mr. Ahlstrom admitted his brother-in-law, William Gunther, to a partnership in the business which was afterward conducted under the firm style of Ahlstrom & Gunther. He bought the brick building at the corner of Main and Bear streets, but on the 23d of May, 1900, lost the same and its contents by fire. With characteristic energy, however, he cleared away the ruins and that summer erected another building. His trade has steadily increased and his is one of the important productive enterprises of southern Oregon. In addition to having other interests Mr. Ahlstrom is a stockholder in the Northern Telephone Company, in a flourmill and in the Sunshine, a high-grade gold mine. He is recognized as a man of sound business judgment and keen insight and the years have brought him the success which usually follows persistent, honorable labor.

S. F. Ahlstrom was married in 1876 to Miss Mary Gunther, who was born in San Francisco, California, July 27, 1857, a daughter of J. J. Gunther, who was a native of Germany and died at Marysville, California. Two sons and a daughter were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ahlstrom: E. C., who is postmaster of Lakeview; F. O., who is treasurer of Lake county and Lottie Augusta, who became the wife of J. D. Venator, an attorney of Lakeview and died, leaving a son, Harold, who lives with his maternal grandparents.

S. F. Ahlstrom is a republican and has served one term as treasurer of Lake county. He was a member of the city council for about ten years and for one term was mayor of the city. He labored fearlessly to promote municipal interests and for twenty years he has proven himself a champion of education by effective work as school director. On attaining majority Mr. Ahlstrom became a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and he is prominent in that organization, being a past grand of the local lodge, which he represented in the grand lodge a number of times. He is also district deputy for the encampment. He belongs to the Foresters and was the first presiding officer of that organization at Lakeview, serving for two years. Mr. Ahlstrom has been an interested witness of the events which have shaped the history of Lakeview and this part of the state. In the early days he did considerable hunting, five of his guns having been destroyed when his store was burned. He has lived to see the conditions which made hunting possible here give way before an advancing civilization, when commercial and industrial activity take the place of pioneer life. Coming to the new world as a young man he saw his opportunities and has gradually worked upward, advancing along those lines which make for well rounded character, for business has never excluded those activities which have to do with man's obligations to society and government.

DWIGHT REED has been prominently identified with commercial activities in Drain, Oregon, in various capacities since 1907. He has been one of the leading bankers of this city and is now successfully carrying on a large hay-shipping enterprise in Douglas county. He is a native son of Oregon, having been born on the Umpqua river, May 14, 1852. His parents were Dr. Calvin C. and Elvira A. (Brown) Reed, both natives of Iowa, in which state they were reared and married. As a young man the father of our subject took up the study of medicine and received his degree of M. D. in 1830. He crossed the plains in that year with ox teams and arrived in Oregon in the late fall. He located his first claim of six hundred and forty acres in Douglas county. His land lay on both sides of the Umpqua river just east of Winchester and a portion of his claim was located where that city now stands. He built the first grist and sawmill ever erected in Douglas county and also operated a ferry for some time. His activities in this regard were the cause of his death. His violent exertions in making a crossing with his boat caused an overstrain from which he never recovered. He was one of the most prominent professional men in Douglas county and was the first practicing physician in that region. He was widely known and deeply respected and the field of his activities extended over a wide range of country. He died in 1856 and was survived by his wife until 1861 in which year her death occurred.

Dwight Reed was reared at home and educated in the district schools of Douglas county. As early as his fifteenth year he began to earn his own livelihood and from that period made his own way in the world. At the age of twenty-three years he began farming for himself as a renter in Garden Valley, Douglas county, and continued to be occupied in agriculture and stock-raising until 1900. In that year he bought his first tract of land purchasing eight hundred and sixty acres in the Rice Hill district. He improved and cultivated this land with gratifying success. He became exceedingly prosperous and his harvests became more abundant each year. In 1901 he added to his holdings the adjoining three hundred and twenty acres. The following year, in 1902, he bought four hundred and eighty acres more and was for a long time active in the operation of sixteen hundred and sixty acres of the finest farm land in Douglas county. He developed his large holdings along progressive and efficient lines. He thoroughly understands the details of agriculture and carries it on as a modern science. He greatly extended his cattle operations and was conducting an increasingly successful business in this line when he sold his holdings in 1907. In that year he moved to Drain, where he bought a large interest in the local bank and was made president of that institution. In 1909 the bank was reorganized as the State Bank of Drain and Mr. Reed continued as president of the new institution until January 1, 1912, when he resigned and M. R. Ryan was chosen to fill his office. During the last few years of his residence in Drain Mr. Reed has been extensively engaged in the buying and shipping of hay. He supplies this product for practically all the markets of Douglas county and his shrewd business sense is rapidly making him prosperous.

In 1873 Mr. Reed was united in marriage to Miss Alice L. Iles, a daughter of Henderson Iles, who came to Douglas county from Missouri in 1852. He crossed the plains with ox teams and took up a donation claim at Fair Oaks, six miles from Oakland. He was prominent in local politics and his election to the office of county clerk made him one of the first officials of Douglas county.

Mr. Reed is a republican and always votes his party ticket. He is actively interested in public affairs and has served with much ability and efficiency as mayor of Drain. He holds membership in Drain Camp, No. 259, W. O. W., this connection representing his only fraternal affiliation. He is a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal church and is active on the board of trustees of that institution. Mrs. Reed holds membership in the Baptist church of Drain. Mr. Reed is one of the practical and intelligent business men who are the bulwark of our national life. His qualities as a leader and his power of organization directed into business channels have made him a dominant and powerful figure in commercial development.

SOLOMON S. JENNINGS is one of the well known merchants of North Bend, Coos county, Oregon, where he successfully conducts a large dry-goods establishment. He was born in Illinois in 1871, and is a son of J. S. and Harriet E. (Skates) Jennings, the former a native of Germany and the latter of England. Both emigrated during their youth to America and later celebrated their wedding in Illinois, in which state they continued to live until they removed to Arkansas. Later the father with his family settled in Portland, Oregon, and in 1902, established his home at Roseburg, where he lives retired. During his active life John S. Jennings followed farming for a living. He has a family of four children: Charles William, who is in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as train inspector; Minnie, the wife of William Campbell, who is engaged in farming in Clackamas county, Oregon; Belle, who is the wife of Orval Jones of Roseburg, this state; and Solomon S., the subject of this review. The mother of this family is seventy-six years of age and the father is seventy-nine.

Solomon S. Jennings was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools of Illinois and Arkansas. He remained under the parental roof until he was nineteen years of age and in 1886 came to Portland, where he took up work as a clerk in the dry-goods house of W. B. Shively and in that employment he continued for nine years. The store in which he was employed was located on Third street between Morrison and Yamhill. In 1895 he was engaged as a clerk by H. L. Shiller for two years at Oregon City. He, in 1897, returned to Portland where he secured a clerkship with the Robert Brothers and in their employ continued for a period of ten years. In 1903 he came to North Bend, Coos county, where he established a dry-goods store to which business he has since given his entire attention. He started the business with a capital of seven hundred dollars and now carries a well selected dry-goods stock of thirteen thousand dollars, his store being the largest of its kind in North Bend and the business is conducted under the firm name of S. S. Jennings.

Mr. Jennings was united in marriage at Oregon City, in 1895, to Miss Flora Richards, a daughter of N. W. Richards, of Oregon City. She was reared in her parents' home in St. Joseph, Missouri, where she remained until eighteen years of age and then removed to Oregon, settling in Oregon City, at which place she continued to reside until the time of her marriage. After receiving her elementary education she graduated from the high school and later pursued a course of studies in a Pacific coast college. After completing her education she was engaged in school teaching and for two years was a music teacher. Mr. and Mrs. Jennings became the parents of three children: Elizabeth Pearl, who has completed a common-school education and is now engaged in the study of music; Herald S., who is fifteen years of age and is a pupil in the high school; and Mabel, aged nine years, who is attending public school. The mother of this family died November 21, 1909. On January 1, 1912, Mr. Jennings was married to Miss Ione Hutchins, of Newberg, Oregon. She is a daughter of I. H. and Caroline (Brutscher) Hutchins. The father came to Oregon when a young man sixteen years of age with his parents in 1870, who settled on a farm at Newberg where he celebrated his marriage. He later purchased a farm located near Newberg, on which he established his home and continued to live until 1899. He then returned to Newberg and there purchased a home where he has since continued to reside. Mr. and Mrs. Hutchins are the parents of five children: Mrs. A. L. Gubser, of North Bend, Oregon; Ione, the wife of the subject of this review; T. A., who is in the employ of the government at Portland, Oregon; G. Fred, who resides with his parents; and Earl, of North Bend. Mr. Jennings is affiliated with the republican party and is a member of the school board of North Bend. His fraternal relations are with the Woodmen of the World and he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Solomon S. Jennings is accounted by public opinion one of the enterprising and successful men of Coos county and is one of the most influential and desirable citizens of this part of the state.

OSCAR RAIAMAKI has been in Coos county for over twenty-three years and has been identified with various activities in this district during that time. He is the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of land and is carrying on its cultivation in an intelligent and scientific way. He was born in Finland in 1861 and is one of four children born to his parents, the others being: Henry, who is married and lives with his family in Finland; Andrew, who is also married and lives in Minnesota; and Gustus, who resides with his wife and family in the same state.

Oscar Raiamaki received his early education in the public schools of Finland and pursued his studies until he was thirteen years of age, when he left home and started to earn a livelihood for himself. He worked at farming, in the employ of others, until 1886, when he crossed the Atlantic and settled in Michigan, where he worked in the timber business for two years. At the end of that time he came to Coos bay and worked in the coal mines of Libby for five years, or from 1888 to 1893. In the latter year he took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres on North lake, cleared some of the land of its timber and built his home in which he is now residing. He is engaged in general farming but makes a specialty of dairying and through the cleanliness and modern equipment which he maintains is well known throughout Coos county.

On March 12, 1888, in Coos county, Mr. Raiamaki was united in marriage to Miss Hilda Ruakay, a native of Finland, who made the journey to America alone. She was one of two children. Her brother, Frank, is living with his family in Finland. To Mr. and Mrs. Raiamaki were born four children: Emiel, whose birth occurred October 1, 1900, and who is attending school in Coos Bay, fitting himself for mechanical activities; Fred, born September 16, 1908; Ida, whose birth occurred on the 7th of February, 1899, and who is attending school in Coos county; and Olga, born July 20, 1902, who is pursuing her education. Oscar Raiamaki gives his allegiance to the republican party and takes an active interest in educational affairs. He has served as director of school district No. 2 for fourteen years and has done capable and efficient work along that line. The old country of Finland has given to the new world many upright and honorable men like Mr. Raiamaki who have brought with them to the state of Oregon, a steady determination and an energetic ambition which are bases of excellent citizenship.

FRANK B. DUNN is the senior partner of the firm of Dunn & Price, the oldest bakery establishment in Eugene. His birth occurred in Galena, Jo Daviess county, Illinois, on the 22d of June, 1857, his parents being Barzilla Clark and Elizabeth (Gill) Dunn. He is descended from one of the oldest Revolutionary families and is of Scotch-Irish descent. There is a family tradition that four brothers by the name of Dunn emigrated from County Donegal during the days when the pretender, Bonnie Prince Charlie, was making his futile effort to obtain the throne of England and that the Dunn family, being adherents of his cause, were compelled to flee from the British Isles to avoid Fenian persecution. It is said that they arrived in Nova Scotia in the year 1735. The names of only three of the brothers have been preserved to the family history—Benjamin, Jeremy and Jonathan. The last named is the ancestor of the Dunns in Eugene. His wife's Christian name was Mary but her maiden name has long since been lost to history. There is, however, a legend in the family which says that she was in some way connected by blood relationship to the famous Ethan Allen, the conqueror of Ticonderoga. In 1776, at the time of the American Revolution, the family moved from Nova Scotia to New Jersey. Jonathan Dunn became an adherent of the Colonial cause and enlisted as a volunteer in Jacob Ten Eycke's company, in Colonel Frelinghuysen's battery of the New Jersey militia. This regiment was commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Derick Meddagh. Jonathan Dunn's name is found on the muster roll of the company, which says they (the company) marched from home, November 11, 1777. His service is a matter of record and may be found in William S. Stryker's war history entitled "Officers and Men of New Jersey in the Revolutionary War." In 1793 he lost his life while crossing the Mohawk river with a band of cattle. Next in line of descent is his son, Beracha, who was born in Nova Scotia, May 27, 1775, and at the age of sixteen left the parental roof to make his own way in the world. He was by trade a shoemaker, which occupation in those early days found abundant employment in every community along the Atlantic seaboard. In 1798 he removed to Ohio, to which state his sisters had preceded him some time before. Here he purchased ten acres of land at Fort Washington. This site on the Ohio river has long since become a part of the flourishing manufacturing city of Cincinnati. His wife was Mary German, of Welsh extraction. After residing on the banks of the Ohio for a few years Beracha Dunn sold his ten acres and removed to Avondale, where he purchased eighty acres and established his home. Later he conducted a tannery at Reading. After disposing of this property he bought one hundred and sixty acres, where the town of Lockland, a suburb of Cincinnati, is now built. While living on this land he also owned and operated a sawmill and gristmill. He was in the midst of a successful business career during the time of the War of 1812. At the close of that conflict the universal depression throughout the country caused the price of flour to drop from twelve dollars to three dollars per barrel. This amounted to a calamity which resulted in his financial ruin. He passed out of this life December 8, 1858, at the age of eighty-three years. Unto him and his wife were born twelve children. His son, Jonathan (II), who was the paternal grandfather of Frank B. Dunn of this review, was the oldest of the family. He was born on the 14th of September, 1801, and left the old home in 1823. Starting in life for himself, he emigrated into what was then the territory of Illinois, an untamed wilderness, locating in Sangamon county and making his permanent settlement at New Salem. There he built a gristmill, being one of the earliest settlers of that portion of Sangamon county and living there at the time when Abraham Lincoln was engaged as a clerk in the only grocery store in the place. He became one of the early friends and associates of that unknown young man, who later was to become the great war president and emancipator. A picture of the old mill may be seen in the history of Lincoln by Nicoll and Hay. The mill is therein spoken of as being one of the old haunts of Lincoln and has by these historians been identified as Dunn's mill. In 1830 he moved to Athens, Illinois, where he opened a general store, and here he and his wife entertained their old friend Lincoln at their home during his political campaigns. After leaving his father's home Jonathan Dunn was always fortunate in his business ventures and had succeeded in acquiring land and various other kinds of property and was considered at that early day to be a man of independent circumstances. He, however, became a bankrupt at the time when President Jackson vetoed the United States bank bill and never after recovered from this blow. The delicate condition of his wife's health prevented him from enlisting in the United States service during the time of the Black Hawk war and he was compelled to do the next best thing under the circumstances and promptly secured a substitute to take his place. In 1845 he moved to Galena, Illinois, where he and some of his sons were engaged in the lead mines in the summer time and some of the older boys, one being the father of our subject, found employment as cabin boys on the Mississippi river steamboats. Galena, Illinois, was the home of the father of Ulysses S. Grant. At that place he was engaged in the tannery business and there the children of the Dunns and the Grants became well acquainted. The Dunn boys have always considered themselves favored and fortunate to have enjoyed as their playmate and early friend in life the fellowship of the young American, who was to become later the lieutenant general of all the United States military forces in the war of 1861-1865. In 1858 Jonathan Dunn received a grant of land of one hundred and sixty acres in the new territory of Kansas as remuneration for services in the Black Hawk war. The family accordingly at once moved upon this land, it being located in Douglas county, Kansas, twelve miles from what is now the city of Lawrence. Here Jonathan Dunn established what proved to be his permanent western home. He was a staunch whig, while his wife was a strong southern sympathizer. His home became one of the shelters for Union soldiers, protecting them from the hostilities already opening in the border wars of Kansas. The place was known throughout all that portion of Kansas as "the farm house" and is so designated in the military histories of the state of Kansas. On the 30th of June, 1825, Jonathan Dunn was united in marriage to Miss Irene Clark, the marriage ceremony being performed by the Rev. Peter Cartwright, who was one of the most famous among all the early pioneer preachers of the Methodist Episcopal church and at one time the opposing candidate of Abraham Lincoln for the state legislature.

Barzilla Clark Dunn, the father of the gentleman, whose name introduces this review, was born in Ohio, where he grew to manhood and was by occupation engaged in farming. While still a young man he removed to Illinois, where he engaged in mining near Galena. In 1849 he emigrated to California and while there was occupied in gold mining. There he remained for a period of three years, being very successful in his ventures. He afterward returned to Illinois and later removed to Douglas county, Kansas, where he filed on a government claim. On this place he established his home and continued to reside for the succeeding sixteen years. In 1876 he came to Lane county, Oregon, and for several years was engaged in farming as tenant of a rented farm. He later purchased a fine property two miles south of Eugene. Here he continued his occupation as a farmer and was also identified with the stock business. He was married in the year 1852 and passed out of this life in September, 1900, when seventy-two years of age.

Frank B. Dunn was reared at home and educated in the public schools. He remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-two years of age. At that time he homesteaded a most excellent piece of land in eastern Washington and was engaged in its development for twenty years following, making a specialty of wheat and stock. In 1900 he removed to Eugene, where he became identified with the bakery business, acquiring an interest in a bakery with his brother, Harry W., becoming after two years sole proprietor of the establishment and remaining as such until 1911. At that time he formed a partnership with his son-in-law, Frank E. Price, under the firm name of Dunn & Price. This establishment does a very extensive business not only in the city of Eugene but ships its goods to all parts of the surrounding country. The firm has the most modern and perfect equipment required in their business, and a large force of employes is necessary to handle the growing volume of their trade, four professional bakers being required to look after their daily output.

As a companion and helpmate on the journey of life Mr. Dunn chose Miss Mary M. Masterson, a daughter of William Masterson of Lane county. To this union seven children have been born, as follows: Ina M., the wife of F. E. Price; Ada Claire; Grace; Marguerite, the wife of G. F. Houghton, of Eugene; Ruby; Ray; and Frederick. Fraternally Mr. Dunn is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to Farmington Lodge, No. 25, of Washington of which he is the past grand master, and to Wima-whal Encampment No. 6, of which he is past chief patriarch. He is also a member of Eugene Camp, No. 115, W. O. W. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. Frank B. Dunn is one of the successful men of his part of Oregon. His business establishment is one of the best and most favorably known throughout his portion of the state. He is one of the citizens of Eugene always to be counted upon for his ready and efficient help in the advancement of any meritorious cause affecting the business and moral interests of his community.

SAMUEL N. WARFIELD, now efficiently serving as county recorder of Benton county, is one of the county's native sons and a representative of a family which was established here in pioneer days. He was born on a ranch in the Alsea valley, September 8, 1870, a son of William Thomas and Lovely (Tom) Warfield, both of whom came across the plains to Oregon in early childhood with their respective parents. The father's family located in Linn county, near Tangent, while the mother's parents took up their abode in Polk county. The paternal grandfather, Samuel Warfield, had come from Missouri and after his arrival in this state saw active service in the Indian wars. He gained considerable local fame as the slayer of the noted Indian chief Pu Pu Moxamox, whose scalp he retained in his possession for many years. His vocation was that of farming, which he followed throughout his lifetime. He was married twice and reared a large family. His was a long and useful life, covering eighty-six years, his death occurring at Lexington, Oregon, in 1908. His son William Thomas, the father of our subject, also followed the occupation of farming as his life work, but his career was cut off in its prime, his death occurring at the comparatively early age of forty-eight years. His wife survives, however, and resides on the old home place in Alsea valley, Benton county.

Samuel N. Warfield was the second in order of birth in a family of nine children born unto his parents, and was a youth of eighteen years when his father was called from this life. Being the eldest son the responsibilities of the head of the house naturally fell upon him and, in addition to assuming the supervision of the farm work, he aided his mother in the rearing of the younger members of the family. He remained at home, giving her the benefit of his assistance for many years. He now owns a farm, adjoining the old homestead, upon which he makes his home, and when not engaged with the duties of his public office he carries on general farming, in which line he has met with substantial success.

Mr. Warfield was married, December 29, 1899, to Miss Luey J. Seely, who was born in Illinois, August 16, 1876, and when a maiden of thirteen years came with her parents to Oregon. Her father died soon after his arrival in this state and the mother's death occurred about fifteen years ago. To Mr. and Mrs. Warfield has been born one daughter, Edith Bell. Mr. Warfield is well known in fraternal circles of Corvallis, belonging to the Modern Woodmen of America, the Knights of Pythias and the Grange. He has been particularly interested and active in the affairs of the latter order, serving for four years as steward of the state grange, while at the present time he is acting as county deputy of that organization. He gives his political support to the republican party and has been a stalwart champion of the cause of education, serving as a school director for twelve years in Alsea, and was influential in consolidating the county districts and in erecting the high school at that city. In 1910 he was elected to the office of county recorder, and no better evidence of his popularity and the efficiency of his service in that office can be given than the fact that he is now the nominee for reelection to that position on both the democratic and republican tickets. Compelled to take up the responsibilities of life at an early age, the principle of self-reliance, which he adopted as a youth, has been one of his prominent characteristics and has carried him through many difficulties into a place of prominence among his fellow citizens. He has many friends in the county in which his entire life has been spent, and his career is in contradistinction to the old adage that "A prophet is never without honor save in his own country."

ELBERT KEEBLER, an agriculturist residing three and a half miles north of Lebanon, is the owner of a tract of three hundred and twenty acres and devotes his attention to farming and stock-raising with excellent success. His birth occurred in Tennessee in 1844, his parents being James and Katherine (Crouch) Keebler, who were likewise natives of that state. They had three children, as follows: Joseph, who is living retired at Lebanon, Oregon; Mary, deceased; and Elbert, of this review.

Elbert Keebler started out in life for himself as a youth of seventeen years, for when still very young he lost his father, who had gone to California as a pioneer. In 1862, our subject made the journey across the plains with ox teams and settled in the Grande Ronde valley of Oregon, where he worked for others during a period of five years. He then came to Linn county and here operated a rented farm in association with his stepfather for two years, at the end of which time the latter passed away. Remaining on that place, he purchased the property in 1874, and cared for his mother until the time of her demise, in 1878. He still owns that tract. His farm embraces three hundred and twenty acres, and two hundred and fifty thereof, are under cultivation. He devotes his attention to the cultivation of grain and hay, principally, and also raises stock, having one hundred head of sheep. His is a commodious and attractive residence and his farm is well improved and equipped.

Elbert Keebler has been married twice. He first wedded Miss Margaret Smelser, who was born in Missouri and by whom he had ten children, six of whom survive, as follows: Otis, an agriculturist residing at Lebanon; Georgia, the wife of Lincoln Coney, of Alberta, Canada; Mamie, the wife of B. B. Doughton, a farmer of Lebanon, Oregon; Cleveland, who assists his father in the operation of the home farm; Samuel, at home; and Bernice, the wife of Robert Wallace, an employe in the paper mill at Lebanon, Oregon. Mr. Keebler's first wife was called to her final rest in 1903, and two years later he was again married, his second union being with Miss Pearl Shearer, a native of Kansas and a daughter of Joseph and Amy (White) Shearer. Her father passed away in Missouri, in 1889, and her mother came to Oregon in March, 1883. To Elbert and Pearl (Shearer) Keebler, a daughter, Esther, was born on the 21st of December, 1905.

Elbert Keebler is a stalwart democrat and has always taken an active part in community affairs. He has held school offices and has ever discharged his public duties in a commendable and acceptable manner. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons and is a worthy exemplar of the craft. The period of his residence in this state covers a half century, and in his home community he enjoys an enviable reputation as a leading agriculturist and respected citizen.

HIRAM S. EDDY, who has been engaged in the real-estate business in Sandy, Clackamas county, since 1909, was born in Haldimand township, Northumberland county, Canada, on the 12th of February, 1854, his parents being Hiram Alexander and Narcissa (Drinkwater) Eddy. The father was born in Manchester, England, and was one of fourteen children. At the time of his father's death four survived but since all have passed away. The mother was a native of Aberdeen, Scotland, and was one of ten children, namely: Allen, deceased; James, deceased, who was married and had one child, Benjamin, now living in Canada; Lyman, deceased, who was survived by three children; Harry, deceased, who was married and had four sons; and Albert, Julia, Lydia, Mary, Narcissa and Maria, all of whom have passed away. Mr. and Mrs. Eddy were married in 1837 and Hiram S., our subject, is the only child born to their union.

After completing his education and having engaged for a short time in agricultural pursuits by assisting his father, Hiram S. Eddy started out for himself at the age of eighteen years. For one year he was employed on a farm in Wisconsin and at the end of that time departed for the northern part of the state, where he was employed as a lumberman for seven years. After discontinuing that pursuit he removed to Iowa, where he purchased a farm, which he cultivated until 1893. He at that time disposed of this property and accepted a position with the Illinois Central Railway as immigrant agent in the Yazoo valley, Mississippi. For eleven years and ten months he was thus engaged before coming to Oregon. After arriving in this state he spent two years in eastern Oregon, where he was engaged in the lumber business. Subsequently, in 1907, he removed to Portland and almost immediately afterward came to Sandy, where he has since made him home. Upon arriving in this town he engaged in the real-estate business and by hard work and constant application he has built up a good patronage and during the three years in which he has conducted this business he has handled more than four thousand acres of farm and timber land, a great part of which was sold to original settlers. He also owns considerable property in his own name. His advice is frequently sought by those intending to either purchase or dispose of property because it is well known that his judgment is based upon a good knowledge of land values and that in aiding prospective patrons to decide he considers their side of the question as well as his own.

On the 15th of December, 1876, in Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, Mr. Eddy was married to Miss Delia E. Armstrong, whose birth occurred on the 27th of August, 1857, and who is a daughter of Sanford and Louisa (Kemp) Armstrong, who were the parents of six children. To Mr. and Mrs. Eddy three children have been born. Clarence, the eldest, was born April 9, 1881. He attended the district schools of Iowa and subsequently was a student in the high school of Fayette county, Iowa. After completing these courses he entered Jennings College at Des Moines and studied to become an electrician. He is at present the owner of a farm at Parma, Idaho. He has been twice married. To his first union three children were born, Catherine McBride, Clarence A. and Noel H. By his second union he has one son, Charles H. Warren H., the second in order of birth in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Eddy, was born August 21, 1885. After completing his high-school education he fitted himself for the position of railroad engineer and is following that occupation in Iowa. He is in the employ of the Illinois Central Railway. He is married and has three children. Lula, the youngest of the family, was born April 21, 1892. She attended a business college in Iowa and is at present residing with her parents.

Mr. Eddy casts his vote with the prohibition party. He holds membership in the Baptist church and is also a member of Independence Lodge, No. 87, A. F. & A. M., of Independence, Iowa. He was one of the organizers of the Commercial Club, of which he was president. He is interested not only from a business point of view but also because of his altruistic spirit in the development of Sandy. Since its incorporation as a town in 1911 he has been one of its most active promoters and enthusiastic citizens.

JOHN H. McDERMOTT, SR. A third of a century's service in the army well entitles John H. McDermott, Sr., to the life of rest which he is enjoying. On the field, in camp and in the fort he has met the experiences of army life in active campaigns against the Indians on the frontier, and now he is living retired in Hammond. He was born in Boston, Massachusetts, October 16, 1846, and comes of Irish ancestry. His father, James McDermott, was a native of the Emerald isle and in young manhood came to the new world, first settling in New York. He afterward made a trip back to Ireland and following his return to America was united in marriage to Miss Mary O'Grady, who was born in Ireland and came with her parents to the new world when six years of age. She, too, had visited her native land before her marriage. They lived at various times at Boston and New York until the father's death, which occurred in the former city when he was forty-nine years of age. The mother continued to make her home in Boston until she started on a visit to her son John, who at that time was a member of the Sixth United States Cavalry, located at Fort Richardson, Texas. Just before the mother started on the journey he was sent on relief work to the Seventh Cavalry of Kansas and was on his way to Kansas when his mother arrived at Waco, Texas. Greatly disappointed at not seeing her son as she had anticipated, Mrs. McDermott became ill and died there without the knowledge of her son. Her remains were interred in Waco and Mr. McDermott of this review never saw his mother's grave until three months later. In the family were five children, of whom John H. is the eldest and the only one living. The others were George, Frank, Edward and Honoria.

Rearred under the parental roof, John H. McDermott attended school until sixteen years of age and made his home with his parents until twenty years of age, when his military spirit was aroused and he enlisted as a member of the Sixth Cavalry of the regular army, devoting his life to military service until he was retired in June, 1905. He has since resided at Hammond, Oregon. The detailed and more specific account of Mr. McDermott's military experience is most interesting. He became a member of Company K, Sixth United States Cavalry, in 1867 and was discharged on the 16th of October, 1872, at Meridian, Mississippi. On the 1st of April, 1873, he reenlisted and was discharged at Fort Reno, Indian Territory, April 5, 1878, when serving with Company I, Sixteenth Infantry. On the 1st of that month, however, he had reenlisted with the same company and regiment, with which he continued until honorably discharged, March 31, 1883, at Fort Davis, Texas, with the rank of first sergeant. The following day he again enrolled and was discharged March 31, 1888, as post quartermaster sergeant at Fort Hancock, Texas. Again on the day following he reenlisted and was discharged March 31, 1893, as post quartermaster sergeant at Fort Warren, Massachusetts. His service covered active campaigning against the Comanche Indians as a sharpshooter and he sustained a gunshot wound in the left knee. One of the most thrilling chapters in all American history concerns the Indian warfare on the western frontier. The troops were never drawn up in battle array for they could not fight the Red men as they would the representatives of the white race. They had to do with a foe who was skulking, treacherous and wild, and perforce they must study his methods and meet him upon his own ground. It requires the greatest courage and valor to venture into a district where every stone and bush may shelter a foe. Such experiences of warfare Mr. McDermott well knows. Still the fighting spirit was not quenched within him and on the 1st of April, 1893, he reenlisted for another five years' term, which was terminated by his honorable discharge March 31, 1898, in Montana, where he was serving as post quartermaster. The following day again saw him enrolled with Uncle Sam's defenders for a three years' enlistment which terminated at Fort Stevens, Oregon, March 31, 1901. Again on the following day he placed his name on the roll of the United States soldiers and was discharged as quartermaster March 31, 1904. His character was excellent in all his discharges. His service covered active duty in the Spanish-American war and with his regiment he went to the Philippines, participating in the battle of Manila, August 13, 1898. He was also in the assault upon and capture of Jaro and Iloilo on the 11th and 12th of February, 1899. He took part in the battle near Jaro river, March 16, 1899, and was also in the third expedition to the Philippine islands. As a soldier he was industrious and willing—a handy man in the company and brave in time of danger. He certainly deserves the rest which has come to him, having devoted thirty-seven years of his life to the service of his country.

In 1868 Mr. McDermott was united in marriage to Miss Mary Colahan, who was born in Jersey City, New Jersey, and was one of a family of six children, two of whom are yet living. Mr. and Mrs. McDermott became the parents of five children. Charles S., born January 25, 1869, is a graduate of St. Mary's College, of San Antonio, Texas, and is at present engaged in business in Hammond. Like his father he saw active service in the Spanish-American war, covering sixteen months, and was honorably discharged in 1899. He enlisted on the 13th of May, 1898, and held the rank of corporal in Company C, Eighteenth United States Infantry. He made an excellent record while at the front, displaying the same spirit of valor and loyalty which ever characterized his father. John H., born December 1, 1871, was married December 16, 1896, to Miss Charlotte Cranney, a native of Montana, and they have two children: Alice C., born August 11, 1897; and John E., born August 9, 1898. John H. McDermott, Jr., is a partner in business with his elder brother at Hammond. Mary is the wife of Robert Marsden, of New York city. James M. died at the age of twenty-nine years and H. P. is living in Canada. The family is of the Catholic faith.

Mr. McDermott gives his political allegiance to the republican party. He has made an exemplary record as a soldier and stands as a splendid type of that American citizenship which finds joy in serving the country and following the starry banner wherever duty leads. He knows all the varied experiences of campaigning—the quiet life of the forts of the east; the arduous service on the western plains; and active duty in the Orient—and never has been known to falter in the performance of any task assigned to him.

ALBERT STEPHEN DOWN. When death called Albert Stephen Down on the 12th of December, 1911, he was residing on a ranch two miles south of Lakeview. His life record is an interesting one for he had visited many parts of the civilized world and had had varied experiences as a seaman and miner before becoming identified with ranching interests on the Pacific coast. He was born in Hastings, England, July 9, 1837, his parents being John and Mary (Stace) Down. The mother lived until October 8, 1895, passing away in Hastings at the advanced age of seventy-eight years. Their son Albert was the eldest of four children. A daughter, Mrs. Mary Ann Clark, died at Hastings, August 16, 1912, while the other members of the family passed away some time ago.

From the early age of ten years Albert Stephen Down was dependent upon his own resources. He went to sea on board a fishing boat on which he remained for four years and then shipped on a merchant vessel as common seaman. He visited his old home at Hastings, for the last time in 1855 and thence went to Gotenhorg, Sweden. The following year he visited Constantinople, being in the Turkish capital when peace was declared between Russia and the allied powers. From that city he sailed on a voyage to different parts of the world, visiting both civilized and uncivilized districts, but in 1858 left the sea to engage in mining in Australia. He became interested in many mines in that country but at length determined to try his fortune in America and sailed for San Francisco, California, reaching his destination on the 25th of March, 1866. He then left his ship and went to Sonoma county, where for four years he worked in the redwood forests.

Mr. Down was married, on the 23d of February, 1870, to Miss Carrie Elizabeth Ballard, a native of Atchison, Missouri, who crossed the plains in one of the old-time moving wagons with her father, reaching Sonoma county in 1862. She is a daughter of Smithfield and Delina Ballard and by her marriage became the mother of six children: Effie, who is the wife of S. P. Vernon, and resides on a ranch adjoining the old homestead; George, who married Myrtle Grimes, and resides seven miles south of Lakeview; Mary, the wife of Flint Vernon, a brother of S. P. Vernon, residing five miles south of Lakeview; James, who died in 1886, at the age of seven years; Anna, the wife of Homer Pollard, of Oakland, California; and Stephen, who resides with his mother and is operating the home ranch.

For some years after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Down resided in Sonoma county, California, and in 1878 removed to Colusa county, that state, but in the spring of 1879 came to Goose Lake valley, Oregon, settling eleven miles west of Lakeview. Albert S. Down purchased the home ranch in 1896, becoming the owner of two hundred and sixty acres of arable land, much of which he brought into a high state of cultivation. He planted an orchard, cultivated the grains and vegetables best adapted to soil and climate, and at one time owned a large flock of sheep but later disposed of them, turning his attention to the raising of cattle and horses. He was thus engaged at the time of his death, which occurred when he was seventy-four years of age. The ranch work is now being carried on by his widow and son and the land is largely devoted to hay and the raising of stock. Fraternally Mr. Down was connected with the Masons, belonging both to the lodge and the Eastern Star chapter. He exemplified in his life the beneficent spirit of the craft and was always loyal to its teachings. His reminiscences of early days, when he followed the life of a sailor enriched his conversation and made him an interesting companion, for he visited many ports, sailing almost around the world, and he learned much concerning strange people, their manners and customs. For forty-five years he was identified with the life of the Pacific coast and his sterling traits of character won him the warm regard of those with whom he was associated.

JAMES A. HAINES. Five hundred and sixty acres of land, well fenced, equipped and improved, are the contribution which James A. Haines has made to the agricultural wealth of Oregon. He is a son of Alfred and Sarah (Nixon) Haines whose pioneer labors in the early days of the settlement of this state have been described on another page of this work. He was born in Albany, Whiteside county, Illinois, October 16, 1839, and came with his father to Oregon in 1862. He was reared in this state and acquired his early education in the public schools. His advantages along this line were extremely limited and he had no schooling after his twelfth year and very little before, being obliged to work on his father's farm, assisting in the cultivation and improvement of the land, which was wrested from the virgin forest. On the death of his mother in 1879 the home which belonged to her was left to James A. Haines and his two brothers, Edward and Lewis. Soon afterward Edward and James purchased their elder brother's interest in the farm and operated it in conjunction with each other for ten years, being aided in their activities by early experience and knowledge of the best methods of agriculture. They bought other land, from time to time, and eventually had acquired eight hundred acres of the most productive soil in Douglas county. They then divided this property and each has since carried on an individual agricultural enterprise. James A. Haines, now owns five hundred and sixty acres of highly improved and well developed land and is giving his entire time and attention to its furtherance.

On October 2, 1881, Mr. Haines was united in marriage to Miss Anna Rapp, a daughter of Godfrey Rapp who came to Oregon from Kansas in 1876 and died in this state on March 17, 1901. To Mr. and Mrs. Haines have been born two children, Myrtle A., and Grace V., both of whom are living with their parents on the home farm. Mr. Haines is a republican but never seeks public office. He is a member of Elkton Camp, No. 5786, M. W. A., and he and his wife and daughters, affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church. His work has always been representative of the most scientific methods and has been characterized by an intelligent understanding of local conditions and the utilization of favorable opportunities.

JOSEPH OSCAR WATTS is one of the leading and most successful optometrists in western Oregon. He was the first local practitioner of this school in Eugene, where his splendidly equipped offices offer the very latest, scientific treatment to people having defective eyesight. Dr. Watts was born in Missouri, Davis county, March 31, 1846, and is a son of Dr. John George and Duleena (Jones) Watts. Dr. John G. Watts was born in Mount Vernon, Kentucky, and was a graduate of the medical college at Lexington. Soon after his graduation, he removed to Missouri, settling in a portion of the state at a time when he, together with all the rest of the people in the county, were justly numbered among the early pioneers. Here he practiced his profession, using his horse and saddle-bags as the only convenient method of travel in rendering his services to the afflicted public. His medical supplies he purchased in St. Louis, and for the want of railroads, he was compelled to go on horseback between his field of labor and that city, to obtain the necessary remedies, then in general use among physicians. After spending some years in Missouri, he removed to Indiana, where he established himself in practice and continued to be so engaged for only a short period. Eventually retiring from pursuit of his practice, he engaged in the business of watchmaker and jeweler and later moved to Osceola, Iowa, in which city he opened a jewelry store and continued to give his attention to the care of this business until his death.

Joseph Oscar Watts was reared in his father's home and educated in the public schools, learning at the same time the trade of the jeweler and watchmaker in his father's store. After attaining his majority, he engaged in business for himself in Linnville, Iowa, where he continued to live until May 1, 1884. During that year, he moved to Eugene. In this city, he opened a retail jewelry establishment. Here he was successful in building up a large business, from which he is now gradually retiring. In the fall of 1892, he began privately to pursue the study of optometry, continuing in this line of study for the immediate four years following, during which time he completed the required studies in that profession and was graduated from the Chicago College of Ophthalmology in the class of 1896, with the degree of doctor of optics. He was later graduated from the Northern Illinois College of Ophthalmology and Otology in 1902. Having completed his studies in this profession, he became the first trained optometrist in Eugene. From the time he first opened his office for business, he has been uniformly successful and now has a very extensive practice throughout the county, people traveling from great distances to receive the benefit of his scientific skill in the treatment of defective vision. His offices are equipped with all the latest scientific apparatus for testing the eyes and all the necessary machinery for grinding lenses. He has the most complete surface grinding plant in Eugene, and being so thoroughly prepared for the work, he is able to grind any combination of lenses in his own office. Dr. Joseph O. Watts was united in wedlock to Miss Hepsie A. Buffam, a daughter of A. G. Buffam, of Le Roy, Iowa. To this union four children have been born, two of whom are living: Mary, the wife of Charles Willis of Red Lodge, Montana; and Charles H., who was born in 1881 and received his early education in the public schools and also in the University of Oregon, and since becoming of age has been associated with his father in business.

Dr. Watts is a member of Helmet Lodge, No. 33, K. P., in which lodge, he has passed all the chairs and of Spencer-Butte Lodge, I. O. O. F., of which he is a past noble grand. He is a member of Eugene Lodge, No. 357, B. P. O. E.; and of Lodge, No. 15, A. O. U. W. Dr. Watt's extensive practice has made him one of the most popular and widely known men in his profession in western Oregon. He is in every sense a public-spirited man, giving the support of his influence to every worthy cause, seeking the improvement and advancement of the community in which he lives.

JOHN BUCHNER, a prosperous agriculturist and representative citizen of Linn county, is the owner of an excellent farm of two hundred and seventy acres situated halfway between Albany and Lebanon. His birth occurred in Wisconsin in 1858, his parents being Conrad and Elizabeth (Smith) Buchner, natives of Germany. They emigrated to the United States in early life, settling in Wisconsin with their respective parents. In 1877 Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Buchner came to Oregon, locating at Millersburg, Linn county. In 1902 they took up their abode in Albany and there spent the remainder of their lives in retirement. Mr. Buchner passing away in 1906 and his wife in 1905. Their children are nine in number, namely: Christina, who is the widow of Jacob Farlow and resides at Albany, Oregon; Paul, a resident of Jefferson, Oregon; John, of this review; Charles W., of Salem, Oregon; Emma S., who resides at Albany, this state; William A., of Corvallis, Oregon; and Edward S., Lillian and Clara J., all of whom are residents of Albany.

John Buchner, who was nineteen years old when he came to Oregon with his parents, remained at home until twenty-seven years of age. Then, in association with two of his brothers, he rented a farm of nine hundred acres and was engaged in its operation for three years. On the expiration of that period he removed to Spicer and there cultivated a rented farm of five hundred acres for four years. Subsequently he was married and took up his abode on the farm of Samuel Hardman, having charge of the place for twelve years. Later he purchased the tract of two hundred and seventy acres which is now in his possession and on which he has resided continuously since. He erected a commodious and modern residence, as well as all necessary outbuildings for the shelter of grain and stock, and his is one of the model farming properties of the community. His land is practically all under cultivation and is devoted, principally to the raising of clover and oats. Mr. Buchner also raises horses, cattle and sheep to some extent and has met with success in all of his undertakings, by reason of his untiring energy and capable management.

In 1894 Mr. Buchner was united in marriage to Miss Serena E. Hardman, a native of Oregon and a daughter of Benjamin and Rebecca (Powell) Hardman. Mr. and Mrs. Hardman had three children, namely: Matilda J., deceased; Mrs. Serena Buchner; and one who died in infancy. To Mr. and Mrs. Buchner have been born three children, as follows: Velma May, who is pursuing a commercial course in the high school at Albany; and Merle C., and Mertice B., twins, both of whom are attending school. John Buchner is a republican, having supported the men and measures of that party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. In Linn county, where he has resided for more than a third of a century, he has gained an extensive circle of warm friends who entertain for him the utmost regard and esteem because of his excellent traits of character.

MILLARD O. LOWNSDALE. The student of Oregon pioneer settlement and development does not carry his researches far without encountering the name of Lownsdale, which has been honored and esteemed in the business and agricultural life of the state since before the foundation of Portland. One of its most worthy and progressive representatives, Millard Oregon Lownsdale, died in that city July 24, 1911, and his death marked the passing of one of the most successful men in this part of the state. All over Oregon he was known for his able work in scientific horticulture, since he was perhaps one of the greatest individual forces in the horticultural development of the Willamette valley and more especially the standard authority upon everything connected with the cultivation of apples. The name and endeavor of Millard O. Lownsdale are connected with the pioneer era in Oregon. He was born in Portland, November 21, 1851, and is a son of Daniel H. Lownsdale, one of the earliest pioneers in the state and part owner of the original town site of Portland.

Mr. Lownsdale of this review was educated in the old Portland Academy and completed his studies at Willamette University. It was while he was still a pupil that he became widely known for the remarkable beauty of his voice, which was highly approved by the best teachers and judges. This gift was a source of great pleasure to him through his life and in his early years he appeared many times on the concert stage with great success, but he was never ambitious for an operatic career. For some time he studied law and was admitted to the bar but never engaged in active practice. Upon the death of his father he inherited large property interests and in 1890 purchased an extensive tract of land in Yamhill county and began the development of what became in time the finest orchard property in the Willamette valley. Always a close and earnest student, he devoted himself to a minute study of apple culture and the methods evolved by him came to be the standard of scientific apple growing in the state. To him more than to any other individual belongs the credit for the present state of prosperity of the Oregon apple industry.

In November, 1910, Mr. Lownsdale's failing health compelled his retirement from active business and he sold his orchards to an eastern syndicate for two hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars. He did not, however, give up his interest in the theory and science of horticulture. He was a prolific writer and his papers on fruit culture are considered models of their kind and are consulted still as the standard authority. Being an eloquent speaker, he was called upon at different times to address practically every large organization of orchardists in the state and, in fact, throughout the entire American northwest. Thus it may be seen that he had not only a close and detailed knowledge of the scientific aspects of the work in which he was interested but also the rare faculty which his great talents gave him of imparting his knowledge to others in an effective way. He was happy in being able to make practical his years of study and to give to others the fruits of his experience, and thus he made his work widely useful in promoting the wealth, resources and, consequently, the growth and advancement of the great state of Oregon.

In December, 1890, Mr. Lownsdale married Miss Lois Allen, a native of Yamhill and of Oregon. Mr. Lownsdale's death occurred in Portland, July 24, 1911. The Morning Oregonian two days later spoke of him thus:

"To the remaining few—relatively speaking—who were in at Portland's beginnings the name of Lownsdale stands for enterprise, integrity and public spirit. The fortunes of the family were in a measure wrecked some years ago in the shiftings of townsite rights, but were in a great part recovered by the industry and persistence of its representatives. The name will always hold a place of honor in the archives of Portland and through the efforts of the last survivor of the original family of Daniel H. Lowndsdales, who has but now passed away, it will hold an important place in the horticultural development of the Willamette valley.

"Not great men in a political sense; not masters of finance who were able to leave great wealth to their posterity, the Lowndsdales were yet prominent and important factors in the growth of this city and the state. For these things and for other activities embodied in the term 'good citizenship' their name firmly stands. The death of the last of the trio—father and two sons—has caused a sensation of profound regret and touched a cord of tender memory in many hearts."

SAMUEL MORROW, president of the Phoenix Iron Works, of East Portland, was born near Belfast, Ireland, February 26, 1849. His parents were William and Ann (Barkley) Morrow, both of Spanish descent. The ancestors of the Morrow family are traceable back to Spain, whence they removed to Scotland at an early period. The later generations have been born in Ireland, where Mr. Morrow's parents spent their entire lives. William and Ann (Barkley) Morrow were the parents of ten children, five of whom are still living, namely: two sisters who still reside in Ireland; Samuel; James B., of Milford, Delaware; and Mrs. Ann McKeown, of Portland, Oregon.

Samuel Morrow was born in Ireland and remained in that country until the age of seventeen. In June, 1866, he emigrated to America, first settling at Wilmington, Delaware, where he lived until 1881. He there served his apprenticeship as an iron molder, a period covering four years. Removing to Portland, Oregon, he worked at the Willamette Iron Works for four years in that capacity, when he was placed in charge of the Wolff & Swizker Iron Foundry, a position which he held for three years. Subsequently Mr. Morrow and Mr. Wolff, a partner of the former company, organized and incorporated what is now known as the Phoenix Iron Works, situated at Third street and Hawthorne avenue, the foundry being located on the corner of Union avenue and Stevens street. This institution is at present the largest of its kind in point of capacity in East Portland and in their plant are manufactured all kinds of heavy machinery, castings and wrought iron work.

On the 2d of January, 1873, Mr. Morrow was married to Miss Katherine M. Carr, a native of New Jersey and a daughter of William and Susan (Stogdon) Carr, both of whom were born in New Jersey, where they spent their entire lives. Mrs. Morrow is one of a family of nine children, of whom three are still living, those beside Mrs. Morrow being, Mrs. Bennett and Mrs. Crammer, both of New Jersey. Mr. and Mrs. Morrow have become the parents of eleven children. William and Annie both died in infancy. W. Carr, born November 6, 1876, is married and resides in Tacoma, Washington, where he is engaged in the practice of law in partnership with Benjamin Grosscup, of Chicago. Samuel was born August 2, 1878, and died in 1899. James B. was born November 8, 1880, and died on the 2d of December, 1901. Benjamin S., who was born in 1884, is a civil engineer. He is married and resides in Portland. Ann Barkley, who was born in 1885, is still at home. Osborn B., who was born in 1889, is attending Leland Stanford University, of California. Susie S., who was born in 1890, is married to William F. Jones, who is a geologist. Wilbur E., who was born in 1894 is attending high school. Benjamin, who completes the family, died in infancy.

In politics Mr. Morrow is a prohibitionist, and he and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Morrow's present prominent relationship in the manufacturing and business world is due entirely to his lifelong habits of close attention to business, thrift, economy and dependancy. He has thus achieved a well earned reputation for being a reliable business man and is widely known in all circles in Portland. As president of the Phoenix Iron Works he directs the operations of that concern with ability and much skill and under his direction it is doing a large and constantly increasing business.

JONATHAN W. BURKHART, a native of Oregon, has here won a gratifying measure of success as an agriculturist, owning a valuable and well improved farm of one hundred and sixty acres, two miles north of Lebanon. His birth occurred in 1851, his parents being Raymond S. and Eliza (Wassom) Burkhart, the former a native of Knoxville, Tennessee, and the latter of Iowa. Raymond S. Burkhart removed to Iowa at an early date and in 1846 crossed the plains to Oregon, arriving in Linn county in February, 1847, and settling four miles north of Lebanon. He took up a donation land claim of six hundred and forty acres and continued to reside thereon until 1871, when he divided the place among his children and purchased another farm of one hundred and eighty acres, where he spent the remainder of his life. His demise occurred in 1888, while the mother of our subject was called to her final rest in 1861. Raymond Burkhart was twice married and by his first wife had twelve children, three of whom are living, namely: Edwin M., who is a ranchman residing near Albany, Linn county, and who is the father of six children; Adelia F., who makes her home in Duarte, California; and Jonathan W., of this review. Of the children born to Mr. Burkhart and his second wife, four are living, as follows: Almira, the wife of Thomas Donnelly, of California; Laura, a resident of Los Angeles; Arthur, living in Linn county; and Emma, the wife of Walker Lovall, of Bellingham, Washington.

Jonathan W. Burkhart assisted his father in the operation of the home farm until twenty-two years of age and then took charge of the property. He was married in 1875 and remained on the old homestead for four years longer. In 1879, in association with his brother-in-law, he purchased a livery business in Lebanon and was engaged in its conduct for ten years. On the expiration of that period he sold out and bought the farm of one hundred and sixty acres on which he has resided to the present time. The property is two miles north of Lebanon, on the main Albany road. There were some improvements on the place when Mr. Burkhardt took possession, but he has since erected a handsome residence and in many other ways has enhanced the value and attractiveness of the farm. His undertakings as an agriculturist have been attended with success, and in his home community he is known as a substantial and respected citizen. He is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Lebanon.

Jonathan W. Burkhardt has been married twice. His first wife, who bore the maiden name of Sarah Bilyeu, was a native of Missouri and crossed the plains with her parents when quite young. She became the mother of three children, as follows: Maggie, the wife of Fred Weldon, of Portland, Oregon, by whom she has two children; Frances, the wife of O. R. Keebler, a ranchman of Linn county, Oregon, by whom she has two children; and Ruth E., who gave her hand in marriage to A. H. Shaw, of Portland, Oregon. For his second wife Mr. Burkhardt chose Miss Stella K. Fronk, a native of Oregon, and a daughter of John W. and Sarah J. (McKnight) Fronk. John W. Fronk crossed the plains in 1852, and while en route lost his wife, who died of cholera. He afterward married Miss Sarah J. McKnight, by whom he had eight children, namely: Joseph D., who is a resident of Lebanon, Oregon; William, also living at Lebanon; John H., of Seattle, Washington; Ruby, the wife of George W. Wyer, of California; Mrs. Stella Burkhardt; Emma, the wife of B. F. Simonds, of Lebanon, Oregon; Mary E., deceased; and Monna M., the wife of E. E. Parr, of Brownsville, Oregon.

Jonathan W. Burkhardt is a democrat. He has served as a member of the city council in Lebanon and made a creditable record in that connection. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, being a worthy exemplar of the craft. Both he and his wife have spent their entire lives in the Sunset state and are well entitled to representation among its worthy and esteemed residents.

WILLIAM T. STUDLEY operates a hay and grain ranch of five hundred and forty acres, the greater part of which is devoted to the production of crops, which is the property of S. J. Studley, his father. William T. Studley was born on the 27th of January, 1888, and is a son of Silas J. and Mary Jane (Stanley) Studley. His father is a native of Maine and was born in Waldoboro, Lincoln county, on March 17, 1844. His parents were Thomas and Hannah (Gilchrist) Studley, the former of whom was born on the ocean, while his parents were traveling from England to America. The grandmother of our subject was a native of Maine and she and her husband resided in that section until their deaths. Silas J. Studley was educated in the public schools of his native section and for a while worked in the shipyards of Maine. At the age of twenty he made his way to the Shasta valley, California, having traveled by way of the Isthmus of Panama. He spent some time in San Francisco, where he engaged in mining, following this line of occupation later in Yreka. He was engaged in stock-raising in Adin until 1869, when he assisted in driving the first herd of cattle to the Big valley from Yreka. He came to Oregon in 1876, locating on the site of the present town of Lakeview. Here he operated a ranch, which he improved and developed until 1881, when he disposed of this property and purchased land in the same section, upon which he resided until 1909. He was one of the largest property owners in Lakeview, being proprietor of thirteen hundred acres of land in three different tracts, all well improved and productive and engaged extensively in stock-raising and kept a fine herd of graded cattle. On the home place is a fine modern ten-room residence, two good barns and other substantial outbuildings. Silas J. Studley has also a tract planted in orchard in Sonoma county, California, raising fruits of different kinds. On September 11, 1873, he married Miss Mary J. Stanley, a native of Yreka, California, where her birth occurred on June 16, 1855. She is a daughter of William and Johanna Stanley, pioneers in the settlement of Oregon, who crossed the plains with ox teams in 1853. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Silas J. Studley were eight children: Jerome, who died at the age of fifteen years; Harry, who died at the age of twenty-one; Bertha, who passed away at the age of three years; May, who died when eighteen months old; Chester, who is living in Sonoma, California; William T.; Alsy, the wife of E. F. Converse, of Sonoma; and Oscar, who is also living in Sonoma.

William T. Studley was brought up to farm life and the occupation to which he was reared he has chosen to make his chief pursuit. For the past two years he has lived upon his present place, giving his attention to the further development and improvement of the ranch, the condition of which indicates his care in its attractive appearance. He belongs to the Woodmen of the World and he has those substantial qualities which in every land and clime beget confidence and regard. In October, 1908, he was united in marriage to Maude Ross, who was born in Nebraska, on October 6, 1890, and is a daughter of F. L. Ross.

FRED S. WEATHERLY is carrying on general farming and stock-raising on two hundred and sixteen acres of land in Douglas county, Oregon, and his intelligent activity has brought his property to a high state of cultivation and has ranked him among expert breeders of high-grade cattle. Mr. Weatherly is a native son of Oregon and was born on the old Weatherly homestead three miles south of Elkton in Douglas county, March 1, 1869. He is a son of Ansel and Sarah (Davis) Weatherly. His father was born in New York, but subsequently removed with his parents to Illinois and, while still a boy, crossed the plains to Oregon in the Dimmick caravan, landing in this state in 1852. Here he completed his education and grew to manhood. He married in Douglas county and took up a homestead claim, upon which he resided for a number of years. He eventually sold his original property and removed to the donation claim which at one time belonged to Asa Wells, who was his wife's maternal grandfather and one of the early settlers of Oregon. This property is located two miles south of Elkton, and the elder Mr. Weatherly gave his entire time and attention to its scientific cultivation until his death in August, 1889, when he was more than sixty years of age.

Fred Weatherly was reared at home and was educated in the public schools of Douglas county. When he was eighteen years of age he began farming for himself as a renter. He married in 1890 and in the same year bought eighty acres which now form a part of his present holdings. He began the cultivation of his soil and soon had his property highly developed and improved. Two years after his original purchase he bought an adjoining one hundred and thirty-six acres and is now the proprietor of two hundred and sixteen acres of productive farm land in Oregon. Upon this he carries on general farming and specializes in the breeding and raising of high-grade horses and cattle. He is an expert judge of live stock and has gained a reputation in this line of activity.

Mrs. Weatherly was in her maidenhood Miss Esther McCollum, of Kellogg, Douglas county, and a daughter of John B. McCollum, who came from Missouri to Oregon in 1872. Mrs. Weatherly has been an active aid to her husband in his rapidly successful career and has many friends in the district in which she lives. She is a member of the Christian church of Elkton and is active in religious circles. In his political views Mr. Weatherly is a consistent republican but has never sought public office. He belongs to Elkton Lodge, No. 132, I. O. O. F., and is also a member of Elkton Lodge, No. 5786, M. W. A. His career has always been upright and honorable and in its activities he has always been actuated by high standards acquired in his youth. He realizes that the development of his section is directly dependent upon the success of its individual citizens, and he welcomes his personal prosperity as a factor in county and state expansion.

JAMES PHILLIPPE TAMIESIE, M. D. The activities of Dr. James Phillippe Tamiesie cover a wide range, for he is not only a successful physician and surgeon but is also engaged in dairying, is connected with banking and is the owner of valuable real estate. In all business ventures and investments he manifests sound and discriminating judgment and carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes. His worth as a business man and citizen is widely acknowledged in Hillsboro, Washington county, where he has made his home since 1892. He was born in Pottawattamie county, Iowa, November 14, 1861, a son of Jean Batiste Tamiesie, who was a native of Syracuse, New York. The grandfather was one of the French colonists to establish the salt works of Onondaga county, New York, and in early life Jean Batiste Tamiesie became connected with the business of that place but later turned his attention to general agricultural pursuits. After leaving the Empire state when a young man, he removed westward to Iowa, and after residing there for a considerable period, came to Oregon in 1879. Here he took up contracting and farming and purchased a tract of land in Washington county, which he carefully and successfully cultivated up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1910. His wife bore the maiden name of Phillipe Goffette, and was born of French parentage, although her birth occurred across the border in Belgium. By her marriage she became the mother of ten children, eight of whom are living: John Henry, a mechanical engineer of this city; James P.; Marie; Victor J., living in Oregon; Augustus E., who is the first assistant physician in the insane asylum at Salem; George W., a practicing physician of Portland; Katherine, the wife of William Reiling, of Hillsboro; and Joseph, a dentist, now practicing in Portland.

When about six years of age Dr. Tamiesie became a pupil in the public schools of Iowa and after coming to Oregon with his parents, studied at home, using his leisure hours to improve his knowledge. He was trained to habits of industry and economy upon the old homestead and early became familiar with the best methods of tilling the soil. However, he made substantial progress in his studies and when twenty-three years of age began teaching, proving quite capable in that profession. The money acquired through his work in the schoolroom enabled him to continue his own education in 1885, at which time he was matriculated in the Oregon State University, being there graduated from the medical department with the class of 1889. Subsequently he pursued a post-graduate course in Bellevue College Hospital at New York, after which he returned to the northwest and located in Washington, near Spokane, as physician and surgeon for the Northern Pacific Railway Company. For two years he occupied that position and in 1892 came to Hillsboro, where he entered upon the general practice of medicine and surgery. His careful preparation has made him well qualified for the work that he has undertaken and since beginning practice he has continued a close student of the science of medicine and by reading and investigation has kept in touch with the advanced work of the most prominent members of the profession. He has also proven himself a capable business man in other connections and is now operating a dairy farm three miles north of Hillsboro, while in the Big Bend country in Grant county, Washington, he owns two wheat ranches. It was Dr. Tamiesie who organized the first condensed milk factory in the state of Oregon and on the 12th of December, 1903, was made the first can of condensed milk in this state. The business was originally his individual enterprise but later was incorporated and conducted under company management for four years. At the end of that time, owing to the pressure of other business interests, Dr. Tamiesie disposed of his holdings in the factory to good advantage. He is a director in the Shute Savings and American National Bank and is the owner of considerable valuable real estate, including an addition to Hillsboro in the south part of the city called the South Park addition. He also erected and yet owns the Washington Hotel, a three-story structure fifty by one hundred feet, being built of reinforced concrete. The grounds cover a quarter of a block and the hotel is most conveniently arranged for the comfort and welfare of guests. Dr. Tamiesie also owns the block of buildings in which his office is located and his realty holdings are the visible evidence of an active business life in which labor and careful investment have brought substantial and gratifying returns.

In January, 1890, occurred the marriage of Dr. Tamiesie and Miss Ruth A. Wilcox, who was born in Reno, Nevada, a daughter of J. W. and Susanah (Gill) Wilcox, the former a stock-raiser and farmer. Unto the Doctor and his wife have been born two children, Lura Babette and Kenneth Leon. The parents are prominent socially and have an extensive circle of warm friends in Hillsboro, where the hospitality of the best homes is freely accorded them. In his political views Dr. Tamiesie is an earnest republican, believing that the principles of the party are best calculated to conserve the best interests of good government. He is chairman of the school board for the district of Hillsboro, is well known in various fraternal organizations, including the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Artisans, and his religious faith is indicated by his membership in and support of the Congregational church. His has been a well spent and useful life, of worth to his fellowmen as well as to himself, and the talent and ability which he has displayed as a physician and surgeon, are equally balanced by the resourcefulness and capability which he has manifested in the management of industrial and financial interests.

WILLIAM HENRY DRAKE, who is living retired in Silverton, is one of the largest tax payers and most extensive property owners in this section of Marion county. He was born in Ohio on the 6th of April, 1847, and is a son of John M. and Elizabeth (Thompson) Drake, the father a native of Pennsylvania and the mother of Ohio. Both families are of English extraction, the paternal forefathers being direct descendants of Sir Francis Drake. Mr. and Mrs. Drake were married in Ohio, in 1846, and to them were born the following children, of whom our subject is the eldest: John T., of Markham.

Oregon; Charles W., deceased; one, who died in infancy; Emma J., the widow of Alexander Ross, of Portland; Francis, who is also deceased; and Ellie J., the widow of Roscoe Langley.

As he was only a child of five years when he accompanied his parents on their removal to Oregon, practically the entire life of William Henry Drake has been passed in this state. The journey from Ohio to St. Joseph, Missouri, was made by water and from there the family crossed the plains with wagon and ox teams. They arrived in The Dalles too late in the autumn to cross the mountains, so they went down the river below the Cascades and finally reached Oregon City in the early winter. That first year they encountered all of the hardships and privations incident to pioneering, not only finding it difficult to provide feed and shelter for their stock, but having a desperately hard struggle at times to procure food for themselves. In the spring the father filed on a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres in the southern part of Clackamas county, a portion of which is now the property of John T. Drake, a brother of our subject. Here William Henry Drake was reared to manhood and was given the rudiments of a common-school education. When he was seventeen he left home to become a wage earner and during the first year engaged at any work that came to hand. At the expiration of that period he apprenticed himself to the blacksmith's trade, following this occupation for twenty-five years. In 1890, he disposed of his business and invested in a ranch, beginning with a tract of one hundred and twenty acres. Later he increased his holdings by addition of another one hundred and sixty acres and he subsequently bought another tract of two hundred and forty acres. His home is located on a twelve-acre tract in Silverton, and all the remainder of his property adjoins this. For fifteen years he was successfully engaged in the cultivation of his land, but in 1905 he withdrew from agricultural pursuits and is now renting his property, with the exception of the twelve acres which comprise the home place.

For his wife and helpmate, Mr. Drake chose Miss Lavina H. Small, a native of Indiana and a daughter of Isaac and Esther Ann (Campbell) Small. The parents of Mrs. William H. Drake were natives of Ohio and were married in Indiana, where the father followed farming. In 1854 they came to Oregon, settling in Marion county, where Isaac Small continued in his former occupation until he removed to Silverton, where he engaged in carpenter work in later years. Both parents passed away in Marion county. Of nine children born to them, seven are now living, namely: Ellwood, Mrs. Drake, Calvin, Sarah Woolford, Isaac, Ada Mathais and Hettie. William H. Drake has been a member of the Masonic fraternity since 1875, and his father was likewise affiliated with this order, having been a charter member of Multnomah Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., of Oregon City. Mr. Drake is also identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

MR. AND MRS. W. H. DRAKE

His political support is given to the republican party and he has always taken an active interest in municipal affairs. He assisted in incorporating the city and had the distinction of being a member of the first council. Progressive and enterprising in his ideas with high standards of citizenship, he has made many staunch friends here during the long period of his residence in Marion county, and is accorded the esteem and respect that is always paid to men of integrity and good principles.

HON. ARCHIE J. JOHNSON. "Thrift of time," said William E. Gladstone, "will repay you in after life with a usury of profit beyond your most sanguine dreams, and waste of it will make you dwindle alike in intellectual and moral stature beyond your darkest reckoning." This statement finds verification in the record of Archie J. Johnson, who in all of his life seems to have improved every opportunity that has presented itself nor wasted a moment that might be advantageously used. He has displayed both initiative spirit and a genius for organization and, never fearing to venture where favoring opportunity led the way, has reached a commanding position among the citizens of Benton county. One interest alone does not indicate the scope of his activities, for his efforts have extended to many lines, covering agricultural, commercial, industrial and financial interests, and aside from all these fields, in which his labors have brought him profit, he has put forth effective efforts for the benefit and upbuilding of his city and state and, both as public official and private citizen, has cooperated largely and generously where the general welfare of the community has been involved. He has held the highest positions in the gift of his city and county and in each instance has fully justified the confidence reposed in him by his fellow citizens.

One of Oregon's native sons, he was born in Marion county, three miles northwest of Jefferson, on the 18th of September, 1867, a son and a grandson of pioneers. His paternal grandfather, Hiram Alvah Johnson, was born in St. Lawrence county, New York, February 18, 1819, and in early life removed to the middle west, making his home in Illinois until 1847. In that year he joined those sturdy men who turned their faces toward the great northwest, determined to seek homes and fortunes in the wild and uncultivated territory which held out rich promises to the ambitious and resolute. Crossing the plains with ox teams, he made his way to Marion county, Oregon, taking up a donation claim near Jefferson, consisting of six hundred and forty acres. The succeeding twenty-eight years were passed by him either on that farm or as a resident of the town of Jefferson, carrying on general merchandising in that city for six years. At the expiration of that period he removed to Salem, and that remained his place of residence until the time of his death, in February, 1896, when he was seventy-seven years of age. His wife passed away two years later. He gave his political support to the republican party and for twelve years served as justice of the peace at Salem, while his religious faith was that of the Christian church. In his family were eight children of whom seven grew to maturity while six, five sons and one daughter, are living.

John Charles Johnson, the son of Hiram Johnson and the father of our subject, was born while his parents were residing in Illinois, his birth occurring on May 29, 1842. After the family home was established in Oregon he continued on his father's farm until 1869, in which year he purchased a tract of one thousand acres located three miles north of Seio, in Linn county, and there began business on his own account, engaging in farming and stock-raising and meeting with excellent success. His time was thus occupied until the year 1874, when he entered the general mercantile business in Seio in partnership with J. J. Brown, this relationship maintaining for one year. Later the firm of Johnson Brothers was established, but at the end of four years John C. Johnson sold his interest and for two years lived retired, after which he again entered the business world as a partner of Riley Shelton. After four years thus spent he once more retired, but at the end of another four years, in 1889, joined his son Archie J., with whom he operated for one year. Selling his interests at the expiration of that time to Ross E. Hibler, he removed to Salem in the fall of 1890, where he still maintains his residence. In 1864 he married Miss Violetta Gunsauls, who was born in Indiana in 1844, a daughter of Manuel Gunsauls, who was a native of Pennsylvania, whence he later moved to Ohio. At the age of fifteen years he took up his residence in Illinois, which remained his home until the year 1851, when he crossed the plains with his family, locating about a mile and a half east of Jefferson, in Marion county, Oregon. There he secured a donation claim upon which he spent his remaining years, his death occurring in 1878, when he was sixty-four years of age.

To Mr. and Mrs. John C. Johnson seven children were born, and of the five who survive Archie J., of this review, was the second in order of birth. His preliminary education was received in the common schools, and after completing the course therein taught, he entered the Portland Business College, in the fall of 1885. He was a particularly apt student, his record in that institution being remarkable, as he completed the course in less time than had any preceding pupil. He had early displayed marked business ability, having at the age of fourteen years become clerk in a general store at Seio, performing the duties of that position in connection with the acquirement of his education. At the age of sixteen years he entered the employ of Johnson & Shelton in the capacity of bookkeeper and head salesman, and ably and faithfully served the interests of that firm until the year 1887, when he became time keeper for the Oregon

Pacific Railway Company, but withdrew from that connection to identify himself with mercantile pursuits in Scio. In the spring of 1888, he went to Seattle, Washington, and there engaged in the real-estate business during the succeeding year and a half, after which he returned to Scio and joined his father in the operation of a general mercantile store. Later he continued in the same line of business in partnership with Mr. Hibler and in 1891 sold his interest, removing, in January of the following year, to Salem. That city remained his home until November of that year, when he once more returned to Scio and in connection with T. J. Munkers purchased the controlling interest in the bank of Scio, assuming the duties of cashier and manager. Two years later he bought out his partner's interest in the bank, becoming its president, his brother, C. V. Johnson, accepting the position as cashier in 1896. A. J. Johnson remained at the head of that institution until the fall of 1900, and in the meantime, in 1895, had purchased a half interest in a flour mill located at Scio, in connection with the operation of which he built up, during the ensuing five years, a large export business in flour. In 1906 he disposed of both industrial and financial interests and bought forty-one hundred and sixty acres of land lying in Benton and Polk counties, upon which, in connection with his brother, C. V. Johnson, and his brother-in-law, J. C. Simpson, he engaged on a large scale in the stock-raising business. He made a specialty of registered stock, including short-horn and Hereford cattle and other high grades of cattle, sheep and goats, and in this line of activity was extremely successful. He also branched out along other lines, in partnership with Ross E. Hibler engaging extensively in buying wools and mohairs throughout the Willamette valley. In 1900 he was appointed national bank examiner for the northwest district, including the states of Oregon, Washington, Montana, Idaho, and Wyoming, but the latter state was detached from his district on the first of April, 1902. In 1906 he resigned this position in order to devote his entire time and attention to the organization of a national bank at Corvallis. He erected the beautiful building which is now the home of the bank and on July, 1907, the Benton County National Bank opened its doors for business. Throughout the intervening five years the growth of that enterprise has been remarkable, the volume of its business having in the meantime reached the six hundred thousand dollar mark. Its capital and surplus amount to seventy-five thousand dollars and its officers are: A. J. Johnson, president; J. F. Yates, vice president; and Floyd E. Bogue and John F. Porter, assistant cashiers. It is one of the strong and substantial moneyed institutions of this part of Oregon, its safe, conservative policy and the character of its personnel having begotten the confidence and trust of the general public, and as its head A. J. Johnson occupies a foremost position in financial circles in Benton county. In addition to his banking interests he has heavy real-estate investments in Oregon and Washington. He has platted a number of additions to the city of Seattle, and his holdings in this state include property in Portland, Salem and in Benton county. He is still interested in agricultural enterprises, being one of the organizers and a director of the Oregon Apple Company of Benton county, which is developing about one thousand acres in the southern part of the county, and he continues to indulge his fancy for high-grade stock, keeping a fine herd of registered Jersey cattle and Hampshire Down sheep on his farm north of Corvallis.

In January, 1888, Mr. Johnson was united in marriage to Miss Linnie Young, who was born in Minnesota and came to Oregon in 1875 with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Young. The mother is now deceased but the father survives at the age of eighty-four years, making his home at Scio. To Mr and Mrs. Johnson have been born six children, namely: Cleo, the wife of J. F. Porter, assistant cashier of the Benton County National Bank; Zeta; Elmo E.; Darrel D.; Orlo O.; and Wanda. In 1903 Mr. Johnson took up his abode in Corvallis, where he has since resided, and at present is erecting a new home on the corner of Ninth and Harrison streets, which is one of the finest in the city.

Although the business interests of Archie J. Johnson have been extensive and varied, they have been but one phase in his career, for he has never permitted them to exclude his active participation in other matters which are vital influences in the life of any community. His fraternal relations are with the Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America, his membership in the former being in the subordinate lodge, the encampment and Rebekah lodge, with which he has been identified for many years. He belongs to the First Presbyterian church and for many years served as a member of its board of trustees, of which he is also chairman. He was also chairman of the building committee which erected the beautiful church edifice here at a cost of thirty thousand dollars. Although since 1910 he has retired from public life, in former years Mr. Johnson has been one of the most potent forces in the politics of the state, serving on various important committees and organizing and supporting many needed reforms and improvements. He is a staunch republican and his party has awarded him with many positions of honor and trust. He served as councilman of Scio for two terms, and for one term as mayor of that town. He was school director there for two terms, and was chairman of the board of education when the Scio school building was erected, being one of the promoters of that project. In June, 1894, he was elected to the state senate from Linn county and served for four years, during which period he came into prominence in Oregon as one of the potent forces in state affairs. In 1897 he was the promoter of the bill to tax foreign companies when operating within the limits of the state, but the bill was not brought up for consideration, owing to the failure to organize the house throughout the entire session. He was a member of the state central committee, for a number of years, and also of the county central committee and in recognition of his great public spirit and sound judgment was called to serve on numerous important committees. After taking up his home in Corvallis he was elected to the city council and in 1905 was the people's choice for mayor, serving in that capacity for two years. He declined a second term, however, in order to again take up the duties of state senator, having been elected to represent Benton county in 1906. During his four years of service in that office he was instrumental in furthering the interests of his county and city in a large measure. Chief among his labors was the fight which he made for an improved municipal water system, whereby the city was supplied with pure mountain water, where formerly the supply had been drawn from the river. This not only proved the best investment the city has ever made but has been the means of saving a large amount of money as well. He was the father of the famous "Johnson Good Roads" bill, which was of utmost importance in bringing about better road facilities and communications. In fact, matters of local interest find a warm friend in Mr. Johnson, who as an active member and former president of the Commercial Club of Corvallis assisted in bringing to the city many industries and has fostered the growth of many helpful lines of activity. He has been a member of the state board of agriculture for several years and was its president for one year, his interest in agricultural affairs remaining a matter of keen interest to him. A man of evenly balanced character, it would be difficult to point out any one characteristic as his most pronounced trait, for he stands today as a splendid representative of the successful business man and financier, as well as efficient and faithful public servant, while the principles which govern his private life have ever been such as to command only the highest regard and the unqualified esteem and confidence of his fellowmen.

SAMUEL M. OLSEN, who successfully operates forty-two acres in Coos county, Oregon, five miles from Coquille, southwest on the Foothill road, where he is active as a general farmer, dairyman and stock-raiser, was born in Norway in 1868 and is a son of Ole and Maggie Olsen, natives of Norway. In their family were seven children: Carrie and Gertrude, both of whom reside in Norway; a child, who died in infancy; Samuel M., of this review; Ole, of Denver, Colorado; Oli, deceased; and Tillie, the wife of Charles Bondelee, of San Francisco, California.

Samuel M. Olsen attended the public schools of Norway and pursued his education until he was sixteen years of age. During the last two years of his school life he spent his spare time in working upon neighboring farms. His father sold the family homestead in Norway but after two years rented another tract of land which he improved and operated for some time. Mr. Olsen returned home and worked for his father until he was seventeen years of age and then worked as a laborer for a year. When he was eighteen he crossed the Atlantic to America, settling in Minnesota. He worked out upon the farms of that state for three years, going at the end of that time to Coos county near Marshfield, where for five years he was engaged as an assistant in a sawmill. He then labored in the harvest fields in eastern Oregon for one year, returning to Coos county at the expiration of that time. He took up a homestead claim near Myrtle Point, which he operated along modern and progressive lines for six years. He then purchased his present farm near Coquille, comprising forty-two acres of unimproved land. Upon this he built his home and has carried on the work of improvement and cultivation successfully since that time. The prosperous condition of his farm is entirely the result of his own labors and exertions. It is one of the model farms in the district and has been developed from wild and uncultivated land. He specializes in dairying, keeping a herd of fourteen cows for this purpose, and has gained success in this line.

On January 7, 1898, Mr. Olsen was united in marriage to Miss Mary Shields, a native of Washington and a daughter of Calvin and Lavinia (Rice) Shields, residents of that state. Mrs. Olsen is one of a family of twelve children, namely: Sylvester and John, of Bandon; Ida, deceased; Jessie, who married Frank Christie, of Washington; Mary, the wife of our subject; Hattie, now Mrs. Ernest Everden, of Bancroft, Oregon; Stella and Eugene, residents of Bandon; Myrtle, who is the wife of Hayden Jackson, of Bandon, by whom she has three children; Benjamin, who is married and resides in Bandon; Daisy, whose home is also in Bandon; and Rosa, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Olsen are the parents of four children: Elmer, who was born January 3, 1899, and who is attending school; Edna, who was born August 21, 1900, and who is also a student in the public schools; Lavinia, born April 16, 1903; and Myrtle, born October 20, 1906.

Mr. Olsen is a republican in his political beliefs but has never sought public office, preferring to devote his attention to the duties incident to the management of his farm. The success which he enjoys is entirely the result of his well directed labor along progressive lines, aided by personal experience in the details of agriculture, and it has demonstrated that in farming, as in other business or professional life, efficiency and system are a sure basis of prosperity.

HENRY S. TILTON has been engaged in stock-raising five miles south of Dexter, Lane county, where he owns a stock ranch of three hundred and twenty acres, for thirty-six years. He does not reside on his land, however, but rents a house about one mile from town, where he makes his home. He was born in Wabash county, Illinois, on the 16th of September, 1851, and is a son of Richard and Mary Jane (Moore) Tilton. The father was a native of New Jersey and the mother of Illinois, and they were married in the latter state and there they both passed away, the mother in April, 1855, and the father in 1892. Richard Tilton, who was a cripple, was a shoemaker and continued to follow that trade during his active life. From his earnings he managed to acquire the means to buy a farm, which was operated by his sons, as, owing to his affliction, he was not able to engage in agricultural pursuits. Before the James Moore family, the maternal grandparents of our subject, started across the plains in 1832, Mr. Tilton fitted them out with a supply of shoes and he did likewise for a number of other early pioneers. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Tilton, of whom our subject is the only one now living.

Henry S. Tilton was reared at home and educated in the common schools. At the age of twenty-one years he left the parental roof and started out to make his own living. He had been trained to agricultural pursuits and obtained work as a farm hand, an occupation which he followed in Illinois for three years, and at the end of that period, in 1875, he crossed the plains to Oregon. Upon his arrival he located in Lane county and immediately filed on one hundred and sixty acres of land. Long years he devoted to stock-raising and he now owns one of the valuable stock ranches of that section, a part of which is still in timber, which would make about four million feet of lumber. Mrs. Tilton owns a quarter section adjoining their homestead.

In Lane county, in May, 1877, Mr. Tilton was united in marriage to Miss Millie Briggs, daughter of John A. and Sara J. (Veatch) Briggs, who crossed the plains to Oregon with an ox team in 1852. The father was accidentally drowned in Douglas county, this state, when Mrs. Tilton was a child of two years, and the mother subsequently married Levi Harper. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Briggs, as follows: A. J., who is a resident of Walker station, Lane county; Mrs. Tilton; and Emma, who married J. A. Horn, of Pendleton. To Mr. and Mrs. Harper were born four children: Agnes, Homer and Alice, all of whom are deceased; and Mand, the wife of R. L. Edwards, of Trent, Oregon. Mr. Harper passed away in 1894, and his widow, who is now seventy-one, makes her home in Trent. Mr. and Mrs. Tilton have had seven children: May B., who was born September 27, 1879, and died at the age of two years; Ollie, whose birth occurred in April, 1881, the wife of J. A. Hills, of Lowell, Oregon; Asa, who was born on March 4, 1883, and is now married and living on his father's ranch; Etta M., born on the 15th of July, 1886, the wife of Albert Higgins, of Trent; Lena, who was born in 1900; Earl E., whose natal day was March 4, 1906; and Walter who was accidentally killed at the age of nine years. The older members of the family were given the advantages of a common-school education and the younger ones are now students of the public schools.

The family affiliate with the Christian church, and Mr. Tilton votes the republican ticket. He is one of the oldest inhabitants of his community as regards length of residence and is highly esteemed and respected by all who know him, as he is a man possessed of many excellent qualities.

BENJAMIN F. LOONEY, a representative of one of the pioneer families of Oregon, was born in Bates county, Missouri, June 7, 1842, his parents being Jesse and Ruby (Bond) Looney, both natives of the southern states, the former's birth having occurred near Knoxville, Tennessee, and the latter's in Kentucky, in the vicinity of Covington, her natal day being March 18, 1808. They were married in Alabama March 16, 1827. Jesse Looney was a cousin of Andrew Johnson, and like him inherited slavery as one of the local conditions of his section but adopted freedom as his conviction of right. His father left him land and negroes, but he had imbibed a dislike for that life and resolved to take and rear his family in a free territory, thus increasing the number of pioneers who left slavery behind to come to Oregon. Mrs. Looney was descended from Revolutionary stock, and was related to George Walton, the first governor of Georgia and a signer of the Declaration of Independence and the Articles of Confederation, and so the family had noted connection with our nation's history. In 1843 they crossed the plains with their family, consisting then of six children, in company with John P. Gaines, Daniel Waldo and the Applegates. They were exceptionally well equipped for the long and arduous journey, having two great wagons with five yoke of immense oxen to each and spare oxen to alternate. They also brought with them twenty head of choice cows and four fine mares. Their provisions were likewise abundant, and they were afforded the pleasure of relieving many of the less fortunate whom they met on the plains and, after that gratification, a supply remained after their new home was reached. Their journey therefore was divested of many of the hardships and privations experienced by the ordinary pioneer, seeking a home in the land of the golden sunset. Upon reaching the great and unexplored northwest they journeyed on to the fertile valley of the Columbia, and it being then late in the season, they determined to winter at Whitman Station on the Walla Walla. Here the Indians proved troublesome, and in the spring of the following year they removed to Willamette valley. Mr. Looney at first took a piece of land near Salem but later disposed of it and went to Santiam bottoms, where he secured a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres on Looney's Butte. For two years he and his family were the only settlers here for a radius of twenty miles. In addition to this donation claim Mr. Looney accumulated several thousand acres more in the valley. From an uncultivated prairie this land has been developed and improved until it is transformed into one of the most productive and attractive properties in this section of the country.

BENJAMIN F. LOONEY

every acre of it being now under cultivation. Men reared in comfortable homes, accustomed to all the conveniences and privileges of city life, can hardly conceive the struggles and dangers which attended the early settler upon the borders of civilization. These men and women must have possessed indomitable energies and sterling worth of character as well as marked physical courage, and to them praise and honor should be given, for the mighty states of the west with their improvements and enterprises, are monuments to their memory. Mr. Looney contributed no small part in the development and upbuilding of the state of his adoption, and his life was, indeed, an active and well spent one. He took a prominent part in the organization of Oregon and served as a member of the provisional legislature. He prospered to the extent that at his death he was able to leave to each of his ten children a farm near the old homestead, but his last words to his sons and daughters before passing to the world beyond—"Do right, be honorable and truthful," were a priceless legacy in themselves. They bespoke the caliber of the husband and father, and left a lasting impression upon the minds of the young folks at his bedside, giving birth to an ambition and determination to do honor to the father and the trust. He passed away at Salem, March 25, 1869, at the age of sixty-nine years. Mrs. Looney long survived her husband, she having departed this life May 7, 1900, at the ripe and cheerful old age of ninety-two years. She was one of the most remarkable, enterprising and widely known women in western Oregon. Her strong lines of character were a pillar of strength to all her descendants, and she has commanded the honor and admiration of all who knew her from the days of 1843, when she with her husband and little children came to make her home in the uncivilized wilderness of the Pacific coast, to the day she passed away in dreamless sleep amid the circle of her loved ones. She lived to see the conversion of that unsettled wilderness into one of the populous and prosperous states of the Union. They were the parents of fourteen children, eight of whom are now living: J. B., of Jefferson; Ellen, the widow of A. Gaines, of Vancouver; Benjamin F., Pauline, of Jefferson; David H. and Norris F., both of Jefferson, the latter superintendent of the State Reform school; Frances, the widow of Wilber Cornell; and Addie B., who married G. A. Fairbanks of Petaluma, California.

Benjamin F. Looney was an infant of but one year when brought by his parents across the great American desert. His boyhood and youth were spent under the parental roof and he acquired his education in Eugene, Albany and Salem, and later completed a course in Willamette University and also attended the university at Eugene. After securing a good education as a foundation for life's activities he devoted several years to travel through eastern Oregon and Idaho, occupying his time and attention with mining. Subsequently he returned to the home farm and until 1902 engaged in agricultural pursuits and stock-raising on part of the old donation claim. In that year he removed to Jefferson, where he has since lived retired.

In 1878 was solemnized the marriage of Benjamin F. Looney and Miss Josephine Deardorf, a native of Douglas county, Oregon, and a daughter of W. H. B. and Georgia Anna Deardorf, both of whom were numbered among Oregon's pioneers of 1849, and resided in Jefferson until their deaths. To Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin F. Looney have been born three children, two sons and a daughter: Deman D., who is residing in Spokane, Washington, and engaged in the engraving business; Everett F., a leading druggist of Sheridan, Oregon; and Georgia Anna B., who became the wife of William Smith, postmaster of Jefferson and a prominent merchant of that town.

Mr. Looney gives his political allegiance to the republican party. He has never been a politician in the sense of the office seeker but gives at all times his firm support to his party, because he recognizes the fact that it is the duty as well as the privilege of every true American citizen to support the principles in which he believes. He has found in his busy life no time to affiliate with lodge or church, preferring rather to spend with his family whatever leisure his activities allowed. Idleness and indolence were ever foreign to his nature and he now enjoys a well merited rest as a reward of his former toils. Many changes have been wrought by time and man during Mr. Looney's long residence here, and his memory forms a connecting link between the primitive past with all its hardships and privations, and the progressive present with its advantages and opportunities.

VALENTINE BROWN, attorney at law of Portland, his native city, was born November 10, 1862, his parents being Valentine and Maria Ann (Heaney) Brown. The father was a native of Vermont, while the mother was born in New York city and was of Irish parentage. When Valentine Brown, Sr., was quite young he removed westward to Wisconsin, where he engaged in the lumber business. He took up the land that now constitutes the site of Stevens Point and owned that property for a time but later traded it for stock in a railroad, which afterward failed, so that he lost all. In 1857 he arrived in Oregon, via Panama, settling on the east side of the river at Portland. At that time his capital consisted of about twenty thousand dollars, which he invested largely in land. Afterward he sold this land and made investment in a mining venture in Curry county, which did not prove profitable, so that he again lost everything. He was in such straitened financial circumstances that he had to walk back to Portland, but through all these reverses his business integrity was unassailable and his courage unflinching. Even in the face of such disasters he never allowed his industry to falter and upon his return to Portland, he began operating the ferry for Samuel Douglas, continuing that work to the time of his demise.

His son and namesake, Valentine Brown, Jr., pursued his education in the public schools and in Bishop Scott school. He afterward went to sea, spending four years as a sailor and later became a postal clerk, in which position he likewise continued for four years. A similar period was then devoted to the real-estate business but in the meantime he had determined to enter upon the practice of law and with this end in view pursued a course in the law department of the University of Oregon, from which he was graduated with the class of 1892. In the same year he turned his attention to the abstract business, in which he continued until about two years ago. He is now devoting his energies largely to the practice of law but all through his life he has engaged largely in literary work. His poetic talent has found expression in the writing of four volumes of verse, containing a total of about ten thousand lines. In 1900 he brought from the press a volume of his poems, and again in 1902, Armageddon, his most pretentious work was issued. In a review of the latter the Critic of New York said that the work evidenced a close reading of Ovid's Metamorphosis but Mr. Brown had never read that book. Byron and Shelley are about the only poets with which he is acquainted, his poetic genius being an inherent talent. In 1903 he brought forth another volume called the Chieftain and Satires. In 1905 he published his first written poems, under the title of Tales and Verse. Some years ago he took up typesetting and in his leisure hours set all the type for his works, which are an excellent specimen of the printer's art as well as of poetic ability. His second volume was composed at the ease as he set type. This necessitated much resetting, for, like all writers, second thought called for many revisions. Most of his poems are too long for a sketch of this character but the following gives an indication of his ability.

Is This Life A Dream?

"Is this earthly life a dream?
But a dream?
Is that mystic soul of ours
Wandering by the banks and bowers
Like a stream—but a dream?

"Will it like a river flow Soft and low?
Till it finds a soothing deep,
There to sleep—ever sleep—
Never in its home to know
Weal or woe?

"Ah, this life is not a dream:
Not a dream;
Though the soul will darkness meet.
And the heart's last feeble beat Ends the theme.

"Ah, this earthly life is real,
Truly real;
Building by incessant strife
Fairer life—purer life.
Slowly building on the earth Lasting worth.

"Earthly Aiden's sapphire towers
Are not ours;
Heaven's dominion strewn with flowers
May be ours, sweetly ours;
Yet on earth some future time
Will arise a life sublime,
And the palaces to be Men will see."

Mr. Brown was married in 1889 to Miss Jennie M. Ham, a daughter of Isaac Ham, a Portland pioneer. They have three children, Valentine, Helen M. and Zenas Shelley.

WILLIAM L. WALLACE, an agriculturist residing two and a half miles north of Lebanon, on the Albany road, is successfully engaged in the operation of a farm comprising three hundred and seventy acres and belonging to his brother, Dr. J. P. Wallace, in addition to his own valley farm. His birth occurred in Tennessee in the year 1856, his parents being Brice and Nancy (Hall) Wallace, likewise natives of that state. The father, retiring from active business life, came to Linn county, Oregon, and was here elected county treasurer, serving in that capacity for two years. He has since resided at Albany with his daughter, Mrs. A. B. Marshall, and is now eighty-six years of age. His wife was called to her final rest in 1887. To them were born eleven children, three of whom are deceased. The living members of the family are: J. P., a practicing physician of Albany, Oregon; S. O., who is a resident of Lebanon, this state; F. E., an agriculturist residing at Lebanon; R. R., living in Astoria, Oregon; William L., of this review; Janie, who is the wife of J. V. Keebler, of Lebanon, Oregon; Mattie, who gave her hand in marriage to A. B. Marshall, of Albany, Oregon; and Bertha, who is the widow of William Hawkins and resides in Portland, this state.

William L. Wallace spent the first twenty years of his life on the home farm in Tennessee. In 1877 the family home was established in Linn county, Oregon, and here he leased a farm of three hundred and twenty acres, operating the same successfully for five years. On the expiration of that period he was married and leased another farm near Albany, the cultivation of which claimed his time and attention for sixteen years. He then leased a place of three hundred and seventy acres from his brother, Dr. Wallace, of Albany, and has been busily engaged in its operation to the present time. Three hundred and twenty-five acres of the land is under cultivation. Mr. Wallace owns twenty-five acres of bottom land in Linn county and a small tract in Clackamas county. He also owns stock and implements, has an interest in a threshing machine and well deserves recognition among the substantial and representative agriculturists of his community.

In 1882 Mr. Wallace was united in marriage to Miss Alice Gentry, a native of Tennessee and a daughter of John and Josephine (Burk) Gentry. Mrs. Wallace was one of a family of five children, the others being as follows: Alvis, who is a resident of Portland, Oregon; Lindsey, living in Knoxville, Tennessee; and two who have passed away. Our subject and his wife have three children. Pearl, who is a graduate of the Portland Business College, was employed for a time as a bookkeeper and also followed the profession of school teaching. She is now the wife of George L. Washburn, of Portland, and has one child. Robert W. is still under the parental roof. Eva, also yet at home, is pursuing a special course in music at the conservatory of music at Albany College. She possesses a remarkable voice and expects to complete her musical education abroad.

Mr. Wallace gives his political allegiance to the democratic party and has served as road supervisor in his district for twelve years. He has also been a member of the election board for eight years and has acted as school director for a period of twelve years. His public duties have ever been discharged in a highly commendable manner and, though not an office seeker, his fellow townsmen have recognized his worth and chosen him for positions of trust. His religious faith is that of the Baptist church, while fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. The period of his residence in Linn county and the Sunset state covers more than a third of a century and he enjoys an extensive and favorable acquaintance here.

ORLANDO A. KELLY is living retired in Riverton, Oregon, where he has resided since 1888 and is taking a well earned rest after labors, which have constantly benefited the community in which he lives. He was the first postmaster of the village and conducted the first hotel within its borders, gaining success in both lines of occupation, by reason of his business ability and his straightforward methods. He is now serving as justice of the peace and notary public which office he has held for twenty-one years. Mr. Kelly has been a resident of Oregon for almost twenty-six years but is a native of Illinois, his birth having occurred in McHenry county, in 1856. His parents were William C. and Mary (Klink) Kelly, natives of Ohio and Indiana, respectively, the father having been born in 1816 and the mother in 1820. On the paternal side Mr. Kelly is of Irish and Scotch stock, his grandfather having been a native of the Emerald isle. His grandmother was of Scotch ancestry and a descendant of Lord William Wallace, the noted Scotch pirate. His mother was of Dutch descent and her father commanded the American forces at the time the city of Buffalo was burned by the British. He and his two brothers came over from Holland and settled in New York state, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Mr. and Mrs. William C. Kelly had seven children: David, Wallace, Phoebe and John, all of whom have passed away; Joseph, who is living retired in Yuba county, California; Orlando, a twin to Joseph and the subject of this sketch; and Fernando, who is teaching in the district schools near Berkeley, California.

Orlando Kelly was educated in the public schools of Illinois and later attended Lombard University at Galesburg, Illinois, from which institution he was graduated in 1873. His father was a farmer and Mr. Kelly's childhood was spent amid agricultural scenes. He, however, never followed this line of occupation, engaging in school teaching immediately after his graduation. He was active in this profession in Illinois, Kansas, California, and Oregon, abandoning it in 1893 and coming to Chicago, Illinois, where he remained only a short time. He had accumulated some property in Kansas, which he sold in the same year and came to Coos county where he invested in land. He owned the first residence in the town of Riverton and is still proprietor of this house and also the lot upon which it stands, although he has sold all his other interests in Coos county. He was the first postmaster of Riverton and held this position for seven years, doing able and practical work during that time. For six years he conducted a hotel, which was the first enterprise of its kind in the village and which he conducted successfully until 1912. He has now retired from active life, although he still performs his duties as notary public and justice of the peace, having served for fourteen and twenty-one years, respectively.

Mr. Kelly has been twice married. His first union was with Miss Rosia R. Lee, a native of Kansas, and they became the parents of one son, Walter, who was born in 1880 and passed away when he was twenty-nine years of age. Mr. Kelly's second wife was Miss Cornelia J. Burns, a native of Atlanta, Georgia. She lived in that city until she was fifteen years of age and then moved to Birmingham, Alabama, coming to Oregon after her marriage, which occurred on November 2, 1907. She is one of a family of eight children, the others being: Josephine, the wife of J. H. Castle, of New Orleans, by whom she has three children: Robert A. of Birmingham, Alabama; Mamie and Cora, both of whom have passed away; Jessie, who married M. J. Chambers of Atlanta, Georgia, by whom she has four children; and Joseph and Henry, both deceased.

Mr. Kelly gave his allegiance for a number of years to the republican party but is now independent in his political views, preferring to keep his judgment unbiased. He votes according to personal convictions for the man, regardless of his party. He is a member of the Masonic order and his wife belongs to the Eastern Star. He has been a well known figure in political and business circles of Riverton and has served his village in many ways during the twenty-two years of his residence. By his ability and straightforward methods and by the intelligent management of his hotel interests he has promoted the commercial progress of Riverton and has gained distinct and substantial success, enabling him to rest from his labors in the enjoyment of a comfortable competence. In the more public aspects of his life he is distinguished by the same honesty, integrity and practical principles which made his business career so successful and which have won him the respect and esteem of his many friends.

ELIJAH D. MYERS is numbered among the worthy and representative citizens of Coos county. He owns and operates a property consisting of many acres of productive land and has done constructive work in wresting from a wilderness the farm which he cultivates and which constitutes in its abundant fertility a valuable asset in the resources of this district. Mr. Myers is a native of Carter county, Tennessee, where his birth occurred February 11, 1854. His parents, Chris and Phoebe (Hardin) Myers, were also natives of that state. Mr. Myers' father was twice married. His first union was with Miss Omie Randles, a native of Virginia, by whom he had four children, two of whom, Allen, of North Carolina, and Mary, of Tennessee, are still living. Mr. Myers' second marriage was with the mother of our subject, and to this union six children were born: Elijah D., the subject of this review; Murray, operating the old home farm in the eastern part of Tennessee; Joseph who makes his home in Kansas; Chris, who resides in Tennessee; and two children who died in infancy. Mrs. Myers was at the time of her marriage to the father of our subject, the widow of Benjamin Treadway, by whom she had three children: Ma-linda and John, both of whom are deceased; and Jane, who is living in the eastern part of Tennessee.

Elijah D. Myers was reared at home and educated in the public schools of Tennessee. From his early boyhood he worked upon his father's plantation and gained a detailed knowledge of the general principles of agriculture. He remained with his parents until he was twenty-two years of age when he married and rented a small farm in his native state which he operated with much success for one year. At the end of that time he rented from his father the home plantation and in three years brought it to a highly developed and productive state. At the expiration of that time he came direct to Coos county where he worked as a wood cutter in the employ of others for a short time. He later engaged in various duties in a logging camp in Coos county and subsequently purchased a half interest in the business. Through unfavorable conditions and by reason of peculiar financial circumstances his business venture was unsuccessful and Mr. Myers lost his entire fortune in its failure. He had borrowed money with which to buy his partnership and was left penniless and heavily in debt. His partner was dishonest and fled from the country, leaving Mr. Myers to settle as best as he could the obligations incurred. The high-minded qualities of his character showed themselves at this juncture. With no money and encumbered by a debt of one thousand dollars he quietly occupied himself with any line of activity in which he could secure employment. He worked night and day and spent practically nothing beyond the most necessary expenses. By dint of unremitting industry and unwavering energy he gradually paid off his debt and was once more able to face the world unhampered. He took up a claim in Coos county covered with red cedar and started a small business in hardwood posts. He later went into the logging camps and was active in this line in the employ of others for four years. At the end of that time he rented a tract of land in Coos county and began farming. He remained upon his original purchase for eight years but in the meantime acquired one hundred and thirty-seven acres of fertile land in this section. He rented this out for some time but was eventually able to move upon his holdings, taking entire charge of the improvement and development from that time. There is hardly a line of agriculture in which Mr. Myers has not been successful. He set out six acres of his property in fruit trees and within one year was able to plant three additional acres in orchard. He gave special attention and supervision to this branch, selecting trees suitable to soil and climate. By practical methods he made his orchard productive and remained upon this property until March 1, 1912. In that year he moved to his present farm, although he retains ownership of his one hundred and thirty-seven acres. He has given his entire attention to making his properties highly productive. He has cleared the timber, took up and burnt the stumps and is the owner of a model farm. He has always been energetic, intelligent and constructively active and is known through the section in which he lives as representative of all that is progressive and modern in the cultivation and tilling of the soil. He is interested in every new development of farm machinery and has installed efficient equipment upon his holdings. He has five acres of bottom land adjoining his original purchase in Coos county and his activities well centralized and controlled have brought him a gratifying measure of well deserved prosperity.

On January 31, 1876, Mr. Myers was united in marriage to Miss Mary L. Grindstaff, a native of Carter county, Tennessee. She is a daughter of George W. and Hannah L. (Nave) Grindstaff, whose other children were: Lizzie, who is deceased; Lovisa, who resides in Tennessee; Hannah, deceased; Celia, now Mrs. John Manning of Tennessee; Anne, who is deceased; and Alex and Sherman, both of whom reside in Tennessee. Mrs. Myers' father was twice married. His second wife was Miss Sallie McCartherm and to this union two sons were born, Nick and Isaac, both of whom reside in their native state of Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Myers became the parents of eight children: William H., born October 19, 1877, who is married and the father of three children, Hazel, Theodore, and Gladys;

MR. AND MRS. E. D. MYERS

Phoebe Elizabeth, the wife of Fred Mast a rancher in Coos county, by whom she has two children, Harry and Alice; Alice and Clarence, both of whom are deceased; Joseph B., who makes his home with his father in Coos county; Minnie, now Mrs. V. P. Sanford; and Grover C. and Walter, both of whom are living at home. All of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Myers were educated in the public schools and all attended the academies in Coquille and Gravel Ford. Their two daughters for some time were teachers in the public schools and their son William supplemented his primary education by a thorough commercial course.

In his political views Mr. Myers is independent of party lines, preferring to keep his judgment unbiased. He has never been an office seeker and refused to accept the nomination for sheriff of Coos county when it was offered him. He devotes his entire attention to agricultural pursuits and has gained a remarkable degree of success in this line. He keeps in touch with the trend of modern development and his record of intense and well directed activity, resulting as it has in gratifying prosperity, is a proof of what may be accomplished by determination and enterprise combined with energy, talent and unwavering diligence.

JACOB A. SAWYERS. Energy and a broad intelligence coupled with the upright qualities of an honorable character, have been the influencing factors in the career of Jacob A. Sawyers and have brought him to his present success. He has been prosperous as a farmer in Douglas county, Oregon, and a boatman on the Umpqua river, as a hotel proprietor in Allegheny and is now plying with his boat on the river near Scottsburg and Gardiner and meeting with his accustomed success. Mr. Sawyers was born in Steubenville, Jefferson county, Ohio, on July 22, 1847, and is a son of John and Eliza (Anderson) Sawyers, the former a native of Tyrone, Ireland, and the latter of Philadelphia. The grandfather was a fifer boy in the English army and came to America with his regiment in order to take part in the War of 1812. He was present at the battle of New Orleans and was taken prisoner. After being held for a short time he was exchanged and returned to Ireland, where he remained until 1818, or 1819, when he again crossed the Atlantic, locating in St. Johns, New Brunswick, where his first marriage occurred and where in 1822 his son Andrew was born. Andrew Sawyers was one of the band of gold seekers who opened up the California fields in 1849 and, in 1850, came north to Oregon, locating in the Umpqua valley nine miles east of Scottsburg. He was the first white man to settle in this district and his daughter Anna, who later married Joseph Reed, was the first white child born on the Umpqua river. John Sawyers, the father of our subject, removed with his children to Philadelphia upon the death of his wife, who passed away in St. Johns in 1824. In that city he married Miss Eliza Anderson, the mother of our subject. John Sawyers was a weaver by trade and for years worked in the cotton and woolen mills of Philadelphia. In 1844 he removed to Steubenville, Ohio, and followed the same line of occupation for ten years. During the period of his residence in that city he enlisted in the American army and served during the entire course of the Mexican war. In 1854 he crossed the plains with ox teams, locating with his family thirteen miles up the Umpqua river from Scottsburg, where he took up a donation claim which is now owned by his son, Jacob A. Sawyers. Here he resided until 1872 and brought his land from a wild and unimproved condition to a state of development. He later moved into the city of Scottsburg, where his death occurred in April, 1879, when he was eighty-one years of age. His wife survived him until 1894, and died when she was ninety-one years old. Both were members of the Presbyterian church and were well known in religious circles.

Jacob A. Sawyers was reared at home and his residence in Oregon dates from his seventh year. He was educated in the schools of Douglas county and his advantages along this line were limited by the pioneer conditions of the country. His opportunities were inadequate and the schools were open but three months during the year. He attended when he could and managed to acquire a fair degree of education. When he was seventeen years of age he bought, in conjunction with his brother, a farm of three hundred and twenty acres which adjoined their original donation claim. This was fenced, tiled and improved and in the following year the father turned over to Jacob Sawyers the entire tract, giving him full ownership. At this time James E. Sawyers, a brother of our subject, was a soldier in the Union army and upon his return from service he and his brother bought another farm of two hundred and seventy acres and operated in partnership the three tracts of land, comprising altogether a valuable property of nine hundred acres. The two brothers worked conjointly up to 1872, when they divided their holdings, Jacob A. acquiring the old donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres and two hundred and seventy acres of the first farm which they purchased. Mr. Sawyers has now sold this latter piece of land and retains only the original tract taken up by his father in 1854. During the years in which he was identified with agriculture he became well known throughout Douglas county as a successful farmer who operated his land along the most modern and progressive lines. He made constant improvements upon his property, built fine barns, fences and outbuildings and brought it to a high state of cultivation. In 1874 he left his farm and removed into Scottsburg, for five or six years following steamboating on the Umpqua river. In January, 1881, he returned to his property in Douglas county, and resumed his agricultural pursuits, following this line of occupation until 1902. In that year he removed to Allegheny, Coos county, where he bought a gasoline motor boat and operated this for freight and passenger purposes on the Coos river for four years. While he was thus engaged he bought a hotel in the city of Allegheny and was prosperous in its operation. In 1906 he removed to Scottsburg and has since followed steamboating on the Umpqua river between that city and Gardiner. He is acquainted with the various channels and currents of the body of water upon which he travels and is known as one of the most efficient navigators in Douglas county. He has charge of the boats belonging to the Southern Pacific Railroad and makes his headquarters in Scottsburg from which he carries on a constantly increasing business in inland river freight navigation.

In January, 1880, Mr. Sawyers was united in marriage to Miss Lucy Gardiner, a native of Oregon and a daughter of Isaac M. Gardiner, who came to this state from Ohio in 1854 and located in the Siuslaw valley, Lane county. He removed in 1860 to Douglas county, where his death occurred, in Drain, in 1908, when he was eighty-seven years of age. To Mr. and Mrs. Sawyers have been born ten children, six of whom are still living: Eliza, the wife of W. A. Gage, of Coos county; John J., who lives in Scottsburg; Mary E., who married Edwin Grubb, a farmer on the Umpqua river; Alexander, who operates the home farm; Isaac T., a rancher on the Umpqua river in Douglas county; and Violet B., who lives at home.

In his political affiliations Mr. Sawyers is a republican but has never sought office. He affiliates with Gardiner Lodge, No. 132, I. O. O. F., and Mrs. Sawyers belongs to the Rebekahs and to the Degree of Honor. Mr. Sawyers has been prominently identified with the agricultural, commercial and industrial upbuilding of the section in which he lives. His father was an honorable and upright man and the son is carrying on his life along worthy and useful lines which are the qualities of his heritage.

CHARLES S. BENEFIEL has since 1897, resided in Paisley, during which period he has been engaged in various mechanical pursuits. For several years he owned and operated a sawmill and at all times has led a life of industry and unabating activity. He was born in Jackson county, Oregon, near the city of Jacksonville, April 1, 1867, and is a son of Robert W. and Lillias Rockefeller (Raymond) Benefiel. The father was born in Indiana, February 18, 1821, and the mother in that state, September 24, 1834. They were married in Iowa and came to the west in 1857 by way of New York and the isthmus route, arriving in Portland, Oregon, where they were entertained by the Wallings. Subsequently they settled in Jackson county, where they lived for about ten years and then removed to Santa Barbara county, California. Later they resided, for a time, in Los Angeles county, California, and in 1879 became residents of Lake county, Oregon, locating in the Crooked Creek valley. In 1897 they came to Paisley, where the father died the following year. He was a farmer, also a good mechanic and built many barns in the districts in which he lived. In politics he was a staunch republican but manifested only a citizen's interest in the questions of the day. For fifty years he was an exemplary representative of the Masonic fraternity. His widow survives him and lives with her eldest daughter in Santa Barbara, California. In her family were seven children, of whom Charles S. is the youngest, the others being: Ann Eliza, the wife of E. A. Herrick, of Santa Barbara; James Tolman, who died, leaving a widow and five children; Robert Lewis, of Crooked creek, Lake county; John Wiley, living in Douglas county; Harriet Isabel, the wife of S. B. Chandler, of Crooked creek; and William Henry, a stockman of Plush, Oregon.

Charles S. Benefiel resided with his parents through the period of his boyhood and youth and when twelve years of age came to Lake county. He was connected with ranching interests until twenty years old and then turned his attention to mechanical pursuits, for which his natural ability well qualified him. He was thus engaged until 1897, when he established a sawmill at Paisley, in connection with his brother, J. W. Benefiel. Later, however, the brother sold out, while Charles S. Benefiel continued to operate the mill for six years. In the fall of 1909 he disposed of that property and has since worked along mechanical lines, being a very handy man in all kinds of carpenter work, blacksmithing and other mechanical pursuits. He is also connected with the Chewaucan Mercantile Company of Paisley.

In June, 1897, Mr. Benefiel was married to Miss Susie Mulkey, of Lakeview, who was born in Douglas county, May 17, 1872, and was reared in Goose Lake valley, near Lakeview, Oregon. She is a daughter of John and Sarah (Dickinson) Mulkey, the former a native of Missouri and the latter of Iowa. Both crossed the plains about 1853, and are residents of Lakeview. Mr. and Mrs. Benefiel have three children, Robert Raymond, Sarah Isabelle and Charles Sylvester. Mr. Benefiel is an independent republican, or progressive, interested in the movement which is seeking to purify politics and to secure legislation that will favor the masses rather than classes. He holds membership with the Woodmen of the World and his religious belief is that of the Church of Christ. He is recognized as an honorable and upright man, well worthy of the high regard in which he is uniformly held.

WILLIAM H. HULL retired in 1910 from active life after a long and honorable career, devoted principally to agricultural pursuits. For twenty years he farmed in Coos county, bringing to the operation of his prosperous enterprise the ability and knowledge of scientific methods, which he had gained as a boy upon his father's farm and as an independent agriculturist in Kansas. He has many claims to the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens, having done his duty as he saw it in all the relations of his life. He enlisted during the Civil war and saw six months of hard service. He is prominent in politics and well known in business circles, having given his attention since his retirement chiefly to the affairs of the Coquille Valley Cooperative Creamery, of which he is one of the founders and president.

Mr. Hull was born in Indiana, near Fort Wayne, in 1840, and is a son of Henry and Jane (Gardner) Hull, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of New York. The family is of Holland origin but has been in this country for many years, the grandparents of our subject having been born in Virginia. Mr. Hull is one of nine children, the others being: Isaac T., of Kansas; James K., deceased; Adam, who has also passed away; Felix E., who is engaged in farming near Riverton; Peter, who resides in Colorado; B. Franklin, who makes his home in Indiana; Elizabeth, the wife of Floyd Syphers of Washington; and Phoebe, who married Nathan Metzger, of Indiana.

William H. Hull was reared upon his father's farm and engaged in general agricultural pursuits in the employ of others until he was twenty-one years of age. He enlisted in 1862 in the Eighty-eighth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, under General Buell, and saw active service in the battle of Crab Orchard. His health failed and he was obliged to go to a war hospital for a time, receiving his discharge on account of disability. He returned to Indiana and worked at various occupations, following general farming for twenty-three years. In 1886 he sold out his interests in his native state and went to Kansas, where he bought a ranch, which he operated and developed for four years, selling it at the end of that time in order to come to Coos county. His residence in this section dates from 1890. He rented a farm and after one year purchased a portion of his present home place. The land was wild and unimproved, covered with brush and timber, and Mr. Hull was obliged to do all the work of clearing and developing. He later added sixty acres to his holdings and his property is now considered one of the model farms on the Coquille river. He now owns one hundred and two acres lying along the banks, highly improved and intelligently managed, and has gained a reputation as a successful and systematic agriculturist. For the first six years he carried on general farming but later added dairying to his activities, beginning in a small way but gradually expanding until it is now one of the largest enterprises of its kind in the county. Mr. Hull retired from active work in 1910 and gave over the management of his property to his two sons. In 1911 he helped to organize the Coquille Valley Cooperative Creamery and was elected its president at the last annual meeting. He holds a large part of the stock and is active in the management of its affairs, his shrewd business discrimination aiding him in this work.

In 1872 Mr. Hull was united in marriage to Miss Kate Clarke, a native of Ohio and a daughter of Alexander and Rose (Schneider) Clarke, both of whom were born in Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Clarke had five children: John O. and Jane, both deceased; Kate, now Mrs. Hull; Franklin, who lives in Indiana; and Elizabeth, who has also passed away. To our subject and his wife have been born four children. Ina is the wife of John Fox, who is the owner of a furniture factory at Coquille. Clark in connection with his brother Thomas operates the home ranch. Thomas is married and has two children, Mabel and Edith. William H., Jr., is engaged in logging in Coquille.

Mr. Hull is well known in political circles of Coos county and, although he does not give his allegiance to any particular party, is an active force in public enterprises. He founded the populist party in Coos county and was at one time chairman of the Central committee but is not now affiliated with any political organization. He is interested in the progress and expansion of the section in which he resides and, although he has never sought office, his public spirit has led him to accept some important local positions. He was school director for eight years and did constructive and competent work as road supervisor for two years. He is prominent in the Masonic order and gives his allegiance to the Methodist Episcopal church, South, of Coquille. He is widely and favorably known in the section where he has resided for over twenty years and is known as an active and industrious man, of good business ability, systematic and efficient in the operation of his agricultural enterprise and upright, conscientious and public-spirited in official life. His prosperity is of the solid kind which is the outgrowth of merit, and his success, which is undoubted and well deserved, has been kept entirely subservient to the methods and standards by which it has been attained.

JOHN G. MONTGOMERY is a retired lumberman, living on a twelve-acre tract of land, adjoining the city of Springfield, in Lane county. He was born in Virginia in 1833, a son of Hamilton and Tacy (Jennings) Montgomery, both natives of Virginia. They were married in their native state and there resided during the remainder of their lives. The father passed away in 1834, when the subject of this review was a child, and the mother's death occurred in 1841. Their family consisted of four children: William, Mary and Martha, all of whom are deceased; and John G., of this review.

After his father's death J. G. Montgomery was sent to live with his uncle, who acted as his guardian. He resided with his uncle until the death of the latter, which occurred when Mr. Montgomery was fourteen years of age. He then started out in life for himself and subsequently, with money, which his uncle had left him, he bought an interest in a combination saw and grist mill at Blue Springs, Tennessee. This mill was conducted by Mr. Montgomery and a partner until 1861, a period of twelve years, when it was destroyed by the Union army during the Rebellion. After that catastrophe Mr. Montgomery removed to the vicinity of Pana, Illinois, where he followed farming for one year, but owing to the malarial conditions there, he returned to the south again, locating in Georgia, where he raised cotton for a year, after which he went to Texas and spent a year looking for a favorable locality in which to settle. As he found nothing to his liking, he removed to Arkansas, settling near Fort Smith upon a farm which he operated for several years. In 1874 he disposed of his farm in Arkansas and with ox teams crossed the plains to Oregon, settling at first near Pendleton, where he lived for five years. He then went to Boise City, Idaho, and worked at various occupations until 1883, when he settled in Walla Walla, Washington. After living there for two years he went to Grande Ronde, Oregon, where he engaged in logging, an occupation which he pursued until 1901, when he removed to Lane county and engaged in logging on the McKenzie river, continuing until 1912, when he sold his plant and retired. He now lives on a twelve-acre tract adjoining the city of Springfield, Oregon.

In 1865 Mr. Montgomery was married to Miss Sallie Carter, who was born in Tennessee, a daughter of Elum and Sarah Carter, both natives of the south. The father died in Arkansas and the mother passed away in Illinois. In their family were five children, four of whom are still living. Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery have become the parents of seven children: Minnie, the widow of James Edwards and the mother of one child, Arthur; William, Gettie and Ham, all at home; Leone; Tip; and Ruby, who married Daisy Lane, by whom he has a son, Howard, born in December, 1907.

In his political views Mr. Montgomery is a democrat although he does not confine himself exclusively to the support of candidates nominated by his party. By his long and active business career he has accumulated a comfortable competence and has added materially to the resources of the communities in which he has lived. He is one of the most respected citizens of Springfield and has an extensive acquaintance, being held in high esteem by all who know him.

ELWOOD C. JOHNSON is well known in Washington county and that section of the state, for he is one of the partners in a sawmill conducted at Hillsboro by the firm of Johnson Brothers. He was born in Iowa, May 16, 1877, and is, therefore, yet a young man with opportunity for further advancement and success. His parents were, G. E. and Josephine (Bailey) Johnson, the former a native of Canada and the latter of Pennsylvania. In the year 1886, they left their Iowa home to become residents of Oregon, where the father remained until the time of his death, while the mother still resides in Hillsboro. In their family were eleven children, nine of whom are yet living.

Elwood C. Johnson was only about nine years of age when the family left Iowa for the northwest, so that the greater part of his life has been passed in Oregon, where he has been a witness of many events that have proven important factors in molding the history and shaping the destiny of the state. In his youthful days he assisted his father and on attaining majority learned the carpenter's trade, working at bridge building most of the time until he joined his two brothers, T. C. and N. G. Johnson, in organizing the firm of Johnson Brothers for the operation of a sawmill and the manufacture of lumber. They own two hundred and seventy acres of land of which one-third is covered with heavy timber. The mill has a capacity of two thousand feet daily and for their products they find a ready sale. Elwood C. Johnson owns and conducts a dairy in connection with his milling business. He is a man of resolute purpose and carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes.

Mr. Johnson was married in 1900 to Miss Mary Harwood, who was born in Kansas. They have four children, Alvin E., Irvin L., Orville C. and Cecil M. Mrs. Johnson was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church. Our subject gives his allegiance to the republican party and has filled the office of school director but has never sought nor desired political preferment. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen camp at Hillsboro and his brethren in that fraternity hold him in high regard, while the great majority of those with whom he has come into contact in business life and elsewhere entertain for him warm friendship.

ROBERT WEST. The history of Columbia county would scarcely be complete without mention of Robert West, who was the first white child born in Westport, his natal year being 1858. His parents were Captain John and Margaret (West) West, natives of Linlithgowshire, Scotland, and on coming to the new world first settled at Quebec, Canada, where they resided until 1849. In that year the father made his way to the United States, becoming a resident of Westport, Oregon, where in 1857 he was joined by his family, for in the meantime he had become convinced that he desired to make this section of the country his permanent place of residence. He was a millwright by trade and worked for W. Abernethy, the first governor of Oregon, who owned a mill at Oak Point, Washington, where Captain West was employed for several years. He afterward proved up a donation claim where Westport now stands and subsequently established the first sawmill that was operated at Westport. He was also otherwise connected with the business development of the place, starting a canning factory which he carried on up to the time of his death in 1887. He was for seven years survived by his wife, who passed away in 1894. In their family were eight children, of whom two died in Canada, while five came to Oregon with the mother and one was born in this state. The only survivor of the family is Mrs. Eliza Skirvin, of Portland. Those who have passed away are: two who were named John; Ellen, the wife of Charles McGuire, of Westport, also deceased; Robert; Jane, who was also the wife of Charles McGuire; David, and Ann, the wife of Robert Scott, of Woodburn, Oregon.

In 1891 Robert West was united in marriage to Miss Margaret M. Donahue, who was born at Lenox, Nova Scotia, April 6, 1868, a daughter of George and Rose (Maddox) Donahue, who were likewise natives of the same county where they were married and spent their entire lives. The mother died in 1905 and the father passed away two years later. In their family were eleven children: Mrs. West; Mathew, who is residing at Gloucester, Massachusetts; Kate, the wife of Frank Deering, of Los Angeles, California; Mary, the wife of Scott Madison, of Dorchester, Massachusetts; Nellie, the deceased wife of Fred Dose, of Woodburn, Oregon; John, living in Lenox, Nova Scotia; Arthur and James, who are residents of Lynn, Massachusetts; Lawrence, a sailor residing in Dorchester, Massachusetts; Ernest, who died at the age of eleven years; and one who passed away when four years of age.

Unto the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. West there were born three children: Ralph Lowell, twenty years of age, living with his mother in Westport; and Margaret and Maud, twins, seventeen years of age. The family circle was broken by the hand of death when on the 13th of December, 1899, Robert West was called to his final rest. His widow afterward married Robert U. Howard.

S. E. McBEE is an agriculturist living on a thriving eighty-acre farm one mile east of Springfield. He was born in Benton county, Oregon, December 13, 1856, a son of John W. and Almira (Mathena) McBee, natives of Ohio and Indiana respectively. The father came with his parents to Oregon in 1852 and the mother, in company with relatives, came to this state in the same year, her parents having died in the east. After the father's marriage he settled in Benton county, Oregon, on a homestead of two hundred acres which remained his home until in 1874, when he sold out and settled in Lane county, where he purchased one hundred and sixty acres one mile east of Springfield. Upon that farm he lived until his death, which occurred on the 23d of January, 1888. The mother had passed away in 1868 and after her death the father had again married, his second union being with Miss Josephine Grubbs, a native of Pennsylvania. By the first marriage there were five children, of whom S. E. McBee, of this review, is the eldest, the others being: W. A., of Pleasant Hill, Oregon; Mrs. W. C. Campbell, of Spokane, Washington; Martha Grubbs, deceased; and Mrs. Ida Collins, of Springfield. Unto the second marriage were also born five children, as follows: Jesse, of Seattle, Washington; Bert, a resident of Lorane, Oregon; Elmer, of Springfield; John, of Benton county; and Lillie, the wife of Frank Bartholomew, of Springfield.

S. E. McBee remained at home until he attained the age of twenty-four years, receiving a good common-school education and assisting in the farm work. At that age he was married and began farming on one hundred and sixty acres of land in Lane county which belonged to him. This land, which was situated on the McKenzie river, he cultivated for twelve years, after which he sold out and removed to the old family homestead, one mile east of Springfield, where he lived for five years. In 1902 he purchased twenty-five acres and in 1904 made his home upon that land which he has by purchase added to, until he now has eighty acres, of which fifty acres are in a high state of cultivation, the remainder being in timber.

Mr. McBee was married on the 3d of August, 1881, to Miss Catherine Wilcox, also a native of Oregon, born in Lane county, December 4, 1863, a daughter of Philo and Rosanna (Brown) Wilcox. Her father was born in Vermont, November 1, 1834, while the mother's birthplace was Missouri. The father came to Oregon in 1857 by the way of the Isthmus of Panama. In 1865 he settled on Camp creek, in Lane county, where he purchased two hundred and eighty acres of land, upon which he resided for six years. He then sold the land and purchased ninety-three acres within two miles of Springfield. He lived upon this farm for many years, bringing it under a good state of cultivation, erecting suitable improvements and making of it a very desirable farm property. In 1892 he sold the farm and retired from active life, and now at the age of seventy-eight years makes his home with his son-in-law, S. E. McBee. Mrs. Wilcox crossed the plains when six years of age with her parents, with whom she lived until her marriage. She passed away in June, 1891. In the Wilcox family were three children, of whom Mrs. McBee is the eldest, the others being: John F., of Salem; and Mary Ellen, the wife of T. M. Johnson, of Echo, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. McBee have been born ten children, all of whom are living: Charles O., who was born in September, 1882, and married Anna Saul; Lena M., born January 23, 1884, at home; Bertha E., born July 2, 1885, the wife of George W. Stewart, residing near Springfield, by whom she has two children, Harold and Luella; Ina L., who was born February 11, 1887, the wife of Fred Cline, of Springfield, and the mother of two children, Bernice and Ralph; Melvin, who was born November 23, 1889, and who married Beulah Koch and resides near Springfield; Lewis B., born February 5, 1893, who has a business-college education and resides at home; Edward W., born January 17, 1895; Wayne W., born July 1, 1897; Loris G., born January 22, 1901; and Alice R., born October 14, 1902.

Mr. McBee is prominent and popular in fraternal circles, being a member of the Odd Fellows lodge, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Patrons of Husbandry, having filled all of the chairs in those orders. He and his family are affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal church, in the work of which they are deeply interested, and the family is a highly respected one and widely known in the community. Mr. McBee is a progressive, up-to-date farmer and, although he gives strict attention to business, finds time for fraternal and social life and is highly esteemed by all who know him.

BENJAMIN HARRISON IRVINE. For over fifty years Benjamin Harrison Irvine has been identified with the agricultural development of Linn county and the section owes much of its present prosperity and wealth to his progressive and enterprising career. He was a pioneer in Oregon and for many years one of the most prominent farmers in this part of the state and has justly earned the retirement he is enjoying by useful labor in the past. He was born in Kentucky, January 11, 1829, and is a son of Jesse and Margaret (Hadley) Irvine, natives of that state, who moved to Missouri when their son was only six years of age. Six years later the father died and the mother remained in that state until 1852 when with her family she crossed the plains to Oregon with ox teams and landed at Salem, where her death occurred on the day of her arrival. Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Irvine had ten children, all of whom have passed away with the exception of the subject of this review and Jesse B. Irvine, of Corvallis.

B. H. Irvine was twenty-three years of age when he arrived in Linn county and his life since that time has been spent in this section. Immediately after his arrival he took up a donation claim of one hundred and sixty acres near Seio and began its improvement and development. This meant hard manual labor under primitive conditions, constant watchfulness and an energy which was proof against defeat. All these qualifications Mr. Irvine possessed and they made him finally a prominent and successful man. Acre by acre his land was brought under the plow, the fields planted and the work begun. Year by year the harvests grew more abundant, barns and outbuildings were erected and general improvements made. Mr. Irvine keeping constantly in touch with new developments in equipment and methods. At intervals he added to his holdings until his farm finally comprised five hundred and sixty acres of land, highly improved and developed, one of the most valuable farms in Linn county. Upon this he resided until 1903 when he purchased a fine home and six acres of land in Lebanon and retired from active life. He has passed his eighty-third year and is enjoying a well earned rest, spending the evening of his days in peace and comfort.

In 1857 Mr. Irvine was united in marriage to Miss Sarah R. Johnson, who was born in Iowa, January 29, 1842, a daughter of James H. and Esther A. (Adams) Johnson, natives of Illinois and Ohio, respectively. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Johnson moved to Iowa and settled there in pioneer times, remaining until 1853 when they crossed the plains to Oregon with ox teams and settled in Linn county. Here the father purchased land four miles east of Lebanon upon which he resided for forty years, dying upon his property in November, 1911, at the advanced age of ninety. His death was regretted by all who knew him, for it deprived Linn county of one of its pioneers and one of its most prominent, representative and successful agriculturists. His wife died in 1900. In their family were four children: Sarah R., the wife of our subject; Mrs. Nancy E. Zell, of Prineville; Mrs. Mary K. Hickman, of Monmouth; and Mrs. Martha J. Holt, who resides in Harrisburg. Mr. and Mrs. Irvine became the parents of eight children: James H., who died at the age of two years; Esther Ann, born November 12, 1860, who is the wife of W. R. Ray, of Linn county; T. J., who was born May 17, 1864, and resides in eastern Oregon; Mary J., born January 22, 1866, who is the wife of F. T. Thayer, of Linn county; C. R., whose birth occurred January 19, 1868, and who resides in Hubbard; Emeline, whose natal day was August 1, 1870, and who is the wife of C. W. Beard, of Yamhill county; Martha L., born October 20, 1876, who resides at home; and Bertha A., whose birth occurred August 27, 1881, and also resides at home. The family are members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Irvine is a staunch prohibitionist and intelligently interested in the growing strength of that party. He is a member of the Grange and active in the affairs of the Good Templars. His life has been so usefully spent and so valuable in its activity that he has won and retained the respect and confidence of many friends. In spirit and interests he seems yet in his prime and is widely and favorably known in Lebanon, being classed with the representative citizens of Linn county.

STEPHEN P. BACH is prominent in business and political circles of Lebanon, having for twenty-two years operated a general merchandise store, and being extensively interested in various representative local enterprises. He was born in Germany, June 27, 1860, a son of Joseph and Rosalia Bach, both of whom died in the fatherland. They were the parents of six children: Kate, a resident of Ohio; Peter whose home is in Salem, Oregon; Stephen P., of this review; and Lawrence, Rosalia and Louisa, all of whom reside in Germany.

Stephen P. Bach came to America in 1879 and having settled in Marion county completed, in the Salem Business College, an education which had been begun in Germany. When he had passed the prescribed course in that institution he worked upon a farm for two years and then clerked in a general merchandise store in Salem, gaining in this way practical experience in American business methods. In 1890 he came to Lebanon and here established himself as an independent merchant. The business which he founded at that time, he is conducting today in the same location in which it was originally established. He recently took in partnership George Buhl, with whom he works on the cooperative plan. The success he enjoys is largely the result of the energy and determination with which Mr. Bach applies himself to his work. His business has increased year by year, and his is one of the important retail houses in the city. Stephen P. Bach's interests, however, are not confined to the management of his store alone. He has invested extensively in Lebanon real estate and owns much valuable property in the city, including his own fine residence. He is the president of the First National Bank and one of its heaviest stockholders.

On January 14, 1891, Mr. Bach was united in marriage to Miss Therese Sheridan, who was born in Wisconsin, and came to Oregon with her parents in 1875. They are still living on a farm, five miles west of Lebanon, the father being eighty-one years of age and the mother sixty-five. To Mr. and Mrs. Bach has been born, a daughter, Bessie L., whose natal day was November 28, 1891. She enjoys the advantages of a fine musical education and is attending college at Eugene, teaching at the same time. The family are members of the Roman Catholic church.

Stephen P. Bach gives his allegiance to the democratic party and, for one term, served as mayor of Lebanon, accomplishing during his administration much valuable and lasting work. For three terms he was a member of the city council and he is active at the present time on the local board of education. It is hard to estimate the importance of his accomplishments since all of his interests, being representative and effective, have influenced the growth of the city by promoting it actively along social, business and political lines.

GEORGE THOMPSON was the owner of a valuable ranch of three hundred and sixty-one acres, located four and a half miles west of Cottage Grove. It was the visible evidence of his life of thrift and enterprise, characteristic of the Swedish people. His birth occurred in Sweden, on the 7th of February, 1839, and in that country he was reared to the age of fourteen years. He was a son of Thomas Rosenleaf, who was a merchant sailor for over ten years and sailed to almost every known port in the world until his ship was taken away from him by sea pirates. He managed to make his escape in a boat and was picked up by another vessel. He was the owner of a store at East Hammer, Stockholm, which was managed by his wife, Sophia Maria Didrickson, when he was at sea. After the loss of his ship he remained at East Hammer. In the family were eleven children, five daughters and six sons. The youngest son, Albert, having emigrated to America, was one of the first men to enlist in the Union army from Knox county, Illinois, joining the Forty-fifth Illinois Regiment, and while at the front he was wounded. The father, Thomas Rosenleaf, died about 1857 and his wife passed away about the same time. Two of the brothers and two of the sisters of George Rosenleaf, who changed his name to Thompson on taking out naturalization papers in the United States, came to America. They settled in New York city and San Francisco and those who are living still reside in those cities. The father also came to the new world during the early days of the republic and participated in the War of 1812 but afterward returned to his native land. One of his sons went to the front during the Mexican war, was wounded and died from the effects of his injury.

At the age of fourteen years George Thompson left home and went to sea and for nineteen years thereafter lived the life of a sailor, visiting many ports and climes. For many years New York city was his headquarters, but from there he crossed the continent to San Francisco in 1872. For a year thereafter he was employed as a line man by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, but at the expiration of that time he invested his capital in three or four hundred acres of land in the eastern part of this state and went to raising sheep. He made a success of this venture and for many years his herd numbered on an average, five thousand sheep. In 1893 he disposed of part of his ranch and coming to Lane county purchased the ranch, where his widow now resides, west of Cottage Grove. He continued to reside there until his death, which occurred on the 26th of March, 1910. Mr. Thompson was a diligent man of foresight and sagacity and during the long years of his connection with the stock-raising interests of this state acquired a comfortable fortune.

In 1898, Mr. Thompson was united in marriage to Miss Ella White, who was the eldest daughter and second child born to Charles and Elizabeth Jane (Richards) White, her natal day being the 26th of June, 1859. The parents were both of Cornish descent, Charles White being one in a family of eleven children born to his father and mother, whose family name was Morgan. The mother of Mrs. Thompson was a daughter of Richard and Elizabeth (Gendle) Richards, who were the parents of nine children, three of whom are still living. Mr. and Mrs. White's family numbered nine those beside Mrs. Thompson being: William Charles, who was born on December 12, 1857, a resident of Rockville, Wisconsin; Richard, whose birth occurred on the 3d of March, 1861, living in Cottage Grove; John, born on September 25, 1862, a resident of Platteville, Wisconsin; Levina, who was born September 19, 1864, the wife of Albert Elledge, of Cottage Grove; James Henry, born March 31, 1866, living in Chico, California; Albert, who was born January 28, 1868, and died in June 1903; Arthur, who was born January 17, 1870, now living in Rockville, Wisconsin; and Emma E., who was born November 17, 1872, the wife of Henry Wickendoll, of Hutchinson, Kansas. Before her marriage Mrs. Thompson was a successful music teacher. She continues to make her home on the ranch, where she and her husband passed the entire period of their domestic life. During the period of their ownership they wrought many changes in the place and it is now one of the attractive and well improved as well as valuable properties of the community.

Mr. Thompson became a citizen of the United States on the 29th of July 1859, and ever after was absolutely loyal to the oath of his allegiance. He served his adopted country at the time of her great need during those dark days in the '60s as a member of the navy, being assigned duty on the battleship Merrimac. He was slightly wounded once but suffered no permanent injuries. He joined the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in 1856, being a member of Baltimore Lodge, No. 1, I. O. O. F., one of the first lodges organized by this fraternity in the United States. After coming to Lane county Mr. Thompson practically lived retired, although he took an active interest in all movements inaugurated for the development of the community and was known as one of the foremost citizens of Cottage Grove, where he had many staunch friends.

THOMAS CRAINE, secretary and treasurer of the Millers-Sands Fishing Company, in which he owns a tenth interest, is a man of wide sea experience and possessing much business ability. He resides at No. 1362 East Stark street, Portland. Mr. Craine was born on the Isle of Man, February 7, 1850, a son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Cain) Craine, both of whom were born and spent their entire lives on that island. The father followed fishing and farming as his life work but prior to his death he had been in the fishery business exclusively. He died many years ago and the mother, surviving him, passed away in 1885. They were the parents of eight children, Joseph, who resides on the Isle of Man, and Thomas, of this review, being the only surviving members of the family.

Thomas Craine was reared and educated on his native island. The youngest member of the household, he remained with his parents until he was fifteen years of age, when he started out to seek his fortune on the high seas and from that period until he had attained his majority he lived as a sailor and fisherman. He then settled in Liverpool, England, for a short time but again resumed the life of a seafaring man. By this time he had become an able seaman and shipped on board the Dunfillan, of Glasgow, Scotland. Leaving England on November 15, 1872, he arrived at San Francisco, California, March 29, 1873. Sailing from this port, he made many voyages but in 1877 he discontinued the life of a seaman and began fishing on the Columbia river in connection with the Millers-Sands Fishing Company, operating ten miles west of Astoria, at Altoona Station, where the headquarters of the company still remain. Being an active, efficient business man, he soon became secretary and treasurer of his company, a position which he still holds. This concern has a large amount of money invested in the equipment necessary in their business and their operations are of immense volume.

On March 29, 1891, Mr. Craine was married to Mrs. Dunlap, widow of Robert Dunlap, and a daughter of Zachariah and Sarah (Robinson) Croson, both of whom are now deceased. The father died in Missouri, while the mother passed away in Iowa. In 1882 Mrs. Craine crossed the plains with her first husband, Robert Dunlap, settling in Oregon, and here, in 1888, Mr. Dunlap passed away. To Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dunlap four children were born: Luella, Alice and Harriet, all of whom received a good business education and are now residing at home; and Stewart, who married Miss Malinda Clepper and is employed in the clearing house department of the Merchants National Bank of Portland.

Mr. Craine is a republican in his political faith but has never sought or held office. He is a member of the Masonic order, belonging to Lodge, No. 24, A. F. & A. M., of Rainier, Oregon, in which he has held the office of steward. He is also a member of the Red Men at Skamokawa, Washington. He and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which they are regular attendants and ardent supporters. Mr. Craine is well known in business circles in Portland and has a large number of friends and business associates, who hold him in the highest esteem. He is a useful man in the community and his business ability is well known and recognized by all who know him.

EPHRAIM H. BURCHARD. Fifty-eight years ago Mr. and Mrs. Ephraim H. Burchard and their little daughter came to Oregon. He remained thereafter a resident of this state until his demise and his widow is still living in Scottsburg. They were earnest Christian people and Mr. Burchard made an excellent reputation as a merchant and contributed to the material, political and moral development of his community. Mr. Burchard was born in Guernsey county, Ohio, June 21, 1828, a son of David Todd and Jane (McHaney) Burchard. The father was also a native of Guernsey county, Ohio, where he lived for many years and thence removed to Steubenville, Ohio. His death occurred in that city about 1870, when he was sixty-seven years of age, and his wife reached the remarkable old age of ninety-five years.

Ephraim H. Burchard largely spent his youthful days in the middle west, following the printer's trade after coming to Oregon. He was married at Hardserabble, Virginia, in November, 1852, to Miss Mary G. Sawyers, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Anderson) Sawyers. Her father was born in Ireland and in early life came to America, settling in Philadelphia, in which city his wife was born and reared. Their daughter, Mrs. Burchard, was also a native of Philadelphia, born November 3, 1835. Her parents came to Oregon in 1854 and following their arrival in this state, in December, they took up a donation claim near Elkton. The father died at the ripe old age of eighty-one years and the mother traveled life's journey for ten years longer, when on the 5th of September, 1894, she was called to her final rest at the age of ninety-one years.

About two years after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Burchard started for Oregon, coming to this state in 1854, after making the long and arduous journey across the plains. Mr. Burchard then turning his attention to merchandising, conducting a store either in Scottsburg or in Gardiner for many years. He always carried a well selected and attractive line of goods and his reasonable prices and straightforward dealing secured to him a liberal patronage, bringing him a gratifying measure of success. For many years he was justice of the peace and discharged his duties with strict integrity and fairness, his opinions being based always upon the law and the equity of the case. In that connection he made a most creditable record, as he did while serving as assessor of Douglas county in 1859-60. He voted with the democratic party and was thoroughly in sympathy with its interests and its purposes. As the years passed by seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Burchard, of whom David died in infancy. Elizabeth, born October 14, 1853, twin sister of David, became the wife of Henry Wade, mentioned elsewhere in this work. Margaret, born November 15, 1855, died in 1860. William J. is also mentioned on another page of this work. John J., born in 1860, died in January, 1863. Mary Jane, born March 25, 1868, is the wife of Fred Weatherby, of Scottsburg. Ephraim Cyrus, born April 27, 1870, is at home with his mother. The death of the husband and father occurred August 19, 1898. He was a Master Mason, belonging to Gardiner Lodge, No. 59, and for many years served as its master. He was also a steward of the grand lodge of Portland for a time, and was ever loyally devoted to the teachings of the craft. He was a faithful member of the Methodist church to which Mrs. Burchard belongs. He led an upright, honorable life, winning him the high regard of his fellow townsmen, and Mrs. Burchard has ever been devoted to the Christian principles which she advocates. In fact they were long numbered among the most highly esteemed residents of Scottsburg and of Douglas county and the memory of Mr. Burchard is cherished by all who knew him.

FREEMAN L. HARFORD, for some years actively associated with the work of the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal church and now giving the weight of his influence for the intellectual and moral development of Newberg and the section of the state in which he lives, is a native of Washington county, Pennsylvania. His opportunities for acquiring an education in early life were good and he possessed a studious nature, so that close application to his books early prepared him for teaching. The Civil war, however, drew him from his chosen profession and at the call of his country he went to the front, serving in defense of the Union until peace was declared. He has always been an advanced thinker, closely studying the vital and significant problems of the country, and in the early days of the present prohibition movement was an active participant in the work and became a well known platform speaker, addressing audiences upon the subject of temperance in many states. His work in Missouri and Oregon has left its impress. He was in the active work of the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal church until his health failed, when in 1888 he removed to the state of Oregon, with his family. He is still helping to make this state a place in which to find a good moral atmosphere for the young.

His wife, Mrs. Helen Dickinson Harford, has been closely identified with reform movements current in this state, since her arrival here, and with her husband has given her time and influence to make Oregon worth while. She was graduated from the State Normal College at Albany, New York, and for almost twenty years was successfully engaged in teaching. She left that work to become a platform speaker for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She has been a national organizer, a national superintendent of the department of Christian citizenship and president of the State Woman's Christian Temperance Union for five years. At the time of this writing, in 1912, she is one of the national lecturers of the organization and has all the calls she can fill. She has spoken from Chautauqua platforms acceptably in most of the states of this country and in Canada is regarded as a welcome lecturer. She is logical, earnest, entertaining and eloquent and her words carry conviction to the minds of her hearers. The world is a better one because Mr. and Mrs. Harford have lived in it and their work is appreciated by many, in all parts of the country.

HARVEY C. VEATCH, who is living retired, has been an extensive and successful agriculturist in Oregon, his business career dating back to an early period. He owns considerable property, including a fine residence in his home city, Cottage Grove. He was born in White county, Illinois, November 10, 1828, the son of Isaac and Mary (Miller) Veatch, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of South Carolina. The parents were married in the Blue Grass state and there they resided for four years. The father enlisted in the War of 1812 but was not in active service. In 1815 he removed to White county, Illinois, where he bought land from the government at one dollar and a quarter per acre. Upon this land he lived until 1845, when he sold it and removed to Davis county, Iowa where he resided for a number of years. Disposing of his holdings there, he came to Oregon and made his home with his son, the subject of this review, with whom he resided until 1873, when his death occurred. The mother passed away in 1846, while the family were living in Iowa. They were the parents of sixteen children, of whom six are still living namely: Harvey C.; Sylvester, a retired farmer, who resides in Cottage Grove and is in his eighty-first year; Niece Jane, the widow of L. B. Wharton, of Lakeview, Oregon; Mrs. Ann Wallace, of Cottage Grove; Mrs. Harriet Wallace, who resides near Cottage Grove; and R. M., of Cottage Grove.

When twenty-five years of age Harvey C. Veatch crossed the plains, driving a wagon owned by the man, who afterward became his father-in-law. Part of his duties on that long journey were to care for the stock, consisting of one hundred head of cows, ten mares, twelve yoke of oxen and one mule. During the trip he and another member of the party had a hairbreadth escape from being killed by the Indians, who surrounded them, and their lives would have been lost, had it not been for the timely arrival of men from another wagon train. This occurred near the Snake river in Idaho. On settling in Oregon Mr. Veatch became interested in agricultural pursuits, making a specialty of handling stock and also conducting a diversified system of farming. He owned at the time of his retirement in 1892 six hundred and forty acres of land, a large proportion of which was under a high state of cultivation, consisting of fine bottom land, the remainder being in pasture. On his retirement he sold the land excepting eighty acres, which he later gave to his children, and removed to Cottage Grove, where he owns a fine home and other residence property. On October 22, 1855, he enlisted in the Indian war and served for three months and ten days, after which he returned to his farm in Lane county.

Mr. Veatch was married in Lane county, Oregon, December 24, 1854, to Miss Margaret J. Knox, who was born in Hancock county, Illinois, July 27, 1831, a daughter of Samuel B. and Elizabeth (Matthews) Knox, both natives of Kentucky. The mother died when Mrs. Veatch was but three years of age and in 1835 the father married Cynthia Stockton, a native of Tennessee, who came to Illinois with her parents when she was a young girl. To the second marriage ten children were born, five of whom are still living, namely: Mrs. Moss, of Creswell, Oregon; Mrs. Harriet Callison, of Pleasant Hill; Mrs. Suphronia McFarland, of Cottage Grove; Mrs. Laura McFarland, of Cottage Grove; and Jerome, of Crook county, Oregon. Mrs. Veatch crossed the plains with her father and stepmother when she was twenty-one years of age and rode on horseback the entire distance, helping to drive one hundred head of cattle. Considerable trouble with the Indians was experienced en route and some of the stock was lost through their depredations, the herd being many times stampeded.

To Mr. and Mrs. Veatch the following children have been born. Samuel P., born in December, 1856, is married and resides in San Francisco, California. He is chairman of what is known as the grievance committee, to settle difficulties between railroad companies and employees, especially representing railroad conductors. Oliver, who was born in 1858, is married and is engaged in the real-estate business in Cottage Grove, in which town he owns considerable property, including a brick building, handsomely constructed. Cynthia Rosetta is the wife of Cy Miller, a traveling salesman of Walla Walla, Washington. Posey is deceased. Harriet E. is the wife of Rev. W. V. McGee, a Presbyterian minister, of Creswell, Oregon. Mary S. married Robert H. Moseby, a farmer of Lane county. Eva J. is the wife of Ellsworth S. Halderman, of Cottage Grove, who is employed as a forest ranger on the government reserve. They have a family of three children: Veta B., born in 1893; Harvey Scott, born in 1900; and Doris, born in 1903.

The Veatch family are members of the Presbyterian church and contribute materially to the support of that organization in Cottage Grove. Mr. Veatch, who has now attained an advanced age, is widely and favorably known in the community where he resides. Having been a pioneer, a prominent resident and a successful agriculturist, he has for many years been a conspicuous figure in Lane county. His life has been one of activity and usefulness and he is now passing his declining years in the seclusion of his well appointed home, surrounded by his family and many close friends.

JESSE EDWARDS, the recognized founder of Newberg, Oregon, was born in Hendricks county, Indiana, February 18, 1849, and is a son of John and Abigail Edwards, pioneers of Indiana, coming from Guilford county, North Carolina.

Jesse Edwards with his family came to Oregon in 1880. He was married to Mary E. Kemp, a daughter of Jeremiah and Amy R. Kemp of Park county, Indiana, in 1870. They were the parents of four children: Clarence J., the oldest, who is the promoter and manager of the Yamhill Electric Light & Power Company; Walter F., a dealer in bonds and real estate of Portland; Oren K., who is general manager and treasurer of the Pacific Face Brick Company; and Maybelle E. York, the only daughter, wife of M. M. York, sales manager of the Pacific Face Brick Company, of Portland.

In 1881 Mr. Edwards purchased the land upon which the city of Newberg is now located, the first plat of the town being recorded in 1883.

Mr. Edwards, believing the moral factor to be a fundamental asset in the building up of a city, was careful to guard its moral as well as its material development, by placing a clause in the dedicatory articles of the city to the effect that each deed prohibit the use and sale of all intoxicating drinks as a beverage. He has always been an enthusiastic supporter of education, giving not only his hearty support to the building up of a splendid system of public schools, but was one of the organizers of the Pacific Academy, in 1885, which was incorporated as a college a few years later. He has been one of its strongest financial supporters, as well as serving as president of the board of managers for a number of years. He was one of the incorporators of the Bank of Newberg, and its president for ten years, it now being the United States National Bank, one of the solid banking institutions of the county.

There are few men in the state who have done more in promoting and fostering manufacturing industries and all legitimate enterprises for the development of the northwest. Perhaps the most extensive was that of the Newberg Pressed Brick & Terra Cotta Company, which he organized in 1892, now well known throughout the northwest as the Pacific Face Brick Company, with its head office in Portland. He has been its president and financial head since its organization. After extensive prospecting for clays throughout the Willamette valley, which would make a suitable facing for modern fire-proof structures, impervious to moisture, which is so necessary to this climate, they purchased land having the desired qualities in clay and shale deposits, building a railroad connecting with the Southern Pacific at Sheridan. At this location they erected and equipped the most modern and complete clay-working plant of the Pacific coast. Their product not only supplies the Portland and Oregon market but is shipped in large quantities to Idaho, Washington and British Columbia.

Mr. Edwards is a man known throughout the state for his active interests in various organizations for moral, civic and political betterment. His clean moral life coupled with his successful business career is an inspiration and encouragement to young men.

GEORGE H. COLTER for many years has been recognized as one of the most skilful and reliable master carpenters among the builders of large and important structural bridge work, and as a builder of smelters and in the installation of mining machinery and equipment he is among the most reliable and competent men of the Pacific coast. His birth occurred in Nova Scotia, on the 12th of June, 1854, his parents being Daniel and Almira (Huestis) Colter, the former a native of County Sligo, Ireland, and the latter of Nova Scotia. They were married in Nova Scotia, where they continued to live the remaining days of their lives. Mrs. Colter died at the age of fifty-eight years and Daniel Colter passed away at the age of seventy-two. To them were born four daughters and three sons. Of these six are still living, as follows: Mary, the wife of Richard Woodland, of Nova Scotia; Eliza, the wife of George Scott, also of Nova Scotia; Mrs. Rebecca Woodson, who resides in Maine; William, a resident of Kellogg, Idaho; George H., of this review; and Henry, who resides on the old homestead in Nova Scotia. Malinda, the deceased wife of Murdoch Nicholson, passed away in Nova Scotia.

George H. Colter was reared at home and educated in the public schools of his native land. At the age of sixteen he started in life for himself and on leaving the parental roof came to the United States in 1869 and settled in San Francisco, California. Here he engaged in the pursuit of his trade—that of a carpenter and millwright. He remained in San Francisco for one year only and then removed to Portland, where he was engaged in the construction of the Howe truss bridges, his employers being Benjamin Holliday and I. V. Keepers, of Chicago, Illinois, the business of that firm being that of railroad promotion and construction work. He remained with this concern for a period of five years, after which he moved to Silver City, Idaho, where he took charge of the Mahogany and Ida Elinore gold and silver mines, which he operated for three years, the property at that time being owned and controlled by one of the banks of California. He then removed to Leadville, Colorado, in 1878, where he was engaged in the building of the American smelter for the Wicks-Otis Company of St. Louis, Missouri, and in 1879 he built the Grant smelter of Denver, Colorado, where he remained for two years, after which time he removed to Ogden City, Utah, where he entered the employ of Walker Brothers, for whom he constructed an independent electric light plant, changing the original plant from steam to water power and using for that purpose the water of the Ogden river. Upon the completion of the electric light plant he continued in the employ of Walker Brothers and was by that firm sent to Butte, Montana, where he installed the machinery in the Ellis mines for that company, and later he built the opera house at Butte for Murray & Clarke and A. J. Davis. Mr. Colter, upon the completion of his contract in the building of the opera house at Butte, removed to Eagle, Idaho, where he built a hotel on Pritchard avenue, which he for some time successfully conducted and later disposed of at a handsome profit, after which he moved to San Diego, California, where he engaged in the general real-estate business for three years. In this enterprise he was most successful, taking as his net profits during the time of his residence there the handsome sum of twenty thousand dollars. In 1885 he moved to Seattle, Washington, where he engaged in the real-estate business for two years, after which he removed to Portland, this state, and shortly after he changed his residence to the Siuslaw valley, entering that fertile territory in the year 1889. His first investment in this section of the state was on a most extensive scale. Directly across the river from the city of Florence he purchased an unbroken mile of river frontage. On the land contained within the boundaries of this purchase he laid out and platted the town of Glenada, the name of which is a combination of the Christian names of his wife and daughter, in whose honor he has given to Oregon the town of Glenada. In the development of this new city Mr. Colter has been very successful, the town now having a population of two hundred inhabitants. He has built within the business district of Glenada a commodious and well appointed hotel at the cost of four thousand dollars. This property he still owns and operates. In addition he has also constructed two wharves, both of which span the distance from the river's shore to its deep-water channel. One wharf is one hundred and fifty feet in length and one two hundred feet in length. Mr. Colter still owns four hundred and fifty city lots in Glenada and one hundred and sixty acres on Fiddle creek, and also one hundred and sixty acres within one mile of the town of Florence, and in addition to these extensive and valuable holdings he also owns sixty-three acres of timber adjoining Glenada on the west.

In 1881 Mr. Colter was united in marriage to Miss Jane Grant, a native of Cumberland county, Nova Scotia, and a daughter of James and Christina Grant, who were likewise natives of Nova Scotia. Her parents were married in that country and continued to live there until 1880, when they removed to Colorado, where they maintained their residence for four years and then removed to Montana in 1884, where they are now living. To Mr. and Mrs. Grant have been born seven children, as follows: Mrs. Jane Ada Colter; Mary, the wife of John Woods, of Montana; Maggie, the wife of O. C. Esty, also of Montana; Christina, the wife of Douglas Smith, of Montana; and George, James and Duncan, who are also residents of the state of Montana. Mr. and Mrs. George H. Colter are the parents of seven children, namely: Viola, who was born in 1886 and is the wife of William Yost, of Glenada, this state; George, born in 1888; Grant Lee, whose birth occurred in 1890; Carlisle, whose natal year was 1892; Cleveland, Ada, and Isabell, who were born in the years 1894, 1896 and 1898, respectively. The last six named are still under the parental roof. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Colter have been liberally educated in the public schools of this state and the oldest daughter was for some time engaged in teaching in the public schools until the time of her marriage.

Fraternally Mr. Colter is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Politically he is affiliated with the democratic party and has served as deputy sheriff of Lane county. He and his family are members of the Presbyterian church. George H. Colter is one of the aggressive and successful business men of this part of Oregon. He is a man of wide experience in business affairs and in his undertakings has been successful to an unusual degree. Among his acquaintances and associates he enjoys the reputation of being a man of strict integrity in all his business transactions and his influence is always to be relied upon in the promotion and advancement of any measure of public interest intended to advance and improve the condition of the people in his state and county.

CHARLES C. BUCK is the owner of one of the most beautiful home sites in Applegate valley, Jackson county, where he resides. He is deeply interested in all educational work, having been for sometime past officially connected with the schools in his locality. He was born in California, October 29, 1858, and is a son of W. R. and Matilda (Ruddick) Buck, both of whom were natives of Indiana, and who crossed the plains at a very early date, settling at first in California, where they remained but a short time and in 1874 removed to Oregon and located in Jackson county.

Charles C. Buck was reared at home and educated in the public schools. He remained under the parental roof until having attained his majority and at that time began life in the world for himself and first engaged as a laborer on neighboring ranches. After devoting himself to this occupation for sometime he purchased his present home site, consisting of forty acres in Applegate valley bottoms. This property is located in one of the most picturesque spots of the entire valley and here Mr. Buck is building for himself and family a home that corresponds with its environments.

In 1892 Mr. Buck was united in marriage to Miss Mattie Parks, a native of Iowa, and to this family two children have been born: Clarence and Leatha, both of whom are at home with their parents. Mr. Buck is one of the best known and numbered among the most progressive men in Applegate valley. He has always been deeply interested in educational work and contributed to the improvement of the valley in this respect materially. During his residence there for the past ten years he has been a member of the school board, giving his time whenever called upon.

W. B. MORSE, M. D., is actively engaged in the private practice of medicine and surgery and is also a member of the state board of health. He brought to his professional career a thorough understanding of the great scientific principles underlying his work and his application thereof to specific needs has been most able and resultant. His standing is indicated by the liberal patronage now accorded him and which places him with the prominent physicians of Salem. A native son of Oregon, he was born in Lafayette, March 21, 1866, and is a son of William B. and Nancy E. (McBride) Morse, who were natives of Boston, Massachusetts, and of Missouri, respectively. In early life the father was a sea-faring man and while on one of his voyages came around Cape Horn to California, following the discovery of gold in that state. He afterward left his ship and became one of the band of '49ers who went to the gold fields, going by way of the isthmus. He remained in the mines, however, for only a short period and thence made his way northward to Oregon, settling in Yamhill county. He was later married there and established his home in Lafayette, to which place his wife had gone with her parents, making the long and arduous trip across the plains in 1846. After his marriage William B. Morse was variously engaged, at one time having charge of all the carpenter work at the Grande Ronde Indian agency, under General Phil Sheridan. In 1868 he was appointed the first warden of the state penitentiary, under Governor Woods, and served for three years. Later he was identified with the sawmill business for three years but that venture proved unprofitable and he lost the capital which he had invested. At a subsequent date he was employed in the railway mail service, in which he continued to the time of his death, in 1883. Thus in various ways he was connected with the early development and pioneer experiences of the state and became well known among the many settlers whose labors proved so essential a factor in promoting the growth and prosperity of Oregon. He was also closely connected with the early history of Masonry in Oregon and was well known to the fraternity throughout the northwest. His widow survives him and is now a resident of Portland.

Dr. Morse was reared at home, acquiring his education in the public schools of St. Helens and in the high school of Portland, this state, ere entering Wasco Academy at The Dalles. There his literary course was completed but he determined upon the practice of medicine as a life work and in the fall of 1887 entered the medical department of Willamette University at Portland. Between courses of lectures he read under the direction of Dr. J. A. Richardson, of Salem, and at length was graduated from Willamette University as a member of the class of 1891. Immediately afterward he opened an office in Salem, where he remained until 1900. He then went to Lincoln county, where he spent some time, securing a home-stead which he proved up in 1902. He was also for a period of six months identified with interests in Alaska, going to that district in 1899, after which he spent six months in prospecting and mining there. However, the practice of medicine has been his real life work and to this the greater part of his time and energies have been given. He has pursued two courses of study in the New York Post Graduate School and in the New York Polyclinic in 1893 and in 1907. Moreover, his private reading of medical journals and the latest contributions to medical literature have kept him in touch with the advanced work that is being done by the foremost members of the profession in all sections of the country. He does not hastily discard the old and time-tried methods, the worth of which has been proven, and yet he is quick to take up any new and advanced idea which his judgment sanctions as of value in the important work to which he has dedicated his life. He belongs to the Marion County Medical Society, to the Oregon State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

In 1887 Dr. Morse was married to Miss Ethel Cusick, of Salem, a daughter of William A. Cusick, one of the pioneers of Marion county, who came across the plains from Illinois in the late '40s. In 1906 Dr. Morse was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife. He is well known socially as a member of the Mibu Club and he also holds membership with the Salem Board of Trade and the Business Men's League. Fraternally he is well known in Masonic circles, belonging to Pacific Lodge, No. 50, F. & A. M.; Multnomah Chapter, No. 1, R. A. M.; De Molay Commandery, No. 5, K. T., of Salem; and Al Kader Temple of the Mystic Shrine, at Portland. He has never sought nor desired office outside the strict path of his profession but on the 8th of June, 1906, was appointed a member of the state board of health and has served continuously since in this important position. In the office he has done excellent work in demanding sanitary conditions and in the advocacy of an educational campaign which shall make known to the public the best methods of preventing disease and the spread of contagion. In his chosen life work he has made continuous progress and is justly regarded as one of Salem's most prominent physicians.

R. H. HOVEY, general manager and stockholder of the Algoma Lumber Company of Algoma, Klamath county, was born in San Francisco, California, May 6, 1878, and is a son of Chester L. and Anna E. (Hoffman) Hovey. The father was born in Quebec, Canada, while the mother was a native of Massachusetts. They were married in the east and about 1875 became residents of California. They now make their home in San Francisco, the father being a retired timber speculator, who formerly had extensive interests along that line in the Golden state but has now disposed of much of his holdings. In the family are a son and daughter, the younger being Rachel, now the wife of S. F. Fairweather, of San Francisco.

The only son, R. H. Hovey, resided at the place of his birth until about ten years ago and after pursuing his education in private schools entered the lumber business with his father under the firm name of the Hovey Timber Company. He was thus engaged for about ten years, having practical charge of the business in the purchase and sale of timber, while his father financed the enterprise. He has now disposed of most of his California interests and in 1909 he came to Klamath county, where he secured about ten thousand acres of timber land. At first his father was associated with him but later the former sold his interest to the Algoma Lumber Company in the fall of 1911. R. H. Hovey consolidated his interests with those of the company, of which he has since been manager. The company now owns about fifteen thousand acres of timber land on the east shore of Upper Klamath lake and in February, 1912, began the development work, building a sawmill with a capacity of one hundred thousand feet per shift or two hundred thousand feet of lumber per day. They are rapidly increasing the number of their employees, having now about two hundred. The company has platted the town site and secured the establishment of the Algoma postoffice and are building a logging road of standard gauge connecting with the Southern Pacific Railroad. This will be ten or twelve miles long and already four miles has been built. The company was incorporated in 1905 and its officers are: Arthur Gregory, of Redlands, California, president; F. P. Fay, of Los Angeles, vice president; E. J. Grant, of Los Angeles, secretary; and R. H. Hovey, general manager. Aside from his connection with the company Mr. Hovey has individual interests in timber lands in Oregon and California.

In 1903 occurred the marriage of Mr. Hovey and Miss Grace Garoutti, a native of Woodland, California, and a daughter of Judge Charles H. Garoutti, formerly of the supreme court of California but now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Hovey have one child, Charles G. Throughout his entire life Mr. Hovey has been connected with the line of business in which he is now engaged and long experience has thoroughly acquainted him with timber lands and valuations, enabling him to make judicious purchases and profitable sales. He possesses marked executive ability and enterprise and has already established himself in a foremost position as a representative lumberman of southern Oregon.

O. E. PATTERSON, M. D. While one of the younger representatives of the medical profession in Lake county, Dr. O. E. Patterson has already demonstrated his ability to cope with intricate problems such as continually confront the physician and thus has won a liberal and gratifying practice. He was born in Washington, D. C., in March, 1879.

Dr. Patterson was the youngest in a family of eight children and, having completed the high-school course, he pursued a course in a commercial college. He determined, however, upon a professional career and entered the medical department of the George Washington University of Washington, D. C., from which he was graduated with the class of 1908. He had previously spent seven years in the government service and it was while thus engaged that he took up the study of medicine. For a year he practiced in New Mexico, after which he made his way to Portland and spent seven months in the Good Samaritan Hospital. In the fall of 1909 he arrived in New Pine Creek, where he has since engaged in general practice, and has met with success. For two years he was proprietor of a drug store here but it was destroyed by fire in the fall of 1911. He is interested in mining, having invested in the Big Four and other mines, all producing high-grade ore. Dr. Patterson has firm belief in the west and its possibilities for development and does all in his power to promote the material progress and advance the upbuilding of the community in which he lives.

In 1907, in Fairfax Courthouse, Virginia, Dr. Patterson was united in marriage to Miss Cecelia Speer, a native of Virginia and a daughter of C. H. Speer, of Fairfax Courthouse. The three children of this marriage are: Robert, who was born in Washington, D. C.; Byron, born in Oregon; and Helen Virginia, born in California. Dr. Patterson is a master Mason and also an Odd Fellow and is deeply interested in both organizations because of their laudable purpose. His political support is given to the republican party but professional and business interests rather than political have always claimed his time and energies. He is conscientious in the performance of all professional service and broad reading keeps him constantly in touch with the most advanced ideas and methods of distinguished representatives of the science of medicine.

HORACE J. MEAD. In a little shack set in the midst of two hundred and eighty acres of land on the north fork of the Smith river lives one of the most remarkable old men in Douglas county. He resides in a crude cabin although his wealth goes beyond thousands. He works although his age and his success justify retirement and his eccentricity accompanies a mechanical skill which amounts almost to genius. He is an old man eighty years of age, a master mechanic and one of the most skilled workmen in iron and wood in the state of Oregon. He was born in Canada, on November 9, 1832, and is a son of Stephen and Lucy (Leonard) Mead, natives of Vermont, who settled in Canada and later removed to Ohio when their son was still an infant. After residing in Indiana they removed to Michigan and were prominent and successful as residents of that state. Mr. Mead was educated in the public schools of the different cities in which his parents resided and when he was seventeen years of age started across the plains for the California gold fields. He arrived in July, 1850, and was successful as a miner for ten years. He then went to Nevada where he worked at the trade which he had learned, that of millwright, and later journeyed to Idaho and thence to Oregon. His residence in this state dates from 1868 and his career has been identified with many phases of development. He worked in the mines for a short time just after his location in Oregon and was then actively identified with the building of a large mill on Jackson creek. He spent about four years in San Francisco, and one in Idaho, whence he returned overland to California. In the late '60s he again took up his residence in Oregon and has since lived in this state. He located on Smith river in 1875 and he now owns two hundred and eighty acres on the north fork where he makes his home and engages in the cultivation of the soil and in mechanical labors of a high order. He is a natural machinist and is one of the most expert workmen in iron and wood in Oregon. He maintains a little shop upon his farm and his time, for years past, has largely been devoted to expert mechanics. He has gained a reputation throughout the state as a man who can repair anything from the most delicate watch or instrument to the heaviest piece of machinery. He possesses a violin which is the product of his own workmanship and which is said by musicians to be a highly artistic instrument with all the beauty of tone possessed by a genuine Cremona. Mr. Mead is a master mechanic and has attained a comfortable fortune through his own labors.

In 1881 Mr. Mead was united in marriage to Mrs. Ellen Ashworth. He is a republican in his political views and a consistent believer in the principles of that party. He is numbered among the oldest of the pioneers on Smith river. The children who know him today see a white-haired, old man working at his mechanical duties as skillfully and with as much agility as he labored along the same line of activity when their fathers were boys. Such lives and such characters make toil honorable and eccentricity dignified.

MRS. LYDA POWELL, the widow of Philander Powell, who was one of the early pioneers of Jackson county, is a daughter of George and Maey (Mantkins) Lewis. She was born in Arkansas, May 13, 1834. Her parents were natives of Kentucky, in which state they were reared and married. The father at the time of the wedding was sixteen years of age and the mother fourteen. Immediately, following their marriage they took up their residence in Arkansas and there continued to live during the remaining years of their lives.

Mrs. Powell was reared in her father's home in Arkansas and in 1851, when seventeen years of age, was united in marriage to Philander Powell, who was a native of Illinois. Shortly afterward Mr. and Mrs. Powell crossed the plains with ox teams to California, driving with them a big herd of cattle. They completed their journey in the month of January, 1860, having been in continuous travel for a period of six months and twelve days. On reaching California they located in San Joaquin county, twelve miles north of Stockton, at which place they continued to live until 1865. In that year they crossed the Siskiyou mountains by wagon to Jackson county, Oregon, and located on Emigrant creek, where Mr. Powell took up a homestead of eighty acres to which he later added by purchase until he was the owner of two hundred and forty acres. There he continued to live until called to his final rest in 1893. Mrs. Powell still maintains her residence on the old homestead. By her marriage she became the mother of six children, three of whom are living, namely: Rachael, the wife of George Grow, of Jackson county; Livonia, who married Andrew Dozier, also of that county; and Millie, the wife of John Dozier, of Jackson county. Mrs. Powell is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and is one of the well known and highly esteemed pioneer citizens of the county in which she lives.

OTTO MATTSOON is living retired in a comfortable home on Smith river, about five miles above Gardiner. It is fitting that the evening of his life should thus be passed in quiet retirement, for through many years he was an active factor in business circles. He was born in Finland, December 25, 1837, a son of Matts and Mary (Abrahams) Erickson, both of whom were natives of Finland, where they lived and died.

Otto Mattsson was reared at home, acquiring his education in the common schools and in the school of navigation. He began a seafaring life at the early age of fourteen years, working at that time on coasting vessels. In the summer of 1857 he shipped aboard a vessel which loaded at Kronstadt with lumber for London, England, and from that metropolis they proceeded to Newcastle to load coal, but Mr. Mattsson left the vessel there and shipped aboard a Norwegian vessel bound for Lisbon, Portugal. From that point he sailed to Norway, where he left that ship and became a sailor on a Spanish vessel bound for Spain. He next went aboard an English ship bound for England and after reaching that country shipped aboard a German steamer making the run to many Baltic ports, touching at Kronstadt, St. Petersburg, Koenigsberg, Antwerp and Hull, England. From St. Petersburg he shipped aboard an English vessel for the East Indies and in due time landed at Calcutta. He afterward went up the Red Sea to Abyssinia, Africa, where he left that vessel and joined the English army. He fought through the Abyssinian war and later shipped aboard a vessel bound for Aden, Arabia. Thence he returned to Calcutta and from India proceeded to England. He afterward again went to the East Indies, landing at Madras, and thence proceeded to Singapore. From that point the vessel sailed to Batavia, in the Dutch East Indies, and later to Surabaya. From that point they sailed to Banvu-Wangi, Holland East Indies, and thence to Amsterdam, Holland, and on to Antwerp, Belgium. From the last-named place Mr. Mattsson sailed on an American vessel for the United States in the year 1867. After reaching this country he sailed on an American ship to Stettin, Germany, and thence to Rügen. Later he set sail for Boston but the vessel was shipwrecked on the voyage, Mr. Mattsson being rescued by a life-saving crew on the west coast of Sweden. From that point he again shipped to Antwerp and later proceeded to New York. Still he continued his seafaring life, shipping on board a vessel that sailed around Cape Horn to Portland, making the voyage in less than one hundred days. While he has since made a few short shore voyages this practically ended his seafaring life.

Mr. Mattsson arrived in Portland on the 5th of April, 1869, but remained there only a short time, going to San Francisco, where for seven years he worked in the sugar refinery of Claus Spreckels. In September, 1877, he came to Douglas county, Oregon, locating on Smith river, where he has lived continuously to the present time, his home being located about five and a half miles above Gardiner.

In San Francisco, on the 12th of April, 1875, Mr. Mattsson was married to Miss Anna Paulson, a native of Denmark, who came to the United States in September, 1874. They had no children of their own but have reared an adopted daughter, Emma, who is now the wife of Edward Sten and resides on the farm with Mr. and Mrs. Mattsson. The family are all members of the Lutheran church and are highly esteemed throughout the community. Mr. Mattsson's experiences have been of a most varied character and few men have more intimate knowledge of the world, its people and their manners and customs, than he, for he has visited many ports and come into contact with the people in their native environment. He relates many interesting incidents of his voyages that make him an entertaining talker.

ALBERT E. COLLINGS is the faithful guardian of his widowed and aged mother with whom he lives in Applegate valley near Watkins, in this state. He was born in Jackson county, August 21, 1880, and is the son of F. O. and Sophia (Lewis) Collings, his father being a native of Pennsylvania and his mother of California. He was reared at home and received his early education in the public common schools. The family emigrated to this state at an early date and have since maintained their residence in this commonwealth. The father of the subject of this review having passed away in the year 1903 was buried in this county. His widow now makes her home with her son, Albert E. Collings.

Mr. Collings owns forty acres of good agricultural land located near Watkins, in this county. Here he maintains his home, giving shelter and loving care to his widowed mother and confining his attention entirely to the cultivation and improvement of his place.

JOHN A. TAYLOR is one of the well known farmers of Jackson county, where he is successfully engaged in the cultivation of two hundred and sixty-four acres of land located on Emigrant creek. He is a native of Jackson county, his birth having occurred on the home ranch, where he now lives, on February 8, 1864. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Taylor, of whom extended mention is made in the review of Mrs. Mary J. McCallister, published in another part of this work.

John A. Taylor was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools. At the age of eighteen years he engaged in farming for himself on his father's home ranch, which he operated under a lease until one year after his marriage. He then moved to Klamath county and was there engaged continuously in the cattle and dairy business for a period of eight years. He then returned to Jackson county and settled upon his father's farm, the cause of his removal being the failure of his father's health, which sometime later resulted in his death. Mr. Taylor has since continued to remain upon the old homestead, consisting of two hundred and sixty-four acres, of which he has been the owner since the death of his mother and where he is successfully engaged in diversified farming and dairying.

Mr. Taylor was married September 7, 1885, to Miss Margaret A. McGee, of Williams Creek, Josephine county, Oregon, who is a daughter of James O. McGee, now deceased, who settled in Oregon many years ago. To Mr. and Mrs. Taylor three children have been born, only one of whom,

Thelma M., survives. Mr. Taylor is independent in his political views, giving the benefit of his support to the party and the candidate whom he believes represents the best interests of the people. Mrs. Taylor is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. Her husband is one of the reliable and substantial men of the county in which he lives and is a man interested in any enterprise intended to improve and advance the condition of the people of the community in which he lives.

DAVID STUMP is numbered among Oregon's pioneer builders. He came to this state in 1845, long before the question of admission to the Union was discussed. In fact, all Oregon was but sparsely settled and there were great stretches of territory into which the white man had not penetrated. David Stump became familiar with the experiences of frontier life here, and bore a helpful part in promoting early development and improvement. He was born in Ohio, October 29, 1819, and was a son of John and Barbara (Summers) Stump. His young life was spent in his native state and his education was there acquired. In early manhood, however, he removed to Iowa where he engaged in surveying. Among other surveys he laid out the town of Oskaloosa and was prominently known in connection with his profession in that part of the country. The opportunities of the great west, however, attracted him. He realized that this immense territory must hold advantages for those who were willing to face hardships and dangers, and in 1845 made the long and arduous journey across the plains with Oregon as his destination. At length, he settled upon a tract of land in Polk county and began its cultivation but later he sold that property and went to California during the excitement following the discovery of gold there.

Upon his return to Oregon Mr. Stump was married, on the 10th of March, 1850, to Catherine Elizabeth Chamberlin, a daughter of Aaron and Catherine (Viles) Chamberlin. Mr. and Mrs. Stump began domestic life in a log cabin, six miles south of Monmouth, on a donation claim, and in connection with stock-raising Mr. Stump engaged in surveying. His interests were carefully managed, his industry was unflagging and his energy brought to him a substantial measure of success that enabled him in 1878 to leave the farm and take up his abode in Monmouth, possessed of sufficient capital to supply his future needs. His remaining days therefore, were spent in honorable retirement.

Mr. and Mrs. Stump became the parents of two sons and two daughters: J. S., who lives in Nome, Alaska; Mary, the widow of T. F. Campbell; Cassie B. and John B. The last mentioned three are residents of Monmouth. The family circle was broken by the hand of death when the husband and father passed away February 21, 1886. He had been active in public affairs and was a recognized leader in the ranks of the republican party. He was elected on its ticket to the office of county surveyor and in 1874 was chosen to represent his district in the state legislature. He was also greatly interested in the cause of education and for a number of years served as a trustee of Christian College. He belonged to the Christian church and was one of its deacons at the time of his demise. In thought, purpose and action he sought the higher things in life and cooperated heartily in movements for the material, intellectual, political, social and moral progress of his community. He was numbered with those pioneers who paved the way for the present development and civilization of the northwest, to whom all honor and gratitude are due.

J. C. AVERY. No history of Corvallis would be complete without extended and prominent reference to J. C. Avery, the founder and promoter of the town. He was closely associated with the progress and upbuilding of the state in many ways and was one of the honored pioneers to whom Oregon owes a debt of gratitude for what they accomplished here. He was born in Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, June 9, 1817, a son of Cyrus Avery, who was a native of Connecticut, whence he went to the Wyoming valley of Pennsylvania, there following farming. He died at Tunkhannock, that state.

His son, J. C. Avery, was a pupil in the schools of Wilkes-Barre and when a young man went to Stark county, Illinois, where he engaged in surveying and in the real-estate and loan business. He was married near Wyoming, Pennsylvania, March 13, 1841, to Miss Martha Marsh, whose birth occurred at Kingston, Luzerne county, January 14, 1824. She was a daughter of Daniel C. Marsh, a native of Connecticut, who removed to Kingston, where he engaged in teaching. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Esther Pettebone, was also born in the Charter Oak state and soon after their marriage they removed to New York and later to the Wyoming valley of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Marsh was a daughter of Oliver Pettebone, a pioneer of the Keystone state, living there through the period of Indian troubles, his brother having been killed in the Wyoming massacre.

In 1834 J. C. Avery became a resident of Illinois, casting in his lot with the pioneers of that state. He there carried on farming until 1845, when he started across the plains to Oregon, making the long and arduous journey to the Pacific coast for the purpose of finding a location for his family. He entered a claim of six hundred and forty acres at the junction of the Willamette and Mary rivers and took up his abode thereon in 1846, building a log cabin. The following year he was joined by his wife and children, who had traveled westward with the company commanded by Captain Sawyer, who was one of the party that had come with Mr. Avery to Oregon in 1845. Captain Sawyer then returned to Illinois for his family and Mr. Avery arranged that his wife and children should return with the captain's party, for it would have taken him eighteen months to go to Illinois and back, and he feared lest his claim might be forfeited in that time. Mrs. Avery's outfit consisted of a five yoke ox team and a wagon filled with provisions. She also brought along two milch cows and after traveling for six months reached her destination. She was met in eastern Oregon by her husband, who then guided the party over the Barlow road, across the Cascades, and settled his family upon his claim at Corvallis. They had started on the 2d of April from Stark county, Illinois, and had crossed the Mississippi at Burlington, Iowa, the Missouri at St. Joseph and thence proceeded up the Platte river to the Oregon trail. After crossing the Missouri the train numbered eighty wagons, but from Independence Rock only six wagons came on to Benton county, arriving October 2, 1847.

When gold was found in California Mr. Avery journeyed southward and engaged in mining in that state. He spent the succeeding winter at home but in the spring of 1849 again went to California, where he remained through the summer, making a few thousand dollars. Upon the return trip he brought with him a stock of general merchandise which he had purchased at San Francisco and shipped to Portland, thence up the Willamette to the present site of Corvallis, opening the first store in the town. It was not until the following year, however, that the town was laid out. He called it Marysville, but some confusion arose over the fact of there being another town of the same name in California, so that during his service in the legislature he succeeded in having the name changed from Marysville to Corvallis, meaning the core or center of the valley. It was also due to Mr. Avery that the post-office was established here and he served as its first postmaster. He was also the general postal agent for Oregon and Washington. He continued to engage in merchandising at Corvallis until within four or five years of his death. He rented part of his ranch and also laid out additions to the town which have become principal parts of the city. He built several stores and in many ways contributed to the growth, upbuilding and progress of the city which he had founded and which today stands as a monument to his enterprise and progressive spirit. He was greatly interested in the building of the Corvallis & Eastern Railroad but died before its completion. He was chosen a member of the committee of three, his associates being J. F. Miller and B. F. Doughet, to make the selection of a site for the Oregon Agricultural College. They were attracted by the broad meadows of Lake county—the best lands in the state open for selection at that time—and Mr. Avery took an active and helpful interest in the upbuilding of the college, his labors being very beneficial. His political allegiance was always given to the democratic party and he was twice elected to represent his district in the state legislature. His fraternal relations were with the Masonic order.

To Mr. and Mrs. Avery were born eight children of whom six are living, while Charles and James C. died in Corvallis. The others are Punderson, Napoleon, George, Mrs. Florence James, Mrs. Frances Helm and Mrs. Gertrude Irvine. He died June, 1876, at the age of fifty-nine years and Mrs. Avery passed away in January, 1911. Mr. Avery is numbered among the real promoters of Oregon's growth and greatness and his name should be inscribed high on the roll of its honored citizens.

MRS. MARY STEWART. In a history of Benton county, Oregon, there can be no more interesting record than that of Mrs. Mary Stewart, one of the most picturesque and remarkable characters in this section of the state. The second white woman to enter Benton county, she has witnessed its growth and development from the very first, and her memory is a connecting link which joins the primitive past, fraught with difficulties, hardships and privations but holding out vast possibilities for future greatness, to the progressive present which is witnessing the fulfillment of many of those rich promises. She has passed the ninety-first milestone on life's journey, for her birth occurred on the 2d of June, 1821, on the Ohio river in Switzerland county, Indiana. She is a daughter of William and Rachael (Mounts) Scott, the former a native of Virginia, of Scotch descent, and the latter a representative of an old New Jersey family, in which state her birth occurred. The maternal grandfather, Thomas Mounts, served for seven years as a spy in the American army during the Revolutionary war, and later in the same capacity among the Indians. He would never put boots on his feet but always wore moccasins, and lived to the very remarkable age of one hundred years. The paternal grandmother of Mrs. Stewart was Mary Prior, in whose life history occurred chapters as exciting and thrilling as any to be found in strange tales of fiction. Her girlhood was mostly passed in her parents' home on the Kentucky frontier, during a period when the Indians were particularly troublesome and vicious. She was a maiden of fourteen years when she, with her mother and a babe of six months, were stolen by the Indians, who massacred her father, the rest of the family and a number of negro slaves. Later the babe was killed and the mother, because she refused to dance around the body of her infant, was bound to a tree and burned by the infuriated savages. The Indians then crossed the Ohio river with their girl prisoner and for ten days traveled through the timber to their village. When the young braves started upon another raid the maiden was left in charge of the squaws and older Indians, but escaped and, traveling in the night, hid by day in hollow logs, subsisting on roots found in the forest. On the ninth day after her escape the Indians, close in pursuit, passed directly over the hollow log in which she lay, and while there hiding she was bitten by a snake. However, she had learned what roots to use in such emergency, and after applying them was forced to lie still for three days. Once more resuming her journey she came to the Ohio river, across which she was forced to swim. In the meantime the Indians were trying to find her and the United States soldiers from a Kentucky fort had been detailed to search for her, but, evading the former and missing the latter, she made her way alone to the fort, where she was adopted by one of the officers, retaining, however, her own name.

Her son, William Scott, the father of Mrs. Stewart, entered land in Switzerland county, Indiana, in the cultivation of which he was engaged for many years, and there both he and his wife passed away. In their family were nine children, of whom our subject was the fifth in order of birth. She had two brothers and two sisters older than herself and four brothers younger, but she is the only one of the family now living. She remained with her parents in the Indiana home until the time of her marriage, in 1840, when she became the wife of John Stewart, the marriage, however, occurring in Missouri. Mr. Stewart was born in Virginia, February 12, 1809, on the same day, in the same month and year as was Abraham Lincoln, of whom he was a close friend and warm admirer, and with whom he served in the Black Hawk war. After his marriage in 1840 Mr. Stewart went to Holt county, Missouri, and there made his home until 1845, in which year he crossed the plains with ox team to Oregon, arriving in the Willamette valley on the 1st of November, 1845. He spent the winter of that year on the Tualatin plains, about twenty miles west of the present site of Portland, and in March, 1846, went to the Rickreall river, in what is now Polk county, where he remained for a few months, during which time his daughter Cerenda was born. In that period he plowed ten acres of land which he sowed to wheat, and on the first of August, 1846, he took up his abode on a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres, which he had located in December of the previous year. This property now joins the corporation limits of Corvallis on the north, and remained his place of residence until the time of his death. He built thereupon a fine home at the cost of four thousand dollars, but this was destroyed by fire two years previous to his demise, and after that he erected the house in which his widow now resides, at No. 209 North Second street, located on the main street of the town and now in the midst of the business district. He passed away February 28, 1885, after a life devoted to agricultural pursuits. In addition to general farming he also engaged extensively in stock-raising and made a specialty of draft horses, raising some of the finest animals in his section of the state. Successful in his chosen life work, he was the owner of three sections of valuable land at the time of his death, and was accounted one of the wealthy and substantial men of Benton county. Although his private affairs were extensive and demanded a large share of his time and attention, he never permitted them to preclude his interest and participation in other matters, which were of vital interest to the community in which he made his home. While living in Missouri he was elected to the office of judge, which he most capably filled throughout his residence in that state, but after his removal to Oregon he refused all political offices. Although a democrat, he was a great admirer of Abraham Lincoln and supported him at the polls. He was a faithful and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, the first meeting of that denomination having been held in his home, and for several years thereafter that congregation continued to gather at his house as a place of worship. He was a champion of material, political and moral progress, recognizing that each has its place in the scheme of the world, and his labors were an element of growth along all those lines during the period of his residence in Benton county.

Mr. and Mrs. Stewart became the parents of two children, John W. and Cerenda, but both are now deceased. The elder, who was born in Missouri in 1841, died in February, 1909. He had married Mahaley Stewart, who now resides in Corvallis, and they had one child, Lenora, who became the wife of Charles Small, of Corvallis, by whom she has two children, Fred and Helen. The daughter, Cerenda, was born in Oregon on the 18th of May, 1846, and passed away in Corvallis March 6, 1911. She married Minor Swick, and at her death left one son, John Minor Swick, who now resides with Mrs. Stewart.

Since the death of her husband Mrs. Stewart has capably directed the business affairs entrusted to her, manifesting great ability and wisdom in that direction. She gave one hundred acres of land to each of her children, holding the balance, and today the old donation claim located by her husband remains intact, no portion of it having been sold. She has disposed of the other two sections left to her, however. She has ever been an active worker in the Methodist church, doing all in her power to further its work, and until about three years ago served as steward. She holds membership in the ladies' auxiliary of the Grand Army of the Republic and has ever been a leader in the social circles in which she has moved. Two decades have come and gone since she passed the Psalmist's allotted span of three score years and ten, and today, in the ninety-second year of her age, she is remarkably well preserved, time in its flight having touched her but lightly. In spite of the snows of many winters that rest upon her head she possesses all of her faculties and retains much of the vigor of youth. She has good eye-sight, is an excellent correspondent and conversationalist and has an extraordinarily clear mind and fine memory, especially for dates and people. Consequently her mind is a rich storehouse of knowledge concerning the history of Benton county and that portion of the state from its very first chapters, for she is the oldest resident of the county in age and the oldest in years of residence in Corvallis, and, as far as is now known, in the county. She was the first white woman to settle in Marysville, now Corvallis, and the second to locate in Benton county, Mrs. Lewis having preceded her to this district about two months. She was personally acquainted with all of Oregon's first officials, including Governor George Abernethy, Samuel B. Thurston, delegate to congress, W. G. T. Vant, postmaster general, and Joseph L. Meek, marshal, who was an old neighbor, and she knew very well Dr. John McLaughlin, who by many was called the "Father of Oregon." Few trees were to be seen in the district when she came to Benton county, only a small number growing along the river, the only vegetation being the tall prairie grass. She has seen all of the houses built in Corvallis, has witnessed the organization of each industry and the inception of every line of activity in the town and surrounding territory, and has eagerly watched every step taken in the work of development and improvement which has raised flourishing and enterprising cities upon the prairie which was wild and uncultivated at the time of her arrival here. Throughout the period of her residence in Oregon the history of the state has been in the making and it is remarkable that within the memory of one person has occurred so much that has had to do with the founding of a great territory that has long since taken its place among the wealthiest and most productive states of the Union. Through all these years her interest has ever been in the growth and advancement of Oregon and today her adopted state numbers her among its oldest and most honored pioneer residents.

CHARLES C. JOHNSON is one of the largest dairy farmers of Coos county. His highly improved ranch of three hundred and twenty-two acres is located one mile from Cooston Landing, Coos county, where he is successfully engaged in mixed and dairy farming. He was born in Finland, in 1862, and is a son of Charles and Johanna (Josephson) Johnson, both of whom were natives of Finland. The father emigrated to Oregon at a very early date, settling at Coos bay, where he continued to live for a period of forty years. He then removed to Berkeley, California, where he now maintains his residence. He and his wife became the parents of six children, namely: Charles C., the subject of this review; Sophie, deceased; Adelia, who resides in Finland; John, a resident of Seattle, Washington; and two children, who died in infancy.

Charles C. Johnson was reared at home and received his early education in the schools of his native land. At the age of nineteen years he emigrated to the United States settling in San Francisco, where he was engaged as an employe of Captain A. M. Simpson in the shipyards for a brief period.

He later engaged in work in the forests of California and continued in that employment for six months and then removed to Coos bay, settling at North Bend, October 13, 1882, and for sometime, thereafter, was engaged in work in the shipyards. He later purchased eighty acres of land, which he afterward sold and then bought three hundred- and twenty-two acres near Cooston, where he established his home and has since been successfully engaged in farming, making a specialty of dairying, for which purpose he keeps at present twenty-five graded cows.

Mr. Johnson was united in marriage, December 1, 1889, to Miss Hilda Smith, a daughter of Gustave and Ulrika (Middlemore) Smith, and to them the following children were born: Ulrika, deceased; Vednela, the wife of Victor Stauli, a farmer of Coos county and the father of five children; John, a resident of Washington and the father of three children; Hilda, the wife of the subject of this review; and Manda and Jonas, both deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Johnson six children have been born. Cal, who was born in 1891, resides at home with his parents. George, born January 2, 1892, is pursuing a course in dairying in the Oregon State Agricultural College at Corvallis. Harry, whose birth occurred April 4, 1893, resides at home. August, born August 16, 1894, is still under the parental roof. Lillian, who was born January 1, 1897, resides at home. John, who completes the family, was born February 23, 1901, and is attending school.

Mr. Johnson gives his political support to the democratic party. His fraternal relations are with the Woodmen of the World and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he has been a member for the past ten years. He is one of the well known dairy farmers of Coos county and a man respected among his associates and acquaintances for his integrity of character and industrious habits.

GEORGE W. SMITH. In his capacity as county commissioner George W. Smith is exerting a vital force in the development and upbuilding of the county, fathering many projects which have to do with the substantial improvement of conditions throughout the district. He is one of Ohio's contributions to Oregon's citizenship, his birth having occurred in Montgomery county, that state, August 17, 1851, his parents being Joseph and Eliza (Hoops) Smith. The father, who followed agricultural pursuits throughout his entire life, was born at Hagerstown, Maryland, and by the death of his parents was left an orphan when only two years of age. He was bound out, his term to continue until he had attained his majority, but at the age of sixteen he ran away and, going to Ohio, located in Montgomery county, where he spent many years and where he was married. His wife, who was born in Ohio, on the same farm, upon which occurred the birth of her son George, was a daughter of Evan and Susan Hoops, who originally came from Virginia, being numbered among the first settlers of Ohio. The father passed away upon the farm which he had secured in Montgomery county, that state, upon which his daughter and grandson had been born, while Mrs. Hoops' death occurred later in Indiana. Some years after their marriage Joseph and Eliza Smith left Ohio to take up their residence in Indiana, and there both died upon the home farm, the father in the '60s and the mother at the age of forty-eight years. In their family were five children, as follows: Christian, whose death occurred when he was ten years of age; Jane, the wife of W. G. Lane, of Corvallis; George W., of this review; John H., a resident of Fresno, California; and Mary, who married Smith Lewis, the superintendent of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows home at Lexington, Kentucky.

The education of George W. Smith began in the schools of Montgomery county, Ohio, where the period of his boyhood was passed, and was later completed in the schools of Miami county, Indiana, to which section he accompanied his parents when a youth of fifteen years. He remained a resident of that county until 1879, in the meantime carrying on agricultural pursuits, at first assisting his father in the work of the home farm and later on his own account. In that year he crossed the plains to California and four years later, in 1883, made his way up the coast to Oregon, taking up his abode in Benton county on a farm which then adjoined the city limits of Corvallis but a portion of which has since become a part of the city corporation. On that place he carried on general farming until about eighteen years ago, and for fifteen years was engaged in the stock business, conducting a meat market, his business venture proving most successful and returning to him a gratifying income. At the time he disposed of his farm it was an exceptionally well improved property and ranked among the valuable ones of that section of the county. He has built six homes in Corvallis, which are the visible evidence of his business sagacity and enterprise, and he owns the residence in which he lives, located at 860 Madison street, near the entrance to the college grounds. The house is a most attractive and comfortable dwelling, and is surrounded by a beautiful, well kept lawn which the local newspapers speak of as the finest in the city. For the past seven years Mr. Smith has withdrawn from commercial circles and is directing his entire attention to the duties of public office.

It was in October, 1894, that Mr. Smith was united in marriage to Miss Martha Frances Jones, who was born near Dallas, Polk county, Oregon, February 29, 1856, and has spent her entire life in the Willamette valley. Her parents were Marvil M. and Julia Ann (Sampson) Jones, the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of Indiana. The mother had come to Oregon in 1845, crossing the plains with an ox team and arriving here when Oregon City was the only trading post in the state, while the rather arrived later. They were married in Polk county, that being the second union for both of them, and there Mr. Jones secured a donation claim. This he later sold, after which he removed to Yamhill county, where his death occurred. His wife died in Arizona. Mrs. Smith came to Benton county in the year 1885, and she and a sister, Mrs. Eliza Ingersoll, of Spokane, Washington, are the only surviving members of a family of five children born to their parents. Mr. Jones had been a strong republican and conducted the postoffice at Bridgeport, Polk county, during and for some time after the war.

For twenty-five years Mr. Smith has been a Master Mason, and is a worthy exemplar of that order. His political allegiance is given to the republican party and he has ever done all in his power to further its influence. He also served as a member of the city council of Corvallis for four years. At one time he was his party's choice for sheriff but was defeated, and on the 1st of January, 1906, was elected county commissioner, having served continuously since, his present term expiring on the 1st of January, 1914. In that capacity he is laboring earnestly for the betterment of conditions existing throughout the county and many improvements owe their existence to his untiring efforts. He will always be remembered as the promoter of the steel bridge project in Benton county, for through him the new steel county bridge across the Willamette river at Corvallis has been erected, at a cost of seventy thousand dollars. It has been during his term of office that all of the steel bridges of the county have been built, there now being in use four such structures, while two more will be completed in 1912. Having the interests of his county truly at heart, he has not only labored earnestly to conserve her welfare in various directions but has proven himself a true exponent of progress, doing all in his power to further its promotion along material lines. In private life he is guided by sterling qualities and in every relation of life has been found true to upright principles and honorable manhood.

SAMUEL HARDMAN. Almost two-thirds of a century ago, when Linn county was still but a wild and sparsely settled region, Samuel Hardman took up his abode within its borders and assisted in the work of pioneer development. He was a leading factor in the building of Albany and throughout his active business career was identified with general agricultural pursuits, following both farming and stock-raising. In his demise the community lost one of its most respected and honored pioneer settlers and his record well deserves a place in its annals. He was born in Ohio in 1818 and was reared to manhood on his father's farm in that state. He was married at the age of twenty-four years, and he and his wife spent the first six years of their domestic life in Indiana. In 1847, having determined to establish their home in the far west, they crossed the plains with ox teams and after arriving in Oregon took up a donation land claim of six hundred and forty acres in Linn county. This property, on which Mr. Hardman spent the remainder of his life, and which is now in possession of his widow, is six miles northeast of Lebanon, on the Lebanon and Seio road. Our subject found the place wild and primitive but resolutely undertook the arduous task of cultivation and improvement and transformed it into a highly productive and valuable farm. In connection with the cultivation of cereals he devoted considerable attention to stock-raising and in both branches of his business won well deserved success. He was deeply interested in matters pertaining to general welfare and ever placed his aid and influence on the side of public progress and improvement. He assisted in the building of schoolhouses and roads, helped to erect and organize a large flour mill in Albany and, as above stated, took a leading part in the upbuilding of that town. His widow owns three hundred and twenty acres of excellent farming land in Linn county and its cultivation claims the attention of her son Riley. She is eighty-nine years of age but has retained her faculties in a remarkable degree and is wonderfully active in both mind and body.

On the 8th of September, 1842, Mr. Hardman was united in wedlock to Miss Mary Backus, a native of Ohio, by whom he had the following children: Benjamin and Christopher, both deceased; Elizabeth, the wife of Isaac Long, of Albany, Oregon; Riley, who married Miss Ellie Overholser and is the father of four children; Clarence, who has passed away; Alva, living at Cazadero, Oregon; Ethel, who lives at home and attends high school; Walter, who is likewise attending school; Clay and David E., both of whom are residents of Portland, Oregon; Clinton, who makes his home at Albany, Oregon; and Sarah E. and Mary E., both of whom are deceased.

Samuel Hardman gave his political allegiance to the republican party but his aspirations were not in the line of public office holding. He was a devout member of the German Baptist church and exemplified its teachings in his daily life. His widow has been a resident of Linn county for sixty-five years and is well and favorably known here, having gained the friendship and esteem of all with whom she has come into contact.

HENRY C. HEDRICK. One of the most enterprising and successful of the many practical and progressive farmers who are making Douglas county, Oregon, one of the most fertile and productive sections in the northwest, is Henry C. Hedrick, cultivating four hundred and forty-eight acres of land in Fin Pot valley and meeting with a measure of success which has been continuous since the beginning of his agricultural career. Mr. Hedrick was born in Oregon City, Oregon, on October 31, 1852, and is a son of John and Louisa (Jackson) Hedrick, of whom further mention is made elsewhere in this work.

He was reared at home and educated in the district schools of his native county and in Wilbur Academy. He completed his studies when he was twenty years old and immediately began active life for himself, renting land in Tin Pot valley which he at once began to improve and cultivate. His success was rapid from the beginning. The first year his income from his farm amounted to one thousand dollars, which at that time was a remarkable sum. After one year in Tin Pot valley Mr. Hedrick removed to the Hard-scrabble district where he purchased eighty acres of land which formerly belonged to the Swearingen estate. To this his father added twenty adjoining acres, thus making his farm consist of one hundred acres of the finest land in Douglas county. He brought this to a high state of cultivation and was successful in this venture as he had been in his first. In 1882 he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres of land nine miles north of Drain and made this property his home until 1902 when he bought four hundred and forty-eight acres in Tin Pot valley, where he is now residing. During the ten years of his occupancy he has made his farm one of the most attractive and productive places in the district. His methods are practical and he carries on his pursuits along efficient and progressive lines.

On July 1, 1877, Mr. Hedrick was united in marriage to Miss Gertrude Putnam, a daughter of Charles F. Putnam, and to this union have been born seven children: Nellie, the wife of William Taylor, of Douglas county; Mabel, who married John Swearingen, of Tin Pot valley; Eva, the wife of L. C. Applegate, of Gold Hill, Jackson county; Roy, who is farming in the Tin Pot valley; Ada, who married Leroy Redford, of Tin Pot valley; Gertrude, the wife of Horace Whitney, who is identified with the government forestry service in Jackson county; and Lulu, at home.

Mr. Hedrick is a republican in his political views and intelligently interested in local affairs. His wife is a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal church. He is an intelligent and efficient farmer, interested in his work and desirous of improving it and has added something year by year to his own prosperity and to the methods of practical and productive agriculture.

A. LEFEVER. For the past seventeen years A. Lefever has been devoting his entire time and attention to the operation of a fine farm of one hundred and four acres, which he owns, located three and a half miles from McMinnville. He is the eldest child born to A. and Rosalie (Jarvis) Lefever, his natal day being the 7th of May, 1849. The father, who passed away in 1886, spent his entire life in Canada, in the army of which country he served for a time during his early manhood. Later he engaged in milling and subsequently became the owner of a plant of his own, which he operated until his death. The paternal grandfather was born and reared in France and upon attaining his manhood joined the army, remaining in the service until he came to America. The mother of our subject was a native of Canada and there she died more than forty years ago. To Mr. and Mrs. Lefever were born five children, the other four, in order of birth, being as follows: Rosalie, the wife of David Lefever, of Massachusetts; Julia, who married B. Schumalle, also of Massachusetts; Joseph, who is a resident of Marquette, Michigan; and Jerry, who is living in Rhode Island.

A. Lefever was given but a meager schooling, as at the age of thirteen years he left home and became self-supporting. He joined a railroad construction crew and remained with them for three years, at the end of which time he crossed the border into the United States, locating at Marquette, Michigan, where he worked on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad. In 1870 he removed to Minnesota and during the succeeding two years was employed on the Northern Pacific. His next removal was to Portland, this state, where he located in 1877, and during the following year he worked for Joseph Gaston, constructing the narrow gauge road from Dayton to Sheridan. At the end of that time he removed to Dayton and was engaged on the line from St. Joseph to Corvallis and in 1880 he worked on the railroad between Woodburn and Coburn. In 1881 he took the contract for the construction work on the road between Roseburg and the Siskiyou mountains, which he completed in three years, and then helped to finish the narrow gauge road to Portland, working at this until 1886. He then withdrew from railroading and again took up his residence in Dayton, turning his attention to agricultural pursuits. He bought a ranch in Yamhill county, which he still operates, later removing to his present place. During the long period of his occupancy Mr. Lefever has wrought extensive improvements on his ranch, which was nothing but brush land when he settled here. He engages in general farming, making a specialty of hop-raising, and is meeting with most gratifying returns from both occupations. Although progressive he conducts his operations along practical lines, giving his personal supervision to every branch of the work. His acreage is mostly beaverdam land and it all lays well, having good natural drainage. Mr. Lefever is a self-made and practically a self-educated man, having begun for himself at an age when the majority of lads are hardly deemed capable of directing their lives. His training has been in the hard but most excellent school of practical experience, having brought him into contact with people of all classes and enabled him to become familiar with a large portion of the country. He has always been an observant man, who was ready to learn and has applied himself diligently and painstakingly to the performance of every undertaking. Such success as has rewarded his efforts is highly merited, for he has always worked toward a definite purpose, all of his energies being directed toward the same end.

In 1872 Mr. Lefever was united in marriage to Miss Phoebe Blake, who died in Dayton in 1885, and unto them there were born three children: Jennie, the wife of Ennis Alderman, a farmer of Dayton; Minnie, the wife of Thurston Daniels, of Los Angeles; and Phoebe, who married Samuel Sutton, of Malheur county, Oregon. In 1887 Mr. Lefever married Miss Claretta De Ford, who was born in Yamhill county and is a daughter of George and Jane (Croddy) De Ford. The parents were both natives of Franklin county, Indiana, the father of French and the mother of German extraction. They crossed the plains to Oregon with wagon and ox team in 1866, settling on a claim near Wheatland, Yamhill county. The father, who was a carpenter, in connection with the cultivation of his ranch, worked at his trade. He was killed in 1883 by falling from a building which he was constructing at Dayton, but the mother had preceded him in death many years, passing away in 1869. The family of Mr. and Mrs. De Ford numbered eight, as follows: Lucinda, who is living in Portland; Elizabeth, who died in the '60s; Leonard, a carpenter and builder of Portland; Charlie, who was drowned at the age of twenty-five; Lucile, the wife of Charles Franklin, of Spokane; Mrs. Lefever; and two, who died in infancy. Mrs. Lefever was reared in this county, obtaining her education in the schools of Dayton, and resided at home until her marriage. To Mr. Lefever and his second wife have been born three children: Rosalie, who was graduated from the high school and married Orville Andrus, of Sherwood, Oregon; Robert A., who is still at home; and Viels, who is attending school.

In matters of faith Mr. Lefever was reared a Roman Catholic and his wife is a Protestant. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order and the Odd Fellows, and formerly he was also affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, his connection with the two former organizations being with Dayton lodges. In his political views Mr. Lefever is independent, never having identified himself with any party, but always casting his ballot in support of such men and measures as he deems best qualified to protect the interests of the majority. He deserves much credit for the degree of prosperity he has attained, his success being entirely attributable to his own efforts and his intelligence in directing his various undertakings.

MARTIN STANOVICH is foreman for the Lindenberger Company, Inc., operating a cold storage plant. He was born in Dalmacia, Austria, on the 6th of January, 1865, a son of Antony and Margaret Stanovich, who were natives of the same land, where they continued to reside until called to the home beyond, the father passing away in 1894 and the mother in 1899. They had a family of five sons and two daughters, of whom Martin and his brother Jacob are residents of the new world, while the others are still in Austria.

An uneventful boyhood, with comparatively little opportunity for advancement, awakened in Martin Stanovich a desire to secure better advantages than were afforded him in his native land, and in 1890 he came to America, first settling in Clifton, Oregon. There he worked in the fisheries for six years, after which he went to Astoria where he established a cooperage plant, which he conducted for four years, having previously learned that trade in his native country. At the end of that time he accepted employment in the cold storage plant of the Lindenberger Company, being made foreman, which position he still fills. That he has made substantial advance along the road to prosperity is indicated by the fact that he owns a fine home in Astoria and also other residence property which he rents.

On the 19th of August, 1895, Mr. Stanovich was married to Miss Johanna Vucetich, who was born in Austria and came to America with her parents in 1894. In her parents' family were nine children of whom seven are still living, four being residents of the United States. These are Dalmacia, Mrs. Stanovich, Angelina and Dominik. To Mr and Mrs. Stanovich have been born eight children: Antony, born in 1896; Dominik, born in 1897; Martin, in 1898; Maggie, in 1899; Amanda, in 1901; Eva, in 1905; Jack, in 1907; and Francis, in 1909. The family attend the Catholic church and Mr. Stanovich is a member of St. Nicholas Order at Astoria. Martin Stanovich believes in republican principles and while he keeps well informed on questions and issues of the day is not an office seeker, preferring that his attention should be given to business affairs and other interests of life.

JAMES H. STOCKER is a native of Pennsylvania but has spent practically all his life in the west. He enlisted in a Colorado regiment for service in the Civil war, ranching in Kansas for a number of years, spent one winter in California and is now following general farming in Douglas county, operating one hundred and sixty acres of highly improved and developed land. Mr. Stocker's birth occurred on December 25, 1836. He is a son of Anson and Abigail (Dowdney) Stocker, the former a native of Connecticut and the latter of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The father went to Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, when he was a young man, and was married in that district. He settled on a farm and was prosperous as an agriculturist for a number of years. His holdings were located in Luzerne county part of that district being later cut off to form Wyoming county. He lived upon the division line for a number of years and died at an advanced age. His wife's death also occurred upon the Pennsylvania farm when she was well past her eightieth year.

which year he left home and went to Colorado where he was successful as a rancher in Fremont county. In 1862 he enlisted in the Third Colorado Volunteer Infantry but was later transferred to the Second Colorado Cavalry, in which regiment he served with ability and distinction until the close of the war. He received his honorable discharge late in 1865, having spent some time in frontier service after the cessation of hostilities. Following his discharge he went to Kansas, where he ranched with much success for seven or eight years. From Kansas he went to the Pacific coast with the intention of locating in Oregon. He, however, spent one winter in California, and in the spring of 1875 resumed his journey northward, locating in the same year on his present farm on Elk creek, two and one-half miles west of Drain. Here he bought one hundred and sixty acres of railroad land and has since been successful as a general farmer. He has improved and cultivated his soil and increasing harvests repay his labors every year. He brings to his work all the most modern and progressive methods and his success is the natural result of efficiency.

In 1869 Mr. Stocker was united in marriage to Miss Matilda Dunn, a native of Ohio, who was a resident of Kansas at the time of her marriage. To Mr. and Mrs. Stocker have been born four children, two of whom are living: Arthur, who is a ranchman on Elk creek in Douglas county; and Thea, the wife of Harvey Taylor, who makes her home with the subject of this sketch.

In his political views Mr. Stocker is a republican and always votes the party ticket although he never seeks public office. He is one of the sterling and substantial citizens of Douglas county and seeks his success in the field of labor which has repaid his practical methods and his unflagging industry by constantly increasing his prosperity. His farm is a credit to his own progressive ways and to his business judgment, and is also a valuable addition to the resources of the state.

MRS. ELIZA KEPPINGER occupies a beautiful new residence on the farm which she owns, five miles southwest of Gervais in Marion county. It was in this county that she was born on the 12th of February, 1854, her parents being John and Rhoda (Pressley) Savage, of whom extended mention is made elsewhere in this work. She spent her girlhood days at home, acquiring her education in the public schools, and was carefully reared in such a manner as to qualify her to take charge of a home of her own when she reached womanhood and was married. On the 16th of September, 1869, she became the wife of John W. Brooks who arrived in Oregon when sixteen years of age and was employed on a farm until after his marriage when he and his wife removed to her father's farm. They became the parents of nine children; Edward, who was born October 30, 1870, and is a resident of the Willowa valley, Oregon; George, who was born March 11, 1872, and is deceased; John T., who was born September 3, 1874, and is living at home with his mother; Charles H., who was born February 2, 1876, and is a resident of Polk county, Oregon; Louis N., who was born December 6, 1877, and makes his home in Victor, Montana; William A., who was born January 20, 1879; Mrs. Pearl Herring, whose husband is chief dispatcher for the Oregon Electric Railroad and resides in Portland; Robert, who was born April 8, 1886, and is a resident of Polk county; and Albert, who was born March 23, 1888, and died January 23, 1889. Mrs. Brooks obtained a legal separation from her husband in January, 1888, and on the 10th of June, 1894, she became the wife of Nicholas Keppinger, who was born in Minnesota of German parentage. He came to Oregon with his father and mother when ten years of age, and is at present engaged in farming on his wife's property of fifty acres. They are pleasantly located here, having a fine residence, and the farm, thoroughly cultivated by Mr. Keppinger, is principally devoted to hops. It presents a most neat and attractive appearance, and everything about the place indicates careful supervision and progressive methods. Mr. and Mrs. Keppinger are well known in this locality and have an extensive circle of warm friends.

LOUIS P. RAPP, orchardist, farmer, stockman and land speculator, is today one of the prominent citizens of Douglas county and active in many of the representative industries of the section. He owns five hundred acres in his home farm and one hundred and sixty in Klamath Falls and his life has been spent in agricultural pursuits and enterprises which are affiliated with it in Oregon. He is a native of California, having been born in Sonoma county, March 5, 1861, and is a son of Godfrey and Nancy (Schoonover) Rapp, the former a native of France and the latter of Virginia. The father came to the United States when he was still a boy and with an older brother, Philip Rapp, located in Rochester, New York, where he learned the wagon-making trade. He worked at this line of occupation in Rochester up to 1845, when he removed to Muscatine, Iowa, where his marriage occurred. He crossed the plains three times and was one of the forty-niners to the California gold fields. He returned to Muscatine, Iowa, and in 1856 made his second trip to California, bringing his wife with him. He owned at this time the land where the town of Healdsburg is now located and here he built the first general store conducted in that section and gave his personal attention to it. In 1861 he again returned to Iowa and took up a homestead claim near Fort Dodge, where for three or four years he followed general farming. He later moved to Kansas, where he bought railroad land on the old Joy road. In 1872 he went to Texas but after two years spent in that state returned to Kansas, where they spent the winter. In the spring of 1875 they started upon their third journey west, locating in Oregon in the same year. Here the father took up a homestead in Douglas county, on the Umpqua river, where he resided until his death. His wife has also passed away.

Louis P. Rapp was reared at home and attended the Oregon public schools. His early life was spent in aiding his father in his work on the farm and on reaching manhood he continued this association in agricultural pursuits and in stock enterprises, their operations being very successful. After the death of his father Mr. Rapp acquired the greater part of the homestead farm, which comprises three hundred and forty acres. He has ever since that time bought and sold other lands and is now the proprietor of five hundred acres in his home farm and one hundred and sixty acres in a ranch at Klamath Falls. He has been an extensive speculator in farm lands and has owned large tracts at different times. He is counted among the successful and representative men of his district and is a factor in state expansion. He has of late years been interested in orchard propositions and has twenty-five acres of his own planted in fruit trees.

Mr. Rapp is a republican in his political beliefs but has never been an office seeker. He is a member of Umpqua Lodge, No. 37, I. O. O. F. It is his ambition to be scientifically efficient, and to cultivate his holdings and operate his enterprises according to modern ideas. His knowledge of agriculture is guided by business talent of a high order and is directed by standards of integrity and honor.

CHARLES WILLIAM ALLEN, operating in the insurance and real-estate field on his own account, in which connection he has contributed largely to the development of Portland, was born in Richmond, Illinois, in 1848, a son of W. M. Allen, who established his home in Richmond in 1836. He was born in the vicinity of Richmond, Virginia, and became one of the pioneer settlers of Illinois, arriving in that state only four years after it was decided by the Black Hawk war that the white race were to be supreme in that portion of the Mississippi valley. In 1849 he went to California, attracted by the discovery of gold on the Pacific coast, where he remained for about seventeen years, or until 1866, when he returned to Illinois. He afterward became a merchant of Fort Dodge, Iowa, and two years later removed his store to Sac City, Iowa, where he remained until his death, which occurred when he had reached the ripe old age of seventy-five years.

When the father went to California the family remained in Illinois. Charles W. Allen is now alone surviving of the two children born to his parents. He was reared in his native state and at the time of the Civil war joined the United States army, enlisting in Company D, One hundred and Forty-first Regiment Infantry, with which he served until the close of hostilities. He then returned home and afterward removed from Illinois to Fort Dodge, Iowa, where his father was then engaged in merchandising. Later the family went to Sac City, Iowa.

but Charles W. Allen remained there for only two years. He was elected sheriff of Sac City but resigned the position in order to come to the west. He eventually made his way to California in 1871 and lived in that state for about thirteen years, or until 1884, when he removed to Ogden, Utah, where he worked on the railroad. In the railroad service he accepted a minor position but gradually worked his way upward, by capability and faithfulness, to the position of conductor. He was in the service of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company at the time he determined to retire from that business. He then removed to Portland and here became connected with an insurance concern. He was also in charge of the Fletchenner estate, under Mr. Arnold, who was the administrator. He continued in that connection for twelve years and since then has been engaged in the insurance and real-estate business on his own account. He has become thoroughly familiar with property interests and values in Portland and now has individual holdings on Salmon street and elsewhere in the city. He has accumulated no inconsiderable property holdings himself and deserves great credit for what he has accomplished in the course of his business career, for he started out in life empty-handed and has worked his way upward entirely through his own labors.

Mr. Allen was united in marriage to Miss Hattie J. Fee, who was a daughter of O. Fee. Her father's family numbered six children, who are still living: James, who was at one time a district judge of Oregon and is now located in Pendleton, this state; Peter, who is engaged in the real-estate business in Portland; Nellie, who is the wife of Mr. Langtry, and resides in the city of Washington; Mrs. Carrie Warner, of California, whose husband is a nephew of Senator Warner of Missouri; Mrs. Salisbury, of Waterloo, Iowa; and Mrs. Allen. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Allen, of whom the younger, Florence, died at the age of seven years and seven months. The son is Harry, of Portland, who has completed the high-school course here and is attending business college. He is associated in the real-estate business with his father.

Mr. Allen gives his political support to the republican party but has never been a politician in the sense of office seeking, exercising his right of franchise in support of the men and measures which he deems will further the interests of the community and country at large. He holds membership with the Grand Army of the Republic and thus maintains pleasant relations with those who, like himself, marched upon southern battlefields and defended the old flag during the darkest hour in the history of the country.

JACOB EDISON. Much of the progress and advancement of the northwest must be attributed to the thrift, energy and determination of purpose which characterize its Scandinavian citizens, whose diligence and perseverance have largely contributed toward the agricultural, industrial and commercial developement of the country. To this class belongs Jacob Edison, whose birth occurred in Norway on the 31st of December, 1863, his parents being Edis J. and Elizabeth (Jacobson) Johnson. To them were born eight children, all of whom, with the exception of our subject spent their entire lives in the Norseland. Their order of birth is as follows: John, Johan, Adolph, Gertrude, Elina, Ovedes, Nels and Jacob, our subject. The mother passed away in 1870, but the father still survives at the venerable age of ninety-four years.

Jacob Edison was reared and educated in his native land, continuing to reside there until he was twenty-seven. Much attracted toward America by the wonderful stories he heard regarding the opportunities and advantages to be found here, he in 1890 crossed the Atlantic, with the United States as his destination. He located in Astoria on the 28th of July of the same year, and for four years thereafter engaged in fishing. At the expiration of that time he joined a fishing excursion to Alaska, in which country he spent three years. Returning to Astoria in 1897 he devoted his energies to carpentry work and contracting, having ever since been identified with these occupations. He has met with a most unusual degree of success and now owns a fine residence in Astoria in addition to a hotel property and an interest in various other enterprises.

Mr. Edison's plans for a home of his own had their culmination in his marriage in 1896 to Miss Hulda McLean, also a native of Norway. She emigrated to the United States in 1894, locating in Astoria. Her parents and the other members of her family have since come to this country, becoming residents of this city. Mr. and Mrs. McLean are the parents of six children, in the following order of birth: Mamel; Anton; Raider; Hulda, now Mrs. Edison; Annetta; and Adeline. To Mr. and Mrs. Edison have also been born six children, of whom three survive: Evald, who was born on the 6th of April, 1899; Hilbert, born in June 1900; and Bergald, whose birth occurred in 1905. The deceased members of the family are: Evald, who died at the age of eighteen months; Hulda, who died in infancy; and Sigurd, whose death occurred at the age of six years.

The family affiliate with the Lutheran church of which both Mr. and Mrs. Edison are members. He is also a member of the Scandinavian Benevolent Society of Astoria and the Sons of Norway, while he gives his political allegiance to the republican party, but does not participate in municipal affairs. During the period of his residence in the United States Mr. Edison has, on the whole, been very successful and has had no occasion to regret his removing to this great republic.

R. C. COFFEY, M. D., physician and surgeon of Portland, is a native of North Carolina. Determining upon the practice of medicine as a life work, he attended the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville and was graduated therefrom in 1892, after which he sought the opportunities of the northwest, locating for practice in Moscow, Idaho, where he remained for five years. He then removed to Colfax, Washington, where he spent two years, and afterward came to Portland, where he has practiced through a decade, giving his attention exclusively to surgery.

He is an ex-president of the Idaho State Medical Society, an ex-secretary of the Washington State Medical Society and in 1908 was honored with election to the presidency of the Oregon State Medical Society. He is a member of the Western Surgical Association and Southern Surgical Association and thus keeps in close touch with the advancement that is being made by the profession.

Dr. Coffey married Miss Clarissa Ellen Coffey, and they have three children, Jay R., Wilson Boone, and Robert Mayo. The Doctor belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Royal Arcanum.

ALEXANDER E. CULVER has lived in Jackson county only since 1911, but has demonstrated his right to be classed with the enterprising and progressive citizens who are bending their energies toward the development of the rich mineral resources of this part of the state. He became identified with mining here in 1910, and is now secretary of the Pleasant Creek Gold Dredge Mining Company. He was born in La Salle, Illinois, October 25, 1859, and is a son of A. W. and Elizabeth E. (Mitchell) Culver, both of whom were natives of Ohio, in which state they were also reared and married. The grandfather, John D. Culver, was a native of Vermont and became a civil engineer in the employ of the United States government, doing much surveying and other engineering work in the states of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. While thus engaged he discovered some persimmons said to be poisonous but he thought he would try the fruit and was the first white man to eat a wild persimmon. He died in Galesburg, Illinois, when eighty-six years of age, at which time his grandson, A. E. Culver, was a lad of twelve years. His son, A. W. Culver, was one of the pioneer settlers of California, arriving at Oakland in 1849. Three years later he returned to Ohio and resided in that state and also in Missouri until he once more became a resident of Oakland, California, about twenty years ago. He died in 1906 at the ripe old age of eighty years and his wife passed away in Los Angeles, California, in 1910. He was a blacksmith and followed that trade for about thirty years.

Alexander E. Culver was the eldest in a family of two sons and three daughters and spent his youthful days in Ohio, Missouri and Kansas. He became a resident of California in 1885, settling first in Los Angeles, whence he removed to Siskiyou county, where for twenty-three years he was engaged in the lumber business, meeting with good success in his undertakings. In 1908, however, he sold his sawmill and leased his planing mill to renters. In 1910, he made investment in mining interests in Jackson county, Oregon, and the following year took up his abode in Woodville. He now devotes his energies entirely to mining and is secretary of the Pleasant Creek Gold Dredge Mining Company.

In 1899 Mr. Culver was married to Miss Eva Nelson, a native of Nevada county, California, and a daughter of Ole Nelson, a lumber man, now residing in Siskiyou county. Mr. and Mrs. Culver have four children, Mariam, Nelson, Albert and Eleanor. Mr. Culver belongs to the Masonic fraternity and also to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His political allegiance is given to the republican party. He has held a few public offices, including that of justice of the peace and served on the republican central committee of Siskiyou county, California. He was one of the first Johnson men in that county, being a warm friend of the governor. He closely studies the vital and significant problems of the day and his energy and labors have always been effective forces for progress in the community in which he has lived.

WILLIAM P. SNOOK is a general decorating contractor, who has made his home in Portland since the spring of 1888 and during the greater part of the time has carried on business independently and successfully. He was born in England, March 12, 1865, and his parents, James W. and Mary J. (Peddle) Snook, were natives of the same country, where they were reared and married. The father died in 1885 and the mother still lives in England. In their family were twelve children: John, who resides in England; Richard, deceased; Sarah, the wife of William Cowell, of England; Annie, the wife of William Sherer, a resident of that country; William P., of this review; Thomas, who makes his home in Indiana; James and Alfred, deceased; and Elizabeth, Edith, Jessie and Thirza, all of whom make their homes in England.

In his native land, William P. Snook spent the first sixteen years of his life and then crossed the Atlantic to Canada with his father, who came to the new world for a visit. The son, however, remained on this continent. He began to learn painting and decorating in England and after settling in Canada followed his trade there for about three years. He was not content, however, to remain in Canada, believing that there were better business opportunities elsewhere, so he removed to California, where he worked at his trade for about two years. He came to Portland in the spring of 1888 and since that time has made his home in this city, believing that no better opportunities could be had in his line of work than are here offered. In the fall of the year of his arrival in Portland he was married. For two years he worked in the employ of others and then engaged in business on his own account as a general decorating contractor. He first started in Portland, but twelve years ago removed to Sunnyside, then a suburb of the city. In that district he has since maintained an office and has done much work as a painter and decorator. He has ever kept in touch with the advancement made in his line of endeavor and his efforts have brought him well merited success. He has invested in property here, and is the owner of two residences and some unimproved lots.

On the 13th of August, 1888, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Snook and Miss Bessie Hopkins, a daughter of Thomas and Eliza (Day) Hopkins, both of whom were natives of England. Her father removed to Canada at an early date and about 1895 settled in Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Snook have become the parents of four children. Ethel, born September 13, 1890, attended high school and also pursued a business-college course. Rita, born in February, 1893, attended the public schools and graduated from the high school in Portland. She is now preparing herself to become a teacher of English literature. Bessie, born in 1896, is a high-school student. William E., born in January, 1901, is pursuing his education here.

William P. Snook is a liberal-minded man and one who forms his opinions independently. His support of any measure indicates his firm belief in its power to accomplish good for the community. He votes as his judgment dictates and not according to party leadership. Fraternally he is connected with the Masons and also with the Independent Order of Foresters. He can truthfully be called a self-made man, for he has been both the architect and builder of his fortunes. His energy has been unfaltering, his determination unabating, and through the wise use he has made of time, talents and opportunities he has gradually worked his way upward and is now classed with the substantial business men of his adopted city.

JOHN A. GAMBLE. One of the energetic and successful young business men of Astoria is John A. Gamble, who was born in this city on the 13th of June, 1885, a son of Daniel and Annie (McMullen) Gamble. He is of Irish extraction, his paternal grandparents and maternal grandfather having been natives of the Emerald Isle, but his father was born in Columbus, Ohio, and his mother in Astoria, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Gamble were married in this city and here they have ever since resided, the father having been identified with sawmill work and at the present time he is general manager and superintendent of the Astoria Box Company. To Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Gamble three children were born: Harry E., who is an engineer on a government patrol boat; John A., our subject; and one, who died in infancy.

Astoria has always been the home of John A. Gamble, who obtained his education in the public schools, following which he was identified with various activities, engaging in business for himself at the age of twenty-three years. He began as a contractor for steel and concrete work, but has since extended the scope of his activities and now takes the entire contract for the erection of buildings and also constructs bridges. He has met with excellent success in his undertakings, being recognized as one of the most competent men in his line in the city. He and his partner have but recently completed the erection of an exact reproduction of old Fort Astor, the centennial of which was celebrated in August and September, 1912.

Mr. Gamble continues to make his home with his parents. He is a member of the Foresters of America, and, politically, he is a republican, but not an aspirant to public office. His future, as gauged by his past and present, looks most promising, his business being well established and thriving and giving high assurance of growth and development.

JAMES E. REDFORD engages in general farming and stock-raising one and one-half miles from Dorena, where he owns a ranch of three hundred and thirty acres. He was born in Saginaw, Oregon, on the 15th of January, 1867, and is a son of Edward P. and Sarah Martha (Cochran) Redford. The father passed the early years of his life in Missouri, whence he crossed the plains to Oregon in 1850, locating in Lane county. He first settled eight miles east of Cottage Grove, but he subsequently went to Coburg and three or four years later he removed to Saginaw and purchased three hundred and twenty acres of land, on which he has ever since lived. He was the eldest in a family of six, the other members being as follows: James W., who was killed in a runaway; Amanda, the deceased wife of Charles Cochran; Elizabeth, of Oakland, California; Penelope; and George, who was killed by the James boys in California. The mother of our subject, who also came from Missouri, is of Irish extraction and is the eldest of the seven children born to John and Letitia (Powers) Cochran. In order of birth the others are as follows: Winnie, who is married and resides at Spray, Oregon; Lucia, who married Milton McMurray, of Eugene; Mary, who first married Ben Wallace and is now the wife of William Canady; Robert, deceased, formerly a farmer at Cottage Grove; John M., who engages in farming at Colfax, Washington; and Katharine, formerly the wife of Mike Conley and now married to Joseph Perkins. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Redford numbered nine: Walker William, who died at the age of about thirty years; Amanda E., who died in girlhood; Emma L., the wife of L. D. Scarbrough, of Creswell; John M., who is ranching in the vicinity of Creswell; Letitia E., the wife of Webb Norfleit, a cabinet-maker at Los Angeles, California; James E., our subject; Ida Belle, who married Albert Stocks, a lumberman of Cottage Grove; and George E. and Mary E., both of whom are deceased. Mr. Redford served in the Rogue River war in 1855 and 1856 and is now on the government pension list.

James E. Redford has always lived in Lane county, to the public schools of which he is indebted for his education. In common with the majority of lads who are reared in the country he early began to assist with the work of the ranch and care of the stock and thus by the time he had attained his maturity he was an agriculturist of experience fully capable of assuming the management of a place. Upon attaining his majority he rented one hundred acres of his father's farm which he cultivated for a year. At the expiration of that time he removed to Dorena and rented five hundred and twelve acres of land. Eighty of this was planted to grain and the remainder was in pasture, and here for three years he engaged in general farming and stock-raising. He next settled on a quarter section of land belonging to his wife, but after twelve years residence there, he traded it for about three hundred acres located near Creswell, paying the difference in price. The same year he disposed of the latter place and returned to Dorena, where he bought one hundred and sixty-one acres, thirty of which was under cultivation. He has since extended his ranch by the purchase of another two hundred acres, all timber with the exception of thirty acres, while he filed on an adjoining eighty, making his holdings aggregate four hundred and forty-one acres. He has since sold one hundred and eleven acres of his ranch, ten of this being cleared and the remainder pasture. One hundred and twenty acres of his holdings is under cultivation and he has an additional sixty cleared and is using it for pasturage. Mr. Redford is raising grain on eighty acres of his land, such as can be used in the feeding of stock, as he makes a specialty of raising cattle, hogs and sheep.

In March, 1889, Mr. Redford was united in marriage to Miss Ella R. Chrisman, who is the second in order of birth of the three daughters born to N. P. and Malissa C. (Brown) Chrisman. The eldest member of the family is Lucinda J., the wife of Oliver Veatch, a real-estate dealer, of Cottage Grove; while the youngest is Clara L., who married R. F. Martin, a ranchman in the vicinity of Yamhill, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Redford have one son, Edwin P., who was born on the 13th of August, 1898, and is now attending school at Dorena.

At the age of twenty years Mr. Redford united with the Presbyterian church of which his wife is also a member. In politics he is a democrat, and although he has never prominently participated in public affairs, he is always willing to assume his share of public responsibility and served for fifteen years as school director and for two as supervisor of roads. He enjoys a favorable and extensive acquaintance among the citizens of this community, where he has become known as a man of upright principles and the highest integrity.

FRANK BUSCH, residing in Astoria, is prominently connected with stock-raising and dairying in northwestern Oregon, being the owner of a valuable ranch of one hundred and twenty-four acres. He was born in Chicago, September 17, 1874, his parents being Ulrich and Anna (Hizer) Busch, both of whom were natives of Germany. The father came to America in 1861 and first settled in St. Louis, Missouri, where he engaged in the brewing business. He was thus identified with manufacturing interests for a long period, but spent his last days in Germany, where his death occurred in 1889. His widow still survives him and is living in Berlin, Germany. Unto them were born nineteen children, of whom five are living, namely: Edward, who is located in St. Louis, Missouri; Mrs. Lillie Myer, a widow, who is living with her mother in Germany; Otto, also a resident of St. Louis, Missouri; Frank, of this review; and Mrs. Paula Kleydorff, of Germany.

Frank Busch spent his youthful days in Chicago and is indebted to its public-school system for the educational privileges which he enjoyed. The attractive tales which he heard concerning the northwest and the business opportunities to be secured on the Pacific coast led him to make his way to Oregon in 1895, at which time he settled at Astoria. About four and one-half miles from that city he purchased a dairy ranch, known as the Sunflower Dairy Farm, comprising one hundred and twenty-four acres of rich and productive land. He has been very successful in the conduct of his dairy and in the raising of stock and is now the owner of a large herd of cattle known as Dutch Belted cattle. There are only two herds of this breed in the United States, the other being near Boston. Mr. Busch has found this cattle well adapted for the uses to which he puts them and the product of his dairy finds a ready and profitable sale.

In 1902 occurred the marriage of Mr. Busch and Miss Dorothea F. Preis, who was born in Sydney, New South Wales, and is a daughter of John and Sarah Preis, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Australia. The father has passed away but the mother is still living in her native land. Mrs. Busch was one of a family of ten children and by her marriage has become the mother of one son, who was born on the ship Manuka, while they were crossing the ocean. His natal day was June 6, 1904, and he was given the name of Frank M. Manuka Busch. The parents hold membership with the Catholic church and Mr. Busch also belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias and to the Moose and Foresters orders. His political indorsement is given to the republican party and, keeping well informed on the questions and issues of the day, he is able to cast an intelligent ballot in support of the principles in which he believes. He has never had occasion to regret his determination to come to the northwest, for here he has made steady progress along business lines and is now numbered among the substantial as well as respected citizens of Astoria.

WALTER MATHEY, who resides three miles east of Salem on the Fruitland road, is one of the sturdy and thrifty men whom Switzerland has contributed to the state of Oregon. He was born on January 19, 1863, his parents being Gelin and Adaline (Hugnin) Mathey, both natives of Switzerland, where they resided until they came to the United States in 1897. The father had been a watchmaker and agriculturist in his native land and when he came to Oregon he again engaged in agricultural pursuits and continued at this occupation until 1911, when he removed to Salem at the age of seventy-eight years to live retired. Mrs. Mathey passed away in March, 1911. To this union four children were born, namely: Walter, who is the subject of this sketch; Bertha, who is the wife of Henry Gaquet and resides in Marion county; Edmond, who is a resident of Oreno, Oregon; and Minnie, the wife of Louis Marchand, of Salem.

Walter Mathey received his education in Switzerland and in addition to the common branches studied French and German. He also did military duty for a few months. His home was on the French border and during the Franco-Prussian war he frequently heard the roar of the cannons from the adjacent frontier. Before coming to the United States, in 1887, he learned the watchmaker's trade but instead of following it engaged in farming. After arriving in this country he engaged in agriculture for two years in Kansas and then came to Oregon, being employed in Salem for a few years and, subsequently, in 1891, purchasing twenty-five acres, three miles east of Salem, where he has since resided. In cultivating this property Mr. Mathey has made use of the advanced and effective agricultural methods of his native land and has increased the earning capacity of the soil to its maximum.

In 1891 Mr. Mathey was married to Miss Alice Roth, a native of Switzerland and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Roth. To Mr. and Mrs. Mathey two children have been born: George, whose birth occurred on the 15th of April, 1894; and Alice, who was born January 19, 1899. They are both attending school and residing at home.

In politics Mr. Mathey retains an independent attitude, voting for the man or measure which in his opinion will be most effective for good government. He has never sought office and does not hold membership in any lodges or social organizations, his farm requiring his whole attention. Both Mr. and Mrs. Mathey are members of the German Methodist church of Salem and their noble qualities of character and upright life have given them a high standing in the community.

CASPER DRILLING, a resident of Warrenton, now in the government employ, was born on the Atlantic ocean en route from Germany to Portland, Maine, on the 23d of April, 1857. He is one of eight children, all of whom are living, born to John and Mary Drilling, natives of Germany. Upon their arrival in America the parents first located at Portland, whence they removed, after a few months residence, to Buffalo, New York. They lived in the latter city for three years and then went to Michigan, where for some time the father was engaged in the grain business. Withdrawing from this he returned with his wife and family to the fatherland and after a lengthy visit they once more embarked for the United States. The return journey was a very sad one for the family, as the father died a few days from port and was buried at sea. The mother with her family proceeded to Michigan, where a few years later she, too, passed away.

When Casper Drilling was a lad of nine years his eldest brother took him to Germany, where he remained for two years and went to school. Upon his return to the United States he located in Buffalo, New York, for three years, completing his education and learning the cabinet-maker's trade. At the end of that time he went to Michigan, where he served out his apprenticeship and followed his trade for several years. In 1869, with his eldest brother, who was a blacksmith, he came to Portland, Oregon, and for two years thereafter worked at his trade. He then went to Carroll county, Iowa, to engage in the grain business, with which he was identified for four years. Desirous to see more of the country he spent the next two years in traveling in different parts of the United States. In 1894 he came to Clatsop county and bought a ranch. He now owns three ranches south of Warrenton, all of which are steadily increasing in value. For the past twelve years Mr. Drilling has been serving the public in the capacity of cement walk inspector.

In 1891 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Drilling and Miss Mary Ready, also a native of Germany. To them have been born two sons: Carroll, who is a student in the high school; and Otto, who is also attending school.

Mr. Drilling is identified with several fraternal organizations and, politically, he is a republican. In his trade as cabinet-maker he has achieved a remarkable reputation, his craftsmanship being of a very superior quality and being awarded first premium on work which he exhibited at Chicago.

FRANK L. BEAMIS. One of the finely improved and valuable farms of Washington county stands as a monument to a life of industry, perseverance and thrift on the part of Frank L. Beamis, one of the progressive and prosperous agriculturists of his locality. He claims Oregon as his native state, his birth having occurred in Greenville, Washington county, on the 31st of July, 1870, a son of Jonathan and Celestine (Grospean) Beamis. His parents, the father a native of Jefferson county, New York, and the mother of Belfort, France, were married in Louisa county, Iowa, in 1855 and in 1859 came to Oregon, locating in Washington county. Here the father purchased what was known as the Smith donation claim consisting of one hundred and sixty acres and to its cultivation and development he devoted his remaining days, passing away in 1895. His wife, however, still survives at the age of eighty years, and now makes her home with a daughter in Washington county, with whom she has resided since her husband's death. Their family of seven children consisted of the following: Mary, the wife of A. S. Dudley, of Portland, Oregon; Emma, who married D. W. Rainwater, of Washington county, Oregon; Ellen, the wife of Albert Friday, also of this county; Marian, Warren, and Malinda, all now deceased; and Frank L., of this review.

The last named acquired a good education in the public schools of Washington county while he received a thorough practical training under the direction of his father on the home farm, in the work of which he assisted until twenty-five years of age. He then started out in the business world on his own account and, wisely choosing as his life work the occupation to which he had been reared, purchased one hundred and seventy-six acres of the old homestead, upon which he began farming independently. He now has a finely improved tract, seventy-five acres of which are in an excellent state of cultivation, constituting one of the choice farming properties in this district. He early recognized the fact that labor is the basis of all success and with him perseverance, diligence and integrity have constituted the guiding posts of life, bringing him to the prominent position which he now holds among the representative agriculturists of Washington county.

It was on the 6th of March, 1897, that Mr. Beamis was united in marriage to Miss Louise Schlup, who was born in Switzerland on the 1st of January, 1873, a daughter of Samuel and Christina Schlup. Her parents, who were also natives of the land of the Alps, came to America in 1881 and first located at Mansfield, Ohio, where they lived until 1894. In that year they came to Washington county, Oregon, taking up their abode upon a small farm here, which remained their place of residence until they were called from this life, the mother passing away in 1904 and the father in 1906. In their family were seven children, namely: Alice, of Washington county; Elizabeth, the wife of Charley Rose, of Portland; Mary, who married Melvin Carter, of San Mateo county, California; Mrs. Beamis; Bessie, the wife of Martin Day, of Portland; and John and Fred, both deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Beamis was born a daughter, Florence, on the 28th of February, 1898, who passed away on the 22d of October, 1906.

A study of the political situation of the country early led Mr. Beamis to give his allegiance to the republican party and he has since supported that organization at the polls, although the honors and emoluments of office have had no attraction for him. He has preferred to concentrate his efforts upon his own affairs and, placing his dependence upon the safe and substantial qualities of energy and wise management, he has steadily progressed in the business world until he today ranks high among the successful and prosperous agriculturists of the community.

JAMES C. LANDRITH is one of the respected citizens of Coos county where he is successfully engaged in farming on a ranch located nine miles from Marshfield on the south fork of Coos river. He was born in Coos county, October 6, 1884, and is the son of C. L. and Jennie (Richmond) Landrith. The paternal grandfather was Cyrus Landrith, one of the pioneers of Oregon who crossed the plains with ox teams at a very early day in the history of this state and made his first settlement in Eugene. He later took up a preemption claim in another part of Lane county where he lived for some years and then removed to Coos county where he purchased a ranch of three hundred acres including some meager improvements, located on the north fork of the Coos river. There he established his home and continued to live during the remaining days of his life, which closed in 1892. He was affiliated with the republican party and was justice of the peace for a number of years and a member of the Masonic lodge. To Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Landrith ten children were born: Benjamin, who is deceased; Delia, the deceased wife of S. Applegate, of The Dalles, Oregon; George, Joseph and Oliver, all deceased; Martha, who is the wife of H. Crow, of Lorane, Oregon; Katherine, the deceased wife of Frank Bridges, who is also deceased; Dora, the wife of S. B. Cathcart, of Marshfield, Oregon; C. L., the father of the subject of this review, and Isaac, both deceased.

C. L. Landrith, the father of the subject of this review, was born in Lane county and was united in wedlock in Coos county to Miss Jennie Richmond. The parents of Mrs. Landrith emigrated from Scotland to America, in 1872, and settled in Missouri where her father was engaged in the mercantile business for four years, after which he with his family removed to Coos county in 1876, and settled upon a farm located on the Coos river and there continued to live until the time of his death which occurred February 14, 1906. Mrs. Landrith was the only child born to her parents and her father's ranch was located across the river directly opposite the home of the father of C. L. Landrith, who later became her husband. Her mother closed her earthly life July 27, 1911.

To Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Landrith five children were born. James C., is the subject of this review. Roy A., who was born March 4, 1886, resides at home with his mother and is engaged in the operation of the home ranch containing one hundred and sixty acres, of which seventy acres are in cultivation. He makes a specialty of raising potatoes and conducting on his place an up-to-date dairy industry, using in his business thirty selected dairy cows, from which he receives a maximum of ninety-eight dollars each per annum, including the stock increase and milk used for dairy products. The ranch is located on the north fork of Coos river nine miles from Marshfield. Helen was born May 31, 1888, and has been engaged in teaching for the past four years in the high school at Marshfield. She is a graduate of the State Normal School at San Diego, California, and at present is further pursuing her studies at the State University of California, at Berkeley. Blanch, who was born October 18, 1890, pursued a full course at the Corvallis University and is now engaged in teaching in Douglas county. Phillip, who was born August 7, 1892, is a student in the San Diego Commercial College at San Diego, California, and is preparing himself for a business career.

James C. Landrith was reared in his parents' home and received his early education in the public schools of the district in which he lived. In 1910 he was united in marriage to Miss Jessie Myers, the daughter of George and Helen (Gates) Myers, both of whom were natives of Michigan. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Landrith one child has been born, George James, whose birth occurred on the 22d of June, 1911.

Mr. Landrith has always been identified with the cultivation of the home ranch located on the north fork nine miles from Marshfield, but at the time of his marriage he purchased the farm owned by George Myers. He is now actively engaged in diversified and dairy farming. He is a man highly respected among his associates and one of the well known and influential citizens of Coos county.

E. L. MARTIN is a prosperous business man of Turner, engaged in general merchandising, and in public affairs has also been prominent, serving as mayor and having at different times filled other official positions. He was born in Des Moines, Iowa, May 11, 1874, a son of H. H. and Catherine (Denis) Martin, both natives of Illinois. The father is a carpenter by trade and he and his wife still live in Iowa. The grandfather, C. V. Martin, canvassed the state of Illinois for Abraham Lincoln at the time of his election and later went to Washington to receive the appointment of master mechanic of the navyyard, a position which he held until the time of his death and which is now held by one of his sons. An interesting heirloom that has descended to E. L. Martin is a lamp from the old stagecoach of Abraham Lincoln. In the family of H. H. and Catherine Martin were seven children: L. D., who resides in Salt Lake City and is one of the best architects west of the Rocky mountains; G. W., who is an architect in San Francisco, California; Clara, the wife of T. C. McClary, a practicing physician of Exeter, Nebraska; H. T., who is an architect in Kansas City; Clive, deceased; E. L., of this review; and one, who died in infancy.

E. L. Martin was reared in Kansas, where he attended the public schools and learned the machinist's trade, an occupation which he followed for twenty-two years. He came to Oregon in 1890, locating in Portland, where he remained three years. Subsequently he removed to La Grande, where he remained two years. The next four years were spent in Salem and he then located in Turner, where he has been engaged in the general mercantile business for the past four years. He has a well appointed store and his close application, honorable business methods and earnest desire to please his patrons have been the strong and forceful factors in the attainment of his success. He owns a half-section of land situated eight miles from Turner and owns an entire block in Turner, where he has a beautiful home.

In 1897 Mr. Martin was married to Miss Clara Watson, a native of Idaho, and they have one child, Aileen, who is ten years of age. In politics Mr. Martin is a republican and he takes an active interest in public affairs. He is mayor of Turner, has been state central committeeman for three terms and has held various other positions. In his administration of municipal affairs he seeks the welfare of the majority and indorses all measures for practical reform, progress and improvement. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He has filled all of the chairs in the local lodge of Masons and is a member of the Royal Arch Chapter at Salem. Both he and Mrs. Martin are identified with the Eastern Star, an order in which she has filled most of the offices, and both are also members of the Maccabees. Mr. Martin has been through all the chairs in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Turner and was district deputy grand master for one year. Mr. and Mrs. Turner are both earnest workers in the Methodist Episcopal church and the high esteem in which they are held by all their acquaintances is due to their upright lives and their efforts at all times to assist in advancing public welfare.

WILLIAM MATTHEWS. The Yaquina Bay News is one of the flourishing newspapers of the western part of Oregon and its editor and proprietor. William Matthews, is recognized as a man who thoroughly understands his calling and fully appreciates his responsibilities. He was born in the north of Ireland in 1870, a son of John E. Matthews, who was a native of Glamorganshire, Wales. The father was educated at the celebrated military college at Sandhurst, on the river Thames near London, England, and served in the British navy and army for twenty-seven years. After his retirement he crossed the ocean with his children and subsequently went to Iowa and western Kansas. He came to the northwest in 1890 and spent a short time at Tacoma, Washington, whence he removed to Newport, Oregon, where he established his home. In 1893 he founded the Yaquina Bay News but retired from active labors about a year later. He died at an advanced age, February 23, 1909. The mother of our subject, whose maiden name was Anna M. Evans, passed away when he was in his infancy.

The youngest of a family of six children, William Matthews was brought to America in charge of a nurse when he was about three years old. He received his education in the schools of Canada, Iowa and Kansas but, being a man of good observation and of receptive mind, he has gained a large amount of information not to be found in books. He engaged in newspaper work under his father and since the age of twenty-four has been in charge of the office, which his father opened at Newport. The paper is issued weekly and under efficient management is a faithful index of the progress of this section. The office is supplied with all modern printing facilities and turns out a good line of high-class job work.

Mr. Matthews is a valued member of the Fraternal Union, the only organization of that character to which he belongs. He gives his earnest support to the republican party and is remarkably well informed as to its principles and as to the political movements throughout the country and world. His religious belief is indicated by membership in the Episcopal church, the denomination in which he was reared. He is a man of mental capacity, fine social characteristics and thorough training in a business for which he seems eminently adapted. No citizen is more loyal to the interests of his county or state, and he is fully entitled to the esteem in which he is held by people of all political faiths in Lincoln county.

H. C. ANDERSON is a self-made man whose advancement has resulted entirely from his industry, determination and unflinching purpose in overcoming all the difficulties and obstacles which obstructed his path to success. He was born in Denmark, on the 27th of April, 1871, and is a son of J. P. and Mary (La France) Anderson, who were likewise natives of Denmark where they resided until 1877, coming to the United States when their son, H. C. Anderson, was a lad of six years. They first made their way to Texas in which state they lived for a year and a half, and at the expiration of that period removed to Osage county, Kansas. The year 1889 witnessed the removal of the family to Portland, Oregon, where the father was killed in a street-car accident in 1893, the car running through a draw-bridge. His widow is still a resident of Portland. In their family were ten children, seven of whom are living.

Reared under the parental roof, H. C. Anderson was a young man of eighteen years when the family became residents of Oregon. He remained at home until he attained his majority, but in the meantime began to earn his living as an employe of the San Francisco machine shops. He is today a skilled machinist and engineer. His close application to the duties assigned him enabled him to thoroughly master the work and he gained a comprehensive knowledge of not only the practical features of the business but also the scientific principles upon which it is founded. In 1893 he removed from Portland to Seaside where he has resided continuously since and has throughout the years been chief engineer for a large lumber company.

On the 29th of April, 1896, Mr. Anderson was united in marriage to Miss Charlotte Godwin, who was born in Chicago, Illinois, and by her marriage has become the mother of three children, Eva Mary, Laura E. and Arthur J., all of whom are yet at home. Mrs. Anderson is a member of the Episcopal church. H. C. Anderson belongs to the Masonic fraternity, being worshipful master of Lodge No. 137, A. F. & A. M. He has taken the degrees of capitular Masonry and is a member of the Royal Arch chapter. His wife is connected with the Order of the Eastern Star, in which she is now serving as matron. Our subject is also affiliated with the Knights of the Maccabees and is serving as one of the officers of the local lodge. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen and the Knights of Pythias. H. C. Anderson votes with the republican party and has been somewhat prominent in the local organization, serving for one term as a member of the city council of Seaside. His interests are varied and his support is given to every movement which has the indorsement of the best citizens. While born across the water, there is no more loyal resident of Oregon than this adopted son.

WEBSTER HOLMES is one of the public-spirited and enterprising citizens of Tillamook, where for twelve years he has been identified with the legal fraternity. A son of David J. and Mary E. (Lewis) Holmes, his birth occurred in Polk county, Oregon, on the 7th of December, 1867. His father is a native of Pike county, Illinois, having been born there about 1840, while the birth of the mother occurred in Oregon in 1848. In both lines Webster Holmes is descended from the early pioneers, representing the third generation of both families to have located in the state. His paternal grandparents crossed the prairies from Illinois in 1848, settling in Polk county, Oregon, on a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres, which was acquired from the government. Owing to the great tracts of unoccupied land, the size of the ranches and the few inhabitants, the early settlers had little or no social life. Had it not been for the difficulties and dangers to be encountered on the return trip, doubtless many would have returned to the east, whence they came as at times the loneliness, hardships and privations seemed an exorbitant price to pay for a home. David J. Holmes was reared on a large ranch amid the surroundings of pioneer life. Upon attaining manhood he turned his attention to various activities, having been engaged for a while in mining and stock-raising, while he subsequently entered public life. From 1870 to 1874, he was county clerk of Polk county, and in 1884 he was appointed superintendent of an Indian school, being identified with this position for six years. In 1893 he entered the general surveyor's office, where for five years he held the position of transcribing clerk. He has now retired from business activities, and he and his wife make their home in Salem. To Mr. and Mrs. Holmes were born four children, of whom our subject is the eldest. The others are: Frank, who is living in Salem; Estella, the wife of Joseph Fontaine, of La Grande, Oregon; and Eleanor, the wife of Armon Chunkweiler, of Victor, Montana.

The entire life of Webster Holmes has been spent in his native state, his early education having been acquired in Polk county. Later he attended Dalles Academy and Willamette University at Salem, as well as the State Normal School at Monmouth, Oregon. After the completion of his preliminary education he decided to adopt the law for a vocation and entered the office of his uncle, W. H. Holmes, of Salem, a partner of Judge B. T. Bonaham. There he applied himself to the mastery of legal lore, being admitted to the bar on the 4th of October, 1893. During the first year of his professional life he engaged in practice in Portland, locating subsequently in Salem, where he remained until February, 1909, when he removed to Tillamook. Mr. Holmes devotes his energies to general practice, and during the period of his residence in Tillamook has more than once given practical demonstration of his skill and ability in elucidating abstruse legal technicalities. He has succeeded in building up a large and lucrative practice, being known as one of the capable representatives of his profession in the town.

Mr. Holmes was married on September 13, 1891, to Miss Emma Williams, a native of Portland and a daughter of P. C. Williams, for many years identified with sawmill and mercantile interests of the state. To them has been born one daughter, Ruth, who has graduated from the high school and is now at home.

His political prerogatives Mr. Holmes exercises in the support of the men and measures of the democratic party, but has never been an office seeker. He is president of the Tillamook County Commercial Club, an organization of one hundred and fifty of the town's most enterprising and public-spirited citizens, whose motive is to promote the general civic interests. His relationship with the various members of his profession, Mr. Holmes maintains through his identification with the Marion County and Tillamook County Bar Associations. He is one of the progressive citizens of Tillamook, where he is held in high esteem and is recognized as a man of keen foresight, clear judgment and business sagacity.

HOMER MASON, who since 1910 has held the office of judge of Tillamook county, is a native of the state, his birth having occurred in Salem, June 4, 1869. He is one of six children born to J. C. and Martha J. (Tomlinson) Mason, the father a native of Canada and the mother of Kentucky. The father, who survived for many years after the death of the mother, was a contractor and builder and spent his latter years in Seattle, Washington, where he passed away. Their family, of which our subject is the second in order of birth, was as follows: George L., who is living in Seattle; Homer; Minnie, who is deceased; Albert, who is living in New Mexico; and Charles and Jessie.

Various activities have engaged the attention of Homer Mason, who obtained his preliminary education in the common schools, after the completion of which he took a commercial course in the Capital Business College of Salem, where he was reared and educated. For ten years thereafter he was identified with clerical positions. At the expiration of that period he was the successful candidate for clerk of Tillamook county, holding this office from 1898 to 1904. Having acquired a ranch he then retired to his homestead and for a year thereafter devoted his energies to agricultural pursuits. He traded his land at the end of that time for an interest in a dry-goods business in Tillamook, that was incorporated under the name of the Mason-Pennington Company, under which it is still conducted. Commercial activities absorbed the entire time and attention of Mr. Mason during the next five years. He then disposed of his interest in the business and again entered public life. He was elected judge of the county in 1910 and continues to hold the office, the duties of which he is discharging in a manner highly satisfactory to the general public.

On the 30th of May, 1893, Mr. Mason was united in marriage to Miss Annetta B. Newman, a native of California. His father continues to make his home in that state, but the mother has passed away. Mr. and Mrs. Mason are the parents of a daughter and a son: Allegra, who is a student in the high school; and Harold, who is also attending school. These children represent the third generation of the family in the state, their paternal grandfather having been one of the early pioneers and a veteran of the Indian wars.

Mr. and Mrs. Mason are members of the Presbyterian church, and he is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, being a member of the chapter and the Order of the Eastern Star. Mrs. Mason also being identified with the latter organization. The Woodmen of the World also claim him as a member, while his political support is given to the republican party. In addition to the offices already mentioned Mr. Mason has served as a member of the Tillamook council and a school director. He is one of the highly esteemed men of the town, where he has long resided and is widely known, his many fine qualities retaining for him the loyalty of those whose friendship he wins.

ANDREW GLEN AIKEN is one of the highly respected retired pioneer citizens of Marshfield, Coos county, this state. He was born in Lawrence county, Pennsylvania, January 12, 1837, and is a son of Andrew and Rachel (Adams) Aiken. Both of his parents were natives of Pennsylvania. To his father's family eleven children were born: Robert and Eliza, both of whom died in infancy; Jane, deceased; Margaret, the widow of George Welch, residing with her son, William Welch, being still hale and hearty at the advanced age of eighty years; John, who died in San Francisco in 1862; James, who passed away at Empire, Oregon, in 1882; Andrew Glen, the subject of this review; Martha Ann, deceased; Erskin E., who resides on the old homestead in Pennsylvania; Henderson, also living there; and David, who died in Roseburg, Oregon, in 1890.

Andrew G. Aiken was reared at home and educated in the public schools of Pennsylvania. The early years of his life were spent as a helper on his father's farm. At the age of sixteen years, on March 18, 1853, he left the parental roof and removed to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and there formulated plans for crossing the plains to Oregon. He sailed down the Ohio river to St. Louis, Missouri, and from that place he started for Kaw river by way of Independence. At Kaw river, in company with his two brothers, the final plans for the trip across the plains were consummated. After all necessary preparations had been made a wagon train was made up by the Aikens, the James and Charles Biles families, the Bakers, Downys and others, and the entire party started with ox teams on their long journey across the great American desert. As a part of their resources which they were taking into the far west they drove a band of stock cattle. George H. Himes was one of their party and on reaching Oregon Mr. Himes settled in the Willamette valley and the oldest brother of Mr. Aiken left the old Oregon trail and made his way to Walla Walla, Washington. The Biles train went across the Cascade mountains, over the Natches or Yakima Pass to Puget Sound, and they encountered many obstacles and endured untold hardships, finally cutting their way through only with the help of the citizens of the Sound country, who valiantly assisted them to reach their destination. Mr. Aiken and his brother James stopped at Marysville, now known as Corvallis, in this state. He only lived, however, in Benton county a very brief time, and from there removed to Puget Sound and later returned to this state and joined his brother James in 1854, and settled in Coos Bay, reaching that place on the 8th of October of that year. In the summer of 1854 Andrew Aiken and about thirty others cut a military road from Fort Steilacoom to Fort Walla Walla, while in Washington. His brother James, however, had explored in some degree the country in the vicinity of Coos Bay and was fortunate enough to discover the coal beds at Coos Bay. After the arrival of Mr. Aiken he and his brother succeeded in organizing a corporation to develop the coal mines and, immediately following the organization of this company, he and his brother were retained by that concern in the development of the coal property and were so engaged at the time the Rogue River Indian war broke out in 1856. Mr. Aiken and his brother James at once became volunteers to suppress the Indian uprising, and Andrew G. Aiken was one of the commissioned men who formed the escort of a pack train to Rogue river. In 1860 he and his brother went to the head of the isthmus in Coos Bay and there started a logging camp and obtained employment from A. M. Simpson, of North Bend, and in his employ they were engaged in the logging business for a number of years, after which Mr. Aiken went to Idaho in the year 1863 on a prospecting tour in the gold-mining districts in that state. He had previously, in the year 1857, given some of his time to the work of prospecting along Johnson creek in Coos county and had also been engaged in mining on the ocean beach for a year or two. He remained in Idaho for three years and in 1866 he returned to this state and again engaged in the lumber business, in which he continued until the autumn of 1875. During the fall of that year he made a visit to his old home in Pennsylvania, where he remained until the following spring, at which time he returned to Oregon and was elected sheriff of Coos county in the spring of 1876, serving the people in that office for two consecutive terms. On his retirement from the office of sheriff he reengaged in the lumber business, in which he continued until 1881 at which time he engaged once more in the fascinating occupation of prospecting for gold in Coos county. He later removed to Coquille city and was appointed postmaster of that place. He continued in that capacity for four years, after which he resigned and in 1898 he became one of a company of prospectors who went to Alaska, where Mr. Aiken spent one summer and then returned to this state, but later went back to Alaska and established his headquarters at Nome in 1900. He has the distinction of being one of the party who first discovered gold on Nome beach, where he remained during the entire summer season and in the autumn of 1900 he returned to Coos Bay. Later he established his residence at Marshfield, where he has since lived retired.

Mr. Aiken was married to Augusta Cunningham on the 25th of May, 1879, in Coquille city, and they have four children, two sons and two daughters: Charles G.; Alice O., the wife of Otto Schutter, of Marshfield; and Florence M. and James W., both at home. Mr. Aiken is affiliated with the democratic party and is one of the pioneers of Oregon who had the honor to vote for the first state constitution at the time the territory of Oregon merged into the sisterhood of states. He was also one of the first councilmen in Coquille city. He is a member of the Masonic order and has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is properly accounted one of the very early pioneers of western Oregon. He is a man highly respected by his friends and associates and after many years of pioneer hardships and a long life of industry he lives retired from active business cares, maintaining his residence at 737 North Broadway.

CHARLES EDWIN STRANG. As a native of Oregon, a son of a pioneer in its settlement, an able agriculturist and a thoroughly upright and honest man, Charles Edwin Strang is justly entitled to the high place which he holds in the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens. His childhood was filled with hardships and responsibilities and the early years of his mature life were spent in earnest labor in the development of his land. Prosperity has crowned his efforts and his excellent place of seven acres outside the city limits of Coquille is an evidence of the value and usefulness of his life. He was born in Jackson county, in 1866, and is a son of Robert M. and Evelyn (Collier) Strang, the former a native of Prince Edward Island and the latter of Iowa. His father came to California from Boston in 1850 and worked in the employ of an uncle, who operated a pack train, engaging in this occupation for two years, after which he went north to Jackson county, Oregon, and worked in the mines for a number of years, operating a sawmill at the same time. He was also interested in the construction of a ditch which supplied water to the mines of the county and was always active in the promotion of valuable public enterprises. He was married in California, and he and his wife became the parents of seven children, five of whom are still living: Ida, who became the wife of Thomas Wooly, of California; Hulda, who is the wife of Alfred Morris, of Bandon, by whom she has one child, Leo; Fredrick W., who resides in Santa Rosa, California; David H., who makes his home in Phoenix, Arizona; and Charles Edwin, the subject of this sketch.

Charles E. Strang was reared upon his father's farm and early became acquainted with the details of the operation of a modern agricultural enterprise. He had very limited school advantages, for he lived in Coquille in the very earliest period of its history as an organized community. At that time there was one schoolhouse, one store and a hotel in the city and all the conditions of living were correspondingly inadequate. He went to school for nine months and this course comprised the only educational advantages which he ever obtained. When he was twenty-four years of age his father died and Mr. Strang remained upon the homestead operating the farm for his mother and managing her affairs ably and efficiently. She later went to California, where after twelve years' residence she passed away. It was in 1891 that Mr. Strang purchased his present farm, which comprises seven acres just outside the city limits of Coquille. It was at that time all brush and timber land and he was obliged to clear the property before beginning the work of development. It is now highly improved and intelligently operated and is one of the model and attractive places in Coos county. Mr. Strang gives most of his attention to his agricultural pursuits but has also been a locomotive engineer, in which line of work he is very proficient.

Mr. Strang has been twice married. His first wife was Miss Mary Cecil, a native of Oregon and a daughter of J. H. and Martha (Cornor) Cecil, who were among the pioneers in the settlement of the state. To this union was born one daughter, Cora, who is the wife of Edward Ziem of Oakland, California. She began her education in Coquille and completed it in Washington. She has two children, Francis and Lovelle Viola. Mr. Strang's second union was with Mrs. Rachel Rutledge, the widow of John W. Rutledge, by whom she had one child, Della, who has been adopted by our subject.

Mr. Strang is a republican in his political beliefs and never seeks public office. He affiliates with the Woodmen of the World. He has a comfortable home upon his property and during his eleven years' residence has gained the respect and esteem of his friends and acquaintances by reason of a life which has been made successful and happy through his own efforts and by reason of straightforward principles, which have been retained through unusual hardships.

JAMES E. REEDY has been a resident of Tillamook for the past seven years and is successfully engaged in the practice of veterinary surgery, being the only representative of his profession in the county. He was born in Greenwood county, Kansas, on July 17, 1880, and is a son of Thomas A. and Cynthia E. Reedy. The father was a native of Illinois and the mother of Tennessee, but they located in Kansas in 1878, residing there for eight years. In 1886 they removed with their family to Illinois, remaining there until 1896 when they located in Missouri, where they are now living. To them was born one other son, Thomas L., who makes his home in Missouri.

The eldest child of his parents, James E. Reedy, remained at home until he had attained his majority, attending the public schools of his native state and Illinois, as well as those of Missouri in the acquirement of an education. When he left home he came west, riding the ranges of Montana, Wyoming and other western states, and also of Canada. He subsequently went to San Francisco, where he pursued a course in veterinary surgery, after the completion of which he came to Tillamook. Mr. Reedy possesses the essential qualities for success in his chosen profession, a love for and understanding of dumb beasts as well as a thorough training in the science and treatment of their diseases. He has met with very good success in his practice and in 1912 expects to enter the government service.

James E. Reedy was married in June, 1909, to Miss L. B. Jackson, who was born in California. Her father is deceased but her mother is still living. Mr. Reedy is a republican, but does not prominently participate in public affairs. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and the Odd Fellows, being identified with Tillamook Lodge, No. 57, A. F. & A. M.; and Tillamook Lodge, No. 94, I. O. O. F. His period of residence here, though brief, has been of sufficient length to show him to be a man possessing the desirable qualities of citizenship, capability and enterprise as well as a spirit of progressiveness.

J. L. SPARRETORN is proprietor of the Monopole Store of Bonanza. He carries a full line of general merchandise, also the well known Hoffman-Rothschild ready made clothing and is agent for Strauss Brothers, tailors of Chicago. Close application to business has brought him substantial success during the three years in which he has been a representative of commercial activity in that place. He was born in Denmark, June 8, 1861, his parents being L. and Nelsine Magdalena (Gorgensen) Sparretorn, the former a native of Denmark and the latter of Germany. The father was a forester and gamekeeper for Count Valdel. Our subject's brother, Nels J., and the grandfather also held that position. L. Sparretorn remained a resident of Denmark to the time of his death, as did his wife. In their family were six children, of whom five are now living, Nels J., the brother who succeeded the father as forester and gamekeeper, having passed away in Denmark. Those beside our subject are: Mrs. Tiesen, of Jylland, Denmark; Mrs. Catrine Cristensen, of Sjælland; Marie Lund, of Jylland; and Carl, of Langlois, Curry county, Oregon.

J. L. Sparretorn is the third in order of birth and in later youth he served in the army as a member of the king's guard. When twenty-one years of age he crossed the Atlantic to New York city, where he remained for six months, clerking for a friend on Cherry street. He afterward spent a year in Vermont working on a farm and at the end of that time he made his way to Honey Lake valley in California, where he worked for a cattle man for about six years. He was a dealer in horses for three years but lost quite heavily in that connection and in 1893 came to Bonanza. He brought the second imported stallion into this county, and for twelve years was engaged in the breeding and raising of fine horses. In 1909 he embarked in business in Bonanza as a general merchant, conducting his store until 1910, when it was destroyed by fire. He then came to his present location in the Bank building and here carries on general merchandising, his entire time being devoted thereto. His sales in 1910 amounted to twenty-two thousand dollars, and in 1912 to eighteen thousand dollars, for the trade at that time was divided with other stores.

Mr. Sparretorn is interested in the welfare of the community and is a recognized local leader in the ranks of the republican party. He served for two years in the city council and as marshal for one year. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is also a member of the Chamber of Commerce, heartily cooperating in its movements for the upbuilding of the city.

NICHOLAS A. EASLY. Although he was early thrown upon his own resources by the death of his parents, Nicholas A. Easly, of Banks, Washington county, did not yield to discouragement. He bravely faced the world and, having acquired a good trade, applied himself industriously, so that he is now in a large measure financially independent. He is a native of Switzerland, born in 1840, a son of Nicholas and Elizabeth Easly. The father was also a native of Switzerland and early learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed during the remainder of his life. In 1855 he started with his wife and children for America but shortly after leaving port the mother died and was buried at sea in the English channel. The father located in Ohio but death again visited the family and he passed away in the year of his arrival. There were six children in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Easly: John, who is deceased; Mary, who married John Easly and is deceased; Nicholas A., of this review; Benjamin, who is also deceased; Elizabeth, who is the widow of Philip Kessler, and Annie, who married Godfrey Ott, both of whom are deceased.

Since the age of fifteen years Nicholas A. Easley has made his home in America. In 1859 he removed from Ohio to Noble county, Indiana, and there engaged at his trade as carpenter for seven years. He went to Iowa in 1866 and in 1871 to the southern part of Dakota, where he continued for eight years. Believing that the Pacific coast region offered more favorable inducements he came to Oregon in 1879 with his wife, to whom he had been married in Dakota, and followed his trade in Washington county, where he erected a number of residences and other buildings. He spent eight years, from 1882 to 1890, in Portland and the next four years in Idaho, being actively employed at his trade during this time. In 1894 he returned to Washington county, Oregon, but two years later went to Idaho and continued his residence in that state for seven years. Since 1903 he has made his home in Washington county and for eight years past has been the owner of a small farm three miles southwest of Banks. On account of ill health he has lived in retirement since 1900.

In 1878 Mr. Easley was married to Miss Delilah Martin, a daughter of Joseph and Anna Martin. The father was a car builder and worked in many of the principal cities of the country but passed his declining years in Dakota. There were four children in his family: Ellen, who is the wife of William Flynn, of Chicago; Maggie, who married W. W. Ross, of New Mexico; Delilah, now Mrs. N. A. Easley; and Arthur J., of Portland. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Easley: Arthur N., who is married and lives at Portland; and William Martin, who is at home.

Mr. Easley is politically independent and is governed in voting largely by the ability and character of candidates and by the importance of the issues at stake. No man is more loyal to his state and he is justly proud of having selected Oregon as his home. He has never served in any public office except that of postmaster at Centerville, Dakota, in 1876. A man of keen powers of observation, sound business principles and genial social qualities, he has made wise use of opportunities and ranks among the substantial citizens of Washington county.

J. S. ROSCOE, owner of the first garage in McMinnville, was born in Michigan, March 16, 1870, a son of D. C. Roscoe, who was a native of Maine but went to Michigan at an early period in the development of the latter state, where he still makes his home. The father served as a soldier in the Civil war, rendering valuable aid to the country during the darkest days in the history of the nation.

J. S. Roscoe spent his youthful days, to the age of sixteen years, under the parental roof and then started out to earn his own living by working as a farm hand in Minnesota. He was thus employed for several years, when thinking that better opportunities for rapid advancement could be secured in the new but developing regions of the northwest he came to Oregon in 1891, settling in Linn county where he resided for about eight years. In 1899 he removed to Yamhill county and established a bicycle repair shop in McMinnville. As the use of the wheel was gradually discontinued and the automobile came to the front, both as a pleasure and service vehicle, Mr. Roscoe established a garage, opening the first one in McMinnville. His natural mechanical genius and ingenuity well qualify him for his work in this connection and he does everything necessary for the care and repair of a motor car. He is justly accounted one of McMinnville's enterprising men. His political support is given to the republican party and he is well versed in the questions and issues of the day but he never seeks nor desires public office, preferring to concentrate his energies upon his business affairs which are bringing to him substantial success.

ERNEST ALBERT LUPTON, M. D., engaged successfully in the practice of medicine and surgery at Sandy, Clackamas county, was born in Chicago, Illinois, April 15, 1875. His parents were Henry and Anna (Marti) Lupton, the father a native of Germany and the mother of Switzerland, and both came to America in youth and were married in Chicago. They were living in that state at the time of the great fire, October 9, 1871, and lost all of their possessions in the same. The father at that time was an inspector of the city water department. In 1884 they moved to Minneapolis, where the father became a traveling salesman and has since continued in that work. He traveled for twenty years for J. B. Ford & Company of Wyandotte, Michigan. Since 1905 he has made his home in Portland. The mother passed away December 16, 1911. In their family were five children: Fred, who is in the manufacturing business at Portland; Ernest Albert; Menga, who is the wife of E. L. Cardle, general freight agent of the Southern Pacific Railroad; Irving, who is a medical student at Portland; and Charlotte, who died in infancy.

Ernest A. Lupton after receiving a common-school and high-school education, became a student in the University of Minnesota, where he remained two years, from 1897 to 1899. In the fall of the latter year he entered Rush Medical College at Chicago and was graduated from that institution with the class of 1903. He then located for practice in Minneapolis, where he remained until 1907, when he took charge of the Bovey Hospital, managing the same for one year. Subsequently he came to Portland and established an office on the east side of that city, where he practiced until 1909. At that date he came to Sandy and, being the only physician here, he has a wide and remunerative patronage and is rapidly demonstrating his ability to cope with the problems that continually confront the physician.

In 1910 Dr. Lupton wedded Miss Mabel McLoud, who was born and reared in Portland and was educated in a high school there. She is the third in order of birth in a family of four children. The others are: Albert, who is connected with a meat market in Portland; Luella, at home; and Jay, a law student in Portland. The mother is living at the age of sixty-five years.

In his political views Dr. Lupton has ever been a democrat but without aspiration for office, preferring to give his undivided attention to his practice, which is constantly growing in volume and in importance. Fraternally he is identified with Oregon City Lodge, No. 1189, B. P. O. E., and both he and his wife are members of the Evangelical church. Deeply interested in his profession, both from a humanitarian and professional standpoint, Dr. Lupton is well equipped for his chosen life work and is rapidly gaining recognition as one of the leading physicians of this section of the state.

CHARLES H. SAVAGE, one of the stockholders and the present manager of the Marion Hotel, which he has been conducting since April, 1911, has been engaged in the hotel business in Salem for five years. He is a native of this state, his birth having occurred at Macleay, Oregon, on the 29th of October, 1872, his parents being William Newton and Susan (Ray) Savage. The father was born in St. Joe, Missouri, on the 16th of August, 1847, and there he remained until he accompanied his parents on their removal to Marion county as a boy of three years. Here the grandfather filed on a donation claim, which is still in the family, being the property of an uncle of our subject, John M. Savage, one of the old saddle-back doctors of that section. There William N. Savage was reared to manhood, obtaining his education in the common schools and at the same time assisting with the operation of the home ranch. When old enough to begin working for himself he adopted agriculture for his vocation, continuing to follow this occupation until his retirement. He has withdrawn entirely from active work and is now living in Salem, and enjoying the ease and freedom from care which rightly belong to every enterprising man who has lived a useful life. The mother is also living and has but recently celebrated the fifty-eighth anniversary of her birth, her natal day having been in December, 1853. Mr. and Mrs. Savage were the parents of nine children, seven of whom are still living in this state.

Reared on the ranch where he was born, Charles H. Savage obtained his early education in the common schools of this state, remaining at home until he was seventeen and assisting with the work of the fields and care of the stock. In 1889 he removed to town and together with his brothers conducted a dairy business, during which time he continued his education and pursued a commercial course, qualifying himself for a business career. Four years ago, in 1907, he assumed the management of the Cottage Hotel of this city, successfully conducting this hostelry until April, 1911. He then took over the management of the Marion Hotel, in which he had purchased stock about a year previously. Mr. Savage is well adapted to the business he is engaged in, possessing the genial and accommodating manner, pleasing personality and tact, so essential to one identified with an enterprise of this nature. The Marion is not only the leading house in Salem but it is one of the best equipped and most ably conducted hotels in the northwest. It is provided with every modern convenience and comfort, the service is good and the cuisine is superior to that usually to be found in hotels in cities of this size. As a host Mr. Savage is popular with the traveling public, it apparently being his delight, rather than a service for which he is compensated, to inconvenience himself for the pleasure of his guests. Although he has not been engaged in the business long, observation has taught him the essential requisites for success in an undertaking of this kind and as a result he is prospering, and bids fair to become one of the leading hotel men in the west.

On the 23d of May, 1908, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Savage to Miss Ida M. Haekey, a native of Franklin, Minnesota, and a daughter of Michael Haekey. Fraternally, he is identified with the Masons and the Elks, being affiliated with Salem lodges, and his political support is accorded the republican party. Although he takes much interest in all municipal affairs, being a public-spirited and enterprising man, he has never been an office seeker. He is a typical western man, enthusiastic over the future of his native state and intensely loyal to its best interests, never permitting an opportunity to escape without championing its cause.

F. C. EDDY, engaged in a general store in Willamina, was born in Elgin, Illinois, April 16, 1870, a son of H. S. and Mary (Ladd) Eddy. The father was a native of Illinois and lived there until 1872, when he moved to Iowa Falls, Iowa, where he died in 1893. He was a farmer by occupation but took an active interest in local politics and filled many county offices, being elected on the republican ticket. He was for eight years commissioner of Franklin county, Iowa, and was also county assessor for eighteen years. He served in the Civil war in the Thirty-second Illinois Cavalry but was discharged on account of physical disability. The Eddy family came from Vermont and later, New York state, and the ancestry dates back to William Eddy, who came to Amercia in the Mayflower. The mother was a native of Illinois and was reared and married in that state, and is now living in Newport, Oregon. In their family were five children: John, of Portland, Oregon; F. C., of this review; Nat. of Portland; Mayze, of Newport, Oregon; and Berta, who is the wife of Ray Quinn, of Portland.

F. C. Eddy was educated in Iowa, where he was graduated from Ellsworth College and remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-four years of age. He then started out in life on his own accord by clerking in a drug store in Iowa Falls, where he was employed for three years. At the end of that time he bought an interest in a drug store in Elgin and, disposing of this after one and one-half years, he went to the state of New York, settling in the village of Holland Patent engaged in the drug and general merchandise business for seven years. Subsequently he came to Oregon, was in the grocery business at Eugene for five years, in Portland one year and in Sheridan two years. Finally he settled in Willamina, where he was a partner for one year in the Kershaw store and then he entered into partnership with F. E. Sherwin in a general dry-goods store, in which they carry a large stock of goods. He also owns fifty acres of land and a residence, which he has built in Willamina.

Mr. Eddy was wedded in 1893 to Miss Lulu Putnam and they have become the parents of three children: Irene, who is at home; a child, who died in infancy; and Clarence. Mrs. Eddy died in 1899 and in 1907 Mr. Eddy married Miss Amy Shipley. They have become the parents of two children: Mary Muriel, deceased; and Amy Margaret.

Mr. Eddy is a republican in politics. He takes a great interest in education and is a member of the school board. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America, the United Artisans, the Knights of Pythias and the Maccabees. Since the beginning of his business career Mr. Eddy has spent his entire time in store work and his knowledge of the management of different stores in which he has been employed has admirably fitted him for the business he now so successfully conducts.

AXEL RUTH has the reputation of being one of the most successful orchardists on North inlet, Coos county, where he lives on a highly developed farm of one hundred and sixty acres. He was born in Sweden, September 28, 1862, and is the only son of John and Louise Ruth, also natives of Sweden. The father has reached the advanced age of eighty-eight years and the mother died in her native country many years ago. They were the parents of but one child, Axel, of this review.

Axel Ruth was reared at home, received his early education in Sweden and emigrated to America in 1880, settling at North Bend in Coos county. During the first thirteen years of his life in the new world he was engaged at various kinds of labor, after which he purchased a farm of forty acres, to which he has since added by purchase until he now owns one hundred and sixty acres of fine orchard land. His farm is located three miles from the head of navigation, on a branch of North inlet and he makes a specialty of raising fruit and engages in dairying and general farming.

Mr. Ruth was united in marriage in March, 1887, to Miss Annie Hanson, whose birth occurred May 24, 1863. She is a daughter of John and Augusta Hansson, both of whom were natives of Sweden. Her mother died in her native country in 1872, and the father is still living at the advanced age of eighty-five years. They were the parents of four children: August, who resides in Sweden; John, a resident of Coos county, Oregon; Charles, who maintains his home on Haynes slough, Coos county; and Annie, the wife of the subject of this review.

To Mr. and Mrs. Ruth, six children have been born: Christina, the wife of Charles Royer of Seattle, Washington; Agnes O., who died at the age of twenty years; Florence A., who married Lewis St. Dennis and resides on a homestead near the subject of this review; Alma C. at home; Edward E.; and Chester O. All have a good education. Axel Ruth is a democrat but is liberal in the exercise of his franchise. He and his family are members of the Lutheran church.

He is one of the highly respected men of Coos county and is numbered among the most enterprising and successful farmers and fruit growers of his portion of the state.

PHILIP REES, who for many years has been influentially associated with the farming and stock-raising interests of Salem, resides on his farm near that town. He was born on the 15th of November, 1840, his parents being Richard and Mary (Davis) Rees, both of whom were natives of New York state but subsequently removed to Pennsylvania, where they resided until their deaths. To them six children were born: Philip, who is the subject of this review; Davis, of Pennsylvania; Charles, deceased; Mrs. Ella Curtis, of New York state; and Alma and George, who also make their home in that state.

Early in life Philip Rees received his education in the common schools and at the same time assisted his father with the work on the home place, but at the age of twenty-one years he started out on his own account, his first employment being as a salesman, a line of activity which he followed for seventeen years. In 1870 he went to California and three years later to Marion county, Oregon. In 1875 he returned to Pennsylvania, where he remained for one year before going to Texas for seven years. In 1882 he again came to Oregon and purchased the farm of three hundred acres, upon which he is now residing. By active work, perseverance and determination he has improved this property and made it not only highly productive but has also well equipped it with modern buildings. He devotes his time to grain and stock-raising and is meeting with the success which he so justly deserves.

On the 13th of September, 1882, Mr. Rees was married to Mrs. Mary E. Sutton, a daughter of Eli and Susanna (Watkins) Chaudoin. Her birth occurred on the 17th of September, 1858, in Independence county, Arkansas, near Batesville, and on the 30th of August, 1877, she was married to Dr. James N. Sutton and to this union were born two children: Cora, who is the wife of Paul Foerster, of Los Angeles, California; and Myrtle, who is married to Ennis Savage, a chemist in the sugar mills of Maui, an island in the Hawaiian group. To Mr. and Mrs. Rees one son has been born, Davis, who is residing in Salem.

Politically Mr. Rees is a republican and, as every true American citizen should do, keeps well informed on the issues and questions of the day but has had little desire for office, although he served for a number of years on the school board. Mrs. Rees is a member of the Baptist church and they are both actively interested in promoting any measures which show a progressive spirit or pertain to the development of their community. Well known in Marion county, Mr. Rees has the good-will and trust of those with whom he has been associated.

JOHN BEAR is one of the most successful and enterprising men of this state and has for many years past been identified with various extensive business enterprises. He now lives retired in one of the most beautiful homes in Marshfield, located on the identical spot where Captain Hamilton's log cabin was originally built. He was born August 16, 1841, and is a son of Peter and Mary (Saneros) Bear. His parents were both natives of Finland and his father was engaged as foreman for a large fishing concern and also operated a stage line successfully. There were five children in their family, as follows: Frederick, who died at the age of fifteen years; Charles, deceased, who left two daughters, who reside in Finland; Peter, deceased, who is survived by five children, Charles, Jennie, Cynthia, Ida and Henrietta; John, the subject of this review; and Mary Louise, who has passed away.

John Bear was reared at home and educated in the public schools of Finland. He started in life for himself at the age of seventeen years, becoming a sailor and shipping under his uncle. At the time he left home his uncle promised his mother that he would bring back with him her boy John, but the fates willed otherwise. His uncle died in Marseilles, France, and Mr. Bear has never returned to his parental home in Finland. While at Marseilles he determined to leave his uncle's ship and made a vigorous effort to obtain the personal effects of his deceased relative but was not successful in doing so. He left the ship, however, and succeeded in shipping on an American vessel as sailor. On that boat he reached Baltimore and for many years afterward devoted his time to life as a sailor on the deep seas, during which time he made a great many trips to the West Indies. While following the sea he enlisted in the Union navy, in which he served one year, but on account of being wounded while in the service he was discharged and at once took service as a sailor on an American ship bound for the West Indies. In 1862 he reached London, having sailed from Calcutta, India, and from London he shipped to Australia and from there to San Francisco, reaching that city in May, 1863, remaining here for two years. He then removed to Marshfield, arriving in that place on a burning ship which was also water-logged and wholly disabled. On reaching Marshfield he decided to give up a sailor's life and establish his home in that part of Oregon. He found employment with the Simpson Lumber Company and with that concern he remained for three years, after which time he engaged in the lumber business for himself and secured a contract from a large match factory to furnish it with cedar. While meeting the terms of his contract with the match factory his business grew rapidly and he soon obtained a contract with the builders of the San Francisco Street Railway Company to furnish ties for its roadbed, and this contract gives him the distinction of being the man who furnished the first ties used in the construction of the street railway system in San Francisco. He continued in the lumber business for four years. John Bear was also active along other lines of endeavor. He has improved and stocked fifteen different ranches in this state, all of which he has disposed of at handsome profits. For a time he was engaged in the cafe and restaurant business and was later interested in a livery in which line he continued for a period of eighteen years. He is the owner of forty acres of valuable coal land and also a number of very fine business properties in Marshfield, and is the owner of the residence in which he lives.

Mr. Bear has been married twice, his first wife being Miss Mary Ann Walin, to whom he was married in 1872. To them were born seven children, as follows: Emma, who lives in Marshfield; Gusta, who accidentally met her death eleven years ago by drowning in the Columbia river; Cynthia, who married John Nagle, of North Bend, Oregon; Edna, the wife of Dr. Harry Walter, of Marshfield; Albert, also of Marshfield; Effie, deceased; and Chester, of Marshfield. These children were all educated in the public schools of Marshfield. Their mother passed away in 1888. In 1895 Mr. Bear married the widow of Fred Jensen, a native of Denmark. Her maiden name was Maggie Nelson, and she is a daughter of Nels and Christina (Jensen) Christoferson, who were natives of Denmark. They were the parents of five children, as follows: Lars; Marie, the wife of Nels Christensen; Anna, who married Peter Matson; Maggie, now Mrs. Bear; and Sine, the wife of Jens Hansen. The three sisters and the brother of Mrs. Bear all reside in Denmark. By her first marriage she is the mother of one son, Charles A. Jensen, of Marshfield, who attended the public schools of the town, where he has made his home and received a college education at San Jose, California. He is married and the father of two children, Fred J. and Phyllis Marie.

Mr. Bear affiliates with the democratic party. He has served in the office of road supervisor for the past fifteen years and has also been a member of the city council of Marshfield for nine years. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and of the Masonic order, and both he and his wife are members of the Eastern Star. Mr. Bear is one of the most useful and valued members of the community in which he lives and is deeply interested in all measures affecting the public welfare. He is known throughout the entire county as a reliable man and in every way a desirable citizen.

EDGAR S. BRICKER is a successful ranchman who is living near Provolt, on a tract of one hundred and sixty acres of land, which he took up as a government claim and which he has well improved. He is a veteran of the Civil war and enjoys a wide acquaintance. He was born in Pennsylvania, March 7, 1841, a son of Samuel and Barbara (Short) Bricker, who were also natives of the Keystone state. In their family were six children, all of whom were given a good education in the common schools of their native state.

Edgar S. Bricker left home at the age of twenty-two years and came to California, where for a time he worked on a ranch. He then removed to Josephine county, Oregon, where he took up mining. Later he settled on one hundred and sixty acres of government land, which he has since made his home. He applied himself to improving his farm and bringing a considerable portion of it under cultivation until now the place constitutes a very valuable property. He has given some attention to mining ever since he owned the farm and with a brother met with considerable success in that pursuit.

Mr. Bricker early responded to his country's call at the outbreak of the Civil war, enlisting in 1861. He saw strenuous service and was in a number of battles. In his political views he has always been a republican, although never in the sense of an office seeker. He is well and favorably known in his community and is held in high esteem by a large number of people.

JOHN M. ANDERSON, engaged in general farming and stock-raising, near Dairy, Oregon, was born in Norway, February 4, 1867, a son of Martin and Minnie (Jones) Anderson. The father died in Norway when his son, John, was about eight years of age. The mother, with her son and two daughters, came to the United States in 1885 and for two years they were residents of Minneapolis while the succeeding two years were spent by them in the state of Washington. John M. Anderson came to the Yonka valley, and settled there in 1892. He has since resided in that section but his mother is now living in Assiniboia, Canada. In the family were three children, the sisters of our subject being: Albertina, the wife of Ole Widen, who resides in Assiniboia, Canada; and Nettie, the wife of John Skomo, of Yreka, California.

On coming to Oregon, John M. Anderson homesteaded a tract of one hundred and sixty acres which he at once began to cultivate and improve. He, however, disposed of that property and purchased his present home place in 1911. This comprises two hundred and seventy acres, one hundred and fifty acres of which is under cultivation. He carries on general farming and stock-raising and has fifty head of cattle and fifteen horses on the ranch. He is not afraid of hard work, is energetic and capable, and as the years pass by is gaining in prosperity and building a substantial fortune.

Mr. Anderson is a republican and for a short time served as postmaster of Dairy, where he also conducted a store. He is affiliated with the Knights of the Macabees and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is loyal to the teachings of those fraternal organizations which have for their basis the principle of mutual benefit and brotherly kindness.

ALVIN B. LIBBEY is the owner of valuable land, pleasantly and conveniently located five miles east of Merrill. His birth occurred in Lincoln, Maine, January 6, 1857, and thus the width of the continent separates him from the state of his nativity. His parents, Thomas and Martha (Miles) Libbey, were also natives of Maine, where they spent their entire lives upon a farm. The father, however, was a wheelwright by trade and possessed good mechanical ability. He enlisted in the army at the outbreak of the Civil war and laid down his life as a sacrifice, on the altar of his country. In the family were ten children, of whom five are living.

Alvin B. Libbey, resided in Maine until 1876, when, at the age of nineteen years, he made his way to the Pacific coast, settling in the Sacramento valley of California. He spent twelve years there as a farm hand. He worked on Butte creek, in Oregon, and in the Sparta valley of California for three years. About 1888 he had preempted land in Klamath county, securing one hundred and sixty acres, on which he has made his home for about twenty years. He has three land claims, comprising, in all, three quarters of a section, and one hundred and seventy acres thereof is under government ditch. He cleared away the sage brush, made all of the improvements on his land, set out a poplar grove and planted about one hundred fruit trees. Everything on his land manifests his progressive spirit and the property is fast being transformed into one of the finest farms of southern Oregon. He engages in general farming, and makes a specialty of hay. Much of his land, he now rents, although he still retains his residence here. In former years he was largely interested in the raising of horses but is now practically living retired, for his success has been such as to enable him to put aside business cares, in a large degree, save for the supervision which he gives to his property interests.

Mr. Libbey was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Pope, a native of Oregon and a daughter of Charles Pope, and in 1903 he was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife. His only child, a baby boy, died at the age of six months. Mr. Libbey is a Mason and an Odd Fellow and is loyal to the teachings of these fraternities. Almost a quarter of a century's residence in this part of the state has made him widely known and his sterling traits of character have gained him warm and enduring regard.

HENRY GROSS is one of the successful and highly respected citizens of Wolfcreek, where he is engaged in the cultivation of his highly developed ranch, well located on Ciota creek, in Josephine county. He was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, January 25, 1842, and is a son of John and Nancy (Allen) Gross, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Pennsylvania. The father emigrated to America when a small boy and settled in Pennsylvania, where he continued to live during the remaining years of his life. Mr. Gross was united in marriage, in 1908, to Mrs. Sarah (Reeves) Neeser, the widow of William Neeser, by whom she was the mother of two children, Edwin, a resident of British Columbia; and Cora, the wife of C. E. Gordon, of California. Mr. Gross is affiliated with the republican party, and fraternally is a member of the Masonic order. He has passed practically his entire life in the vicinity of his present home having been born on a ranch five miles northeast of Eugene, on the 7th of February, 1857. His parents, S. J. and Annis Bonnett, were born and reared in West Virginia and married in Iowa, whence they removed in 1854 to Oregon. They located in Lane county, where the father took up a donation claim, and here they passed the remainder of their

Having been reared on a ranch, A. C. Bonnett was early trained to agricultural pursuits and on starting out to earn his own living, he sought employment as a farm hand. He thus acquired sufficient means to become a property owner and after the death of his father increased his holdings by the purchase of the old homestead. At one time he was the owner of five hundred and twenty acres of land in this county, but he has since disposed of a portion of this, and now has three hundred and twenty acres. It is well improved and fifty acres has been brought into a high state of productivity. Mr. Bonnett is an energetic man, who directs his undertakings with foresight and sagacity, and in appreciation of the value of system and method in the development of any enterprise. R. B. BANISTER is a pioneer of the west, having crossed the plains in 1852 with ox teams, the trip consuming six months' time. He now resides on a ranch in Josephine county near Merlin, where with his son, Lyndon K. Banister, he is passing his declining years. He was born in the state of New York, August 20, 1829, a son of Benjamin and Bathia (Axtel) Banister, both natives of Vermont. In 1844 the parents removed to McHenry county, Illinois, afterward taking up their abode in Kansas, where both passed away. In their family were eleven children, four of whom are now living: J. J.; R. B.; Sarah, the widow of E. Isom and a resident of Illinois; and S. N., of Washington.

R. B. Banister received a common-school education and in 1852 crossed the plains to California with ox teams, the trip requiring six months. He purchased a tract of land and resided in that state for seven years, or until 1859, when he removed to Josephine county, Oregon. At the end of two years he went to Jackson county and purchased a homestead on Applegate creek, upon which he lived for twenty years. He then disposed of his homestead and returned to Josephine county and with his son is now living upon a ranch near Merlin.

In 1858 Mr. Banister was united in marriage to Miss Mary Bradford, a native of Ohio and a daughter of Ward and Margaret Bradford. To Mr. and Mrs. Banister ten children were born, eight of whom are now living. Both Mr. Banister and his wife affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church, being active members of that denomination. They are among the highly respected residents of the community, where they have been honored residents for many years.

Their son, Lyndon K. Banister, was born in Josephine county, Oregon, January 26, 1862, and remained at home with his parents until he became of age. He received a common-school education and upon arriving at manhood's estate began life on his own account as a railroad employe, an occupation which he followed for a considerable length of time. He then engaged in gold mining, at which he worked for nine years, and in 1887 he purchased a one hundred and sixty acre farm on Jump-off Joe creek. He immediately set about improving his land by erecting buildings and other necessities and set out fruit trees and vines of many kinds. He has devoted much energy and skill to improving his farm and has made of it one of the valuable agricultural properties of the community. He is engaged in general farming and makes a specialty of raising hogs and cattle for the market. With him are living his aged parents and to their comfort and necessities he has given much consideration.

He takes a deep interest in the various public matters, which concern the good of the community, is a man of broad views, and is greatly esteemed by a large number of people.

J. N. MATNEY is the owner of forty-three acres of fertile land in the vicinity of Jacksonville, where he engages in general agricultural pursuits. He is a native of this county, his birth having occurred on the 19th of October, 1874, and is one of seventeen children born to C. B. and Margaret Matney. The father who passed away in 1906, was one of the first settlers in this valley, having located on the Applegate river in 1852 and there his children were born and reared.

The boyhood and youth of J. N. Matney were passed on his father's ranch and in the acquirement of his education he attended the public schools. He was trained to agricultural pursuits from childhood, having early begun to assist with the lighter duties about the home ranch, his responsibilities increasing as his strength developed with the passing years. By the time he had attained his maturity he was a skilled ranchman and was fully qualified to undertake the management and development of a place of his own. Mr. Matney's homestead is a portion of his father's old donation claim and through intelligent cultivation the land has been brought to a high state of productivity. He has erected substantial barns and outbuildings and a comfortable residence on his place and it is equipped with such implements and machinery as are deemed essential to modern agriculture. His fields are almost entirely devoted to the raising of hay, grain and potatoes and as he gives his personal supervision to the tilling of his fields and care of his crops he is annually rewarded with an abundant harvest which brings the market's highest prices. He is recognized as one of the capable as well as prosperous agriculturists of his community and is acquiring a comfortable competence.

On the 26th of August, 1907, Mr. Matney was united in marriage to Miss Fanny Swartzlagen, who was born in the state of Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Matney have a little daughter, Marie, whose natal day was the 24th of October, 1908.

Ever since accorded the right of franchise upon attaining his majority, Mr. Matney has given his support to the candidates of the democratic party, considering that their policy was best adapted to meet the interests of the American people. Fraternally he is a member of Lodge, No. 10, I. O. O. F. His entire life has been passed in the vicinity where he now lives and among whose residents he numbers many staunch friends of his boyhood days.

J. R. COLEMAN, who is the owner of a productive farm of one hundred acres, situated four miles south of Salem, on the Turner road, was born near McMinnville, in Yamhill county, June 20, 1853, the son of James and Frances Coleman. The father, a native of Franklin, Ohio, was reared in that state and later removed to Iowa, where he resided until 1847, when he crossed the plains and took up a donation claim west of McMinnville. In 1861 he moved to Marion county and remained there the rest of his life, dying July 10, 1911, at the venerable age of ninety years. He followed the occupation of farming all his life. The mother, who was a native of Ireland, was brought to America when a small child and was reared in Fort Wayne, Indiana, where she was married in 1845. She died in 1905 in Oregon and is buried at St. Paul. In their family were eleven children: Anna and John, both of whom are deceased; Mary, the wife of Charles Pelland, of St. Paul, Oregon; J. R., of this review; Thomas, of St. Paul; Eliza, who is the wife of Frank Hammond, of Portland, Oregon; Stephen and Charles, both of St. Paul, Oregon; Emma, who is the wife of William Murphy, of St. Paul; Louise, who is the wife of John J. Casey, of Butte, Montana; and Frank, of St. Paul, Oregon.

J. R. Coleman received his early education in the common schools and later completed a three years' course at the Willamette University. After his school days he remained at home until he was twenty-five years of age, when he began farming a part of the home place and later took charge of a farm, where the Home for the Feeble Minded is now situated. Subsequently he came to his present location, where he is engaged in general farming. He has made excellent improvements on the farm and employs up-to-date and scientific methods.

In 1876 J. R. Coleman was united in marriage with Miss Eliza Miller, a native of Oregon, and they have become the parents of four children: Russell, of Coburg, Lane county, Oregon, who is engaged in stock-raising; Molly, the wife of Phil Edminister, of San Francisco, California; Alice, who is the wife of Cecil Rodgers, residing near Turner, Oregon; and Curtis, who is at home.

In politics Mr. Coleman is a democrat, and his fraternal affiliation is with the Modern Woodmen of America at Salem, where he belongs to Cedar Camp. Both he and his wife are members of the Episcopal church and their lives are guided by its teachings. Mr. Coleman is well known in Marion county and justly deserves the high regard which is given him by his many friends, for his life has been one of well directed activity and intelligent effort.

BENJAMIN LAFAYETTE SIMPSON, A native of Linn county and a son of a pioneer in Oregon is Benjamin Lafayette Simpson, who for over fifty years has been prominently identified with agricultural interests of this community. Starting at the early age of fifteen his prosperity has developed with the progress of the country and with the development in him of those qualities which make for success until today he is classed among the enterprising and substantial men of his district. He was born three miles south of Albany, Linn county, in 1855 and is a son of Francis and Mary A. (Corum) Simpson, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Missouri. The marriage of his parents occurred in Missouri and immediately afterward they came to Oregon, making the journey across the plains with ox teams. The trip occupied six months and they reached Portland in 1850 and there settled for a short time, the father building the first sawmill on the Tualatin river in 1851. In the following year the family moved to Linn county and Francis Simpson took up a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres, upon which he resided until 1868, when he sold his holdings and bought a farm near Shedd Station. This land he eventually sold and moved to the northern part of California, where he farmed until his death on April 23, 1873. His wife survived him until 1908 and died when she was eighty-five years of age. In their family were eight children: Joseph and Lewis, who reside in Washington; Alfred, a resident of Walla Walla, Washington; Mrs. Mary A. Smith of the same state; T. B., who makes his home in Coeur d'Alene, Idaho; Mrs. Sarah J. Newson, of Prineville; Benjamin Lafayette, of this review; and Riley H., who resides in Pendleton.

Benjamin L. Simpson received a limited education in the public schools of Linn county and began his active agricultural career when he was only fifteen years of age, working out upon neighboring farms for five years and then renting land in Linn county. In this capacity he was active for some time but in 1905 bought one hundred and thirty-one acres, half a mile beyond the limits of Lebanon and this farm he has operated since that time. He specializes in the raising of small fruits and garden produce and has already realized a good return upon his investment, the land being worth at the present time over five hundred dollars per acre.

In 1876 Mr. Simpson was united in marriage to Miss Jeannette Wheeler, who was born in Oregon, a daughter of L. M. and Isabel (Miller) Wheeler. Her father crossed the plains in 1847 and settled in Linn county in earliest pioneer times, taking up three hundred and twenty acres near Scio, as a donation claim. He was successful and sixteen years afterward sold his first holdings and bought land in the same neighborhood, moving eventually to Shedd Station, where he lived for nine years. He spent a similar period of time on a farm near Lebanon, dying in the latter city at the age of seventy. His wife is living with the subject of this review and is seventy-five years of age. Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Wheeler were the parents of six children: George, who has passed away; James, a resident of Washington; Jeannette, the wife of our subject; Bertie, deceased; Melvin D., of Linn county; and A. D., who resides in Albany. Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Simpson have six children. Leonard L., who was born in 1877, is married and resides in Portland, where he is engaged in the insurance business. V. C., who was born in 1878, resides in Lebanon and is engaged as a barber. Melvin James, who was born in 1880, is residing at home and is associated with his father in the conduct of the home farm. He was elected state representative of Oregon in 1910, and is still serving in this capacity. Ellis M., whose birth occurred in 1886, is married and lives in Salem, where he is engaged as a barber. Francis C. was born in 1889 and makes his home in Lebanon. Benjamin R., the youngest member of the family, was born in 1897, and is residing at home. The family belong to the Baptist church.

The career of Benjamin L. Simpson is a splendid example of what may be accomplished by recognizing and using opportunities. His early life directed his interests naturally toward farming and even at the age of fifteen, his business acumen told him that agriculture was to be the future source of wealth in Oregon. Acting upon this realization and starting with practically nothing he has steadily worked his way upward in his chosen field and is classed today among the men who are important enough in farming circles to influence methods and affect standards.

RUFUS LANGDON is manager and owner of two of the most important ferries over the Umpqua river, and in conjunction with his brother, Commodore P. Langdon, is operating a stage and mail route. He is bringing to these activities the same progressive and straightforward characteristics which made him a successful farmer since he was old enough to hold the plow and which influenced and hastened the agricultural development of the state. Mr. Langdon is a native son of Oregon and was born in Kellogg precinct, Douglas county, March 31, 1879. He is a son of Ansel and Leonora (Maupin) Langdon, the former a native of Green Lake county, Wisconsin, and the latter of Greene county, Illinois. Mr. Langdon's father crossed the plains to Oregon, making the journey from Illinois to this state with the Dimmick family in 1852. The mother of our subject made the trip across the plains with her parents when she was yet a girl. Their marriage occurred in Douglas county, and immediately afterward Ansel Langdon took up a fractional donation claim in the bend of the Umpqua river five miles south of Elkton, and here operated one of the model farms of the district. He later took up a homestead claim and in addition to this bought sixty acres of railroad land, making his holdings aggregate almost five hundred acres. He was an active man in the early years of his life but later suffered much from illness. He was one of the early freighters in Douglas county and hauled the first load of freight out of Scottsburg bound for Yreka, California. He was a veteran of the Indian wars and a man who took an active part in every phase of pioneer development in the section in which he located. He died in 1892 in his sixty-second year and the event deprived Douglas county of a thoroughly representative, honorable and upright man. His widow is still living and makes her home with the subject of this sketch.

Rufus Langdon was reared upon his father's farm and acquired his education in the public schools of Douglas county. He was but thirteen years of age when his father died but he had been taught the principles of farming from his early childhood. When he was sixteen years of age he assumed the entire responsibility of the operation of the extensive property which his father left and subsequently purchased the homestead. It comprised at that time one hundred and eight acres, his father having disposed of all the remaining property previous to his death. Mr. Langdon still retains ownership of this well improved farm and for many years made its cultivation the principal activity of his life. In 1906, however, he secured the contract for the operation of the south ferry over the Umpqua river and was successful in this line for two and one-half years. In 1910 he added to his activities by contracting to run the Dimmick ferry, in the operation of which he is still successful and active. He has recently joined with his brother, Commodore P. Langdon, and purchased the Oakland and Elkton stage and mail route, which they are now running successfully.

In his political views Mr. Langdon is a republican and a progressive and liberal thinker upon public affairs. He has never sought office, preferring to devote his attention to agricultural and business enterprises. He is a member of Elkton Lodge, No. 192, I. O. O. F., and also belongs to Elkton Camp, No. 5786, M. W. A. His business career has been marked by a policy of thorough integrity and strict honor. He carries on all his activities along broad and progressive principles which are an heritage from his father and are contributing factors in the development of the American northwest.

THOMAS ANDERSON is one of the well known residents of southern Oregon and Anderson lake, not far from the town of Plush, which was named in his honor. He was born in New York in 1833 and when about three years old went to sea with his father, who was a sailor, and with him he made voyages until ten years of age. The father then went upon another ship as skipper and Thomas Anderson followed the sea until 1851, when he made his way around Cape Horn and up the Pacific coast to San Francisco, arriving there on Christmas day. He spent the winter there working on vessels and at other labor, after which he went to the mines of Shasta county, spending four years there. He then began packing from Bluffs to Yreka and other points, being thus engaged until 1865, when he removed to Umatilla, Oregon. In the Rogue river district he hired out to the government, working as a packer during the Indian troubles. He was stationed at different points in eastern Oregon in the employ of the government until the following spring when he went to Sacramento. He then began packing on his own account, making trips from Yreka to Fort Klamath. About 1872 he came to Warner valley but when the Modoc war broke out he went with General Winton as a packer, being thus employed all through the Modoc war. With that commander he proceeded to Walla Walla, Washington, and from there to Fort Klamath. At length he left the service and returned to Warner valley to look after his cattle interests. Here he has since remained and is one of the well known residents of this part of the state. He has two hundred and forty acres of land on Hart mountain, and he also has charge of three hundred and twenty acres divided into two tracts of equal size. He resides near the head of Hart lake and on the lake that bears his name. He has been a stockman throughout the period of his residence here, using the ranch extensively in the conduct of a cattle business. He had twenty-five hundred head of cattle until 1890, but lost heavily during the hard winter, since which time he has given his attention to the care of smaller herds. He has now reached the age of seventy-nine years but is still active in business. His life has brought to him many varied and interesting experiences, such as come to the pioneer and the stockman upon the frontier.

LEE WIMBERLY, who, since 1906 has been owner and editor of the Daily Roseburg Review, which paper he aided in establishing at Roseburg in 1898, was born in Douglas county, Oregon, April 19, 1866. His parents were Enoch and Nancy A. Wimberly, both Oregon pioneers, the former an Indian war veteran, who arrived here in 1846. The mother came to this state in 1853. Enoch Wimberly was born in Missouri but was a descendant of the Wimberly family of Mississippi. His wife, a native of Illinois, was descended from the Fays family of Kentucky.

Lee Wimberly was a pupil in the public schools of his native county, supplementing his district school work by study in the Roseburg high school. In youth he had the usual, experiences of the farm lad and in early manhood he devoted a few months to teaching school, but in 1888 took up the printing trade and newspaper work, to which he has since devoted his attention. He spent a number of years in the employ of others, mastering every phase of the business, and in 1898 he helped to establish the Daily Roseburg Review. Three years later or in 1901, he was made its editor and in 1906 he purchased the paper, which he has since owned and published. It is liberally patronized both in its circulation and advertising departments and is an up-to-date journal, devoted to local interests and to the dissemination of general information. Mr. Wimberly is a director in several local building associations.

At Roseburg, on the 19th of October, 1898, Mr. Wimberly was married to Miss Cora Benedick, the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. Benedick. Her father is prominent in the Presbyterian church and has twice been its representative to general assembly sessions. Mr. and Mrs. Wimberly have a daughter, Florence, who is eight years of age. Mr. Wimberly is a democrat but not a strict partisan. He is well known and popular in fraternal circles. He is a past grand patriarch of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Oregon and was grand representative in the sovereign grand lodge, I. O. O. F., at Indianapolis, Indiana, in September, 1911, and at Winnipeg, Manitoba, in September, 1912. He belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, is a dictator of the Loyal Order of Moose and a past councillor commander of the Woodmen of the World. He is in hearty sympathy with the high principles and purposes of these organizations and that he is an exemplary representative thereof is indicated in the official honors that have been conferred upon him.

GLENN G. ANDERSON, who resides two and a half miles northeast of Eugene, where he engages in hop and fruit raising, is one of Lane county's native sons, born in 1870. His father, the late J. C. Anderson, was born in Arkansas, whence he removed to Oregon and subsequently engaged in hop growing, being the first person in the state to follow this activity on an extensive scale. He passed away in 1905, but was survived by the mother, whose maiden name was Eliza Campbell and who is now the wife of Isaac Stevens, of Eugene. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Anderson, of whom our subject is the eldest.

The boyhood and youth of Glenn G. Anderson were passed on the ranch where he was born and in the acquirement of an education he attended the common schools. After laying aside his text-books he assisted his father with the operation of the home place until he was married, at the age of twenty-two. He then left the parental roof and started out to make his own way in the world. For fifteen years thereafter he took lumber and logging contracts, but at the expiration of that period he turned his attention to argicultural pursuits. He rented some land, which he has ever since devoted to fruit raising and hop growing and has met with good financial success in both undertakings. He now owns a fine tract of land at Kingsley, Oregon, and a block at Douglas Garden, both of which properties are excellent holdings and constantly increasing in value.

Mr. Anderson was married on the 24th of December, 1892, to Miss Minnie Belcher, who was born in Scranton, Pennsylvania, in 1875, and is a daughter of Lance and Mary (Kimball) Belcher, who were born, reared and married in the Keystone state. They removed from there to Nebraska, where the father passed away in 1880. The mother subsequently became the wife of Elliott Patten and in 1887 they came to Oregon, and now own a fine ranch in Lane county. Mrs. Anderson is the eldest of the four children born to her parents, the others being as follows: Mrs. May Lane of Black Rock, Oregon; and Charley and David, both of whom are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have three children, as follows: Norman, still at home, whose birth occurred on December 31, 1893; Edith M., who was born in 1895, now a high-school student; and E. Fay, whose natal year was 1901, also attending school. Mr. Anderson gives his political support to the men and measures of the democratic party. He is an enterprising man, diligent and progressive, and as a result he is meeting with success in the pursuit of his undertakings.

HENRY H. WOOD is the owner of a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres, on the north end of Swan Lake valley, where he is engaged in general farming and stock-raising. He was born in Columbia county, Wisconsin, January 1, 1865, and was fourth in the order of birth of ten children of William and Lucy C. (Hawkins) Wood, the father a native of Scotland and the mother of New York. William Wood came to the United States when eighteen years of age. He had been left an orphan at the age of six years, and when very young had to provide not only for his own support but also for that of a younger brother. Lucy C. Hawkins went to Wisconsin with her parents when young and in that state became the wife of William Wood. They spent the remainder of their lives upon the farm in Columbia county, Wisconsin, and it was there that Henry H. Wood was born and reared, residing in that state until the fall of 1887, when, at the age of twenty-two years, he left home and has since been dependent upon his own resources for a livelihood. He spent about one year in Nevada and California and in the fall of 1888 came to Oregon, locating at Dairy, Klamath county.

He preempted land in the Pine Flat valley and resided thereon for about fourteen years, when he sold that property and homesteaded his present ranch of one hundred and sixty acres at the north end of Swan Lake valley. Here he has since engaged in general farming and stock-raising and has met with a generous measure of prosperity, being the owner of a good property which returns to him substantial income because of the care and labor that he bestows upon it.

In 1897, Henry H. Wood was married to Miss Jane Michael who was born in North Carolina, September 15, 1867. She was a young lady of twenty years when brought to Oregon in 1887 by her parents. Thomas and Martha (Michael) Michael. Her father and mother were consins and were natives of North Carolina. Their last days were passed in Klamath county, Oregon. Mrs. Wood was the eldest of seven children, six of whom lived to years of maturity. By her marriage she has become the mother of three children, Maggie, Louise and Harry, all born in Klamath county. Mr. Wood is a republican and is without aspiration for public office. He has never taken an active part in politics yet is unremitting in the duties of citizenship. He recognizes the fact that he has obligations to the work of public improvement and is not slow to meet his duty in that connection.

GEORGE BAYNE, starting out in life as a farm hand, became in the course of years a successful agriculturist and at the time of his death in 1911 owned a valuable farm property in Multnomah county. He was born in Scotland, on the 1st of February, 1869, a son of Mr. and Mrs. John Bayne, also natives of Scotland. The parents left their native land and settled in America in 1871, locating first in Iowa, where the father's death occurred. Subsequently the mother removed to Oregon but later went to Georgia, where she passed away. They were the parents of ten children, five of whom survive.

George Bayne acquired his education in the common schools and at the same time laid the foundation for his agricultural career by assisting on the home farm until he started out independently. He ever showed the salient characteristics of his Scotch ancestry by his energy, industry and thrift. At the time of his death he owned one hundred and sixty acres of land near Burlington, which he had cultivated earlier in life and which is still the property of his widow although they never resided upon it. By careful and judicious management his property proved so highly productive and profitable, that later in life he was able to purchase considerable real estate, including a valuable business block and a substantial home in Salem. Until 1909 he made his home upon a farm of fifty-three acres, located four miles east of Salem, and engaged most successfully in hop growing.

On the 20th of April, 1902, Mr. Bayne was married to Miss Mary Smith, whose birth occurred in Marion county and who is a daughter of James and Isabelle (Low) Smith, both of whom are also natives of Scotland. They came to America in 1874 and located in Marion county, upon the farm where they resided until their removal to Polk county, where they are still living. To them four children were born, namely: Mrs. Bayne, James, Albert and Isabelle. To Mr. and Mrs. Bayne one son was born, Albert Edward, whose birth occurred on the 11th of March, 1903. Mrs. Bayne is now residing in Salem, having retained her home there since her husband's death.

Mr. Bayne was always interested in matters relating to the civic welfare and never neglected the duties of citizenship, although he neither sought nor desired office. He always kept well informed on the issues of the day and gave his support to the measures which he thought would be most influential in producing good government. He was devoted to his family, was a good neighbor and a faithful friend. He was sociable by nature and enjoyed the companionship of those of congenial tastes and interests. He readily recognized the good in others and was loved by all who knew him. He left a comfortable competence to his family and also an untarnished name, a valued inheritance even more to be cherished than riches.

WILLIAM J. SAVAGE is one of Josephine county's well known citizens, who as result of his industry and ability has risen to a place of prominence and success. He commenced life as a poor boy, a member of a large family, and by close application secured a good education, becoming a teacher, and now owns, together with his brother, Gilbert M., eight hundred and twenty acres of land, upon which he follows agricultural pursuits and stock-raising. He was born in Jackson county, Oregon, July 12, 1854, a son of James and Margaret (McKinzie) Savage, the father a native of New Brunswick and the mother of Scotland. The latter emigrated with her family to the United States when a child and after her marriage came, in 1853, with ox teams, to Oregon, the family home being established in Jackson county. The father of our subject died in that county in 1908 and the mother, who survives, makes her home in Grants Pass. In their family were thirteen children, eleven of whom survive. Gilbert M. Savage was born near Rock Point, Jackson county, on the 15th of April, 1856, and married Elvira Piatt, a twin sister of Mrs. William J. Savage.

William J. Savage remained at home with his parents until he attained the age of twenty-six years, receiving meanwhile a high-school education. He then embarked in business, lumbering and farming. He also taught school during his early manhood for four years. He was successful in his business and now owns six hundred and eighty-five acres of land on Lost creek and one hundred and thirty-five acres on Jump-Off Joe creek.

At the age of twenty-six years Mr. Savage was married to Miss Almira Piatt, a native of Illinois, who emigrated to Oregon in 1877 with her parents, William and Mary Piatt, who made their home here until their deaths. To Mr. and Mrs. Savage has been born one son, Winfred A., who is still at home. Mr. Savage is a prominent republican who takes an active interest in public affairs. He is also greatly interested in educational matters and for thirty years has been clerk of the local school board. He is one of the prominent men of the community and enjoys not only a wide acquaintance but a most excellent standing in the county. He possesses those traits of character which assure him the esteem of his acquaintances and the loyalty of his friends, is skillful in the management of his business affairs and is universally regarded as one of the leading citizens of this section of Oregon.

GEORGE W. CRUNK, SR., well known in Coos county as an exponent of modern and progressive ideas of agriculture, was born in Tennessee, March 4, 1834. He is a son of Jacob and Virginia (Canon) Crunk, the former a native of Alabama and the latter of North Carolina. Mr. Crunk's parents were married in Tennessee, and after one year's residence in that state the mother died and the father removed to Kentucky, where he operated a farm and carried on a flourishing shoemaking business until his death in the seventy-fifth year of his life. He was the father of nine children, William, John M., Charity, Drusilla, Susan, Jacob, two daughters who died in infancy, and George W. The last named is the only one of this family still living.

He received his education in the public schools of Kentucky and laid aside his books in order to make a journey to California when he was nineteen years of age. He remained in that state for ten years, being successful in gold mining. In 1864 he removed to Montana, where he followed the same occupation until 1872. In that year he removed to the state of Washington and began his agricultural career, farming a large tract of land successfully and scientifically for twelve years. He met with his usual success in this line of occupation, and when he came to Coos county he still carried on the cultivation of the soil. He bought a half section of land on Myrtle creek and brought it to a high state of productivity. He made extensive improvements upon his property, installed labor-saving machinery and planted the farm to the most suitable grains and vegetables. In 1901, when he disposed of his holdings, he was the owner of one of the model properties in Coos county. He later bought a squatter's right in the same section and operated it in conjunction with his son-in-law, William A. Fish, for some time. Mr. Fish is now the sole owner of this tract of land, Mr. Crunk having sold out his interest.

In 1868 Mr. Crunk was united in marriage to Miss Angeline Bump, who was born in Ohio in 1841. She is a daughter of Jerome and Esther (Gillett) Bump, the father a native of New York state and the mother of Ohio. They lived in the latter state for several years after their marriage, later removing to Wisconsin, where the father followed the mason's trade until 1852 when he crossed the plains with ox teams to California, settling in the lone valley, where he was successful as a stock dealer until his death in 1855. His wife had passed away in 1851 and is buried in Illinois. They were the parents of three children: Jacob, who passed away in California; James Capolk, who died at the age of two years; and Angeline, the wife of our subject. To Mr. and Mrs. Crunk have been born five children. George W. lives in Rock creek, seven miles above Bridge, Oregon. Gertrude is the wife of Elwood Carey of Bandon, Oregon. Scella M., married Albert Rice of Myrtle Creek. John died in infancy. Myrtle V., the youngest daughter, married in 1897 William A. Fish of Rock Creek, Oregon. Mr. Fish is a native son of this state, having been born on March 26, 1868. He is a son of Albert and Hannah A. (Gribble) Fish, both of whom are now deceased. He and his wife are the parents of one daughter, Hattie M., whose birth occurred, February 10, 1901.

In his political affiliations Mr. Crunk is a consistent democrat, a firm believer in the principles of that party and a staunch supporter of its policies although he never seeks public office. He and his wife are advocates of the Spiritualist faith. Mr. Crunk is widely known in Coos county for his progressive and scientific ideas of agriculture which have brought him undoubted success. He is one of the representative and enterprising farmers of the district and has been a contributing factor to the development of the region in which he lives.

CAPTAIN HENLEY MAUPIN. One of the prominent and influential men of Douglas county is Captain Henley Maupin, who has been active in farming all during his life and is now one of the substantial agriculturists and stock-raisers of the section in which he resides. He owns twelve hundred acres of land, improved and intelligently developed, and his farm is productive and remunerative to its highest point. The history of Captain Maupin's name is peculiar and interesting. His father was a veteran of the Mexican war and at the death of his captain, with whom he was upon very close and intimate terms, he promised that if he survived his first son should be named after his leader. Therefore, when our subject was born in Eugene, Oregon, on January 2, 1855, he was christened Captain Henley Maupin. He is a son of Garrett and Martha A. (Poindexter) Maupin, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Illinois. Their marriage occurred in Missouri, whither the mother had removed with her parents. In 1852 Garrett Maupin fitted out a wagon train at his own expense and crossed the plains with ox teams to Oregon. Upon his arrival in this state he and his wife took up donation claims of three hundred and twenty acres each in Lane county, near Eugene, where they resided until 1867. In that year they sold their holdings and came to Douglas county, where they located upon a rented farm on the Umpqua river. Mr. Maupin was killed the following year while driving a team from Oakland to Scottsburg, being then engaged in the business of freighting. The load of wool which he was hauling overturned and fell upon him, causing his death. After this event his wife purchased an old donation claim of three hundred acres, where Captain Henley Maupin lives at the present time. Here she located with her family and here she resided until her death, which occurred in 1909, at the age of eighty-two years.

C. H. Maupin was thirteen or fourteen years of age when his mother removed to his present home farm. He attended school in this district and when he had attained his manhood began farming for himself. He and his brother, Thomas P. Maupin, worked in partnership for several years and engaged extensively in stock-raising. From time to time they bought land with the proceeds from the sale of their stock and their holdings increased until at one time they owned fifteen hundred acres. In 1888 or 1889, however, the copartnership was dissolved, and the ranch divided. Captain Henley Maupin has since that time been alone in his occupation and has attained a gratifying degree of success. He owns twelve hundred acres of land and his twenty-acre prune orchard is said to be the finest in Douglas county.

On September 11, 1893, Mr. Maupin was united in marriage to Miss Minnie A. Peters, a native of Illinois and a daughter of Alexander S. Peters, who came to Oregon from that state in 1878, locating in Douglas county, two and one-half miles northeast of Oakland. Eleven years later he removed to a rented farm on the Umpqua river, where his death occurred on April 30, 1900. To Mr. and Mrs. Maupin have been born seven children: Garrett Alva, Edith, Hazel, Daniel Newton, Maurice A., Florence E. and Martha L., all of whom reside at home.

Mr. Maupin is a consistent democrat and served for four years as county commissioner of Douglas county and for many years has been a member of the school board of his district. His wife belongs to the Christian church. He is one of the leaders in all progressive movements for the benefit of his community and is one of the widely known and influential men of Douglas county.

WILLIAM CARTER. Starting out in life without favoring circumstances, William Carter has, by industry and frugality, acquired a productive little farm of twenty acres near Woodville, which by his own hands he has cleared and improved. He was born in Jackson county, Missouri, June 10, 1868, a son of French and Nancy Carter, natives of Ohio and Virginia respectively. After residing in Missouri for a number of years the parents came to Oregon in 1875, having become convinced that conditions in the far west were more favorable so far as business opportunities were concerned than in the eastern portions of the country. On arriving in this state they settled in Jackson county and proceeded to become as comfortable as possible. In 1882, after spending only about seven years in Oregon the father died. The mother, however, is still living here, having attained the age of eighty-one years.

William Carter has made his home under the parental roof with the exception of ten years which he spent in Spokane, Washington, where he worked in various occupations. He had received a good common-school education and, being of an industrious and economical nature, he was enabled, in 1910, from his earnings to purchase a twenty acre ranch, upon which he is now living. Since becoming the owner of this place he has devoted himself to clearing it, adding improvements and getting it in a good state of cultivation, so that it is now producing a handsome income.

In his political views Mr. Carter has always been an adherent of the principles and policies of the democratic party and while he has never been an office seeker he has given commendable attention to public matters. He is regarded as a most excellent citizen and by his well ordered life, his genial personality and optimistic nature is constantly making new friends.

J. L. HARRIS, M. D. is engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in the recently established town of Hildebrand, in the Yonna valley, of Klamath county. He was born in Iron county, Missouri, October 5, 1874. His father, a native of Virginia, served as a soldier in the Union army during the Civil war and after hostilities were ended removed with his family to Missouri. At one time he followed merchandising but afterward became a dealer in live stock, in which business he engaged to the time of his death, which occurred when his son, J. L. Harris, was about six years of age. Our subject's mother, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth (Ringer) Harris, a native of Maryland, now resides at Plaza, Washington, to which place she removed with her children, a son and three daughters, immediately after the death of the husband and father.

Dr. J. L. Harris supplemented his early education, acquired in the public schools, with a course in the medical department of the State University, and graduated in the class of 1897. He practiced in Whitman county, Washington, until October, 1910, when he came to Hildebrand. He has homesteaded forty acres of land and to the cultivation and improvement of that property he gives a part of his time and attention. He was instrumental in having a store and postoffice established here and his labors are an element in the growth and development of the district.

Dr. Harris was married in 1900 to Miss Olive I. Thompson, a native of Nebraska, and a daughter of B. Thompson. They have three children, Violet, J. B. and Gladys Pauline. Dr. Harris belongs to Piute Camp, No. 77, K. O. T. M., which he was instrumental in organizing. This camp has now thirty members and the organization is building a home for it, thirty by fifty feet, and two stories in height, the lower floor being used as the auditorium. Dr. Harris' professional connections are with the Washington State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. Through their proceedings he keeps in touch with what is being done by eminent members of the profession and he is ever quick and ready to adopt improved methods tending to promote the usefulness of the medical fraternity.

NILLUS McMILLAN, who has been a resident of Oregon for the past quarter of a century, was for a number of years actively and successfully identified with general agricultural pursuits and is now engaged in the feed business at Garibaldi. His birth occurred in Ohio on the 20th of June, 1853, his parents being J. W. and Isabelle (Monroe) McMillan, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania. Removing to Ohio in an early day, they remained residents of that state until 1854, when they took up their abode in Cedar county, Iowa. Subsequently they went to Hardin county, that state, and later to Humboldt county, Iowa, where they made their home for three years. On the expiration of that period they returned to Hardin county and there continued to reside until called to their final rest. Unto them were born eight children, four of whom are yet living.

Nillus McMillan attended the common schools in the acquirement of an education and when a youth of sixteen began earning his own livelihood, being employed as a farm hand until 1886. In that year he came to Tillamook county, Oregon, and took up a homestead of one hundred and twenty acres near Bay City. Subsequently he spent five years on a homestead claim in Clatsop county, Oregon, and still owns the property. After returning to Tillamook county he purchased a tract of one hundred and seventy acres on Garibaldi beach. He had charge of the cannery of S. Elmore & Company for a period of ten years and is now acting as freight agent at Garibaldi. He is likewise engaged in the feed business there and has won a gratifying measure of success in his undertakings, being a man of sound judgment and keen discrimination.

In 1875 Mr. McMillan was united in marriage to Miss Sarah J. Fleming, a native of Hardin county, Iowa, by whom he has two children: Charles W., who is a student in the college at Eugene; and Donna E., who attends the high school at Bay City. From 1887 to 92 Mrs. McMillan was a teacher in the public schools of Tillamook county, having previously followed the same vocation for ten years in Humboldt county, Iowa.

In politics Mr. McMillan is a staunch republican, loyally supporting the men and measures of that party. He served on the school board for eleven years and the cause of education has ever found in him a warm friend. At the present time he acts as fire warden of this district. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to Lodge No. 95 at Bay City. While giving close attention to his personal interests, he has never lost sight of his duty as a citizen, being deeply interested in all matters pertaining to the public welfare and giving of his time and means toward the advancement and promotion of the community at large.

HON. WILLIAM H. CANON is the popular and energetic mayor of Medford, the city in which he has established his home and where he has succeeded himself in that office for two terms. He is a member of the Medford bar and in the active practice of his profession in Jackson county. His birth occurred in Sullivan county, New York, on the 21st of September, 1857, his parents being Henry and Catherine (Schermerhorn) Canon. The father was one of the well known educators in the Empire state, dividing his profession as a teacher with his interests as an agriculturist at his home farm located in Sullivan county, New York, where he died in the year 1860. His widow some years later was again married, and at a time when the subject of this review was nine years of age she removed with her family to the middle west, locating her home in the state of Wisconsin.

William H. Canon was reared at home and received his early education in the common schools of the districts in which he lived. At the early age of fourteen years he took upon himself the burden of self-support. Being of an inquiring mind and inclined to intellectual pursuits, he was soon able by constant industry and the practice of economy to provide himself with sufficient funds, with which he pursued a course of study in the college at Madison, Wisconsin, and later, having engaged in the study of law, he was admitted to practice, on the 6th of February, 1878, in Clark county, Wisconsin. In the year 1883 he was admitted to practice in the United States courts and for some years following was one of the prominent law practitioners in the Badger state. While there he served for two terms as district attorney of Lincoln county, Wisconsin, having his residence at Merrill in that state, of which city he was one of the members of the first town council. He also was elected to the office of county judge of Lincoln county and in that capacity he continued to serve the people for a number of years, following himself in several successive elections. During his residence in Merrill he frequently served as a member of the town council. Under Cleveland's first administration he was appointed to the office of postmaster of the city of Merrill and later, under his second administration, he received the appointment of United States marshal for Lincoln county and was for two terms (four years) chief clerk of the United States land office of Wisconsin. On account of failing health he withdrew temporarily from the practice of his profession and engaged in the real-estate and insurance business, removing in 1906 to southern California, where he spent fifteen months in rest and observation, seeking health. In March, 1907, he established his residence at Medford, this state, where he has since continued to reside. One year after becoming a citizen of this commonwealth, in August, 1908, he received the appointment of United States land commissioner for this portion of Oregon, an office in which he is still serving the public. He is also the deputy clerk of the United States court for this state, in active incumbency of the duties belonging to that office. In January, 1909, he was elected mayor of Medford and reelected to that office in January, 1911. As the chief executive of the city of Medford he has given universal satisfaction and, being a man of both legal and political experience, he is unusually fitted to give the people of Medford an administration, signalized for efficiency and economy, and the development and installation of public utilities of all kinds, required in a well regulated and enterprising community.

On the 1st of January, 1880, Mr. Canon was married to Miss Margaret Taylor, of Ripon, Wisconsin, by whom he had three children, two of whom survive, namely: Verne, who is engaged in business as bill poster of Medford; and Fay, who is connected with the paving contracting business with the firm of Clark, Henry & Company. Mr. Canon is a democrat in politics, having followed the fortunes of that great political organization during all of his public life. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, belonging to Medford Lodge, No. 1168. He is likewise connected with the Knights of Pythias of Medford. Hon. William H. Canon is indeed one of the useful men of southwestern Oregon. During almost the entire period of his active business career he has been in various offices of public trust, thus bringing his life and work constantly into the limelight of public attention. He is a man not only skilled in the science of the legal profession but deeply versed in the management of national, state and municipal affairs. These qualifications are sufficient in themselves to make of Mr. Canon a citizen unusually adapted to serve the interests of the people in a public capacity. He is highly esteemed for his social characteristics and the moral effect of his life of acknowledged integrity is felt throughout his adopted county and city.

WILLIAM INGLEDUE, who resides near Woodville, is a carpenter by trade and, although he has given most of his attention to building, owns a well improved farm of forty acres, upon which he resides and which he operates. He was born in Ohio, November 29, 1836, a son of Eber R. and Mary (Kirk) Ingledue. The father was a native of Virginia, while the mother's birth occurred in Ohio, and after their marriage they moved to Michigan, where both passed away. They were the parents of ten children, five of whom are living.

William Ingledue received his education in the district schools and remained under the parental roof until he was of age. He then became a cattle herder, being then employed for four years, after which he learned the carpenter's trade and at that employment he has been engaged for the greater part of his time. Before leaving Michigan he purchased a farm of eighty acres there and lived upon that property for seventeen years. In 1894 he emigrated to Oregon and settled in Jackson county, where he bought a farm of forty acres, upon which he now makes his home. His farm is well improved and yields generous returns for the time and labor expended upon it.

Mr. Ingledue has been married twice, his first union being in 1870 with Miss Millie Frost, who passed away in 1906. His second marriage occurred in February, 1910, when he wedded Mrs. Mary Owings, who was born in East St. Louis, Illinois, and came to Oregon in 1874. Mr. Ingledue is independent politically and, being a man of more than average ability and possessing an excellent reputation, has held several township offices. He is highly regarded by a large circle of friends and acquaintances and greatly esteemed by all who know him.

THEODORE GREEN. Having been a resident of Washington county for thirty-five years, Theodore Green has been an observer of its remarkable development from a ranging and timber country into one of the most highly cultivated agricultural districts of the state. He is a native of the state of Wisconsin, his birth occurring in 1870, and a son of Henry and Nellie (Kuhman) Green. The parents were born and reared in Holland, whence they emigrated to the United States, settling in Wisconsin during the pioneer period. There the father engaged in farming until 1876, when together with his wife and family he crossed the prairies to the northwest. Upon their arrival in this state they located in Washington county, where Mr. Green continued to be identified with farming until his demise at the age of fifty-seven. He was survived for many years by his widow, who had passed the eighty-first anniversary of her birth when summoned to her final rest in 1911. They were the parents of eleven children.

As he spent the first six years of his life in his native state, Theodore Green there began the education that was completed in the common schools of this county. While mastering the common branches as is usual in all agricultural districts his youthful energies were directed along useful and helpful lines, and he early became proficient in performing the simpler tasks about the farm. As the years brought ability and strength his duties increased, so that by the time he had attained his majority he was a skilled and capable agriculturist. He remained at home assisting with the operation of the farm until he was twenty-four, when he began for himself. His first position was on a cattle ranch in eastern Oregon, where he spent a year. At the expiration of that period he returned to this county and resumed farming, giving his undivided attention to this vocation until 1900. He then again withdrew from the work of the fields and during the succeeding five years followed logging. Feeling convinced at the end of that time that agriculture afforded greater opportunities and more lucrative returns he returned to farming, and has ever since been identified with this activity. At the present time he is operating one hundred and fifty acres of rented land, but he owns a tract of twenty-three acres in the vicinity of Cornelius, Oregon.

Mr. Green established a home for himself by his marriage on the 13th of July, 1898, to Miss Minnie Marsh, a daughter of J. W. and Antoinette Marsh, who are mentioned at greater length elsewhere in this work. To Mr. and Mrs. Green have been born two children: Wilfred A., whose birth occurred on the 13th of June, 1899; and Lawrence T., who was born on September 24, 1900. The mother is a woman of pleasing personality and manner, who was afforded the advantages of a high-school education.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Green are communicants of the Roman Catholic church, in the faith of which denomination they are rearing their sons. Politically he gives his support to the men and measures he deems best qualified to serve the highest interests of the general public irrespective of party affiliation. Mr. Green has never been an aspirant to public honors or the emoluments of office, although he can always be depended upon to do his duty in forwarding every progressive movement which will advance the interests of the community or promote its development.

JOSEPH A. HAINES, who resides in Monmouth, is the owner of a ranch of eight hundred and five acres in Curry county, where he was formerly engaged in stock-raising. He was born in Tazewell county, Illinois, August 8, 1828, a son of Alfred and Mary (Leeper) Haines, the father a native of New Jersey and the mother of Ohio. Alfred Haines was five years of age when he removed with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Haines, to Ogle county, Ohio, where the father purchased a timber farm and resided until 1837. At that date he came to Tazewell county, Illinois, making the entire journey with ox teams. Joseph Haines died there in 1843 and his wife, preceding him by ten years, died in 1833. He engaged extensively in farming and was the father of twelve children.

Their son, Alfred Haines, had no chance to attend school in his early days but, being persistent and energetic, he read a great deal and became self-educated. He married in Ohio and moved to Tazewell county with his parents and later settled in Pike county, Illinois, where his wife died August 12, 1840. In 1845 he sold his farm and went to Whiteside county, Illinois, where he resided until 1862, when he came to Oregon, locating in Douglas county. Of his first marriage were born six children: Joseph A., of this review; William W., who is in the tanning business at Eugene, Oregon, and owns one of the oldest tanneries in that section of the country, being also the owner of a tannery at Scottsburg, Oregon, and one at Everett, Washington; Rebecca, who became the wife of Dr. F. Meyers and is now deceased; Grizella, deceased; Jamison, a resident of Iowa; and Susan, who is the wife of John Overfeldt, of Oklahoma. After the death of his first wife Alfred Haines was married again, his second union being with Sarah Nixon, a native of Indiana, and they became the parents of six children: Caroline, of Portland; Benton and Josephine, deceased; and Louis, James and Ed, all of whom reside at Elkton, Oregon. Alfred Haines served in the Black Hawk war. He died at Grants Pass, Oregon, in January, 1887, at the age of eighty-two, and his second wife passed away at Elkton, Oregon.

Joseph A. Haines was reared under the parental roof and remained at home until 1851, when he and his brother, William W., and Holloway Cushman on April 19, 1851, started west with ox teams. They crossed the Mississippi river at Albany, Illinois, and proceeded to The Dalles, in Oregon, where they arrived October 19, and settled in Linn county, Oregon, three and one-half miles south of Albany. Joseph A. Haines resided in Linn county until 1857, when he removed to Scottsburg, Oregon, and in 1860 went to Curry county, where he purchased his ranch of eight hundred and five acres and was extensively engaged in stock-raising. His ranch was known as the Union Ranch and it became a well known place for travelers to stop over night on their journey to the west, as many as thirty persons having been known to stop there in one night. For ten years Mr. Haines was postmaster at Eckley, Oregon.

On the 10th of December, 1853, Mr. Haines was united in marriage with Miss Elenor Chaffee, who was born in Whiteside county, Illinois, and was the daughter of Simeon and Mary (Cushman) Chaffee, the father a native of Canada and the mother of Ohio. The father removed to Whiteside county, Illinois, where he was married, and later went to Sterling, Illinois. In early life he worked in a foundry but later followed the occupation of farming. He died in 1844, and after his death his wife married Daniel Moorehouse, of New York. In 1852 they removed to Oregon and located at Albany, where Mr. Moorehouse purchased land. He died in Benton county, Oregon, and the mother passed away at Dallas. By her first marriage she had two children: Elenor, who is now Mrs. Joseph A. Haines; and Adelia, who is the wife of John Hauser, of Leavenworth, Washington. By her second marriage she became the mother of four children: Ottilie; Henry, who resides in Washington; Wallace, who lives in Missouri; and Hattie, who married Nolan Grubb, of Albany, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Haines have become the parents of fourteen children: Josephine, who is the wife of Frank Meyer, of Port Townsend, Oregon; Alfred, who died at the age of three years; Ed, who is the owner of a fruit ranch at Watsonville, California; Charles; L. L., a ranchman of Curry county, Oregon; Jamison L., a ranchman of Caldwell, Idaho; Rupert, who is marshal at Burns, Harney county, Oregon; Ida, who is the wife of E. W. Murphy, of Los Angeles, California; Oscar, a miner in Alaska; Ruby, who is the wife of H. S. Portwood, a merchant of Monmouth, Oregon; May, the wife of E. W. Staats, a farmer and merchant at Airlie, Oregon; Marion, who died at the age of eleven years; Harriet, who is the wife of H. C. Hampton; and Chaffee D., who is engaged in the automobile business at Los Angeles, California.

In politics Mr. Haines is a republican and has served as county commissioner and filled other county offices. Both he and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal church. He has passed through the pioneer times and is well acquainted with the early development of the country. Always active in whatever enterprise seems worth while, he has ever borne an unassailable reputation as a progressive and prosperous citizen.

GEORGE WILLIAM KNIGHT is one of the foremost business men of Hubbard, where he has been successfully engaged in the general mercantile business for the past thirteen years. A native of this state, his birth occurred in Canby, on the 11th of April, 1874, his parents being Charles and Catherine (Schrivver) Knight. The father was born and reared in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and was one in a family of six children. The paternal grandfather was married twice and to him and his second wife were born two children. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Knight passed the early years of their married life in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, whence they later removed to Butler, Missouri. They continued to reside there until 1852, when they crossed the plains to Oregon locating in Clackamas county. In his early manhood, in Pennsylvania, the father followed the mason's trade, but he later engaged in the drug business and when he came to Oregon he opened a pharmacy at Canby, which he conducted until his death in 1895. He was survived by the mother, who passed away in 1898. They were the parents of nine children, as follows: Louisa, the wife of William Grant, who is engaged in the restaurant business in Seattle, Washington; Hannah, who died in infancy; Susan, who is also deceased; Esther, who married John McCullen, a ranchman, of Montana; Henry, who is living in Seattle; George William, our subject; Charles, who was killed in a railroad accident; and two, who died in infancy.

The education of George William Knight was acquired in the common schools of his native town. At the age of seventeen years he left home to make his own way in the world. He was first employed as a bell boy in a hotel in Portland, now referred to as the old Gillman House. Six months later he gave up this position to work with a steam shovel outfit, continuing in that employment for a year. At the expiration of that period he returned to Canby and operated a small ranch belonging to his father.

A year later he withdrew from agricultural pursuits, taking a position in a general mercantile store of Canby. He remained in the employ of this firm for six and a half years, applying himself to acquiring a thorough knowledge of the business with the expectation of engaging in it on his own behalf later. Being thrifty and enterprising he managed to save enough out of his salary to go into business for himself in 1899. He became associated with Peter Susbough and together they purchased the general mercantile store of Mr. Bebee. They conducted it as a partnership concern until 1904, when Mr. Knight bought out the interest of Mr. Susbough and has ever since been sole proprietor of the establishment. During the period of his ownership he has greatly increased the business, and now has one of the largest and most prosperous stores in the town. In the conduct of his enterprise he has followed a policy that has enabled him to win the confidence and good-will of his patrons and he now enjoys an excellent trade. He carries a large and carefully assorted stock of merchandise adapted to meet the varied tastes and means of his customers, the quality of his wares always being fully commensurate with the prices. In the development of his interests Mr. Knight has met with most gratifying success and besides his fine store is the owner of a large stone residence that he occupies in Hubbard and two other lots and dwelling houses which he rents, and he likewise holds the title to two lots in Portland.

For his wife and helpmate Mr. Knight chose Miss Minnie Whitney, who was born in this state on the 19th of September, 1883, and is a daughter of John and Annie (Feller) Whitney, also natives of Oregon. One child, who died in infancy, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Knight.

Fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias. He has held all of the chairs in the latter order and is a member of the Grand Lodge and for the past five years has served on its finance committee. He gives his support to the republican party and has been a member of the city council for six years, during two of which he was chairman and he was also a member of the Canby council for four years. Mr. Knight is one of the representative men of the town, whose high standards of citizenship, enterprising and progressive ideas and active interest in all matters of public welfare have won him the esteem and loyalty of his fellow townsmen.

GEORGE NODURFT in the successful cultivation of one hundred and sixty acres of land near Myrtle Creek, Oregon, is carrying out the agricultural principles with which he became familiar as a boy upon his father's farm, and is attaining that success which invariably results from system and science in any field of labor. George Nodurft was born in Indiana, June 12, 1864, and is a son of John and Ruth (Brown) Nodurft, of whom more extended mention is made on another page of this work. He received his education in the public schools of his native state and came to Oregon when he was thirty-two years of age. He has been identified with agriculture in Douglas county since that time and is now farming one hundred and sixty acres of land, which he has developed and improved progressively and scientifically. He has pursued a constant policy of development, and is interested in every new phase of modern agriculture. He has improved his land by fencing his fields, building barns and outbuildings and adding to his equipment whenever it is needed. He is numbered among the enterprising and representative citizens of this section, and is recognized as an active force in agricultural development.

In 1896 Mr. Nodurft was united in marriage to Miss Edie Gabbert, a native of Oregon, and to their union four children were born, Marie, Gertie, Louise and George, all of whom are living at home. Mr. Nodurft keeps himself well informed upon public questions, although he has never sought office. He is identified with the Woodmen of the World, belonging to Myrtle Creek Lodge, but this forms his only fraternal affiliation. He devoted himself exclusively to the carrying on of his agricultural enterprise. He is practical and systematic in all his activities, and his success is the result of well directed labor.

JOHN NODURFT. Farming in its more modern and progressive aspects finds a worthy representative in John Nodurft, who, although his residence in Oregon dates only from 1892, is already numbered among the men, who are promoting the welfare of the section and influencing its development. He was born in Indiana, October 24, 1831, and is a son of George and Elizabeth (Miller) Nodurft, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Pennsylvania. The father lived in Indiana until his death in 1898, having survived his wife eight years, her death occurring in 1890. Mr. Nodurft is one of eight children born to his parents.

He received his education in the public schools of his native state, and remained in Indiana until 1902. During the period of his residence in Indiana he was engaged in the operation of a large sawmill, which he conducted successfully for twenty-five years. He also engaged in general agriculture, and laid the foundation of his scientific activities along this line in Oregon. He came to this section in 1902 and purchased a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres on Myrtle creek, which he now operates successfully. He has brought his land to a highly improved and developed state by personal supervision and by constant pursuit of a policy of expansion along modern and progressive lines.

In 1856 Mr. Nodurft was united in marriage to Miss Ruth M. Brown, a native of Indiana, and to their union were born five children: William, who is deceased; George A.; Dora E., who has passed away; Katie; and Manison, who is also deceased. In his political views Mr. Nodurft is a staunch republican, but has never sought office. He has been a member of the Masonic fraternity for forty-two years, and formerly held the position of secretary of his lodge. He affiliates with the Christian church and is a man of exemplary character. He is well versed in the details of agriculture and is always guided in his business relations by keen and discriminating judgment. His farm, highly developed and productive to the highest degree, pays tribute to his care and skill, and marks him as an individual force in the upbuilding of a great farming section.

S. C. BARTRUM is a well known forest supervisor of the forest service department of agriculture. He has jurisdiction of the Umpqua National Forest, having held that responsible position since 1902, and at the present writing (1912) is the oldest in point of service in his department in the United States. He was born in Franklin county, Vermont, March 4, 1865, and is a son of Daniel P. and L. Almira (Sturdevant) Bartrum, both of whom were natives of Vermont and who were descended from old New England families. The great-great-grandfather Bartrum was a veteran of the Revolutionary war. The mother of Daniel P. Bartrum bore the maiden name of Gould and was a cousin of the late Jay Gould, the Wall street wizard. That branch of the Gould family of which our subject is a direct descendant located in Vermont. On the maternal side he is a descendant of the Holland Dutch family of Sturdevants.

Daniel P. Bartrum, the father of S. C. Bartrum, removed from his native state and settled in Cook county, Illinois, in 1874, where he continued to live until 1891. In that year he moved to Oregon, locating in Douglas county and was there actively engaged in general farming for twelve years. His wife died in 1892 and some eight years later he took up his home in Roseburg with his son, S. C., of this review, with whom he continued to live until the time of his death, which occurred December 31, 1908. He was a staunch republican but never a seeker for public office. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted from Vermont in the Ninth Vermont Volunteer Infantry, with which he continued for three years and three months. He was a member of the Masonic order for many years and during later years of his life he held membership in Laurel Lodge, No. 13, of Roseburg.

S. C. Bartrum was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools and in the high schools of Chicago and later pursued a business course in the Chicago Business College of Chicago, Illinois. After completing his studies in the business college he obtained a position as collector and solicitor for the grain and banking house of E. G. McEwin Company of Chicago, and while in their employ was advanced to the management of the business, in which capacity he served for a period of five years. In 1891 he came to Oregon and located in Douglas county, where for the ten following years he was engaged in general farming. In 1899 he entered the forestry service as ranger and in 1902 was promoted to the position of forest supervisor, having jurisdiction over the Umpqua National Forest, which consists of an area of one million acres. In 1908 he was assigned to duty in Washington, where he remained for a period of five months, after which he returned to Roseburg, where his offices are now located.

In 1887 Mr. Bartrum was united in marriage to Miss Gertrude Buzzell, of Chicago, Illinois, and they became the parents of one son, C. De F. Bartrum, who is now engaged in the general mercantile business in Tillamook, Oregon. The first wife of S. C. Bartrum passed out of this life in June, 1906, and in 1907 Mr. Bartrum was united in marriage to Miss Myrtle A. Carnell, of Portland, Oregon, and they are the parents of two children, Ian Kenneth Gifford and Cleo Dorothy Myrtle.

Mr. Bartrum belongs to the republican party and has served one term as deputy assessor of Douglas county. He was also for some time connected with the old Plain Dealer, which was the republican paper of Roseburg and later was succeeded by the Umpqua Valley News. Mr. Bartrum is a member of Roseburg Rising Star Lodge, No. 174, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and of Roseburg Lodge No. 326, B. P. O. E. He is a stockholder and director in the Roseburg National Bank and owns and operates a farm of one hundred and sixty acres located one and one-half miles east of Roseburg. S. C. Bartrum is one of the enterprising citizens of his county and is intimately identified with the agricultural interests of the district in which he lives and also in the public development and general prosperity of his adopted city.

CHARLES J. DODD, a retired farmer and stockman of Lane county, is the owner of a highly cultivated and well improved ranch comprising one hundred and thirty-one acres, located two miles east of Eugene and known as the Blue Ribbon Fruit Farm. He was born in Sangamon county, Illinois, December 22, 1839, and is a son of Josiah and Elizabeth (Duncan) Dodd. The parents were both natives of Virginia but were married in eastern Tennessee, and continued to make that state their home until 1838. In the latter year they removed to Sangamon county, Illinois, the mother making the entire journey on horseback. The father bought a farm in the vicinity of Springfield, which he operated until 1854, when he disposed of his holdings and together with his family removed to Iowa. They located in Mahaska county where he purchased some land which he operated until his death. The mother survived him many years, passing away in 1876. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Dodd of whom our subject is the youngest. In order of birth the others are as follows: John D., who died in Linn county, Kansas; Nancy Young, the wife of C. T. Sexton, who was a resident of Iowa at the time of her death; Mary J., who died at Los Angeles, California; and William P., who was captain of an Iowa regiment during the Civil war and lost his life at the battle of Hattie, Mississippi. The eldest child, a daughter, died in Tennessee.

Charles J. Dodd was only a youth of sixteen years when his father passed away. He continued to operate the home farm and care for his widowed mother and attended for one year Greencastle College. His leisure hours he devoted to improving his education, and subsequently engaged in teaching during the winter months, being identified with this profession in both Iowa and Missouri. In July, 1861, he enlisted in Company E, Thirty-third Iowa Volunteer Infantry for three years. Previous to his enlistment he participated in the battle of Wilson Creek, as a member of the First Iowa Infantry. In February, 1862, he contracted the measles and was discharged on account of physical disability, but on the 1st of April, 1863, he returned to the service, having been commissioned provost marshal and enrolling officer. He continued to serve in this capacity until the following February, when he reenlisted as a member of Company H, Third Iowa Volunteer Infantry and was commissioned chief of scouts. He was four times wounded and five times captured but was never imprisoned during the war. He participated in some of the notable battles and was wounded at the siege of Atlanta at the time General Macpherson was killed. Together with George J. Reynolds of the Fifteenth Iowa he secured the body of the dead general, and was later awarded the highest medal of honor in the army of the Tennessee for this by General Sherman. He was honorably discharged at Louisville, Kentucky, on the 15th of July, 1865, and returned to Iowa. Upon resuming civil life he took up the study of law and was admitted to the bar, and for twenty years engaged in general practice in the courts of the latter state. At the end of that time he gave up his profession and retired to his farm and for six years thereafter devoted his attention to the breeding and raising of trotting horses and shorthorn cattle.

In 1889, he disposed of his interests in Iowa and came to Oregon, purchasing his present ranch. There he engaged in general farming and fruit raising for many years, but he is now living retired, the income from his farm together with his other means providing him with all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life. Mr. Dodd has been engaged in various pursuits during the long period of his active career and for five years, from 1872 to 1877, he was in the service of the Pinkerton Detective Agency.

On the 17th of June, 1860, Mr. Dodd was united in marriage to Miss Mary A. Kirkpatrick, a native of Griggsville, Illinois, and they traveled life's journey together for fifty-one years, Mrs. Dodd passing away on the 15th of November, 1911. Their family numbered eight: Lillian E., the wife of Isaac Cline, a resident of Lane county; William S., who is also a resident of this county; Minnie May, who married Frank B. Chase, of Lane county; Emma A., the wife of Henry E. Wiley, likewise of Lane county; Lulu B., who married Frank Kingsley, a resident of Lane county; Nellie, who married John Bryan, of this county; Myrtle L., the wife of C. Robert Crawford, of Lind, Washington; and Hattie E., who married Charles Meyers, of Springfield, Oregon.

The family affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church, and Mr. Dodd votes the straight republican ticket. Starting out for himself while still in his early youth, he was given few advantages, but he was ambitious and energetic and persevered until he obtained a good education. Close observation, wide reading and definite and well directed habits of thought enabled him to acquire an extensive range of information on a variety of subjects, and he became known as one of the best spellers in his section of the state, and is now thoroughly posted and converses fluently on all public questions or topics of current interest.

HON. A. C. MARSTERS. One of the foremost citizens of Roseburg, Oregon, and a man always actively interested in the promotion of any enterprise looking toward its financial and social development is Hon. A. C. Marsters, who occupies the position of cashier of the Roseburg National Bank. He has been active for many years along various lines in that city and has probably had more influence than any other one factor in the organization of its many financial and public institutions. He is a native of Minnesota, where his birth occurred October 29, 1859. His parents were Stephen S. and Jennie (McKee) Marsters, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Pennsylvania. Their marriage occurred in Indiana, where they had removed with their parents, and after a short time spent in Minnesota they crossed the plains to California and in 1868 came north to Oregon, locating in Roseburg. The father was a well known physician and surgeon for many years in this city, served for three terms as coroner of Douglas county and was active in republican circles all during his life. He and his wife were active workers in religious circles and were devout members of the Presbyterian church. The father's death occurred about 1893 and he was survived by his wife until 1907.

A. C. Marsters acquired his early education in the public schools of Minnesota and California. After completing his studies he was engaged for several years in the livestock business in eastern Oregon and Nevada, and in 1881 entered the drug business in Roseburg, Oregon. This he conducted as an individual enterprise until 1898, when the business was incorporated as the Marsters Drug Company, of which our subject is the president. In 1907 he organized the Roseburg National Bank and on January 6 of the following year, the doors of the new institution were thrown open for business with A. C. Marsters as cashier, in which capacity he has served continuously ever since.

In 1888 Mr. Marsters was united in marriage to Miss Ida Mitchell, a daughter of James Mitchell, who came to Roseburg from

A. C. MARSTERS

Missouri in the early '80s. Mr. and Mrs. Marsters are the parents of one child, Lyle E., who occupies the position of clerk in the Roseburg National Bank. The family is well known in social and religious circles of Roseburg and Mrs. Marsters is active and prominent in the Methodist Episcopal church, of which institution A. C. Marsters is serving as trustee.

In his political views Mr. Marsters is a staunch republican and has taken an active part in local affairs. He has twice served as mayor of the city, his first term being from 1904 to 1906 and his second term from 1909 to 1911. In 1899 he was elected to represent his district in the state senate, serving from 1900 to 1903. He also served subsequently in a special session of the state assembly and his influence and weight have always been given to worthy causes. His vote may be counted upon for any project looking toward the development and prosperity of his city. He is one of the foremost men in Roseburg at the present time and is possessed of that rare quality of public spirit which is inseparable from true citizenship.

HON. JOHN S. SHOOK has left the impress of his individuality and his ability upon many lines of development in the Yonna valley of Oregon, and his history constitutes an important chapter in the annals of this section of the state. He was born in Ripley county, Indiana, February 26, 1841, and is a son of Amon and Katharine (Yost) Shook. The father was born in Jefferson county, Indiana, November 25, 1814, and the mother's birth occurred in Jennings county, the same state, March 11, 1821. They were married in Ripley county Indiana and four of their children, Mary, John, Isaac N. and Hattie, were born there. In 1847 they removed westward to Davis county, Iowa, where they secured government land which they improved and cultivated. In 1864 the parents came with their son, John S., to the Rogue River valley, settling near Phoenix, Jackson county, Oregon, and after five or six years, in the spring of 1869, they came to the ranch which is still in possession of the family, securing this as a homestead claim. Their remaining days were spent in the Yonna valley, the father reaching the advanced age of eighty-seven and the mother that of eighty-nine years. His political support was given to the republican party and his religious faith was that of the Christian church, holding membership in one of the congregations of that denomination while in Iowa. To him and his wife were born nine children: Mary Jane, who became the wife of James Sutton, both of whom are deceased; John S.; Isaac N., of Ashland; Hattie, who is the widow of George Parker, of Los Angeles; Fannie, who is the wife of Emil Schumann, of Guatemala City, Central America, where he conducts a large plantation; David A., a ranchman living near his brother John; William H., a ranchman of Yonna valley, who deals in horses; Ada the wife of Jacob Rueck, of Yonna valley; and Peter, who died at the age of twenty-six years. All of this family came with their parents first to Jackson county and those who came to Klamath county later on, following our subject, were Isaac N., David P., William H. and Peter.

John S. Shook resided with his parents in Iowa until 1862, when he went to Susanville, California, where he remained until the fall of 1864. He then came to the Rogue River valley with his parents and secured a ranch in that district. Gradually he worked into the cattle business and while herding his stock in this section of the state he discovered the Yonna valley in April, 1868. He called it Alkali valley, after the Alkali lake, but subsequently when the district became settled the name was changed to the Yonna valley. In 1868 Mr. Shook came here with his brother and the following year his parents arrived and the family home was here established. At length John S. Shook left his property in the care of his father and brothers and went to Bonanza, where he secured a homestead which included the greater part of the springs of that locality. He built a little sawmill there and the first lumber he used to erect a small schoolhouse and became the teacher of the first school. He operated his sawmill for six hours per day and taught six hours, having about thirty pupils, who came to him from an area of ten miles. He was also the first postmaster as well as the first school clerk and the first justice of the peace. He named the town Bonanza, regarding this as a fitting name because of the different big springs in the district. The first merchant of the town was Albert Handy, who served as Mr. Shook's deputy postmaster.

With the growth and development of the town and district along many lines Mr. Shook has been most successfully, actively and helpfully associated. He assisted in organizing the Odd Fellows lodge at Klamath Falls and at Bonanza. He and his brothers, Isaac N. and William, enlisted as scouts in the Modoc war under Captain O. C. Applegate, and John S. was a non-commissioned officer. Taking ten men and his brother, Isaac N. with him he brought seven families out of Langells valley through to Klamath Falls and while on the way had a battle with the Indians about a mile south of Bonanza, on the old Langells Valley road. In 1882 he returned to the Yonna valley, where he at once engaged in ranching and in the live-stock business, buying and selling cattle. He and his brother David had fifteen hundred head of cattle on the ranch at one time, indicating something of the extent of their operations in that direction. The family owned over three thousand acres in this district, John S. and his brother David being the possessors of the greater part of this. In 1906 they divided their ranch and stock interests and have since operated independently. Mr. Shook has gone through the usual experiences of the ranchmen on the frontier and knows all of the hardships and difficulties which such a life involves. About 1880 he was instrumental in suppressing the first gang of cattle and horse thieves, who were apprehended, and they offered three hundred dollars for his scalp. He was also instrumental in suppressing the second gang that invaded the district. On one occasion the leader of this gang, George Goodlaw, went to Mr. Shook's home, called him out and told him he had come to kill him. It was an occasion that demanded the death of one or the other and in self-defense Mr. Shook shot his assailant, for he had been warned by the sheriff and others to be on his guard, for the desperado had bragged that he was going to shoot the whole Shook family. Before Goodlaw was forced to give up his own life he shot at Mr. Shook, the bullet grazing his ear. Realizing then that it was an encounter to the death Mr. Shook fired. It cost him and his two brothers, William and David, about three years in time and about eight thousand dollars in money to suppress this second gang of horse thieves that invaded the district, but their efforts resulted in at length placing three of them under the ground and seven of them in the penitentiary. Mr. Shook also knows what it means to encounter the red men in their treacherous warfare. For about two months he served under Captain O. C. Applegate in the Modoc war and took part in the first battle of the Lava Beds. During the big battle on the 17th of January, 1873, he had charge of the camp and after the fight was over had charge of the ambulance train which he took through to Klamath Falls. All this is but an indication of many experiences which he had as a settler upon the frontier of Oregon, aiding in reclaiming the district for the uses of civilization.

Mr Shook was married in 1905 to Mrs. Cora (Jones) Blake, who was born in Ohio and was reared in Nebraska.

In politics Mr. Shook is a republican, active and influential in the councils of his party. He has served as a delegate to various conventions and to two state conventions, and in 1905-6 he represented his district in the lower branch of the state legislature, during which time all of the bills which he introduced became laws. He helped to organize the Elks lodge at Klamath Falls and the value of his services to the community in which he lives cannot be overestimated. His life experiences have indeed been effectual and varied and his labors have constituted a potent element in the work of progress and improvement.

GEORGE SPANIOL, who is the proprietor of a flour and feed mill at Stayton, was born in Rhineland, Germany, February 13, 1866, the son of John and Magdalena (Schaffer) Spaniol. The parents, both natives of Germany, came to the United States in 1882, locating in Minnesota, where they resided for eight years, subsequent to which they came to Stayton, where the father passed away April 7, 1912. The mother died in 1893 and was buried in Sublimity, Oregon. The father was a miller by occupation. They were the parents of seven children: Peter, of Minnesota; John, who died in 1893; George, of this review; Matthias, of Portland; Mary, who is the wife of George Foreener, of Portland; Jacob, of Stayton; and Katie, of Portland.

George Spaniol was educated in Germany and came to America with his parents, remaining at home with them until the death of the mother. He worked in his father's flour and feed mill and continued in his father's employ until 1904, when he purchased the mill, which has a capacity of twenty-five barrels, and he still operates the same, now owning all the buildings in connection. He also owns the Commercial Hotel at Stayton and eighty-five acres of land within the city limits. He is a share-holder and director in the Stayton State Bank, of which he was one of the reorganizers.

Mr. Spaniol has been twice married. In 1893 he wedded Miss Anna Zimmerman, who died in 1899, leaving three children, Lena, Joseph and Clara, all at home. His second union was with Miss Anna Bruecher, whom he married in 1900, and they have four children, Anna, Ella, Genevieve and Raymond, all at home. He gives his political allegiance to the democratic party and is much interested in its success and welfare. Fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World at Stayton, and both he and his wife are members of the Catholic church at Stayton. Mr. Spaniol is numbered among the most prominent and enterprising business men of his town and is a citizen who can always be depended upon to further any movement or measure instituted to promote the general welfare.

WARREN A. HEYLMAN, who practices law in Estacada, where he has resided for six years, was born in Baraboo, Wisconsin, on the 15th of September, 1853, and is a son of Samuel and Susanna (Wilson) Heylman. The paternal great-grandparents of Warren A. Heylman were natives of Pennsylvania, and his grandfather was Jacob Heylman. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Heylman were married in 1852, and they settled in Baraboo, Wisconsin, where they passed the first four years of their domestic life. In 1856, the father, who was an excellent mechanic and a millwright by trade, removed with his wife and family to Eau Claire, Wisconsin. They made their home in the latter city until 1890, when they went to St. Paul, Minnesota, and resided there for a time. Their next removal was to Tennessee, whence they removed, in 1894, to Independence, Missouri. From there they went to Chicago, Illinois, but in the spring of 1906 they came to Estacada and lived there a year. At the end of that period they went to Lents, this state, and there the mother passed away on the 26th of November, 1910, at the age of seventy-eight years. The father, who has passed the eighty-fourth anniversary of his birth, is still living and continues to make his home in Lents. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Heylman, of whom our subject is the eldest, the others being as follows: C. Perry, who is deceased; DeWitt C., who is living with his father at Lents; Clara, who is also deceased; and Charles William, of St. Paul, who is married and has five children.

The boyhood and youth of Warren A. Heylman were very similar in every respect to those of other lads reared in the same circumstances. He attended the public schools in the various places where the family resided, in the acquirement of an education, and at the age of twenty-three went to work with his father. Later he became city meat inspector in St. Louis, Missouri, but deciding upon a legal career he, in 1879, took up the study of law, completing his course in 1881. During the succeeding four years he engaged in practice, but he subsequently withdrew from the profession and engaged in various activities. He had charge of the fine arts exhibition during the world's fair in St. Louis in 1904, and the next year he came to Estacada and engaged in the banking business. Disposing of these interests in April, 1910, he again turned his attention to the practice of law. Although he has been engaged in practice for less than two years, he has made gratifying progress and has every reason to feel assured of success. Mr. Heylman has acquired quite valuable realty holdings during the period of his residence here, and owns his home and also the building where the bank is located and several other pieces of business property, and some land in the country.

For his wife Mr. Heylman chose Miss Frances L. Lee, who was born on the 8th of April, 1861, and was married on the nineteenth anniversary of her birth. She is a daughter of Captain W. W. and Eliza Jane (Stafford) Lee and is descended in both lines from old colonial families. Mr. and Mrs. Lee were the parents of two children, Mrs. Heylman and one who died in infancy. To Mr. and Mrs. Heylman there has been born one son, on the 2d of May, 1881. He completed his education at the Chicago University and is now married and engaged in business in Spokane.

Mr. Heylman is a member of Lone Pine Lodge, A. F. & A. M. He votes the democratic ticket and takes an active interest in local affairs having served as mayor of Estacada, an office which he held for one term of two years, discharging his duties most creditably.

JASPER WETHERBEE resides on an improved farm in Josephine county, near Wilderville, comprising one hundred and eighty-five acres, which he obtained from the government. He settled on his now valuable property when the country surrounding it was unsettled and has lived on it continuously since. He was born in Pennsylvania May 10, 1855, a son of Horace and Maria (Bradford) Wetherbee. He is one of seven children born to his parents, with whom he remained until he attained his fifteenth year. He received a good common-school education, and on leaving home went to the oil fields where he worked at drilling for four years. When he was twenty-three years of age, in 1878, he crossed the great American plains with horse teams and settled first in Linn county, Oregon. After working in that section for a time he removed to Josephine county and settled upon one hundred and eighty-five acres of government land, which he took up as a homestead, and upon which he has since made his home. He improved his farm, brought it under cultivation and has made his broad acres yield liberally in return for the care which he bestows upon them.

Jasper Wetherbee was married in 1879 to Miss Eveline Louis, a native of this state. To Mr. and Mrs. Wetherbee have been born three children, Fred, Gny and Nellie. Mr. Wetherbee believes in the principles of the republican party and takes a commendable interest in affairs of the state. He is one of Josephine county's substantial and representative men, a good citizen and a business man of ability.

WILLIAM JACOBSON, at the head of an important general contracting business, has proven his worth in industrial circles and is giving ample evidence of the fact that he is an energetic and progressive business man. Since 1902, he has been junior partner of the firm of Birch & Jacobson, engaged in bridge building, pile driving and house moving. He was born in Finland, June 12, 1871. His parents were also natives of that country. Both are deceased. Their family numbered four children, of whom Fannie, the wife of E. Rossmus, and William, are residents of the United States.

The common schools of his native land afforded William Jacobson his educational privileges and in the year 1892, when twenty-one years of age, he came to Astoria. He found here the opportunities which he sought in coming to this country and, recognizing the fact that industry is the basis of success, he has labored earnestly and diligently. His first employment was with the William Rose Logging Company with which he was connected for three years. He then turned his attention to pile driving and bridge building and in 1902 entered into his present partnership relation for the carrying on of contract work along those lines. The firm of Birch & Jacobson ranks high in their field of industrial activity and many important contracts have been awarded them. They thoroughly understand the scientific principles which underlie their work and also the practical mechanical devices which are an equally important feature in the successful execution of their contracts.

On the 17th of March, 1900, Mr. Jacobson was united in marriage to Mrs. Mary (Beck) Sanderson, a native of Finland and a daughter of Herman and Maria Beck, whose family numbered four children, of whom one son, Herman Beck, came to the United States. A sister of Mrs. Jacobson also crossed the Atlantic. She was Mrs. Carolina Carlson, the wife of Charles Carlson, and her death occurred in Astoria. Herman Beck, Sr., has passed away but his wife, Maria Beck, now lives with Mr. and Mrs. Jacobson and has reached the ripe old age of eighty-four years. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Jacobson, Walfred, Elna and Hazel. The parents adopted Harold Carlson, a son of the deceased sister of Mrs. Jacobson, and are giving to him a home and all the advantages provided their own children. Walfred and Harold graduated together from the grammar school.

William Jacobson votes with the democratic party. He is a member of the Lutheran church, which his family also attend. He is affiliated with the Improved Order of Red Men and the Modern Woodmen of America and his wife is a member of the Royal Neighbors. Earnest, persistent work has been the rule of Mr. Jacobson's life and his unflinching purpose has enabled him to overcome obstacles and difficulties and advance steadily toward the goal of prosperity, so that he is today one of the substantial residents of his adopted city.

HENRY TOHL. In the history of commercial progress in Nehalem the name of Henry Tohl figures conspicuously, for he has been prominently associated with mercantile interests in the city for twenty-one years, building up a business of large and profitable proportions, which is now being conducted under the firm name of Tohl & Anderson. The family name indicates his German nativity and ancestry. His parents were Herman and Elizabeth (Linmeyer) Tohl, in whose family were seven children, of whom five are yet living: Herman, a resident of Nehalem; Henry, of this review; Mary, the wife of Joseph Effenberger, of Nehalem; William; and Anna, the wife of Andrew Kline, of Nehalem. The father, Herman Tohl, died in Nehalem in 1899. The mother afterward lived with her son Henry until her death, which occurred in 1907, when she had reached the ripe old age of eighty-three years.

Henry Tohl was reared in Germany and is indebted to the school system of that country for the educational privileges which he enjoyed. Habits of industry and enterprise were acquired by him in youth and have constituted the basis of his success. The tales which he heard concerning the opportunities and advantages of the new world led him to the determination to try his fortune on this side of the Atlantic and, landing in New York, he made his way to Pennsylvania, where he worked in a coal mine for some time. He then resumed his westward journey with Nebraska as his destination and was employed there at farm labor for a period, but later rented land and thus began farming on his own account. He continued in Nebraska for about five years and in 1884 came to Oregon, settling in the Willamette valley, where he spent one summer. He then came to Tillamook county, making his way direct to Nehalem, and taking up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres about a mile and a half east of the town. Subsequently he sold that property and purchased a tract of land upon which the town is now situated. Outside of what has been sold to home builders and speculators he still owns considerable more than one hundred acres. He has been closely associated with the business activity of this place in many ways but is perhaps most widely known because of his commercial interests, having in 1890 established a general mercantile store, which has developed into an extensive enterprise. He carries a large and well selected line of goods and his reasonable prices and honorable business methods have constituted the salient features in winning for him a large patronage. In January, 1910, he sold a half interest in his business to A. C. Anderson and the store is now conducted under the firm style of Tohl & Anderson. In addition to what remains of the farm which he purchased and upon which Nehalem has been built he also has extensive other real-estate holdings in this section of the state and in placing his investments has shown keen discrimination and sound judgment.

Henry Tohl has ever been a stalwart republican and, although never an aspirant to public office, has filled the position of road supervisor and was postmaster for four years. Whether in office or out of it he is always loyal in matters of citizenship and faithful to any duty that devolves upon him in that connection. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias and has many friends both within and without that order.

GEORGE W. OWEN is one of the prominent stock men of Jackson county, Oregon, where he is engaged in the operation of his ranch of seven hundred acres located three miles south of Ashland. He was born in Sacramento, California, April 22, 1863, and is a son of James and Susan (Tull) Owen, the former a native of New York and the latter of Kentucky. They celebrated their wedding in Illinois and later established their home in Missouri. In 1863 the father with his family crossed the plains with ox teams to California and settled on a ranch located in that state six miles from Sacramento. He later removed to Siskiyou county, where he lived for ten or twelve years and then moved to Lassen county and from there to Nevada, where he remained for a brief time and then returned to Lassen county, California. In 1879 he came to Oregon locating in what is now Klamath county, but at that time was a part of Lake county. Here he engaged in stock-raising, with which he continued to be prominently identified until the time of his death, which occurred in 1900. During his residence in Oregon he was one of the enterprising and influential citizens of Klamath county.

George W. Owen was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools. At the age of seventeen years he became a wage earner and feeling the need of a better education, after working for two years, he saved money to pay for a course at the old Ashland Academy. After completing his studies at that institution he returned to Klamath county and for a number of years worked as an employe for various stock-raisers. He later engaged in stock-raising himself and some time after was associated with his brother James, with whom he continued for a number of years. In 1895 he sold his interest in the enterprise and came to Jackson county, where he established his home on seven hundred acres of ranch land situated three miles south of Ashland and there has since continued to reside, devoting his time and attention to general farming and stock-raising.

George W. Owen was united in marriage in 1895 to Miss Camilla E. Walker, a daughter of Minus and Phoebe J. (Erb) Walker, who were early settlers of Jackson county. To Mr. and Mrs. Owen one child has been born, Minnie, who is in her sophomore year in the high school at Ashland. Mr. Owen is affiliated with the republican party but has never been an office seeker. He is a member of Ashland Lodge, No. 944, B. P. O. E., and of Ashland Lodge, No. 45, I. O. O. F. George W. Owen is one of the successful and well known stock men of Jackson county and highly esteemed for his integrity and is in every way entitled to be numbered among the desirable and useful citizens of the community in which he lives.

EMMETT F. DONAHUE. Among the younger men who are coming forward in Clackamas county and performing the duties which either have been given up by older men because of their inability to carry on the strenuous duties involved or because of their failure to meet with success in those particular lines, is Emmett F. Donahue. He was born November 28, 1880, in Clackamas county, a son of M. C. and Nancy (Thomas) Donahue. The father's birth occurred while his family were coming from Ireland, their native country, to the United States, making the trip via Cape Horn to California. Subsequently they removed to Oregon in 1888, settling in Washington county. In the grandparent's family were three children: Alice, deceased; Ralph, who has also passed away; and M. C., the father of our subject. Mrs. Donahue's parents crossed the plains from Missouri to Oregon in 1851, settling in Yamhill county, where Mrs. Donahue was born. She was one of seven children, the others being: Martin, of Clackamas county, Oregon; Elizabeth, who is the wife of Jerome Cockelreese, of Sandy; Mack, of Sandy, who is married and has three children; Asa, a resident of Sandy; Diana, the widow of Clark St. John, of Sandy, and the mother of two children, Ward and Walter; and Frank Thomas, of Estacada, Oregon, who is married and has five children. Mr. and Mrs. Donahue were married in 1870 and to their union six children were born: Annie, who is the wife of Frank New, of Portland, and the mother of one child, Louis; Warren, of Lakeport, who is married and has three children; Nellie, who is married and resides at North Yakima, Washington; Emmett F., the subject of this review; Joseph, who makes his home in Canada; and Georgie, who since she completed her commercial education has acted as bookkeeper for the Portland Light & Power Company.

Emmett F. Donahue started to earn his own livelihood at the age of sixteen years. His first employment was in a logging camp, where he worked until he was twenty-three years of age. During these seven years he was careful in his expenditures and with the money which he saved he purchased a livery business. He now enjoys a large patronage and has been successful in a line of business in which many others had previously failed. He operates the stage and mail route from Boring to Rowe, Oregon, a distance of thirty-one miles, and has also two automobiles in service. He is the first to make a financial success of the stage business which is the more remarkable, as for thirty years no one has been able to make it pay. Because of the reliability of the stages on this route his patronage is at times so heavy that it is necessary for him to run two or three stages at a time. When he started in business he had twenty-two hundred dollars in cash; now he owns his home, his stables, a house and lot in Sandy, two fine automobiles, five acres of land in Boring and his livery outfit, which amounts to about seventy-five hundred dollars.

On the 20th of May, 1903, Mr. Donahue was married to Miss Lena Van Curen, whose birth occurred November 30, 1883, and who is a daughter of John and Hetty (Daley) Van Curen. She is the eldest of three children born to her parents, the others being: Lola, deceased; and Maude, who is residing at home with her mother, the father having died in 1898. To Mr. and Mrs. Donahue two children have been born: Lola, whose birth occurred February 18, 1906; and Francis, born December 7, 1908.

Mr. Donahue's political indorsement has always been given to the republican party and he is an active worker in its ranks in Clackamas county. He was elected constable and also justice of the peace for one term. Subsequently he was appointed deputy sheriff and is still serving in that capacity. He holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Donahue has not only been industrious but has evidenced in his transactions those qualities which make friends and, being upright in his dealings and interested in the moral as well as the financial welfare of the community, he enjoys the confidence and respect of all who know him.

FRED W. GAEDECHE is one of the sturdy, upright and honorable citizens which Germany has given to the new world in such large numbers. He was born in that country, April 20, 1848, a son of John and Annie Gaedecke, both natives of Germany. He received his early education in the public schools of his native country and remained with his parents until he was twenty-three years old. In 1871 he crossed the Atlantic to America, landing in New York, and immediately went to Iowa, where he engaged in general farming for twenty-two years. He bought sixty acres of land in that state and cultivated and improved it during that period. In 1893 he sold his Iowa holdings and went to Washington, where he worked on a street railroad for four years. At the end of that time he came to Oregon and worked on a ranch near Portland for a short time. Later he went to Douglas county and bought the farm of forty acres upon which he now lives. This land he has since improved and developed. He has erected many buildings on it and has equipped it with modern farm implements, so that it ranks today as one of the model ranches of Douglas county.

In 1873, Mr. Gaedecke was united in marriage to Miss Mary Elend, a native of Germany. They are the parents of five children, Henry, Annie, Herman, Fred and Edward. The son, Herman, learned the blacksmith's trade in his early youth, at Vancouver, Washington, and remained in that city for three years working in that business. He spent one year at home, while employed in the Columbia mines, and after one more year of blacksmithing returned to the mines and was appointed foreman. He is now the owner of a progressive blacksmith shop near his father's ranch and lives at home with his parents. Fred W. Gaedecke is a consistent republican, and never seeks public office. He and his family are members of the Lutheran church of Booth, Oregon, and have always taken an active part in its affairs. Mr. Gaedecke is a practical and efficient farmer, having devoted almost his entire life to agricultural pursuits.

GEORGE A. SEHORN is the popular proprietor and owner of the Mapleton Hotel, it being the only establishment of its kind in the city of Mapleton, this state. His birth occurred in Virginia in 1868, his parents being Marion and Rebecca (Wallace) Sehorn, who were born, reared and married in that state. They continued to reside in the Old Dominion until 1870, when they removed to Tehama county, California, where they spent the remaining years of their lives. Marion Sehorn passed from this life at the age of seventy-five years and his wife at the age of sixty-eight. Their children were seven in number, as follows: William, a practicing physician of San Francisco; A. W., of Willow, California, filling the office of recorder of deeds; Bud, also of Willow, California; Elizabeth, who is the wife of John Calder and resides in San Francisco; Mary, deceased; George A., of this review; and Blair, who has passed away.

George A. Sehorn was reared in his parents' home and educated in the public schools. He remained under the parental roof until seventeen years of age, at which time he started to make his own way in the world and until May 25, 1910, he was employed as a chef at different hotels throughout the state of California. During these years he accumulated property of various kinds, which was located at different places in California. On the 25th of May, 1910, he purchased the Mapleton Hotel at Mapleton, Oregon, and has since devoted his entire attention to the improvement and operation of that property.

Mr. Sehorn has been twice married. At the age of twenty-one he was united in marriage to Miss Nellie Basley and unto them was born one son, Louis A. In 1892 Mr. Sehorn obtained a legal separation from his wife and subsequently wedded Mrs. Lula (Carter) Hartley, formerly the wife of Mark Hartley, of California. Mrs. Sehorn is the daughter of Leonard and Elizabeth Carter. Her mother died in the state of Wisconsin many years ago and her father removed to California in 1877 and for five years continued to reside in that state, after which he moved to Oregon and settled in Lane county upon a farm and there continued to reside for a period of twenty-nine years. He then removed to Florida, where he now maintains his home. On leaving this state he sold a portion of his original homestead but still retains one hundred and sixty acres of that place near Acme, Oregon. To Leonard and Elizabeth Carter three children were born: Mrs. Mary M. Fox, of Lane county; Nora, who died in infancy; and Mrs. Lula Sehorn. By her first husband Mrs. Sehorn had six children, namely: Edwin A., who is at home; Harvey K., of California; Irvin D., likewise of that state; Leona May, Casner B. and Erma, who died in infancy. Mrs. Sehorn is the owner in her own right of valuable real-estate property in Florence. Both she and her husband are members of the Methodist Episcopal church of Mapleton.

George A. Sehorn is the popular and successful owner and proprietor of the Mapleton Hotel and his hostelry is becoming widely known through this section of Lane county as one of the best and most carefully conducted institutions of its kind. He is a man of great business energy and always quick to give his influence and assistance to the interests of every enterprise of a public character that seeks to advance the welfare and betterment of the people of Lane county and the town of Mapleton.

SAMUEL H. TETHEROW, who is living retired in Falls City, Oregon, was born in Platte county, Missouri, March 6, 1836. He is a son of Solomon Tetherow, who was better known as "Uncle Sol," and who was born in Tennessee, of German parentage, his father being a native of that country, who settled in Tennessee at an early date. Solomon Tetherow, reared under the parental roof, had no early school advantages. On reaching manhood he went to Platte county, Missouri, where he was united in marriage to Miss Effie Baker, of that state. In 1843 he removed with his family to Texas but on account of sickness he returned without unpacking his wagon to Platte county, Missouri, where he purchased land. In 1845 he and his brother David, with fifteen ox teams and four wagons, joined a train consisting of sixty-one wagons and three hundred men, of which Solomon Tetherow was the captain, and started to cross the plains. They went by way of the Stephen Meek route, on the Green river, and by way of the Meek cut-off, crossing near Wagon tire mountain and thence turning north to The Dalles. From there they drove the cattle over the trail and floated the goods down on rafts to the Cascade Falls. Solomon and David Tetherow made their way to Polk county, Oregon, where they purchased of Solomon Sheldon a tract of land, which included the present site of Dallas. In 1847 they sold this land for eleven two-year-old heifers and went to the forks of the Luckiamute river, where they took up a land donation claim of six hundred and forty acres. Solomon Tetherow improved this claim and resided thereon the rest of his life. In partnership with Fred Weymer, in 1851 he bought a sawmill two miles north of Falls City and operated the same for several years. It was the first sawmill in this section of the country and he manufactured all the lumber for his buildings there. He died on his claim in 1879, at the age of seventy-nine, and his wife, having preceded him by ten years, passed away in 1869, at the age of sixty-five. He was a very successful man, owning in all about eighteen hundred acres of land, and during his time he bought and sold much land and engaged extensively in stock-raising, making a specialty of hogs and sheep. He was a staunch republican in politics, and both he and his wife were members of the Cumberland Presbyterian church. He was well known and highly respected. In his family were ten children: Evelyn, of Polk county, Oregon, who is the widow of Paul Hildebrant; Lucinda, of Ashland, Oregon, the widow of William Parker; Andrew Jackson, who married Sophronia Crowe, both of whom are deceased; Samuel H., of this review; Thomas B., of whom mention is made on another page of this work; William L., deceased, who married Angeline Johnson, who still resides in Colfax, Washington; Emily, who became the wife of Henry Christie and both are now deceased; James P., who died in 1905 and was a farmer on the old homestead in Polk county, Oregon, having married Amanda Crosby, who resides on the farm; Martha, of Dallas, Oregon, who is the widow of David Burris; and Cynthia Ann, who married Richard M. Johnson, of Colfax, Washington.

Samuel H. Tetherow had very meager chances for an early education, having to go four or five miles to the district school. He remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-two years of age, or 1858, when he located near the Luckiamute river, where he resided for eight years. He then went to Benton county and purchased a farm of three hundred and twenty acres but after a short time he sold the same and bought five hundred acres in the foot hills of the same county, where he engaged in stock-raising. After five years he sold out and bought three hundred acres of his old homestead, for which he paid nine thousand dollars. He resided there until 1898, when he came to Falls City, where he now lives. He helped to build the mill at Falls City and for five years was connected with it, but since then he has lived retired. He owns a beautiful residence in town and has two acres in small fruit. He also still owns two hundred acres of his old home farm.

Mr. Tetherow has been twice married. In 1858 he wedded Henrietta M. Grifforth, of Pike county, Missouri, who was a daughter of John W. Grifforth. The father came to Oregon in 1852 and located on a farm of three hundred and twenty acres near Buena Vista, in Polk county, and resided there until his death. Henrietta M. Tetherow passed away in May, 1887, leaving four children: C. M., who married Anna Ireland and now owns one hundred acres of the old homestead; King S., of Spokane, Washington; William K., who married Ella Williams and is a stock dealer in Colfax, Washington; and Samuel B., who married Effie Ireland and is a farmer and stock dealer in Harvey Valley, Oregon. Mr. Tetherow's second union was with Mrs. Josephine E. Holman, the widow of Rev. Preston Holman, a minister in the Baptist church. She was a daughter of Rev. David Hubbard, also a Baptist minister, who came from Pike county, Illinois, to Oregon in 1852 and located three-quarters of a mile south of Falls City, Oregon. He was the first minister in this part of the state and he also engaged in farming. His wife was a Miss Thurman. She died at Dallas, Oregon, and he passed away at his farm. By her first marriage Mrs. Tetherow became the mother of four children: Frank, who married Lucretia Miller and is a farmer and dairyman at Dallas, Oregon; Vivian, who became the wife of Frank Bassett and is now deceased; Fred J., who married Beulah Van Loam and is postmaster of Black Rock, Oregon; and Juanita, who is the wife of W. E. Gilbert, of Portland, Oregon.

In politics Mr. Tetherow is a staunch republican and he is greatly interested in local party issues. He has served for two years as mayor of Falls City and was a member of the city council for several years. He is a man of strong personality, of excellent memory and, being widely known in his community, he has a host of warm friends. He has led a busy, useful life and deserves to be classed with the highly honored residents of this section of the state.

RICHARD H. CLOW is one of the honored veterans of the Civil war and after years of devotion to business interests he is now in the enjoyment of a deserved and well earned rest from business activities. His home is established in Mapleton, this state, where he lives a retired life. He was born in Halifax, Nova Scotia, on May 25, 1847, and is a son of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Clow, who were both natives of England, where they were united in marriage, and in the early history of their married life they emigrated to Nova Scotia and settled in Halifax, where they continued to reside until the death of Mrs. Clow, after which John S. Clow removed to Boston, Massachusetts, and was there engaged in the pursuit of his profession as an artist, making a specialty of portrait painting. Some years later he removed to California and settled in San Francisco and at that place passed away at the age of eighty-four. To Mr. and Mrs. John S. Clow two children were born: Richard H., of this review; and Mrs. Cochrane, deceased, formerly the wife of Dr. Cochrane, of San Jose, California.

Richard H. Clow was reared at home and educated in the public schools and later in life completed his education at the Waterville Academy of Maine. He removed to this state late in the '70s and first settled at Granite, Grant county, where he established his residence and for twenty years was engaged in mining throughout the districts of the Pacific states and also in various parts of British Columbia. He is still the owner of valuable interests in a number of the best paying gold mines in Grant county. In 1900 he removed to Eugene, where he engaged in the general real-estate business and continued to give his attention to its interests for a period of six years, after which he removed to Mapleton in 1906, where he purchased the Mrs. Bean homestead. That property consisted of one hundred and fifty-four acres well improved with buildings, one of these being a hotel and at that time the only hostelry at Mapleton. Mr. Clow, immediately after the purchase of the Bean homestead, took possession of the property and was engaged in the operation of the farm and the conduct and management of the hotel for three years. In addition to these business interests he also conducted a feed stable. After devoting himself to the attention of these varied interests for three years he purchased a commodious residence in Mapleton, where he now lives. In addition to his ranch of one hundred and fifty-four acres adjacent to the town of Mapleton he also owns ten acres of commercial timber adjoining his farm. Mr. Clow enlisted during the war in Company C, Thirteenth Regiment of Infantry. He was first sergeant of his company and served during the last half of the Civil war. During his residence at Mapleton he has built three fine residences in that place and is the owner of the city waterworks, with which he supplies the town of Mapleton with water for public and private use. He was also one of the influential promoters of the first railroad that reached Mapleton and has in many ways contributed largely to varied public improvements of the place. Among the noted accomplishments in this particular was his successful work in securing the proper location for the Mapleton depot, an accomplishment which is recognized by the citizens to be one among the most serviceable and enduring features in connection with the growth and convenience of the city.

In the year 1880 Mr. Clow was united in marriage to Miss Lena Storey, a native of Nebraska and a daughter of William and Jane Storey, to whom were born eight children. Her father passed away at the age of eighty years and her mother at the age of forty-four. To Mr. and Mrs. Clow two children have been born: Cora, born in 1881, who is the wife of Elmer McBee, of Lane county, Oregon; and Robert Denton, whose natal day was April 16, 1888, and who is at home. He is by profession an engineer and is captain of the launch Valeria.

Mr. Clow is affiliated with the republican party, following the interests of that great political organization in its national and state campaigns. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having filled all of the chairs in the local lodge of the latter organization. He likewise belongs to the Grand Army of the Republic. Richard H. Clow has been one of the singularly useful citizens not only to the town of Mapleton but also to the state and county in which he lives. He has been very successful in his business undertakings and is known to be a man of integrity in all his dealings with his fellow citizens. He is public-spirited, ready to lead or to follow any measure of public character which has for its object the betterment of the people.

CHARLES CHENEY. One of the most extensive owners of ranch lands in the Cow Creek valley and a man whose life has been an active factor in the agricultural development of that region is Charles Cheney, who operates a large ranch of six hundred and forty acres in this district. He is a native of Vermont, where his birth occurred, January 27, 1824. His parents were Moody and Alice (Whitney) Cheney, the former a native of New Hampshire and the latter of Massachusetts. They were married in Vermont and in that state their entire lives were spent. To them were born ten children, of whom five are still living.

Charles Cheney received a common-school education in his native state but laid aside his text-books at the age of eighteen to take up the mason's trade and at this he worked for twenty years. He spent some time in Boston, working as a carpenter, which trade he had learned in his youth, and in 1876 came west to Oregon and settled on a homestead in the Cow Creek valley. His original holdings consisted of one hundred and sixty acres and these he has improved and operated for thirty-six years. During that time he has become a thorough master of all the details connected with the cultivation of the soil and the raising of horses and cattle. He takes a keen interest in every modern scientific discovery along agricultural lines and is constantly adding to his equipment. The ranch, which was one hundred and sixty acres in extent at the time he took up the homestead claim has been added to and now comprises six hundred and forty acres, making one of the largest holdings in the Cow Creek valley. Mr. Cheney makes a specialty of stock-raising and in this branch of his occupation has been remarkably successful. He owns a large herd of graded cattle and has this branch of his business under his personal direction.

Mr. Cheney was thrice married. His first union occurred in 1847, when he wedded Miss Mary Smith. His second union was with Miss Mary Burrzell, whom he married in 1848, and they became the parents of three children, two of whom are deceased. George, the surviving child, is now a resident of Douglas county. The mother of these children died in 1873 and in the following year Mr. Cheney was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Hudson, whose death occurred in 1902.

Politically Mr. Cheney is a staunch republican and has always taken an active interest in local party affairs and held township offices for several terms. All during his life he has shown himself to be a public-spirited and patriotic citizen, keenly interested in the current affairs of the time. In his early youth while still a resident of Massachusetts he had the honor of raising the liberty pole erected in honor of President James K. Polk when he was a guest of Lowell. Mr. Cheney is now in the eighty-eighth year of his age and can look back upon a long period of prosperity with the consciousness of work well done and a worthy life well spent.

JOHN S. SLOAN, who is living retired, has been a resident of Montavilla since 1897. His birth occurred on the 19th of February, 1872, in Pulaski county, Kentucky, his parents being Harvey and Mary C. (Hall) Sloan. The father was also born in Pulaski county, on the 30th of October, 1834, and the mother's birth occurred in the same county, on the 2d of February, 1840. They were married at the home of her parents, October 31, 1860. They removed to the father's plantation, where they resided for many years. To their union eight children were born. James Thomas, who was born August 29, 1861, died on the 13th of June, 1896, and was survived by a wife and three children. William Austin, who was born June 9, 1864, is married and makes his home in Montavilla, Oregon. Fannie L., who was born November 17, 1866, passed away on the 6th of April, 1867. Maud E., born September 12, 1868, became the wife of John Goggins, of Danville, Kentucky, and has ten children. John S., the subject of this review, is the next in order of birth. Ella Etta, who was born September 10, 1874, married Joe Waddle, of Somerset, Kentucky, and they have five children. Ellen Hall was born August 19, 1877, and makes her home with her parents in Kentucky. Gideon P., of Portland, who was born June 12, 1880, is married and has two sons, Harvey and Gideon.

After pursuing his education for a few years in the public schools John S. Sloan started at the early age of fourteen years to earn his own livelihood. He first accepted a position in a sawmill in Burnside, Kentucky, where he was employed for six months before engaging in railroad construction work. He remained to be so employed for two and a half years. Later he went to Nebraska and was employed as a farm hand for one season before coming to Oregon. He arrived in the eastern part of this state on the 20th of June, 1890, and settled in Eagle valley, where for three years he was engaged in stock-raising. After his marriage he settled upon a farm of forty acres, which he had previously purchased and after residing there for two years he came to Montavilla in 1897 and engaged in the meat-market business. After one year he sold out and worked in various positions in this line until June, 1911, at which time he retired. He looks after his real-estate holdings, which are constantly increasing in value and he owns property both in the business and residence sections, which he has acquired since his arrival in Montavilla.

On the 14th of February, 1894, Mr. Sloan was married to Miss Harriett E. Reed, of Baker City. Her birth occurred on the 25th of October, 1875, her parents being G. N. and Sarah C. (Swisher) Reed. She is the eldest of seven children born to her parents. Valira A., the deceased wife of Clarence L. Spaugh, left three children, one of whom is residing with our subject and the other two with Mrs. Spaugh's mother. Abram D., deceased, was married and left two children. Anna became the wife of George M. Moody, of Richland, Oregon, and had five children, four of whom survive. Calvin M. is married and makes his home at Gaston, Oregon. Donnie became the wife of Oscar Ingle, deceased, and has one child. Gladys, the youngest member of the family, makes her home with her parents. To Mr. and Mrs. Sloan two children have been born: Sarah Catherine, whose birth occurred on the 3d of January, 1895, and who since she completed a business-college course has occupied a position as bookkeeper; and Fannie Margaret, who was born June 8, 1900, and is attending school. Mr. and Mrs. Sloan are also rearing Abram Spaugh, a son of Mrs. Sloan's sister. His birth occurred on the 22d of September, 1904.

Although Mr. Sloan is in sympathy with the principles and policies of the democratic party, he casts his vote more for man or measure than for party. He has never sought office but has always maintained a citizen's interest in the political welfare of his community. He is responsible in a large degree for the rapid improvement and development of Montavilla. In religious faith he was reared a Presbyterian and he holds membership in the United Artisans. The family residence is at 1975 East Alder street, one of the most hospitable homes in Portland—and their cordiality has won them many friends.

JOSEPH G. SHEBLEY is enthusiastic concerning the mineral resources of Jackson county and this section of Oregon, and he bases his enthusiasm upon accurate knowledge and understanding of mining conditions. He has since 1906 been connected with mining interests in the county, having in that year organized the White-Shebley-Hunt Mining Company. He was born in Nevada county, California, October 19, 1866, and is a son of Joseph Vincent and Janette (Schmidt) Shebley. The father, a native of Switzerland, was born in 1834 and was only seven months old when brought by his parents to the new world, the family home being established in Ohio, where Joseph Vincent Shebley remained until the '50s, when he removed to California. He made a handsome fortune there, becoming superintendent and owner of some of the largest hydraulic mines of that state of an early day. He mined for many years, sometimes meeting with excellent success and again losing his earnings in his investments and search for further mineral-bearing properties. In later days he spent a part of his time in farming in Nevada county, California, where he died in May, 1902. His wife was born in Germany, in 1846, and made her way direct to California in 1860 with an elder sister, Mary. In 1864, in Nevada county, she gave her hand in marriage to Joseph V. Shebley and has since lived in that county.

Joseph G. Shebley, whose name introduces this review, was the second in a family of ten children. From early boyhood he was familiar with the work of the mines and in fact, has always been connected with mining interests. He first went to Alaska in 1890 and has made four trips to that country on the steamer San Pedro, which he chartered. He had mining interests in Alaska, with which he was identified for four years. While he was fortunate in his mining operations he lost forty-three thousand dollars in the steamboat venture. He afterward engaged in sawmill operations in Nevada county, California, for four years and then sold out and came to Oregon, in 1906. Making his way to Jackson county he organized the White-Shebley-Hunt Mining Company and secured three hundred and twenty acres of land in the lower part of Pleasant valley. In May, 1910, he organized the Pleasant Creek Gold Dredge Mining Company. They have four hundred acres in one tract and this company also holds sixty-six per cent of the stock of the other company. Mr. Shebley is manager of the former company and has had charge of their mines for six years. The process is that of dredging and hydraulic mining and they employ eight or ten men. The outlook for the future is very favorable and the business is already proving profitable. Mr. Shebley has also done further prospecting here, spending over twenty thousand dollars in this way. Over four million dollars in gold has been taken out of Pleasant valley and Mr. Shebley estimates that five million will yet be taken out.

In 1896 Mr. Shebley was married to Miss Alice White, who was born at Rock Point, Oregon, in 1862, and is a daughter of J. B. White, who came from Pennsylvania to the northwest in 1852 and resided here until 1872, when he returned with a fortune to Oakland, California, where his death occurred in 1899. He was a miner here in the early days and afterward built a store at Rock Point, Jackson county, becoming a pioneer merchant of this region. This was the only store between Jacksonville and Wolfcreek for many years. He also did freighting from Crescent City with ox teams. Mr. and Mrs. Shebley have one child, Jack White, ten years of age, who has a little mine of his own and pipes out considerable gold. He has probably panned more gold than any boy of his age on the coast and he can pan as well as his father. He is a lad of great energy and ambition and the future, undoubtedly, holds in store for him gratifying success. Both Mr. and Mrs. Shebley are widely and favorably known in Woodville and throughout Jackson county and his mining interests place him in a prominent position among the representative business men of this part of the state.

HOWARD M. BROWNELL, assistant prosecuting attorney of Clatsop county and vice president of the Clatsop County Bar Association, has been engaged in the practice of law at Astoria since 1905 and has shown an ability and an interest in his profession which give brilliant promise as to his future. He is a native of Dutchess county, New York, born September 15, 1879, a son of George C. and Elma (Lane) Brownell. The father was born in the state of New York about 1852 and the mother at Cape Cod, Massachusetts. Mr. Brownell, Sr., has for many years engaged in the practice of law and is now a leader at the bar of Oregon City, being recognized as one of the brightest lawyers of the state. The grandfather of our subject on the paternal side was Ambrose Brownell, a soldier for the Union in the Civil war.

Mr. Brownell of this review came with his parents to Oregon City early in life and received his preliminary education in the public schools. He read law in the office of his father for four years and in 1900 was admitted to the bar upon examination. After practicing for two years with his father he went to Marshfield, Oregon, where he engaged in practice independently for two years. He spent several months on the coast and in 1905 located at Astoria and assisted Harrison Allen, district attorney, for one year. He was next connected in practice with Judge Eakin for a period of two years, in 1908 opening an office on his own account. In addition to serving as assistant prosecuting attorney he is also attorney for Warrenton and Seaside. He is an earnest and eloquent speaker, a good pleader, and possesses ambition and courage so necessary in overcoming the many difficulties that lie in the way of advancement in the legal profession.

On the 28th of February, 1907, Mr. Brownell was married to Miss Nellie B. Hart, who was born at Columbus, Ohio, a daughter of Hiram and Katherine Hart. The father engages in farming. Politically Mr. Brownell gives his support to the republican party whose principles he recognizes as highly important in the promotion of the general welfare of the country. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. The possessor of sound judgment, a clear head and well developed reasoning powers, he gives promise of attaining a state-wide reputation. He is a man of great energy and has decision of character and a strong sense of justice, both of which are important elements in the determination of success or failure in a business or professional life. That he will gain high honors in his profession is the opinion of all who know him.

JAMES B. STEWART is one of the extensive property owners of Lane county, holding the title to twelve hundred and twelve acres of land in the vicinity of Cottage Grove, where he engages in general agricultural pursuits and stock-raising, and is meeting with remunerative returns from both lines of his business. He is a native of Lane county, his birth having occurred at Cottage Grove on the 19th of January, 1861, and is the only son of Edward W. and Nancy J. (McFarland) Stewart. They were the parents of two children, the elder of whom, a daughter, Mary Elizabeth, died at the age of twenty-four years. The paternal grandfather, Peter Stewart, was a native of Scotland, whence he emigrated in his early manhood to the United States. His family numbered five sons and one daughter, as follows: John, who is a banker at Wilmington, Illinois; Edward W., the father of our subject, who is now deceased; Malcolm N. M., also deceased, who was formerly a banker at Wilmington; James, a banker at Topeka, Kansas; George T., a retired capitalist of Wilmington, now deceased; and Mary Elizabeth, the wife of John Monteith, Albany, Oregon. Edward W. Stewart was born at Amsterdam, New York, where he lived with his parents until he had attained the age of twelve years. He then went to Wilmington, Illinois, making his home there until he was nineteen, when the lure of the west proved irresistible to him and he joined an emigrant train bound for California. Their party had a very pleasant and uneventful journey, not meeting with any of the experiences encountered by the majority who crossed the plains in 1849. Mr. Stewart never saw an Indian from the time he left Illinois but during the first year of his residence in California he participated in a number of engagements between the natives and the settlers and was twice wounded. He was once shot in the arm with an arrow and the flint being left in it gave him more or less trouble during the remainder of his life and ultimately caused his death from blood poisoning at the age of fifty-four years. For four years after he located in California, Mr. Stewart engaged in placer mining, but at the expiration of that time he went to Albany, Oregon, and worked at the blacksmith's trade for four or five years. It was there he met and married Miss McFarland and they subsequently went to Cottage Grove but after eight or nine years' residence in the latter place Mr. Stewart purchased twelve hundred acres of land southeast of the present site of Dorena. About one-half of this was cleared and the remainder was covered with a dense growth of fir trees. Here he engaged in general farming and stock-raising until his death, which occurred on the 10th of April, 1880.

Mrs. Stewart, the mother of our subject, was the eldest of the eight children of James C. and Paulie McFarland. In order of birth the others are as follows: Sarah, deceased, who first married Homer Smith and subsequently David Underwood; Mary, also deceased, who married Jerry Arnold, of Eugene; Martha, the widow of J. H. McCarty, of Boise, Idaho; Amanda, the deceased wife of Charles Austin, of Albany, Oregon; Kittie, who died in girlhood; Dave G., who is living in Cottage Grove; and James H., a ranchman in the vicinity of Cottage Grove.

James B. Stewart passed his boyhood and youth in a manner very similar to other lads who were reared in the rural districts of Oregon during the pioneer period. At the age of eighteen years he assumed the duties of manhood by undertaking the entire responsibility connected with the operation of his father's ranch. About four hundred acres of this was open land and the remaining six hundred was in timber. He has since increased his holdings by the addition of three hundred and twenty acres and his present ranch embraces twelve hundred and twelve acres. Six hundred acres of this is tillable but the remainder is still in timber. One hundred acres of the tract that has been cleared has been brought into a high state of productivity, but the remainder is in pasture, as Mr. Stewart makes a specialty of stock-raising. He raises sheep, cattle and hogs for the market and he also breeds and sells horses and is meeting with a goodly measure of success from his various undertakings.

On the 14th of February, 1883, Mr. Stewart was married to Miss Margaret Cole, who was born on November 1, 1863, and is the youngest daughter of the late John W. and Mary (Cox) Cole. The father lived to attain a venerable age, having been born on the 26th of October, 1819, and died on June 22, 1903, while the mother was born on the 9th of May, 1830, and passed away on May 11, 1902. The grandparents were from Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Cole had five children: Eliza J., who was born on the 18th of May, 1856, and died on December 31, 1857; James F., whose birth occurred on the 11th of December, 1858, died September 12, 1862; Julia A., who was born on the 19th of March, 1861, died September 19, 1863; Mrs. Stewart; and John W., who was born on May 21, 1867, and died July 30, 1877. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart have a son and a daughter: Malcolm M., who was born on the 23d of May, 1887, now cultivating a portion of his father's ranch; and Agnes P., who was born November 22, 1892, now living at home, having completed the course of the common schools.

Mr. Stewart casts his ballot for the candidates of the republican party and served as a school director for about nine years, this being the only public office he ever held. He is a man of progressive ideas and takes a helpful interest in all matters affecting the welfare of the community or the interests of the agriculturists and stockmen and has for many years been a member of the state Grange. Mr. Stewart has passed the greater part of his life in the vicinity where he now resides and one of the highest tributes that can be paid to him is to say that he has hosts of friends in Lane county, the majority of whom have known him from early boyhood.

DENNIS DUGGAN is a son of Ireland, in which country he was born in 1845, and came to this land of opportunities in October, 1864. He is a prosperous sheep-raiser, owning six hundred acres of land in Jackson county, near Central Point. On coming to the United States he settled temporarily in Washington, D. C., where he was employed at various occupations for a considerable period. He then removed to Jersey City, New Jersey, and after remaining a short time took passage from there by water for San Francisco. He did not long remain in that city but soon came to Oregon, where he settled temporarily in Portland, after which he went to The Dalles. From that point he walked to Canyon City, Grant county, a journey which consumed five days, and went to work in the gold mines. He entered upon that vocation with enthusiasm and followed it with varying success until 1872, when he returned to Portland and was employed variously until 1873, when he purchased a ranch of six hundred acres in Jackson county, which he at once set about to clear and improve. He gives the greater part of his attention to the raising of sheep.

Mr. Duggan was married, in 1874, to Miss Mary E. Callahan, of Iowa, in which state their marriage was celebrated and they became the parents of four children, all of whom are residing in Oregon, as follows: John F., Mary, Dennis P. and Jeremiah C. Mr. Duggan and his wife are members of the Catholic church, being loyal communicants of that religious faith. The large degree of success which has been achieved by Mr. Duggan has marked him as a man of determination and of industry, which qualities characterize so many of the hardy sons of the land of Erin, who have risen to positions of honor, trust and affluence in this great country of limitless opportunity. He has always given his undivided attention to the affairs at hand and, possessing wise discrimination and good judgment, coupled with strict economy and integrity, he has built up a fortune of which he may justly be proud.

J. F. W. SANBERT, M. D., is placed by public opinion among the most enterprising citizens of Lane county and to him belongs the distinction of having been the founder and father of Acme, where he is successfully engaged in the operation of his varied business interests. He was born in Bavaria, Germany, February 26, 1835, and is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Sanbert, both of whom were natives of Germany. The mother died in her native country in 1840 and some time later the father was united in marriage to Miss Christine Glossell and in 1844, with his wife and family, he emigrated to America, locating on new land in Jefferson county, Wisconsin, where he continued to live until the time of his death, which occurred in 1896 at the age of eighty years. The paternal grandfather of our subject died at the age of ninety. The widow of Carl Sanbert is still living on the old home farm in Wisconsin. They had three children, of whom Dr. Sanbert is the first in order of birth.

J. F. W. Sanbert was reared at home and received his elementary education in the public schools. He later completed a course in the study of medicine and was graduated with the degree of M. D. from the Chicago Homeopathic College. Immediately following his graduation he began the practice of his profession in Wisconsin and later removed to Roseburg, Douglas county, Oregon. There he settled in 1878 and there at once engaged in the practice of medicine. He began his professional career in Oregon with but limited means and he was an entire stranger to the people of Roseburg. His strict attention to the practice of his profession eventually resulted in making many warm friends and in the building up of an extensive and lucrative business. He remained at Roseburg for eight years and then removed to a point on the Siuslaw river, where he became instrumental in the founding of a town, to which he gave the name of Acme. The town has since grown until it has attained the proportions of a small city, in which the varied enterprises of modern business life are now established. Dr. Sanbert, before locating at what is now Acme, purchased a large tract of timber land, on which he erected the first sawmill and engaged in the manufacture of lumber. In 1897 he erected a new sawmill and in 1901 he installed a modern steam power plant, since which time the mill has continued to run the year around with a capacity of twenty-five to thirty thousand feet per day. The supply of logs for this mill is being taken from various sections of the Doctor's timber holdings of fifteen hundred acres, located near Acme, toward the source of the Siuslaw river. In addition to the mill property Dr. Sanbert is also the owner of a general store.

Dr. Sanbert was united in marriage to Miss Anna Dejon and they became the parents of four children, as follows: George, who is a resident of Spokane, Washington; and Charles, Thomas and Frank, all living in Acme. The two last named are members of the mercantile firm of M. E. Sanbert & Company. Dr. Sanbert was later united in marriage in Roseburg, in 1879, to Miss Mary Taylor, a native of Illinois, who settled in Oregon in the early days of her young womanhood, and to this union four children have been born: Irma, who is the wife of Grant Earhart, of Acme; and Ray, Roy and Lloyd, all of whom are residents of Acme.

Dr. Sanbert is independent in the exercise of his franchise and has served as postmaster of Acme for thirteen years. He has also filled the offices of school trustee and clerk and is fraternally affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in both of which lodges he has passed the chairs. He is also one of the charter members of the lodge of Odd Fellows at Viola, Wisconsin. Dr. Sanbert is in every way entitled to be enrolled among the early pioneers of Lane county, Oregon, and as one of the early settlers in that portion of his adopted state. He is a man held in high esteem by all with whom he has come into contact in his professional life as a physician as well as his successful career as a business man.

GEORGE WATSON KENNEY, a retired agriculturist and merchant of Gresham, Oregon, was born in Iowa, December 29, 1854, a son of James P. and Margaret (Guy) Kenney. The parents were natives of Ohio and the father's parents were of German and Irish descent, while the mother's father was a native of Ireland. The father was one of eight children born to his parents. The mother was the youngest of three children, the others being James and John, both deceased. After their marriage in Ohio in 1851 Mr. and Mrs. James P. Kenney removed to Iowa, where they remained for four years before spending the next three years in southern Kansas previous to their removal to central Kansas. In the latter place they resided for four years and subsequently lived in Nebraska for ten years before coming to Oregon and settling at Base Line Road near Rockwood. This was in the autumn of 1874 and they resided in that place until the father's death. The mother died three years later in Gresham, Oregon, at the home of her son George W. Mr. Kenney had been an agriculturist throughout his active career and as such had been active in the development of the west. To their union eight children were born: Amanda, who is the wife of A. D. Strunk, of Pawnee City, Nebraska, and the mother of five children, John, Margaret, Albert, Roy and Harry; George W., who is the subject of this review; Alphonso, of Klamath Falls, Oregon, who is married and has four children, Winsted, Ralph, Oliver and Rose; James, deceased; Margaret, deceased, who is survived by her husband Webster Campbell of Portland, Oregon, and her son Lloyd; May, deceased; Martha, who is married, resides in Portland and has two children, Franklin and Minnie May; and John, deceased.

After acquiring his education in the district schools and assisting his father in the cultivation of the home farm, George W. Kenney started out in life on his own account at the age of twenty years. He was employed at various tasks for two years, and subsequently, after he married, purchased land near Rockwood, Oregon, which he cultivated for ten years. His farming pursuits were highly remunerative and he was then able to purchase better land near Gresham. He farmed this until 1906, when he engaged in the mercantile business. For three years he was thus engaged before his retirement. Since discontinuing active pursuits he has served as road supervisor and in that way has maintained his position in the activities of the community. In agricultural pursuits he was always methodical and progressive, and in those two qualities lay the secret of the success which his constant labor and persevering energy brought him.

Mr. Kenney was married to Miss Agnes Brand, a daughter of Matthew Brand of Oregon. To their union three children were born: Elbert, James and Ruby, all of whom are deceased. The mother also passed away and on the 2d of June, 1892, in Portland, Oregon. Mr. Kenney was married to Mrs. Calla Sharick, a daughter of David and Margaret Lentz. She was the widow of John A. Sharick, and was born February, 25, 1870. Mrs. Lentz was a native of Indiana and Mr. Lentz resided there previous to his marriage. Previously Mrs. Lentz had been married to a Mr. Daley and by that union four children were born, namely: Adela, Peter A., Hannah and Cordelia. To her second union to David Lentz four children were born, George W., Mrs. Calla Sharick, Emma and Ada. All the children are living with the exception of Peter A. Daley, who passed away, October 7, 1911.

In politics Mr. Kenney casts his vote with the republican party. He has served as road supervisor for eight years, was for several years a member of the school board and also served as school clerk. He has accepted these offices in a spirit that they afforded him an opportunity to assist in the upbuilding of the community. His various activities brought him profitable returns and he owns his home in Gresham and twenty acres near town, also property in Portland and Seaside. His entire life has been one of active labor, and he is now able to enjoy the comforts and luxuries which were denied him in his earlier years.

WALLACE GALBREATH, who for many years was identified with the mining interests of the northwest, operating in quartz fields, is the owner of a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres and an attractive health resort known as Bybee Springs. The place is pleasantly situated on Evans creek, fifteen miles from Woodville, and has three mineral springs possessing splendid medicinal properties. Mr. Galbreath is devoting his energies to the management of the resort and the conduct of his ranch, eighty acres of which is under cultivation. He is one of Oregon's native sons, his birth having occurred in Yamhill county, April 24, 1869, his parents being Robert and Mary Ann (Debbs) Galbreath. The father was born in Pennsylvania in 1815 and the mother was a native of New Jersey. The parents were married in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and about 1863 became residents of Yamhill county, Oregon, where the father engaged in ranching for a time but afterward conducted a saloon. Later he went to Klamath Falls, where he operated a stock ranch. His death there occurred when he had reached the age of eighty-four years and fifteen days.

His wife survived him for a number of years, passing away at Stockton, California, in December, 1910, when seventy years of age.

They had a family of four sons and four daughters, of whom Wallace Galbreath was the second son and fourth child. He began working for himself when nine years of age and at length went to lower California, where he was employed on a ranch for five years. He afterward returned to Klamath and rode on the range after stock all through eastern and southern Oregon. He was thus identified with stock-raising interests for about ten years, at the end of which time he was married and turned his attention to quartz mining, which he followed most of the time in northern California and southern Oregon until about two years ago. In 1911 he purchased his present home, becoming the owner of a tract of one hundred and sixty acres, one-half of which is devoted to the cultivation of the crops best adapted to soil and climate. Because of the mineral springs found upon his place he is conducting a health resort there, his property being known as Bybee Springs, so called because of the fact that the original owner was William Bybee. It lies within fifteen miles of Woodville on Evans creek and here are entertained many invalids. Mr. Galbreath bought the place when his wife was an invalid, having been in very poor health for five years. Since her arrival here her health has been entirely restored owing to the curative properties of the waters and the fine climate of the district. Mr. Galbreath gives his entire time to the management of his ranch and resort, yet he is the owner of placer mines in Siskiyou county, California.

On the 27th of November, 1894, Mr. Galbreath was married to Miss Mamie Johnson, who was born in Pennsylvania, June 11, 1874, and went to California with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Johnson, who are now residents of Ashland, Oregon. Her girlhood days were spent in the Golden state. By her marriage she became the mother of three children, Clyde, Alden and Bernice, all of whom were born at Yreka, Siskiyou county, California, where Mr. and Mrs. Galbreath made their home from the time of their marriage until their removal to their ranch near Woodville. They have become well known and have gained many friends here, although having lived in this district for less than two years. Their many substantial traits of character are recognized and Mr. Galbreath is proving his worth as an enterprising and progressive business man.

CHARLES EDWARDS has been a westerner since boyhood, coming to California in the early '50s. He owns two hundred acres of timber land in the Golden state and forty acres in Josephine county, Oregon, near Murphy, where he has made his home for many years. He was born in Louisiana, April 17, 1842, a son of Hiller and Eliza (Fluker) Edwards, and is one of four children born to his parents. After receiving a common-school education in his native state he left Louisiana and the parental roof at the age of about thirteen years and by ox teams crossed the plains to California. On arriving in the latter state he obtained employment in the mines, for a time, and also was one of a threshing machine crew, working at sewing bags. While in California he acquired two hundred acres of valuable timber land, which he still owns. Later in life, he removed to Oregon, and purchased forty acres of land in Josephine county, near Murphy, and upon that property he has since made his home.

Charles Edwards is a democrat and has always taken interest in public affairs. He has long been recognized as one of Josephine county's valued and honored citizens and has great faith in the future of his section of the country. He is a man of genial disposition, optimistic and warm-hearted, and these qualities have gained for him a large number of personal friends and have made him well liked in the community in which he lives. Among his most valued possessions is an heirloom in the form of a violin, which is about two hundred years old. This instrument he cherishes highly and would not think of parting with it.

OLUF BOREN. One of the leading playwrights of the country has described America as "the melting pot" into which are poured the various nationalities of Europe to become fused into a strong race. It is a self-evident fact that the great majority of those who come from foreign lands to the new world manifest the utmost loyalty to their adopted country and advocate and support its free institutions and its methods of government. Among this number, in Astoria, is Oluf Boren, who was born in Sweden, April 18, 1845, a son of John and Catherine Boren, who were also natives of that country, where they spent their entire lives. Their family numbered thirteen children, of whom twelve, six sons and six daughters, are living and married.

Oluf Boren spent the days of his boyhood and youth in Sweden and pursued his education in the public schools of that country. He also learned the tailor's trade there and conducted a shop for nineteen years. In 1886 he crossed the Atlantic to America and first settled in Valley City, Barnes county, North Dakota, where he remained for a year. He then went to Tacoma, Washington, where he worked at the mason's trade for some time, after which he spent a brief period in California. In 1890 he arrived in Astoria, Oregon, where he has since lived. Here he is doing general contract work, his business steadily increasing in volume and importance. At the present time he is executing a large city contract and his ability well entitles him to the liberal patronage which he is accorded. Prospering as the years went by, he is now one of the substantial business men of Astoria and owns a fine property here.

Mr. Boren was married, in Sweden, and to him were born four children, Martha K., Olma, Christina and Jens, all of whom are married and live in Sweden. The wife and mother died April 3, 1909. Ohuf Boren is a republican but not an office seeker, although he is interested in politics and keeps in touch with the vital questions and issues of the day. His religious belief is that of the Swedish Lutheran church and his principles are such as commend him to the confidence and high regard of his fellowmen, who find him trustworthy in business and reliable in every circumstance of life. He has never had occasion to regret his determination to come to the new world, for he has here found the opportunities which he sought and in the use of the advantages which America offers he has won a creditable position in the business world.

HON. JOSEPH T. BRIDGES is among the well known and successful merchants of Oakland, Oregon. He was born at Santa Rosa, California, February 4, 1868, and is a son of Daniel and Eusebia M. (Owens) Bridges. The father was a native of Tennessee and in 1852 crossed the plains to California during the time of the gold excitement, and after arriving in that state he spent a number of years in mining. He later located in Santa Rosa, Sonoma county, and there engaged in the building and contracting business. During the time in which he was identified with that business he assisted in building the academy at Santa Rosa. In 1871 he purchased land near Yoncalla, Douglas county, Oregon, and for several years was successfully engaged in general farming and stock-raising. He later returned to Tennessee, where he now lives.

Joseph T. Bridges was three years old when his parents removed to Douglas county and there he was reared and received his early education in the public schools. He remained under the parental roof until he was seventeen years of age, at which time he engaged in farming for himself. Later he was associated with W. A. Perkins in the mercantile business in Drain, this county, and continued in that partnership from 1889 until 1898, during which time he had charge of the store and was also engaged in the lumber business, being a member of the Hudson Mill Lumber Company. On June 2, 1898, Mr. Bridges was appointed by President McKinley, registrar of the United States land office at Roseburg. He immediately disposed of his interests in the mercantile business and on July 1, of that year, assumed the duties connected with the land office, in which position he continued for seven years. In 1909 he went to Cordova, Alaska, and there engaged in the mercantile business. In 1910 he returned to Oakland, Oregon, and again established himself in the mercantile business, with which he has since been successfully identified.

Mr. Bridges was united in marriage to Miss Belle Holyfield, a native of Union City, Indiana. She received her elementary education in the public schools and later completed a course in the Central Oregon State Normal School. To Mr. and Mrs. Bridges two children have been born: Audrey B., who is the wife of Dr. S. C. Endicott, a dentist of Brandon, Oregon; and Rolston, who is engaged in work in his father's store. Mr. Bridges has always been a loyal member of the republican party. In 1894 he was elected to the Oregon state legislature and served in the session of 1895 as chairman of the committee on corporations. During that session Mr. Dolph, who was at that time a senatorial candidate, had as his opponent for that office Mr. McBridge. The contest for the election was most intense, and when it was finally known that there was no chance for the election of Mr. Dolph, Mr. Bridges was the forty-fifth man to change his vote which resulted in the election of Mr. McBridge. Mr. Bridges was instrumental in having the appropriation bill of five thousand dollars for the State Normal School at Drain pass the house, which bill was later defeated in the senate. In 1896 he was elected to the legislature by a handsome majority, and in 1900, on the organization of the first board of regents for the Central Oregon State Normal School at Drain, he was appointed by Governor T. T. Geer as regent for a term of six years, and has the distinction of having been elected the first president of the board of regents and was later reelected to the same position for a second term. While in Cordova, Alaska, he was elected president of the chamber of commerce which position he held during his residence in that territory. In 1910 he was elected to represent the republicans of Cordova at the territorial convention at Juneau and endeavored to secure the nomination of John Goodel, who is a brother-in-law of the late Governor Benson, as territorial delegate to congress.

Mr. Bridges has fraternal relations with Laurel Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M.; Eugene Chapter, R. A. M.; Oregon Consistory, No. 1, A. A. S. R.; and Al Kader Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. of Portland. He also holds membership in the Ivanhoe Commandery No. 2, K. P., of Eugene, and Mountain Lodge No. 103, I. O. O. F. of Drain of which he is past noble grand. He is also a member of the Pacific Encampment No. 34 of which he is past patriarch. He is also affiliated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Woodmen of the World. Mr. and Mrs. Bridges are members of the Christian church. Mr. Bridges is one of the most widely known citizens of his part of Oregon and is a man whose well known reputation for integrity places him by public opinion with the enterprising and useful citizens of his county and state.

JOHN A. MASON is a prosperous and enterprising farmer of Lane county. He has always been deeply interested in educational work in his district, where he has served as a member of the school board for the past twenty years. He was born in Sweden, August 23, 1865. His parents, both of whom were natives of Sweden, died in that country early in life, when our subject was but a child. He emigrated to America with his older brother at the age of seven years—in 1872. To his father's family six children were born, of whom all are deceased but our subject. Mr. Mason resided with his brother until 1897. During that year his brother started for the Klondike country, Alaska, and was overcome by the hardships of the journey and died on his way to that land of the far north. Mr. Mason continued to reside in his brother's home until he was twenty-four years of age, at which time he filed upon a government homestead of one hundred and twenty acres near Acme on Duncan slough. He at once moved upon that property, where he continued to live for nine years following, after which he sold his homestead at a handsome profit and removed to his brother's farm, to which he had fallen heir after his brother's death. This property consists of two hundred and twenty acres of choice agricultural land, and to its care and operation Mr. Mason is giving his undivided attention.

In the year 1889 Mr. Mason was united in marriage to Miss Rosa Cikaski, who is a native of Germany and who emigrated to America with her sister in 1885, her mother coming later to this country—in 1911. The father died in Germany many years ago. Mrs. Mason and her sister, on reaching America, settled first in the Dakotas, where they continued to live until 1887 and in that year they removed to Lane county, this state. To Mr. and Mrs. Mason four children have been born: Roy A., in 1891; Howard A., in 1892; Hilda J., in 1895; and Oscar E., in 1898. All of the children are at home with their parents.

Mr. Mason is a republican, giving his support consistently to that party in its national and state campaigns. He has served for twenty years as a member of the school board of the district in which he lives. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Florence and in that lodge has filled all the chairs. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Lutheran church, while his wife and children belong to the Christian church. His home is located fifteen miles up the river from Florence and his postoffice is Point Terrace, Lane county, Oregon. John A. Mason is numbered among the most successful farmers of Lane county and is regarded as one of the enterprising and valuable citizens of that part of the state of Oregon. He is a man to be relied upon to do his part in the advancement of any public measure looking to the welfare of the people.

BEN F. BULL is the owner of an improved farm of one hundred and fifty-three acres in Josephine county, near Wilderville, where he has for many years made his home. He was born, March 17, 1861, a son of Ben F. and Bridget (O'Brien) Bull, the former a native of Wisconsin and the latter of Illinois. The parents were married in California and in 1856 came to Oregon, settling in Josephine county. The father's death occurred June 8, 1910.

Ben F. Bull, one of a family of seven children, was given a common-school education and remained at home until he attained the age of twenty-five years. He then removed to Silver Lake in Lake county, and for six years followed the life of a cowboy. At the end of that period he returned to Josephine county and homesteaded the farm upon which he now lives, which comprises one hundred and fifty-three acres. He improved the tract, brought it into a high state of cultivation and made of it, a very desirable property.

On August 18, 1892, Mr. Bull was united in marriage to Miss Lizzie Jackson and to them, three children have been born, Ora, Bird and Gladys, all of whom are at home. Ben F. Bull is a socialist and is greatly interested in political affairs. He is well known in the community in which he lives, holds to high standards of morality and character and is by all regarded as an exemplary citizen.

JOHN LONG. The success that usually crowns persistent, earnest and honorable efforts came to John Long, making him the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of good land which constituted one of the well developed farm properties of Coles valley. He was in the fifty-ninth year of his age when death called him, his birth having occurred in Cincinnati, Ohio, December 8, 1838, his parents being Phillip and Philapena Long. When a boy of sixteen he ran away from home and for a time was employed on a Mississippi river steamboat. Later he went to Chicago, where he learned the marble cutter's trade. Subsequently he sailed around Cape Horn for California and following his arrival in that state engaged in mining until 1865, when he came north to Oregon, settling in Douglas county. After reaching this county he worked at stone cutting for a number of years but eventually turned his attention to farming at first settling on a tract of rented land. A year later he took up a homestead of eighty acres in the French settlement and there lived for five years, after which he purchased in 1876 one hundred and sixty acres of the present home farm in Coles valley. To this place he removed in 1877 and afterward extended the boundaries of his farm by the additional purchase of one hundred and sixty acres of railroad land, so that his holdings embraced a half section, upon which he resided to the time of his death, on the 11th of September, 1897. The diligence which he displayed in conducting his farm, the practical methods which he utilized in its development and the enterprise which he manifested in planting and harvesting his crops all combined to make him one of the representative farmers of the district.

On the 15th of August, 1870, Mr. Long was united in marriage to Miss Anna M. Grach, a native of Prussia, Germany, who came to the United States in 1867 and spent six months in Minnesota. She afterward resided for three years in Bloomington, Illinois, and in 1870 came to the west coast, traveling by team to Marysville, California, and thence to Douglas county, Oregon, by stage. It was not long after her arrival here that Anna M. Grach gave her hand in marriage to John Long and they began their domestic life on a rented farm, but soon they had a home of their own. As the years passed they became the parents of eight children, of whom seven are living: John T., a practicing attorney of Roseburg; Rosa Emma, the wife of Carl Ohman, of Roseburg; Frank P., who is living in the same town; William H., who operates the home farm; Fannie Lottie, the wife of R. O. Goff, a ranchman living near Sutherlin, Oregon; Conrad C., who is living in Portland; and Anna Malissa who is the wife of Frank Conn and resides with Mrs. Long.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN M. LONG

John Long was a democrat but never sought nor desired public office. He was a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Lutheran church. His wife is a member of the Catholic church. His was a well spent life, characterized by devotion to honorable principles. In business he displayed the salient qualities of energy and industry, that always point the way to success.

JOSEPH LYONS. Drain is one of the prosperous and progressive towns in Oregon. It is growing and expanding with discernible rapidity and no city can develop thus without the firm backing of solid business, financial and industrial interests as a factor in its upbuilding. Drain has all of these advantages and owes them to the energy and alert capability of her enterprising citizens. Possessed of unusual ability in a business way, Joseph Lyons gained recognition during the long period of his residence in Drain as a constructive factor in its business and banking progress. He has now left this city and has taken up his residence in Reedsport, where he is bringing his splendid business qualities and his organizing powers to the civic exploitation of the village.

He was born in Bloomfield, Indiana, May 3, 1862, and is a son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Gaston) Lyons, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Ohio. Their marriage occurred in New Lisbon, Ohio, where the father had removed as a young man. Immediately following the wedding they located in Bloomfield, Indiana, where Joseph Lyons, Sr., became prominent in local politics and for some twenty years filled the offices of county auditor and county treasurer with an ability and competency of a rare order. He was a man of unusual and remarkable business talents. He became extensively interested in real estate in Indiana and was at one time a large landowner. He engaged to a large extent in cattle and stock-raising and became so prosperous in this field of activity that the town of Lyons, Indiana, was established as a shipping point for his stock. It is now a thriving city of five thousand people and stands as a monument to the constructive and expanding powers of the elder Joseph Lyons. During the years of his splendid prosperity Mr.

Lyons became associated with Hughes East in the pork-packing business with headquarters in Indianapolis, Indiana, and this association had an unfortunate result. Mr. East attempted to corner the oats market in Chicago, using for his operations the firm's money and working under the firm's name. As a consequence of his activities the copartnership failed and went into debt for a large sum of money. Mr. Lyons with innate honesty and hatred of obligation at once set himself to pay off the debt which he had unknowingly incurred and before his death, in 1873, had fulfilled every obligation and had regained his fortune to the extent of being able to leave his family in comfortable circumstances. His passing marked the end of a remarkable and thoroughly honest business career and his life was representative of everything worthy and honorable in the commercial world. His wife remained in Indiana until 1893, when she joined her son in Drain, Oregon, where she is now residing.

Joseph Lyons was reared at home and acquired his education in the public schools of his native state. He later attended the Normal School at Bloomfield, Indiana, and supplemented this by a course in pharmacy. He spent five years in a Bloomfield drug store, being active in this capacity until 1887, in which year he removed to Oregon, locating immediately in Drain. Here he established himself in the drug business, opening the first exclusive pharmacy in the town. His constructive talents did not allow him to limit himself to the one line of occupation. He established the first bank in the city, opening a private financial enterprise known as the Joseph Lyons Bank. He continued in business in Drain up to 1904 and gained wide recognition as a man whose expanding and developing business talents actively aided municipal upbuilding. In 1904 he sold out all of his interests in Drain and moved to Portland, where he engaged in the real-estate business and in the manufacture of mining machinery for seven years. In 1911 he came to Reedsport, where he now resides, and during the year in which he has been established in that city has done successful work along lines of municipal improvement. He has made application for a postoffice in the village and expects to become postmaster when the government complies with his request. He also intends to open a general merchandising store in Reedsport.

In June, 1889, Mr. Lyons was united in marriage to Miss Daisy Lee Smith, a daughter of John H. Smith, now deceased, who was at one time a prominent attorney of Linn county, Oregon, where he also engaged in agriculture. To Mr. and Mrs. Lyons have been born two children, Daniel B. and Mary E. Kinney Lyons, both of whom are still at home.

In his political affiliations Mr. Lyons is consistently democratic and has always been actively interested in local affairs. In 1898 he was elected county judge of Douglas county and after serving efficiently and effectively for two and one-half years resigned his office. He was appointed postmaster of Drain in Cleveland's first administration and served for nine and one-half years with conspicuous success. Fraternally he is a member of Mountain Lodge, No. 103, I. O. O. F., holding his membership in Drain. He also belongs to Roseburg Lodge, No. 236, B. P. O. E. He is one of the foremost men in Douglas county and is an epitome of the western spirit of "hustle," which is making villages grow into cities and cities into thriving metropolitan communities in northwestern America. He is possessed of a constructive and keenly alert mind, which has been developed along business lines since his childhood and is now centralized in the ambition to promote his individual success and to ensure the greatness of the country in which he resides and the village to the expansion of which he is giving his constructive talents.

JESSE JAMES BEARD, a successful and enterprising farmer and stockman of Washington county, is the owner of a tract of one hundred and sixty acres, four and one-half miles north of Banks. His birth occurred in Allamakee county, Iowa, on the 21st of June, 1853, his parents being P. S. and Julia A. (Reed) Beard. The father, a native of New York, removed to Iowa about 1850 and two years later was married in that state, where he followed the carpenter's trade. In 1859 he made the overland journey to California by ox team, reaching his destination at the end of five months and fifteen days. He started out with three yoke of oxen and at the end of the journey had but one steer remaining, having traded the others for the use of other cattle, with which to finish the trip. In the winter of 1859 he mined at Pine Grove, California, and thence removed to Marysville, Yuba county, where he worked as a carpenter and mason until 1870. In that year he made his way to Mendocino county, California, and subsequently took up his abode in Humboldt county, following his trade in both places. In 1872 he came to Washington county, Oregon, entered a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres and resided thereon for about four years. Disposing of that property, he purchased another tract of one hundred and sixty acres in the vicinity and devoted his attention to its further cultivation and improvement throughout the remainder of his life. His demise occurred in May, 1893, while his wife passed away at the home of our subject in 1899. Their children were seven in number, five of whom are still living, namely: Jesse James, Luther M., William, Platt and Walter. Those deceased are Mrs. John Watkins and Mrs. Johann Mead.

Jesse J. Beard, who was a lad of five years when he crossed the plains with his parents, obtained his education in the public schools of California. He first worked at teaming in Mendocino county, purchasing a team and being engaged in that business for a period of seventeen and a half years or until the advent of the railroad. Subsequently he came to Washington county, Oregon, took up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres four and a half miles north of Banks, made all necessary improvements and cleared twenty-five acres thereof. He has resided thereon to the present time and in connection with the production of cereals devotes some attention to stock, owning twenty head of cattle and five head of horses.

Mr. Beard has been married twice. He first wedded Miss Barthenia Budd, a daughter of Judge E. R. Budd, of Mendocino county, California. To them were born four children, as follows: Jesse, who passed away when a youth of seventeen; Emma, the wife of I. Brush; Stella, who gave her hand in marriage to Frank Scott; and Jennie, who is the wife of William Browning. For his second wife, Mr. Beard chose Miss Susan Shoemaker, a native of Mendocino county, California, and a daughter of Luther and Elizabeth Shoemaker, by whom he had five children, namely: Ruth, who died when five years of age; Mabel, the wife of George Howell, of Washington county; Clarence, living in California; and Pearl and Nellie, both at home.

At the polls Mr. Beard supports the men and measures of the democratic party but has never sought nor desired office as a reward for party fealty. His faith is that of the Christian church, to which his wife and children also belong. The salient qualities of his life have ever commended him to the confidence, good-will and friendship of those with whom he comes into contact and he has always enjoyed the warm regard of a host of friends.

CLARENCE F. WATERMAN. In thirteen years of scientific and prosperous cultivation of three hundred and twenty-two acres of land located on Myrtle creek, nine miles above Bridge, Oregon, Mr. Clarence Waterman has gained for himself a prominent place among his fellow agriculturists. He was born in Lincoln county, Kansas, on January 7, 1875, and is a son of Azariah and Elizabeth (Scofield) Waterman, both natives of New York state. They were married in the Empire state and lived there for a short time before moving to Illinois and later to Iowa. They resided for some time in Kansas and came to Oregon in 1888, settling on the east fork of the Coquille river near Dora, where the father bought a farm and was successful in its operation until his death in the fifty-fifth year of his age. He had survived his wife by three years. Mr. Waterman is one of six children born to his parents. The others are: Jane, the wife of E. E. Weekly of Coos county; Emma, now Mrs. Otis of Spokane, Washington; Mrs. Loretta Young, a resident of Dora, Oregon; Della, deceased; and Raymond, a resident of Coos county.

Clarence F. Waterman received his education in the public schools and pursued his studies until he was eighteen years of age. By a wise use of every opportunity along this line he fitted himself for teaching and was active in this occupation for three school terms. He taught in the public schools of Coos county and gained wide recognition for ability and thoroughness. He eventually abandoned this occupation to take up farming. He rented land in Coos county and operated it successfully until 1899, when he bought one hundred and sixty acres on Myrtle creek, a few miles above Bridge and began its cultivation. Since that time his prosperity has been rapid and continuous. He farmed along scientific principles and cultivated his land in a progressive and modern way. At different times during his career he added to his holdings and now owns besides his original one hundred and sixty acres the one hundred and sixty-two acre homestead which adjoins. He makes a specialty of stock-raising and is known as an expert in this line of activity. He is at present enlarging his dairy facilities with a view to making this branch of his occupation an important factor in his enterprise.

In March, 1898, Mr. Waterman was united in marriage to Miss Etta Hardman, a native of Douglas county and a daughter of Elisha and Mary E. Hardman, who came to Oregon in the early days of its settlement and have lived on a farm near Reston in Douglas county ever since. Mrs. Waterman is one of eight surviving children, born to her parents as follows: Mila, who is a resident of Roseburg; Rilla, residing in the same city; Etta, the wife of our subject; Mark, who makes his home in Bancroft, Oregon; Mrs. May Graf, of Reston, Oregon; Benjamin, who resides in the same city; Joseph, of Toledo, Oregon; and Belle, who resides in Appleton, Coos county, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Waterman have been born seven children: Clyde, born in 1899; Elvin, born in 1901; one child, who died in infancy; Perry, whose birth occurred in 1904; Echo, born in 1906; Irene, born in 1908; and Grace, whose birth occurred in 1911. Mr. Waterman and his family affiliate with the Presbyterian church and are active workers in its religious movements.

Mr. Waterman in his political views is a consistent republican and although he takes an intelligent interest in public affairs he has never sought office. His agriculture has been progressive and valuable in all its aspects and has been productive of excellent results not only by resulting in individual prosperity but by adding to the development of one of the largest sections of America and making Coos county more prosperous and flourishing.

CHARLES E. JOHNSON is one of the well known farmers on North inlet, Coos county, Oregon, where he is successfully engaged in the cultivation of one hundred and fifty-two acres of rich land. He was born in Finland, May 24, 1870, and is a son of John and Bertha Johnson, both of whom were natives of Finland where the father died many years ago and where the mother still maintains her home at the age of seventy years. Mr. and Mrs. John Johnson were the parents of seven children, four of whom are yet living, our subject and one brother, John, being the only members of the family who came to this country. John died in Portland at the age of twenty-eight years.

Charles E. Johnson was reared at home and received his elementary education in his native land. He emigrated to America in 1888 and settled in Mendocino county, California, where he remained for two years. He then removed to Coos bay and there worked for some time in the logging camps. Later he purchased a farm of one hundred and fifty-two acres, two miles north of the upper landing of North inlet, in Coos county and on that property has since devoted himself to farming, making a specialty of raising potatoes and other vegetables which find ready sale in the open markets. He is gradually working into the dairy business for which his farm is particularly adapted.

Mr. Johnson was united in marriage in 1892, to Mrs. Annie Brown who is the widow of John L. Brown and also of John Stineburg. To Mrs. Johnson, by her first marriage, three children were born: Oscar, who resides at home; Lydia, the wife of Henry Carlson of Bonneville, Oregon; and Charles, at home.

Charles E. Johnson is affiliated with the socialist party, but has never been a candidate for public office. He and his family are members of the Lutheran church. He is one of the well known agriculturists of Coos county and a man who is interested in every measure which tends to improve conditions in the community in which he lives.

ALEXANDER H. SPARE, living in the southern part of Cottage Grove and owning a farm of more than two hundred acres adjoining the city limits, was born at Richmond, Kentucky, in 1832, a son of Philip and Harriett (Mayers) Spare. In the family of his parents were two children, the sister of our subject being Sarah, who married G. W. Murphy, a resident of Kentucky, and who passed away in 1910, leaving several children. There was also an adopted son, Benjamin Thomas Grey, who made his home in Kentucky and there passed away in 1892, also leaving several children. The parents died in Kentucky when Alexander H. Spare was only four years of age, their deaths being caused by cholera.

After the death of his parents the subject of this review was taken into the home of a Kentucky family named Dowdell. He remained with them until he attained years of maturity and in 1851 he drove an ox team across the plains as pay for his own transportation. On arriving in Oregon he began working in the mines, engaging in blacksmithing and various other pursuits for a time, after which he built a blacksmith shop which he conducted for one year. After selling his shop he again obtained employment in the mines of southern Oregon, where he worked about twelve years, during that time receiving only moderate wages. In partnership with a Mr. Arnold he purchased six hundred and forty-two acres of land for four thousand dollars. Afterward his partner sold his interest to O. P. Adams and when he and Mr. Spare divided the land, a tract of over two hundred acres was the share of Mr. Spare. His farm adjoins the city of Cottage Grove, his residence being within the city limits. When he selected the site for his present home there were very few houses within a radius of ten miles and many Indians were roving about the country. He has witnessed the development of this region from a veritable wilderness to a finely developed farming and residence section. In addition to the valuable agricultural property which he owns he has five gold and silver claims on Sharps creek, in the Bohemia district, to which he has been on frequent prospecting tours.

In his political faith Mr. Spare is a democrat but has never been an office seeker although he has been importuned to accept nominations or appointments for political positions. He has been a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, having been master for several years of Cottage Grove Lodge No. 51, A. F. & A. M., a member of Chapter No. 10, R. A. M. and also a Knight Templar. He is popular among his neighbors and the citizens of Cottage Grove and takes great pride in the growth and development of this section and the advancement of his city. Beginning as a poor boy, orphaned at the early age of four years and being compelled to make his own way in the world, he has made a success of life, acquiring a comfortable competence and a wide acquaintance among all classes of people in Cottage Grove and vicinity. He has labored hard and faithfully and undertaken some difficult tasks, but by the exercise of indomitable will, industry and economy he has succeeded in overcoming the obstacles in his business pathway and is now in a position to enjoy a well earned rest.

CHARLES S. MOORE. For many years a leader of the republican party in Klamath county and southern Oregon, while his opinions carried weight in party councils throughout the state, Charles S. Moore reached his highest political honors as treasurer of Oregon; but his strongest ambition has not been to win political prominence but rather to gain success through the legitimate lines of business and to promote his usefulness as a citizen by advancing the substantial up-building of the section in which he makes his home. In both of these ways his accomplishments have been large and beneficial. He was born in Marion county, Oregon, January 8, 1857. His parents were William S. and Margaret O. (Meldrum) Moore. The father was born near Belleville, Illinois, in 1829, and the mother's birth occurred in that state, February 14, 1836. She was but nine years of age when in 1845 she accompanied her parents to Oregon, her arrival here antedating three years the arrival of William S. Moore, who came to the northwest with his mother and stepfather in 1848, when eighteen years of age. He married Margaret O. Meldrum in Pacific City Washington, in 1854, and soon afterward settled on a farm in Marion county, Oregon, where occurred the birth of his son Charles. The father was a millwright by trade and this forced him to spend much time away from home. About 1863 he removed to Oregon City and soon afterward to Salem, Oregon, where he resided until 1874. He then came to what is now Klamath county and built a mill for the United States government at Klamath agency. He continued to reside in this county until 1887, when he removed to Portland, where his death occurred in 1899. His widow is still a resident of the Rose City. While living in Klamath county William S. Moore was appointed the first county judge, when the county was created, and he also served as postmaster here, while for two years he filled the position of county treasurer of Marion county before coming to Klamath county. In politics he was a staunch republican and was a member of the Baptist church. In their family were seven children: Rufus S., and Charles S., living in Klamath Falls; Stella O., who is the wife of L. N. Bellinger, of St. Johns, Oregon; Frances, the wife of R. I. Hammond, of Klamath Falls; Mary Bertha, who for twenty years has been a teacher in the Lincoln high school of Portland; Henrietta, who is professor of English in the University of Idaho at Moscow and is a graduate of the Universities of Oregon and California and of Columbia University of New York; and Lulu, who died in Salem in 1877.

Charles S. Moore spent the days of his boyhood and youth at home and came to Klamath county in 1874. He supplemented his public-school education by studying in Willamette University through two winters. He was seventeen years of age when he came to Klamath county and for the first year was employed at the Indian agency and the next year and eight months for the trader at the agency and Fort Klamath. At the time of his arrival in this part of the state all southern Oregon was one county (Jackson). Thinking to enter upon the practice of law, he then went to Portland and studied through one winter but at the end of that time he gave up his plan and returned to Klamath Falls, occupying his old position through another summer. In the fall of 1877 he came to Linkville now Klamath Falls and assisted his father in building a sawmill, which was the first mill built here, of which he was a one-third owner, while later he became a half owner. In 1887 his brother Rufus purchased the father's interest and Charles S. Moore and his brother then continued in the milling business until about two years ago, when they sold out. About 1879 Mr. Moore began work in the only store at Klamath Falls and was thus engaged until 1886, when he purchased a fourth interest in the business and became manager continuing therein until elected state treasurer in 1898. It is characteristic of him in a commercial way that he has accomplished what he has undertaken by reason of unflinching diligence and determination. He is now vice president of the First National Bank of Klamath Falls and also of the First National Bank at Merrill, Oregon, and was a director of the old Klamath County Bank until it was merged with the First National in the fall of 1911. Banking represents Mr. Moore's only active business interest at the present time. At one time he and his brother Rufus were the owners of about twenty thousand acres in Klamath county but as prices have risen enabling them to sell to good advantage, they have disposed of all except about two thousand acres. They built the power plant on the west side of Link river, afterwards acquiring the electric and water plants of the Klamath Falls Light & Water Company, supplying light and water in Klamath Falls, combining the different plants under one management and continued to own and manage it until about a year ago, when they sold to the Klamath Power Company, now the California & Oregon Power Company. In connection with his brother and with Ben Selling and Moses Blum, in 1910 he purchased a lot at the corner of Sixth and Alder streets in Portland and there erected what is known as the Selling building, a twelve-story structure which they still own. In all that he has undertaken Mr. Moore has won success, for his judgment is sound, his discrimination keen and his recognition of opportunities results in their wise utilization.

Mr. Moore was called from business life to public office and proved his worth in that connection. He was born and reared a republican and early in life took an active interest in politics. In 1878 was nominated for the office of county clerk in Lake county, which embraced what is now both Klamath and Lake counties, but was not elected. He was only twenty-one years of age at the time but, although so young, was defeated by only forty votes while the normal democratic majority was one hundred and twenty-five. In 1880 he was elected school clerk of Linkville district No. 1 and filled that position for ten years, following which he was elected school director for two terms of three years each. He was elected a member of the first board of town trustees at Klamath Falls and was made the first president of the board. In 1894 he was elected county judge and acted in that capacity until July, 1898. In 1896 he was made a delegate to the national convention at St. Louis which nominated McKinley, and he had the honor of being the Oregon member of the platform committee which inserted in the platform a gold standard plank, which caused the free silver delegates from the Rocky Mountain states to bolt the convention. He had early placed himself on record, in favor of sound money and won the support and confidence of a great majority of his fellow citizens throughout the state and his selection on that most important committee of that convention was doubtless due to his well known position in favor of the gold standard, which was the great living issue to be settled between the political parties at the election of that year. Mr. Moore regards his efforts in behalf of the correct settlement of the money question as his greatest service to his state and country. In 1898 he was nominated for state treasurer and was elected by about ten thousand majority. Four years later he was renominated by acclamation in the state convention and was reelected by fifteen thousand majority, the increased vote indicating clearly the confidence reposed in him by reason of the excellent service, which he had rendered in his first term. When Klamath county was created he became the first chairman of the county central committee and acted in that capacity for eight or ten years. He was also a delegate to all but one or two state conventions from 1882 to 1898. It is difficult for him to follow the "progressive," new fangled politics of the present day. He is opposed to the recall of judges or the submission of judicial decisions to a vote of the people; does not believe that it is practical generally to make laws by initiative and believes that the referendum is too easily invoked. He believes that the republican party, which has accomplished some of the greatest reforms, chief of which is the abolition of slavery and the adoption of the gold standard for this country is yet capable of some good and is the best instrument through which to secure such other reforms as may be needed and is therefore for preserving and perpetuating it for a while longer at least. He is equally opposed to anything like misrule in political circles, believing that political leaders should work for the interests of the great majority rather than for the few.

In 1884 Mr. Moore was united in marriage to Miss Mary L. Langell, who was born in Jacksonville, Oregon, a daughter of N. Langell, a pioneer of the northwest. They have but two sons: Charles L., of Klamath Falls, who is a graduate of the Hill Military Academy of Portland, now in business at Klamath Falls; and John M., a student in the State University. Mr. Moore holds membership with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and has attained high rank in Masonry, being connected with Oregon Consistory, No. 1, A. A. S. R., of Portland, and Al Kader Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He has ever been forceful and alert, wide-awake and energetic, keeping in close touch with the trend of public thought and doing not a little to mold public opinion. His record is one which will bear the strong light of keen investigation and, judged by the highest standards, there can be found but little to criticize.

SAM ANDERSON is numbered among the substantial residents of Portland that Sweden has furnished to this city. For a long period he was connected with contracting and building operations here but retired in 1910 and is now engaged only in buying and selling property, being his own real-estate dealer. He was born in Sweden, January 27, 1848, a son of Andrew Nelson and Catherine Johnson. His youthful days were passed in his native land where he worked with his father, who was a carpenter and contractor. The family numbered nine children, namely: Nicholas, who is still living in Sweden; John, deceased; Johanna, the wife of John Peterson Anders, of Sweden; Aaron, Anna, Andrew and Carl Peter, all of whom are deceased: Louis, living in Wyoming; and Sam, of this review.

The last named continued a resident of Sweden until he reached the age of nineteen years when he determined to test the truth of the reports which reached him concerning the business opportunities and advantages of the new world. On crossing the Atlantic he first made his way to Wilcox, Pennsylvania, where he worked at the builder's trade and also was employed in a tannery. After a short time, however, he removed westward to Omaha, Nebraska, where he lived for three years, and then went to Wyoming, settling in Laramie. At one time he was employed in the coal mines of Carbon county, Wyoming, where he continued until 1876, when he made his way to the Black Hills of South Dakota. There he did some prospecting on his own account but was not successful. He then worked for others but principally for the Old Homestead Mining Company, continuing in the Black Hills district until 1888, when he came to Portland. Here he took up the business of contracting and building on his own account and continued therein for more than two decades. He won a good patronage, his business growing in extent and importance so that he was prominently connected with building operations here. At length, however, he retired from that line of activity in 1910. He now buys and sells property and personally supervises his interests along that line. He now has some good real estate and from his holdings derives a substantial income.

In South Dakota, in 1881, Mr. Anderson was united in marriage to Miss Johanna Bruhl, a daughter of Johan and Boel (Gorgenson) Bruhl. They resided at No. 114 East Thirty-fourth street. Mr. Anderson was for twelve years a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows but is not affiliated therewith at the present time. His religious belief is that of the Lutheran church in which he holds membership. His political support is given to the republican party and he is a public-spirited citizen whose interest in the general welfare is deep and sincere. This is evidenced by his cooperation in various matters relating to the public good. In all of his life he has steadily advanced and the hope that brought him to America has been more than realized for here he has found the opportunities which he sought and which have enabled him to advance from a humble financial position to one of affluence.

F. H. LAIGHTON. The present mayor of Seaside, F. H. Loughton, was born in Astoria, on the 20th of April, 1879, and is a son of Frank H. and Sarah (Kinney) Loughton. The father was a native of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, his birth occurring in 1836, and the mother of Muscatine, Iowa, her natal day being in 1842. Mr. Loughton removed to Oregon in 1852, making the journey by wagon across the plains. Upon his arrival here he first located at Umatilla, later going to Portland whence he came to Astoria, where for many years he was engaged in mercantile pursuits. He passed away in Astoria in 1903, but the mother still survives. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Loughton there were born five children, two of whom are deceased. Their order of birth is as follows: Albert L., who is deceased; William J., a carpenter, residing in Seaside; F. H., our subject; L. B., who is a foreman in a wood-working factory; and H. L., who is also deceased.

F. H. Loughton was reared in Astoria, acquiring his education in the public and high schools of Clatsop county. When old enough to begin his business career he came to Seaside, taking a position as bookkeeper with a lumber company, having ever since been identified with this enterprise. He is also associated with B. F. Stevens in conducting a real-estate business under the name of the Seaside Real Estate Company.

On the 15th of September, 1903, Mr. Loughton was united in marriage to Miss Nellie Stanley, a native of Seaside, and a daughter of S. K. and Mary E. Stanley, the father being engaged in agricultural pursuits.

Mr. and Mrs. Loughton affiliate with the Episcopal church, while fraternally he is a member of the Masonic order, having taken the degrees of the Blue Lodge, Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America. He always takes an active interest in all community affairs, being one of the progressive, public-spirited citizens of the town, his ballot being cast for the men and measures that, in accordance with his judgment, are best adapted to subserve the interests of the majority, irrespective of party affiliation. Two years ago he was made president of the city council and after serving in this position for about eighteen months, was appointed to fill the mayoralty chair for an unexpired term. He has been acting in this capacity for the past six months, during which time he has shown himself to be well qualified for the administrative duties of his position having discharged his responsibilities in a manner highly creditable to himself and his constituency.

THEODORE W. ANDREWS is one of the straightforward, energetic and well known men of Douglas county, Oregon, who for twenty-two years of his life was prominently connected with the tanning business in this state and in Iowa and who is now conducting a large farm and achieving success by reason of his scientific and progressive methods of agriculture. He was born in Kennebec, Somerset county, Maine, on January 16, 1851, and is a son of Asa and Mary (Wentworth) Andrews, both natives of the same state. Her father was there reared and educated and there the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Andrews occurred. In 1868 they came west to Illinois where they remained for ten years. They came to Oregon in 1878, locating in Scottsburg, Douglas county, where the mother lived until her death in 1900. She was survived by her husband until 1904, in which year his death occurred.

Theodore W. Andrews was reared at home and was educated in the common schools of Somerset county, Maine. He remained with his parents until his marriage in 1874, and in that year he went to Iowa, where he bought a farm in Wright county. Here he remained for four years, returning to Oregon in the fall of 1878. He located immediately in Scottsburg and soon afterward was employed in the local tannery, in which line of activity he continued for twenty-two years, and built up a reputation for thorough and specialized knowledge in all the details of this industry. During the last year of his connection with it he worked in the Gardiner tannery. In 1902 he abandoned this line of endeavor and after one year removed to his present farm, which he operated as a renter for four years. In 1907 he purchased the property and is now in prosperous cultivation of three hundred and ninety-two of the most fertile acres in Oregon. His farm is located two and a half miles above Scottsburg and is one of the important and valuable enterprises in the Umpqua valley.

In 1874 Mr. Andrews was united in marriage to Miss Abigail Riley, a native of Illinois. To their union have been born eight children: Atwell, who is a stationary engineer located at North Bend, Coos county, Oregon; Bela, a carpenter in Drain, Oregon; Sadie, who lives at home; Josie, the wife of Sherman Short, of Montana; Riley, who follows the logging business and who lives at home; George, who is an engineer on the Umpqua river and who also lives with his parents; Theodore and Asa, both of whom reside upon their father's farm.

Mr. Andrews is a republican in his political beliefs and is a member of Elkton Lodge, No. 63, A. F. & A. M., of which he is present master. His other fraternal relations include his connection with Gardiner Lodge, No. 132, I. O. O. F., and with Gardiner Lodge, Order of Rebekahs. Judged by the highly developed and rapidly rising agricultural standards of today Mr. Andrews has won success as a farmer. He has added to the resources of his county three hundred and ninety-two acres of land, drained, fenced and improved, and has won his prosperity by practical activity which is the basis of productive agriculture.

IRA HOFFMAN was for many years one of the active and successful agriculturists of Lane county, this state. He died at his home near Point Terrace, Oregon, on Saturday, March 9, 1912, after an illness of about two months, at the age of fifty-six years and eleven days. He was born in Fairfield county, Ohio, February 27, 1856, and when he was two years of age his parents removed to Linn county, Kansas, where they remained for a period of about eighteen years. In 1875 he crossed the plains with his parents, stopping over for the winter in Union county, near Summerville, this state. The following spring the family crossed the mountains to Cottage Grove, where they remained for three years. In 1879 he removed with the family to the lower Siuslaw river, where Mr. Hoffman and his father each filed upon homestead claims near the mouth of the creek which now bears their name. In 1888 Ira Hoffman was united in marriage to Miss Annie Lucretia Tope, and following his marriage, he took his young bride to his home on the Siuslaw river, where they continued to reside until about three years ago. At that time they disposed of their property and purchased the Brewer ranch near by, where his family now resides. Mrs. Hoffman, his widow, was born in Lee county, Iowa, and with her parents crossed the great American desert when she was a child of but nine years. The family on reaching this state, established their home at Cottage Grove, where she continued to reside with her parents until the time of her marriage, which occurred in her twenty-sixth year. Following her marriage she was taken by her husband to his home on the Siuslaw river and there she has continued to reside. The father of Mrs. Hoffman was a native of West Virginia and her mother of Iowa. To Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman four children were born, John E., William Andrew, Jacob B. and Aralena, all of whom are at home with their mother.

Mr. Hoffman was a member of the democratic party but never sought political preferment. Beside his wife and four children the deceased left an aged mother, one sister, Mrs. M. J. Hadsall, of Eugene, and one brother, Simon Hoffman, of Point Terrace, to mourn his loss. The funeral services were conducted by the Rev. T. A. Yost, on Sunday, March 10, 1912, and his remains were laid to rest in the Odd Fellows cemetery. He will be remembered by his friends and associates as one of the enterprising and desirable citizens of this portion of the state of Oregon. He was a man of strict integrity and unblemished character.

JACOB H. PINKERTON. One mile and a half from the lower landing of North inlet, Coos county, on the stage road, is the prosperous and fertile farm of Jacob H. Pinkerton. He has under cultivation two hundred acres of the finest Coos county land and is improving his property in an intelligent and progressive manner. He was born in Wayne county, Ohio, March 3, 1849, and is a son of Rudolph and Susanna (Huff) Pinkerton, the former a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and the latter of Wayne county, Ohio. Mr. Pinkerton's parents were married in Ohio and lived in that state until the father's death in 1866. His wife remained in her native state until 1880 when she moved to Iowa and settled in Waterloo. She lived in that city until November, 1906, in which month her death occurred. She and her husband were the parents of nine children, seven of whom are still living: Mrs. Sarah Lytle, of Desler, Ohio; Joseph, who died in infancy; Jacob H., the subject of this sketch; Elizabeth, who died in Waterloo, Iowa, when she was forty-six years of age; Peter, who now lives near Ten Mile lake on the stage road; Samuel, a grocer in Waterloo, Iowa; Benjamin, a commercial traveler with headquarters in Chicago; Arthur, a wholesale rice and sugar broker of Chicago, and Mrs. Mary Berkeley, the wife of a prominent hardware merchant of Waterloo, Iowa.

Jacob H. Pinkerton received his education in the public schools of Ohio and remained at home until six years after his father's death. When he was twenty-one years of age he learned the carpenter's trade which he is now following in conjunction with his activities as a farmer. He worked for many years as chief carpenter for Mark-Hanna and Company and in the course of his connection with this firm was prominent in the construction of the Mark-Hanna Dock and kept it in repair for ten years. In 1906 he came to Oregon and settled on the North inlet of Coos bay where he bought one hundred and sixty acres of unimproved timber land, beside three acres in cranberries and a garden tract. He is living at the present time on one of the most finely improved and systematically operated farms in the district and is well known as a scientific agriculturist. He added a few years ago, forty acres of land to his holdings and is now the proprietor of two hundred acres of land.

On May 12 1872, Mr. Pinkerton was united in marriage to Miss Adelia Hamilton, who was born in Lucas county, Ohio, May 3, 1847. Her parents, Theron and Eliza (Tunison) Hamilton, were pioneer settlers of Ohio and came to that state when it was in an extremely uncultivated and unimproved condition. They were obliged to cut their way through the timber to the place where they made their settlement and were active in the improvement and development of the region for many years. Mrs. Pinkerton's grandfather was a captain in the American army in the War of 1812. Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton were married in Ohio where the mother died in 1863 and the father in 1890. They were the parents of eleven children, only three of whom are still living: Adelia, the wife of the subject of this review; Oscar, now a resident of Coos county, Oregon; and Charles, who also lives in the same section. The remaining children in this family died in Ohio and are buried in that state. Mrs. Pinkerton received her education in the public schools of Ohio. She and her husband are the parents of four children: Ray R., born in 1874, who is a graduate of the high school and of the Metal Mining Department of the International Correspondence School, of Scranton, Pennsylvania and who now lives on his homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, near North inlet, Coos county; Ira A., born in 1876, who is married and lives in Kingsville, Ohio; Theron G., who was born in 1880, and who was accidentally killed December 7, 1901, while working on a boat, the Henry W. Oliver; and Lyman, born in 1886, who was graduated from high school and is now studying for the ministry in Denison University, Ohio.

Politically Mr. Pinkerton gives his allegiance to the republican party and is now serving as a member of the school board. He belongs to the Ashtabula Lodge, I. O.

O. F., of Ohio, and is also a member of the Independent Order of Foresters in the same state. While he was a resident of Ashtabula he was a prominent figure in its political affairs and served in the city council for two years. He was harbor master of Ashtabula for one term and served frequently on election boards. He had the honor of attending President Garfield's funeral and was captain of a company in the funeral procession of William McKinley. He now gives most of his time and attention to the cultivation of his land. He is a true farmer and thoroughly understands all the details connected with the fertilization and improvement of the soil. He has done much to raise agriculture to a new plane of scientific methods.

JOSEPH W. KAYS is now living retired but was for many years connected with the furniture trade, figuring prominently in the business circles of Eugene. When he sold out he was proprietor of the second oldest furniture store in the city and had ever maintained an unassailable reputation for progressive methods and business integrity. He was born in Lewistown, Pennsylvania, December 22, 1849, and is a son of John and Isabella (Cupples) Kays, representatives of one of the old families of that part of the Keystone state. The father was a farmer by occupation and held various county offices, the duties of which he discharged with promptness and fidelity, thus devoting his time between his private interests and his public duties.

The old homestead farm constituted the scene amid which the boyhood and youth of Joseph W. Kays were passed. In the winter months he attended the public schools and in the summer seasons worked in the fields. Believing that he would find other occupation, however, more congenial and profitable, he left home and entered the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Altoona. He there learned constructive iron work and two years later accepted a position with the Keystone Bridge Company. He afterwards traveled all over the United States as superintendent of construction for that company and in that connection superintended the building of the New York end of the Brooklyn bridge extension and also the Madison Avenue bridge, which was the second bridge built across the Hudson river. He was superintendent of field work for a long period and for nine years represented the Carnegie interests. He had charge of the erection of the big furnaces at Braddock and also had charge of the installation of the first gas ovens erected there. He devoted the years 1884 and 1885 to the erection of the mining exhibit building for Mexico, it being constructed on the same plan as the Alhambra in Spain save that it is in iron. This is one of the finest ornamental iron buildings ever erected in the United States. Subsequently he built the bridge at Charles-town in 1885 and during the two succeeding years had charge of the building of a bridge across the Missouri river for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad.

The fall of 1887 witnessed the arrival of Mr. Kays in Oregon, at which time he located in Eugene. Here he engaged in the business of raising blooded cattle and horses, being connected with Wilkins Brothers & Coburg. He continued in that business for five years and in the fall of 1892 became a partner in the firm of D. Linn & Sons, at which time the firm name was changed to Linn & Kays. This relation was continued for five years, at the end of which time Mr. Kays purchased his partner's interest and afterwards conducted the business under the style of the J. W. Kays Furniture Company. He successfully managed this concern until April, 1911, when he sold out to Bissell & Burkner. He was in the same location continuously and was proprietor of the second oldest furniture store in the city. His commercial methods were such as would bear the closest investigation and scrutiny. He was always straightforward and honorable in his dealings, endeavored earnestly to please his customers and always kept a well selected line of furniture to meet the varied demands of the public taste. He sought his success in the legitimate fields of commerce and as the years went by, gained a comfortable competence, which at length enabled him to put aside business cares and retire to private life.

Mr. Kays was united in marriage to Mrs. Myrtle Uhlman, a daughter of Dr. J. W. Middleton, of St. Anthony, Idaho. They have become parents of twin sons, Warren and Willis. By her former marriage Mrs. Kays had two daughters: Lona B., who is the wife of Henry D. Jacobs; and Myrtle Eva. The elder daughter is an artist of much more than ordinary ability and her husband is an art critic. Mrs. Jacobs held the first chair of art in the Eugene public schools and later became assistant supervisor of art in the Portland public schools, which position she resigned at the time of her marriage.

In his fraternal relations Mr. Kays is well known, holding membership with Spencer Butte Lodge, No. 9, I. O. O. F.; Wimawhala Encampment, No. 6; and Eugene Lodge, No. 55, of the Daughters of Rebecca. He also belongs to Helmet Lodge, No. 33, K. T., and to the Uniform Rank, and is a member of Eugene Camp, No. 115, W. O. W. Both he and his wife hold membership in the First Presbyterian church, in which he has served as a trustee. They have a wide and favorable acquaintance in Eugene and throughout Lane county and the life record of Mr. Kays demonstrates the fact that success and an honorable name may be won simultaneously.

B. T. JORDAN, who is successfully engaged as a druggist, at Amity, was born in Linn county, Oregon, on the 17th of August, 1881. His parents were W. T. and Sarah (Powell) Jordan, natives of Maine and Indiana respectively. The father was reared to manhood in the Pine Tree state and subsequently lived in different states, settling in Oregon during the latter part of his active life. He followed general agricultural pursuits and passed away in Linn county, this state, in 1907. The demise of his wife occurred fifteen years ago. They had two sons: H. C., who is in the government employ at Portland; and B. T., of this review.

B. T. Jordan obtained his early education in the common schools of his native county and in 1901 took up the study of pharmacy in the Oregon Agricultural College, from which institution he was graduated in 1905, winning the degree of Graduate Pharmacist. He then worked in Albany for three years and on the expiration of that period came to Amity, purchasing a stock of drugs. At the present time he carries a large and complete line of drugs and druggists' sundries and enjoys an extensive and profitable trade. He owns a tract of land, comprising one hundred and thirty-five acres, in Linn county.

In 1907 Mr. Jordan was united in marriage to Miss Melissa Whitney, a native of Linn county, Oregon, by whom he has one child, Kenneth T., whose natal year was 1911. He exercises his right of franchise in support of the men and measures of the republican party and is a devoted member of the Christian church, to which his wife also belongs. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to the subordinate lodge at Albany and the encampment at Amity, while both he and his wife are connected with the Rebekahs at Amity. He is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks at Albany. He also belongs to the State Pharmaceutical Association. Both Mr. and Mrs. Jordan have spent their entire lives in the Sunset state and are well known and highly esteemed there.

R. S. CROCKETT is a successful farmer of Josephine county and a man highly respected by his friends and associates. He was born, July 18, 1872, in the county in which he now lives, and is a son of G. and Eurydice (Trimble) Crockett. The father was a native of Indiana and removed to Douglas county, Oregon, in 1852. In 1871 he went to Josephine county where he continued to reside during the remaining years of his life, which closed June 2, 1905. The mother makes her home in Hugo, with the subject of this review. To Mr. and Mrs. G. Crockett three children were born: Louisa, the wife of E. C. Dixon, of Grants Pass; E. W., who resides in California; and R. S., of this review.

R. S. Crockett was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools. He remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-one years of age and immediately thereafter, started in life for himself. He began railroading and so continued for seventeen successive years. Later he purchased a ranch of one hundred and seventy acres in Josephine county upon which he established his home and has since resided. He is engaged in general farming and specializes in the breeding and raising of cattle. In addition to his ranch interests he is a stockholder and a member of the board of directors of the Farmers Telephone Company.

R. S. Crockett was united in marriage to Miss Melvina Neely, in 1898. Mrs. Crockett is a native of Lane county, this state, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Neely, both of whom are deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Crockett, two children have been born, Edward G., and Harley N. Both Mr. and Mrs. Crockett are active members of the First Baptist church of Hugo. Our subject has had gratifying success as a ranchman and stock-raiser and is one of the well known and highly esteemed citizens of Josephine county.

H. L. STEPHENS is an expert agriculturist. When he was nineteen years of age he operated a farm and gave personal supervision to its management. He is now prominent in a specialized branch of this industry and is gaining the reward of well directed labor. He was born in Illinois, on the 23d of April, 1869, and is a son of Edwin and Mary (McDermant) Stephens, the father a native of England and the mother of Nova Scotia. Their marriage occurred in Canada and they remained in that country until 1866 when they removed to Illinois where they remained until 1870. In that year they removed to Kansas and settled in Greenwood county where the father took up a homestead claim and cultivated the soil until 1882. In that year he went to Florida where he died in 1884. His wife is still living and makes her home in Nebraska with her youngest daughter. To them were born five children: J. W., who makes his home in the state of Washington; W. E., of the northwestern part of Texas where he operates a farm near Hurley; Alma, the wife of a Mr. Broddle, of Greenwood county, Kansas; Maggie, now Mrs. Younkin, of Saline county, Nebraska; and H. L., the subject of this sketch.

H. L. Stephens was educated in the public schools of Kansas and Nebraska. He remained at home until he was twenty-one years of age, and has followed farming since he was nineteen. He operated a farm at that time and was rapidly successful as an agriculturist. He engaged in this line of occupation in the middle western states until he came to Oregon in 1899, settling in Washington county where he remained for a short time. He spent four years in Portland as motorman and came to the Coquille river valley in 1907 where he leased his present farm and has been carrying on its general cultivation since that time. He specializes, however, in raising garden seeds and berry plants, filling orders for these products throughout the state of Oregon. He is particularly successful with his garden peas and supplies the Portland Seed Company with these and other plants and seeds. His farm is finely improved and equipped with modern machinery and is one of the highly developed properties in Coos county.

Mr. Stephens has been twice married. His first union occurred in 1890 when he wedded Miss Lulu Troyer, a native of Illinois and a daughter of William Troyer. To this union was born one daughter, Grace L., now the wife of Riley W. Stephen, of Kelso, Washington. Mr. Stephen's first wife died in 1892, and in the following year our subject was again married. His second union was with Miss Mina Gardner, a native of Nebraska, where her birth occurred on March 24, 1875. She is a daughter of Edward and Sarah (Barker) Gardner, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Bangor, Maine. Her parents were married in Nebraska and the father served in a regiment from Kansas during the four years of the Civil war. He is still living and maintains his residence in the state where his daughter was born. He and his wife became the parents of the following children: Charles, who maintains his residence in Nebraska; Grace, the deceased wife of Otis Dubois, of Texas; Nellie, the wife of William Huey, of Missouri; Fannie, who married William Carney, of Nebraska; Mina, the wife of our subject; William, a resident of Nebraska; Etta, who became the wife of a Mr. Nicholson, of Nebraska; Elizabeth, who married William Harding, of Nebraska; Rubie, the wife of Samuel Simpson, of Missouri; and Daisy, deceased. Mrs. Stephens received her education in the public schools of Nebraska and remained at home until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Stephens are the parents of four children: Elton William, born in 1894, who is pursuing a business course; Ray E., whose birth occurred in 1895, and who is also attending business college; Ivan H., born in 1897, and a student in the Coos county public schools; and Arlie C., whose birth occurred in 1900.

In his political affiliations Mr. Stephens is a democrat and intelligently interested in public affairs. He is a member of the western organization of the Fraternal Brotherhood and is active in the affairs of the Farmers' Union. He and his family affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church, South. His life has been successful because he has accomplished in its course the thing which he started out to do. He began as a farmer and labored always along agricultural lines, and has developed a special occupation of an affiliated nature to such an extent that it entitles him to be ranked among the men who have achieved prosperity.

LEWIS CASS HAINES. The name of Haines stands today in Oregon, a synonym for progress in agriculture. One of its most successful representatives is Lewis Cass Haines, of Douglas county, who, at the age of fifty-six has retired from active life, after devoting many years to the intelligent operation of a farm, which in its productive and fertile state is a worthy gift to the agricultural resources of Oregon. Lewis C. Haines was born in Albany, Whiteside county, Illinois, on October 17 1856 and is a son of Alfred and Sarah (Nixon) Haines the former a native of New Jersey and the latter of Indiana. Their marriage occurred on December 24, 1840, and they remained in the state of Illinois until 1862. In that year they crossed the plains to Oregon with mule teams, arriving in Oregon exactly four months from the date they crossed the Missouri river at Omaha. Their first location was made at Scottsburg, where Alfred Haines' son William, who is now a resident of Eugene, Oregon, was located. he and his twin brother Joseph having come to Oregon in 1851. Upon leaving Scottsburg, where he remained only a short time, Alfred Haines located two miles south of Elkton, where he bought one hundred and sixty acres of land for which he paid four hundred dollars. This was his first farm in Douglas county and he began its cultivation along scientific methods which was the basis of his success. He acquired other land during the course of his life and was an extensive land owner at the time of his death. A farm of seventy-two acres was put up for sale for delinquent taxes shortly after the close of the Civil war and Alfred Haines was induced to buy it at a price of one dollar per acre only by the utmost persuasion of his wife and daughters. It is now one of the most valuable pieces of property in that section and upon a portion of it Mr. Haines' son, Edward E., has planted twelve acres in prunes which paid him in 1911 two thousand dollars for his crop.

H. L. STEPHENS AND FAMILY

Alfred Haines resided on his home farm until his death in 1888 when he was eighty-five years of age. He was one of the representative citizens of Douglas county and was a pioneer in its development. He was twice married. His first wife was Miss Luper by whom he had five children: William and Joseph, twins; and Jamison, Susan and Rebecca, all of whom are still living, the youngest being now well passed the seventy-eighth year of her age. After the death of his first wife Alfred Haines was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Nixon, by whom he had nine children, four of whom are still living, Caroline, Lewis C., James A. and Edward E. Those who have passed away were, Mary E., Sarah, Alfred B., Josephine P. and Jonathan C. The second Mrs. Haines died in 1879 in Douglas county, Oregon, in her fifty-ninth year. Alfred Haines was a staunch republican in his political views but was never an office seeker. He had the honor of dining with Abraham Lincoln when the future president was a struggling young lawyer in Springfield, Illinois. He and his second wife were members of the United Brethren church and active workers in religious circles.

Lewis C. Haines was reared at home and acquired his education in the public schools of Douglas county and in the Oregon State Normal School located at Ashland, which he attended for two terms. When he was twenty-three years of age he began active life for himself. He obtained employment with the Willamette Valley Railway Company and for twenty-five years of successful activity was identified with railroading in the capacity of fireman and engineer. He eventually, however, abandoned this field of endeavor and began his agricultural career on a farm of one hundred and forty acres, which he had previously purchased. His property was located near Elkton and he developed and improved it along progressive agricultural lines for three years. At the end of that time, however, he abandoned the cultivation of the soil and was variously engaged for some time. For the past five years he has lived retired in Elkton, where he is numbered among the enterprising and progressive citizens.

In October, 1911, Mr. Haines was united in marriage to Miss Fannie Isabelle Sawyer, a daughter of Andrew Sawyer, of whom more extended mention is made on another page of this work. Politically Mr. Haines gives his allegiance to the republican party but has never sought public office. He is a member of Elkton Lodge, No. 63, F. & A. M., and is secretary of Elkton Lodge, No. 192, I. O. O. F. He and his wife affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church. Lewis Haines is numbered among the enterprising and prosperous citizens of Elkton and has won the rest he is enjoying by laboring well in former years, when he followed in the footsteps of his father to swift and sure success.

THOMAS H. WILKERSON. The pleasant home of Thomas H. Wilkerson is situated near Lorella and the owner is numbered among the progressive agriculturists and stockmen of southern Oregon. He deserves much credit for what he has accomplished, as he has worked his way upward through energy, industry and perseverance. He was born in Monroe county, Missouri, January 17, 1842, a son of William Wilkerson. The grandfather also bore the name of William Wilkerson and was a native of England, whence he came to the United States in early life. He was a pioneer resident of Kentucky and was well acquainted with Daniel Boone. He served as a soldier in the War of 1812 and later was a captain in the Black Hawk war. He also did a great deal of scouting in Virginia and on one occasion was captured by the Indians, who held him for three years. His death occurred in Missouri, when he was ninety-two years of age. His son and namesake, William Wilkerson, was born in Kentucky but about 1819 removed to Monroe county, Missouri, casting in his lot with its early settlers. There he remained until 1850, when with ox teams he crossed the plains, accompanied by his three sons. After a slow and tedious trip he at length reached the mines of California in safety and spent about two years in searching for the precious metal. He then started on his homeward way but on the Isthmus of Panama was taken ill. From that place he was transferred to the island of Cuba, where he died the next year. His wife, who bore the name of Margaret Dale, was born in Tennessee and about 1827 became a resident of Monroe county, Missouri. She made the trip to Oregon with her son Thomas in 1875 and two years later returned to Monroe county, where she died in 1878. She was a daughter of John Dale, who served as a lieutenant at the battle of New Orleans in the War of 1812 and commanded a company as captain in the battle of Tippecanoe. There he was captured by Indians but as they were taking him away he struck one with a paddle, causing him to fall in the water, and thus he managed to make his escape. He was afterward known as "John Dale of Tippecanoe fame." The Dales were of Irish lineage and were noted for longevity. Matthew Dale, an uncle of Thomas H. Wilkerson, living to the advanced age of one hundred and ten years. William Wilkerson the father of our subject, was twice married and the half-brothers and sisters of Thomas H. Wilkerson, all of whom are deceased, were: John W., Wiley M. and Riley P., who lived in Monroe county, Missouri; and Sarah, the wife of Alexander Clemens, a brother of Samuel Clemens, the famous American humorist, better known to the world as Mark Twain. The full brothers and sisters of our subject were: Ross, who lived in Monroe county; Mary J. and Milton C., who made their homes in Monroe county; and Nancy. All these have also passed away.

Thomas H. Wilkerson was reared upon the home farm in Missouri. He acquired his education under disadvantages, being obliged to walk several miles in order to pursue his studies in a little log school-house, where methods of instruction were very primitive. In the spring of 1862 he started across the plains with Dr. Hugh Glenn in his wagon train. Mr. Wilkerson drove a band of mules and on reaching California engaged in mining for some time. He was afterward at Virginia City, in 1867, and then returned by way of Panama and New York to Missouri. He had been quite successful during his sojourn on the coast and on again reaching his native state he engaged in farming and stock-raising.

On the 11th of September, 1873, Mr. Wilkerson was married to Miss Julia Hardwick, a native of Monroe county, Missouri, and a daughter of George Hardwick, who was also a native of that county but died in Yamhill county, Oregon, in 1895, at the age of sixty years. He was a son of John Hardwick, who was born in Madison county, Kentucky, and became one of the early settlers of Monroe county. The Hardwick family was represented in the Revolutionary war. The mother of Mrs. Wilkerson bore the maiden name of Mary A. Sisk and was born in Alabama, although her ancestors were from North Carolina. In the Hardwick family were seven children, of whom Mrs. Wilkerson was the eldest. In the fall of 1875 the family started west, accompanied by Mr. Wilkerson's mother and his wife's father and family. Oregon was their destination and after weary days and weeks of travel they took up their abode in the West Chehalis valley, where for eleven years Mr. Wilkerson engaged in general merchandising. At length he withdrew from commercial pursuits and in June, 1886, took up his abode upon his present farm near Lorella. He is now the owner of four hundred and forty acres of land in Langells valley, a mile southeast of Lorella, and he and his sons own together nearly a thousand acres in this vicinity. Live stock has always been the principal feature of the place and Mr. Wilkerson owns a French draft stallion, Alcantraz, for which he paid two thousand dollars. He suffered heavy losses when in the winter of 1889-90 much of his stock perished, but he has persevered and his capable management and careful direction of his business interests have gained him a place among the substantial stockmen of Klamath county.

In 1906 Mr. Wilkerson was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife, who died on the 26th of November of that year at the age of fifty-four, her birth having occurred January 19, 1852. Their children are: Clementine M., who became the wife of Charles Wiley and since his death has married Lon Bateman, of Bakersfield, California; Geneva A., the wife of Sidney Burroughs, of Los Angeles; Mary Lulu, the wife of Benjamin Brown, of Langells valley; Kenneth C., at home; Nora M., the wife of James Krogue, of Modoc county, California; Ella L., the wife of Clarence Walker, of Langells Valley; and Eugene W. and William L., who resides at home and are owners of ranches in this section of the state. Mrs. Wilkerson was a member of the Christian church, to which Mr. Wilkerson still belongs. There have been no unusual chapters in his life history but year by year he has worked his way upward, each year seeing him in advance of the position that he had attained the previous year. He is now the possessor of a handsome property and his success is the merited reward of his industry, intelligently directed, and his sound judgment, which has enabled him to make judicious investments.

ARTHUR L. HUTCHINSON is a native son of Oregon and has spent his entire life in Douglas county, where he is a prominent stock-raiser. He owns one hundred and seventy-seven acres of valuable land on the Umpqua river, near Kellogg, and has brought his enterprise by hard work, industry and specialized knowledge to a high degree of success. Mr. Hutchinson was born about two and one half miles east of Oakland, November 14, 1869, and is a son of James C. and Sarah (Copeland) Hutchinson, the former a native of Illinois and the latter of Missouri. The father crossed the plains to Oregon in 1852 making the journey with his brother Robert M. The latter took up a donation claim now known as the Shine ranch two and one half miles east of Oakland. James C. Hutchinson, however, returned to Illinois in 1853 and in the following year again came to Oregon, traveling this time by way of the Isthmus of Panama. Four years after his second arrival he purchased the donation claim, which his brother Robert then owned and located upon the property, residing there until about 1884, when he removed to the claim, which he had previously purchased from James Marshal. This land was located twelve miles west of Oakland and upon it he resided until 1898.

He gave his name to the farm and it is at the present day known as the "old Hutchinson place." In 1898 the father of our subject moved into Roseburg, where he resided until the death of his wife in 1904. Since that time he has made his home with his sons. He has been identified during all his life with democratic politics and served as a member of the state legislature in the session during which the Southern Pacific railroad was built through the state and took an active part in the contests in the state assembly over the question. During his residence near Oakland he and his brother had a contract to furnish meat to the soldiers at Victoria, British Columbia, and he made his headquarters in the latter city during the time. He is today one of the substantial and prominent citizens of Douglas county and has many friends there. His wife was among the early settlers in Oregon, having crossed the plains with her parents, Royal and Sallie Copeland, in 1865. They settled on the Calapooia river and Mrs. Hutchinson made this district her home for some time. She died in 1904.

Arthur Hutchinson received his education in the public schools of Oakland and remained at home until he attained his majority. He then engaged in stock-raising, with which he has been prominently identified ever since. He did not give up his connection with this occupation even during the three years which he spent, from 1905 to 1908, in the logging woods. He now gives his entire attention to the operation of his ranch of one hundred and seventy-seven acres situated on the Umpqua river near Kellogg and to the promotion of his extensive and rapidly growing stock interests. He is the proprietor of one of the most valuable ranches in Douglas county and is ranked among that section's representative citizens.

In 1899 Mr. Hutchinson was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Fryer, a daughter of John Fryer, of whom more extended mention is made elsewhere in this work. Mr. Hutchinson is a democrat in his political beliefs and intelligently interested in local affairs and well informed upon national issues. He, however, never seeks public office, preferring to devote his entire attention to the successful operation of his ranch and stock farm. He is a member of Oregon Camp, No. 125, Woodmen of the World, and in the course of a life spent in Douglas county has made many friends, who honor him for his straightforward business principles and for the industry and enterprise which have been the dominating factors in his success.

CLAUDE M. JOHNS, engaged in the general practice of law at Astoria, is a prominent representative of the legal fraternity in northwestern Oregon. He has a comprehensive knowledge of the principles of jurisprudence, is careful and accurate in the preparation of his cases, and clear and forcible in the presentation of facts before the courts. Not only his professional prominence but also the fact that he is one of the native sons of the state and a representative of an old pioneer family entitles him to representation in this volume. He was born in Dallas, Oregon, October 2, 1885, a son of Charles A. Johns and a grandson of James McClellan Johns. The last named was born in Wayne county, Ohio, August 9, 1834. His mother was a cousin of John Quincy Adams, president of the United States, her father having been James Adams, a brother of President John Adams. James Adams married Miss Margaret McClellan, an aunt of General George B. McClellan. James McClellan Johns made his way to Oregon by the Panama route. He had previously resided in Missouri and on reaching the northwest settled in Marion county. He built the first grain elevator in the state of Oregon and made the first shipment of grain from this state to Liverpool. At the age of fifty-seven years he was admitted to the bar and had an excellent practice at the time of his death. For several years he was editor and proprietor of the Arlington Record, published at Arlington, Oregon, and through the columns of his paper and in a private capacity he had much to do with molding public opinion and in shaping the history of that section of the northwest in which he lived. His son, Charles A. Johns, was born in Missouri about 1858 and was brought to Oregon in his infancy, crossing the Columbia river bar when he was a babe of sixteen months. He has since lived in this state and is now a well known attorney of Baker City, where he has also served as mayor for four terms. He is, indeed, one of the prominent and influential residents there and in his official capacity has done much to shape the policy and mold the destiny of that place. He married Miss Mabel Ellis, who was born in Decatur, Iowa, November 2, 1860, and was a daughter of Henry Ellis, whose birth occurred December 14, 1825. He was married, October 2, 1844, to Henrietta Rowell, who died in May, 1899. Her father was William Rowell, who passed away in 1860. Her grandfather, David Rowell, was born in 1765, and in 1788 wedded Miss Nancy Neal, who was born in 1760 and was a daughter of James Neal, whose birth occurred in 1737, while in 1822 he was called to his final rest. He was a captain in the Thirteenth Virginia Regiment in the Revolutionary war under Colonel William Russell and received his commission on the 19th of December, 1776. His name last appears on the list showing the arrangement of the Virginia Battalion at White Plains, New York, in August, 1778. Thus Mrs. Charles A. Johns comes from Revolutionary ancestry and is entitled to membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution. She was brought to Oregon in her early childhood, her parents settling in the Willamette valley, where her father followed the occupation of farming. To Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Johns were born three children: Claude M., Ruth Mabel, at home; and Charles A., also under the parental roof.

Claude M. Johns spent his youthful days at home and pursued his education in the public schools of Baker City, passing through the consecutive grades until graduated from the high school with the class of 1906. He also attended the Shattuck Military Academy at Faribault, Minnesota, and subsequently studied law in his father's office for a year and a half. He spent a similar period in the legal department of the Oregon Washington Railroad & Navigation Company under W. W. Cotton, general attorney of the Hariman lines throughout the northwest. In May, 1909, he was admitted to the bar and remained at Baker City until November of that year, when he removed to Lakeview, where he spent three months as a law partner of L. F. Conn. On the 5th of February, 1910, he arrived in Astoria, where he is now engaged in general practice. Although he has been a resident of this city for a comparatively brief period and although he is yet a young man, he has gained for himself a creditable position in legal circles here and his future seems bright with promise.

On the 1st of November, 1909, Mr. Johns was married to Miss Rose Bronken, who was born in North Dakota. At an early age she lost her father and since four years of age has been a resident of Oregon, where her mother still lives. She was a descendant of Ole Bull and her grandfather Bronken was for three and one-half years a soldier in the Civil war with the Thirtieth Wisconsin Infantry. Her mother, Mrs. Carrie Bronken, was born in Bergen, Norway, in 1868, and came to America in 1882. In this country she became the wife of Herman Bronken, of Pennsylvania. The maternal grandmother of Mrs. Johns was born in Herfendahl, Norway, and married Knute Munson.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Claude M. Johns has been born a son, Courtney R., whose natal day was August 24, 1910. Both Mr. and Mrs. Johns have won many warm friends during the period of their residence in Astoria and have made for themselves a creditable position in social circles, while in the ranks of his profession Mr. Johns has gained recognition as an able lawyer.

JAMES E. TYCER, a retired farmer of Josephine county, where he was formerly engaged in general farming and stock-raising on a ranch of four hundred acres, was born in Tennessee, July 29, 1830. His parents were Louis and Sarah (Wright) Tycker, in whose family there were five children.

James E. Tycker was reared in his parents' home and received his elementary education in the public schools. In 1853 he emigrated with his parents to Oregon, crossing the plains with ox teams and completing the journey after six months of continuous travel. He settled in Linn county, where he filed upon a homestead, which he improved and on which he continued to live for thirteen years. He later sold that property and in 1867 removed to Josephine county, where he purchased two hundred acres, to which he eventually added another tract of two hundred acres, all of which he brought to a very high state of cultivation. Upon this property he has continued to make his home, although he has given over the ownership and management of the place to his sons, with whom he lives.

Mr. Tycker was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Patterson in 1853, and to them the following named children were born: William; Thomas; Edward; Sarah; Susan; Mary A.; Lucy; John N., who passed away in 1905; George P., whose death occurred in 1896; and Lucinda C., also deceased. Mr. Tycker is one of the best known men in Josephine county, where he is highly esteemed for his integrity, enterprise and progressive citizenship.

STEPHEN L. BENSON. About a quarter of a century ago Stephen L. Benson, then just entering manhood, left his home in the east and came to the Pacific coast, there casting in his fortunes with those who sought the precious metal. He was successful to a considerable degree and beside mining property he owns a two hundred acre ranch which is well improved. He resides in Applegate, Oregon, which has been his home for a number of years. He was born in Wisconsin, June 10, 1863, a son of J. Benson and Abbie (Hall) Benson, both natives of the state of New York.

Stephen L. Benson remained at home and assisted his father with the work of the farm, while acquiring a good common-school education, until he was twenty-three years of age. He then came to the Pacific coast and engaged in mining, in which he was reasonably successful. He has been active therein ever since coming to the Pacific coast and at present owns a fine hydraulic mining property in California. He came to Oregon in 1890, settling in Josephine county, where he continued his mining operations. He now owns a valuable ranch property comprising two hundred acres, a large part of which he has placed under cultivation and upon which he has made good improvements.

Mr. Benson was married in Kansas to Miss Fannie Sloan and to this union three children have been born. Mr. Benson is affiliated with the republican party but he has been too busy with other matters to give the subject of politics more than passing attention. In his religious life he is an earnest and consistent member of the Adventist church, in which denomination he is actively engaged as a worker, rendering such material assistance as lies within his power. Mr. Benson has an extensive acquaintance in Applegate and community, where by his life of industry and good-fellowship he has gained the respect of a large number of its citizens. He has been devoted to business and has cared for his interests in a wise way so that he has attained comparative affluence. The Benson family stands high in social and church circles and are among the most respected people of the community.

GEORGE W. CRUNK, JR., owns and operates one of the most flourishing and productive farms in Coos county. His holdings comprise a quarter section of highly cultivated and well improved land seven miles above Bridge on Rock creek and form one of the model properties in this section. Mr. Crunk was born in Montana in 1869, and is a son of George W. and Anna Crunk, more extended mention of whom appears in another part of this work. His father is one of the enterprising and representative agriculturists in Coos county and has handed down to his son progressive and scientific methods of operation.

George W. Crunk, Jr., received his early education in the public schools of Coos county and later continued his studies in the state of Washington. He remained at home and was an active aid to his father in the work of the farm until his marriage, when he was twenty-six years of age. Following that event he worked in a logging camp for one year and then established himself in the stock-raising business, buying and selling high-grade cattle and breeding and raising them for the market. He lives upon a quarter section of land on Rock creek, seven miles above Bridge, and his undertaking has been successful. He has equipped his farm with all modern conveniences, has constantly improved his land. His stock-raising business is increasing yearly and forms the most important source of his income. He is known throughout Coos county as an expert judge of high-grade horses and cattle and as a man thoroughly representative of the highest and most scientific methods of breeding and raising stock. The land which he now farms he purchased in 1900 as a squatter's right and has since made it his home.

On the 31st of August, 1896, Mr. Crunk was united in marriage to Miss Fannie Wagner, whose birth occurred in Coos county, March 20, 1874. She is a daughter of John and Mary Wagner, the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of Tennessee. Their marriage occurred in North Carolina and they shortly afterward came to Oregon, where they settled in Jackson county, remaining in that section for one year. At the end of that time they took up a homestead claim of two hundred acres on the south bank of the Coquille river twenty miles from Myrtle Point, and upon this land they are now living. They are the parents of ten children: Lee, who maintains his residence in the state of Washington; Fannie, the wife of our subject; Charley, who is in business in Alaska; Mrs. Barr of Bandon, Oregon; Alice, who is Mrs. Eberdene and a resident of Coos county; Mrs. Nettie Briggs of Coos county; and John, Sterling, Glenn and Wilbur, all of Coos county.

Mrs. Crunk received her education in Coos county and remained with her parents until her marriage. She and her husband are the parents of two children, Elmer W. and Vesta E. Mr. Crunk is a democrat in his political views, but beyond casting his vote at each election takes no active part in public affairs and never seeks office for himself. He prefers to devote his time to the scientific cultivation of his land and has become expert in the best methods of tilling the soil and attending to the various phases of agricultural life. Mr. Crunk has contributed in no unworthy measure to the growth and progress of this section of Oregon.

WILLIAM H. HOLLIS, prominently connected with various corporate interests and at the same time recognized as an able member of the Oregon bar, practicing in Forest Grove, was born in Edgar county, Illinois, July 9, 1853. His father, George W. Hollis, who was born in Delaware in 1824, devoted his life to farming and passed away in 1903, when almost eighty years of age. He had wedded Mary J. Clark, who was born in Virginia in 1831, and is now living in Gibson, Illinois, at the age of eighty years. One of their children died in infancy. The family included the following: William H., of this review; Louis, a resident of Muncie, Indiana; Charles, of Oakland, Illinois; Joseph, residing in Gridley, California; John and Melvin, both of whom make their home in Gibson, Illinois; and George, deceased.

William H. Hollis is indebted to the public school system of his native county for the early educational privileges which he enjoyed. He made his initial step in the business world by clerking in a store and was thus employed for several years in Clayton, Illinois. While residing there he became interested in the study of law and by private reading began familiarizing himself with Kent, Blackstone and other commentaries. In 1886 he became a resident of Tacoma, where he continued reading law under the direction of Judge Snell until admitted to the bar, in 1889. While a resident of the state of Washington he was elected auditor of Pierce county, and was connected with that office either as auditor or as deputy for six years. His election came to him as a candidate of the republican party. At length he retired from office as he had entered it—with the confidence and good-will of all concerned. Following the expiration of his term as auditor he was engaged in the practice of law in Tacoma for four years and then, in 1896, removed to Benton Harbor, Michigan, where he followed his profession with success until elected in 1900 to the position of municipal judge. He served upon the bench until 1903, when he resigned for the purpose of coming to Oregon. His previous experience in business had awakened in him a love for and interest in the western country and, believing that better opportunities were here offered, he made his way to Forest Grove, where he has engaged in the practice of law for eight years. He is widely known, not only as an interpreter of the principles of jurisprudence, but also as one of the law makers of the state, for in 1910 he was elected to represent Washington county—the fifteenth district—in the state legislature. He has given careful consideration to every question that has come up for settlement and has proven himself an active working member of the house. He has also filled the office of city attorney of Forest Grove. He has a large private practice which is connecting him with many of the important cases tried in the courts of the district. Aside from his professional labors Mr. Hollis has done important work in the organization and management of various corporations. In connection with other men, in 1906, he formed a local insurance company known as the Bankers & Merchants Mutual Fire Relief Association and has served as one of its directors and as its secretary since its organization. He represents a number of stock companies and is president of the Forest Grove Abstract Company. He was the organizer of the Hollis Title Investment Company, formed for the purpose of making investments for clients, and of that enterprise he is the president. With others he organized the Forest Grove Transportation Company, establishing a local street car system with a mile and seven-tenths of track. Of that company he is a director and secretary and was formerly president. He has been the secretary of the board of trade of Forest Grove for several years and is attorney for the Oregon United Railways Company and for a number of other important corporations.

On the 12th of June, 1907, Mr. Hollis was married to Mrs. M. Louise Blackmer. William H. Hollis is prominent in Masonry, having attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite. He is also a member of the Mystic Shrine. He belongs to the State Bar Association and many of his warmest friends in Oregon are numbered among his professional brethren. He is a man who in all business affairs displays expediency and resourcefulness, ever looking beyond the exigencies of the moment to the possibilities and opportunities of the future. His plans are well formed and carefully executed and, being based upon sound judgment, make for success.

JESSE LOONEY. In the year 1843 two great wagons to each of which were attached five yokes of oxen, were to be seen wending their way from the Mississippi valley toward the setting sun. There were also spare oxen to alternate with those being driven and twenty head of choice cows and four fine mares made up the stock which were being taken by the party to Oregon. The owner thereof was Jesse Looney who with his family was traveling to the northwest attracted by the opportunities of the Pacific coast country and urged on by a desire to leave slavery and its influences behind. He was a southerner by birth but there was in him a strong and instinctive dislike for the holding of human beings in bondage. Oregon thereby gained a citizen whose labors constituted an important element in the development of the state.

Jesse Looney was born near Knoxville, Tennessee, and spent his youth and early manhood in the south. He was a cousin of Andrew Jackson and like him inherited slavery as one of the local conditions of his section but adopted freedom as his conviction of right. He was married in Alabama on the 16th of March, 1827, to Miss Ruby Bond, who was born in the vicinity of Covington, Kentucky, March 18, 1808. She was descended from Revolutionary ancestry and was a relative of George Walton, the first governor of Georgia, and a signer of the Declaration of Independence and the articles of confederation. For some years Mr. and Mrs. Looney resided in Bates county, Missouri. The former inherited land and negroes from his father but as previously stated was opposed to the system of slavery and in 1843 started across the plains with his family, then consisting of a wife and six children. In the party were also John P. Gaines, Daniel Waldo and the Applegates. They escaped many of the hardships and privations which fall to the travelers across the plains for in addition to the stock they carried with them a large supply of provisions which not only met their own requirements but also at different times enabled them to relieve the wants of less fortunate travelers whom they met on the plains. They journeyed on until the days lengthened into weeks and the weeks into months and late in the autumn of that year arrived in the fertile Columbia valley. They determined to spend the winter at Whitman Station on the Walla Walla but in the ensuing months the Indians proved troublesome, leading to their removal in the following spring to the Willamette valley. Mr. Looney had secured a tract of land near Salem but afterward sold that property and secured a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres on what became known as Looney's Butte at the Santiam bottoms. His home was the only one within a radius of twenty miles for two years. As time passed on Mr. Looney added to his landed possessions until he was the owner of several thousand acres in the valley. He bent his energies with resolution and determination to the development and cultivation of his place and improved it until it was transformed into one of the most attractive and productive properties in this section of the country, every acre of his home place being now under cultivation. There were many hardships and difficulties to be encountered incident to the work of developing a farm upon the western frontier but he possessed courage and determination and was among those whose labors constituted an element in the upbuilding of the western empire. He was not only active in agricultural pursuits but also in the settlement of many momentous questions, serving as a member of the provisional legislature of Oregon, and in many other ways furthered the interests and welfare of the state.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Looney were born fourteen children, eight of whom are now living: J. B. of Jefferson; Ellen, the widow of A. Gaines, of Vancouver; Benjamin F.; Pauline, of Jefferson; David H. and Norris F., both of Jefferson, the latter superintendent of the state reform school; Frances, the widow of Wilber Cornell; and Addie B., who married G. A. Fairbanks of Petaluma, California. The death of Mr. Looney occurred at Salem, March 25, 1869, when he was sixty-nine years of age. Such had been his capable business management and prosperity that he was able to leave each of his ten children a farm near the old homestead. He was ever actuated by a high moral purpose and principles of honor and integrity and his last words to his children as he was entering "the valley of the shadow of death" were: "Do right, be honorable and truthful." That had been the motto which he had closely followed throughout his entire career, making him a man whom to know was to esteem and honor. His widow survived him until May 7, 1900, passing away at the advanced age of ninety-two years. She was one of the most widely known women in western Oregon, possessing marked strength of character and admirable qualities which won her the esteem and friendship of all who knew her in the days which elapsed from 1843, when with her husband and little children, she came to make her home in the wilderness of the west, to the time of her demise almost a half century later. The sterling couple commanded the respect of all with whom they came in contact and their life records may well serve as an example to children and to all who knew them.

E. E. QUICK is engaged in the abstract business in St. Helen. Formerly he was prominent in educational circles and has also been a leading figure in public service, having filled a number of local offices with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. He was born in Franklin county, Indiana, November 8, 1852. His father, David O. Quick, also a native of that county, was born in July, 1832, and in early manhood engaged in teaching but regarded this merely as an initial step to other professional labor. He took up the study of law and after a thorough preliminary course of reading was admitted to the bar of Illinois, where he engaged for some years in active practice. Thinking to find still better opportunities in the new and growing west, he crossed the plains with a team of horses to Oregon in 1862, making the journey with a large train of about fifty wagons, the party traveling thus for protection. After reaching his destination Mr. Quick engaged in the milling business in Washington county, Oregon, for fifteen years, after which he went to Polk county, where he followed farming and later also carried on general agricultural pursuits in Linn county, where his death subsequently occurred. He took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres in Washington county and in addition purchased about two hundred and fifty acres of timber land. While he was an active and progressive business man he also found time for cooperation in public affairs and held to high ideals of citizenship. He represented Washington county for one term in the state legislature and gave to each question which came up for settlement his careful consideration. He was also postmaster at Mountindale for seventeen years and discharged every public duty which devolved upon him in a most capable and conscientious manner. He was never open to criticism and was strictly temperate in habits, never using liquor or tobacco. He had a brother, Madison Quick, who was a soldier in the Civil war. The mother of E. E. Quick bore the maiden name of Sarah M. Updike and died when her son, the only child of that marriage, was but four years of age. She was a daughter of Benjamin Updike and a representative of a very old family, whose ancestry can be traced back to 1200. The name at times has been spelled Opdyke. One of the family, Emerson Updike, was a general in the Revolutionary war and of Holland descent. It was in his honor that Emerson E. Quick, of this review, was named. After losing his first wife David O. Quick was united in marriage to Permelia E. Young, and they became the parents of four sons and three daughters, all living in Oregon. The death of the father occurred in December, 1910. He left to his family the priceless heritage of an untarnished name and his record is a most creditable one on the pages of Oregon's history.

E. E. Quick was a lad of nine years when the family came to the northwest, and in the common schools of this city he pursued his education until he entered the Pacific University at Forest Grove. Later he devoted ten years to teaching in the public schools and in 1882 became thus connected with the schools of St. Helen. He manifested marked ability in that direction, imparting readily, concisely and impressively to others the knowledge which he had acquired. His excellent work in that direction led to his election to the office of county superintendent, in which position he served for three terms, during which time many needed improvements were made in the public school system, and the efficiency of the schools greatly promoted. During that time he also took up a homestead in Columbia county about four miles west of St. Helen and began the development of his farm. In 1888 he was again called to public office, being elected county clerk, which position he filled until 1894, retiring from the office as he had entered it with the confidence and good-will of all concerned. On putting aside the duties of that position he purchased an interest in the Columbia County Abstract Company, of which he has since been president. He was again called from private life to public office in 1910 and through that and the succeeding year filled the position of county treasurer, but he prefers to concentrate his time and energies upon the abstract business, in which he is rapidly acquiring a large clientele. The appreciation of his fellow townsmen for his worth, ability and fidelity in public office, however, has led to his being called upon again and again for public service. He has been president of the city council for two terms, has been school director and school clerk and has also been custodian of the city finances, having been elected to the office of treasurer. He is a well known advocate of republican principles, fearless in defense of what he believes to be right.

On the 16th of November, 1881, Mr. Quick was married to Miss Sarah M. Linegar and they became the parents of four children but lost two in infancy. The living daughters are Alice L. and Annie M. Mr. Quick belongs to the Masonic fraternity, holding membership in the lodge, chapter and the Order of the Eastern Star. He likewise belongs to the Knights of Pythias and the Order of the Knights of Khorassan, and his wife is connected with the Pythian Sisters and with the Eastern Star. They are also members of the Methodist church and their honorable, upright lives secure for them the kindly regard and high respect of all with whom they have been associated. The work of Mr. Quick has been particularly helpful as a factor in public progress here and his labors have been of essential worth in upholding the intellectual and moral standard of the community as well as its business development.

JOHN NAHBAUR. Among the honored representatives of Austria who have taken advantage of the opportunities offered by the new world is John Nahbaur, who is the owner of a fine one hundred sixty acre farm in Josephine county, near Grants Pass, which he obtained from the government of the United States, and upon which he has made his home for many years. He labors early and late to improve his property, lives in a good house, has one of the finest barns in the neighborhood and owns much excellent farm equipment. He was born in Austria, December 22, 1850, a son of Joe and Anne (Baur) Nahbaur, being one of six children in his parents' family. Owing to a weakness in one of his eyes, Mr. Nahbaur was not compelled to do military service in his native country, as is the custom. He received a good common-school education in Austria, and emigrated to the new world in 1880, he and one brother being the only representatives of the family to come to the United States. He settled in Illinois, reaching that state, March 22, 1880. His first employment was as a laborer, and after remaining in the Prairie state for seven years he removed to Oregon in 1887, where he immediately settled upon the beautiful and valuable tract of land which he now owns. All of the improvements on the property were made by him and manifest his enterprise and skill. He carries on general farming, specializing in raising fruit, grain and hay.

John Nahbaur is a republican. He is an earnest and consistent member of the Catholic church. He belongs to the Foresters, and takes an active interest in that order. Mr. Nahbaur has long been recognized as one of the valued and influential citizens of his community and enjoys a reputation for integrity and honest dealing.

JOHN A. NELSON. A study of biographies of successful men shows that adverse conditions cannot dampen the ardor or smother the ambition of the one who feels within himself the possibilities of success. He allows no obstacles to cast him down and he does not hesitate to cross the ocean or continent or even to go to the ends of the earth provided his judgment bids him undertake the venture. John A. Nelson, a successful citizen of Warren, belongs to the class briefly outlined. He fearlessly started upon his quest of fortune when only eighteen years of age and although many difficulties lay in the way he resolutely persevered and is now the owner of a farm of one hundred and ten acres and also has developed a flourishing dairy business. He was born in Sweden, August 24, 1869, a son of Nels and Alma Nelson, both of whom were born in Sweden. The mother died in her native country and the father is still living at the old home. There were nine children in their family, six of whom are living.

John A. Nelson received advantages of education in the schools of his native country. Having decided to become a citizen of the great American republic, he bade farewell to friends and familiar scenes and in 1887 sailed for America. He spent one year at St. Paul, Minnesota, but then proceeded westward to Portland and has ever since been a citizen of Oregon. After acquiring the necessary capital he purchased the farm where he now lives and has made many improvements thereon. He has forty acres under cultivation and the fields yield bountiful harvests each year. He has made a specialty of dairying and as he understands this business thoroughly, his efforts have met with a goodly reward. He is known as one of the experts in this line in Columbia county and each year witnesses an increase in his prosperity.

On the 2d of July, 1892, Mr. Nelson was married to Miss Margaret Downing, a native of Nevada and a daughter of John Downing. The father is still living but the mother is deceased. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, namely: Guy, Lester, Herbert, Mildred, Paul and Florence. As the head of a promising and growing family Mr. Nelson has set an example of industry, sobriety and persistence which is well worthy of imitation by his children and by all who aspire to accomplish worthy aims. In the years when it was necessary to practice economy he did so but he and his family are now abundantly supplied with all the desirable comforts and conveniences of life. Politically he gives his support to the republican party and religiously adheres to the faith of the Swedish Lutheran church. He and his wife are numbered among the highly respected members of the community.

ALVANE CARY SEELY, M. D., has been specializing in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat in Roseburg since 1905 and during the time has become recognized as one of the most able and competent physicians in his line in Douglas county. Scientific efficiency is the standard of attainment in modern medicine and it is the secret of Dr. Seely's success as a specialist. He has gained his knowledge of the details of his profession not only by hard study but also by experience in its various phases and is today one of the most capable, expert and practical physicians in the section in which he resides.

His residence in Oregon dates from 1904, in which year he came to Myrtle Creek. He was born January 6, 1870, in Carysville, Champaign county, Ohio, and is a son of Samuel M. and Sarah D. (Kirby) Seely, both natives of that state. His ancestry on both sides dates back to colonial times in America. Representatives of his family came to White Plains, New York, from England about three hundred years ago and at the same time a younger son of this branch went to Ireland, where he gained distinction in law and finally became a judge. It is probable that Dr. Seely is a descendant of this branch of the family. On the maternal side he claims descent from the Hanoverian royal family. His grandfather, Rev. Rockwell Henry Seely, was a native of New York city and in his later years moved to Ohio. His mother's father was also a minister, Rev. John M. Kirby, who was born in Ohio and spent his entire life in that state.

Dr. Seely was reared at home and attended the public schools of Champaign county. He later entered the medical department of the University of Cincinnati, graduating with the degree of M. D. in 1893. He located immediately for practice in Rosewood, Ohio, where he remained until 1899, after which he was active for one year in the United States transportation service. He was surgeon in the Northern Steamship service until the year 1904, doing duty for a portion of that time under the British flag. He has crossed the ocean twenty-eight times. Mr. Seely's residence in Oregon dates from 1904, in which year he settled in Myrtle Creek, where he remained a short time in order to secure his state diploma. In January, 1905, he came to Roseburg and established a practice specializing in the treatment of the eye, ear, nose and throat. He is a firm believer in the modern idea of specialization and has supplemented his broad general knowledge of medicine by constant study in the particular phases of his profession in which he is most interested. He has become recognized as one of the most able men in this line in the city and has won in the course of a few years a success, which is the natural result of his efficiency. For some time he held the position of railroad surgeon, doing able and conscientious work in this capacity. He is a member of the Pacific Railway's Medical Association and surgeon for the Southern Pacific Railroad. He is also a member of the Oregon State Medical Society, of which organization he was the first vice president. He has just completed a term of service as president of the Southern Oregon Medical Association and is active in the affairs of the American Medical Association.

On June 7, 1905, Dr. Seely was united in marriage to Miss Florence De Lacey Hall, of Myrtle Creek, a daughter of John and Susanne (Weaver) Hall, natives of Ohio, of whom further mention is made elsewhere in this work. To Dr. and Mrs. Seely has been born a son, Hall, whose birth occurred in Portland, November 17, 1907.

Dr. Seely gave his political allegiance in former days to the democratic party but has later advocated republican principles and ideas. He is absorbed in the duties of his profession and neither seeks nor desires public office. Fraternally he is prominent in the Masonic order, holding membership in the lodge and chapter. He is well known in the affairs of Philetarian Lodge, No. 8, I. O. O. F., and Union Encampment, No. 9. He belongs also to White Lilly Lodge, No. 449, of the Rebekahs, being a charter member of this organization in Ohio. He also affiliates with Roseburg Lodge, No. 326, B. P. O. E. He has many friends in this section of the state, who have been attracted to him by his genuine personal worth and his ability and conscientiousness in the practice of his profession. He has a steady hand, a concentrated mind and a skill based upon technique and science, and upon his possession of these qualities he has founded a substantial prosperity.

GEORGE T. BRICKELL, who is meeting with gratifying returns from the operation of his farm of eighty acres, four and a half miles northwest of Sherwood, has been a resident of this county almost all of his life. He was born in Tillamook county in 1868 and is a son of Thomas and Frances (Albee) Brickell. The father whose birth occurred in 1824, was a native of Kentucky, coming to California in 1849, and as he had been given the advantages of a good education, engaged in teaching school in that state for several years. From there he came to Washington county, Oregon, teaching in various places, among them being Forest Grove and Reedsville, and then went to Tillamook county. About a year after his marriage, coming back to Washington county, he settled on one hundred and sixty acres of land, now known as the Newman place, in the vicinity of Sherwood, which he successfully operated until his death in 1875. The mother was born in New Hampshire in 1850, but when a child of two years she crossed the plains to Oregon with her parents, who made the long journey from New England with wagon and ox team. The father settled on a half section of land in this county, near the farm where Mr. and Mrs. Brickell spent the latter years of their lives. Their marriage occurred on the old Albee homestead, at which time she was eighteen years of age and he was forty. Very soon thereafter they removed to Tillamook county, where he taught about a year and then returned to Washington county, where they remained until their death. To Mr. and Mrs. Brickell there were born three sons: George T., our subject, who is the eldest; James L., a resident of Portland; and William H., who is living at the present time in Alaska.

Reared at home, George T. Brickell received a common-school education and began to earn his own living at a very early age. He was employed in a sawmill for about five or six years. He then located on eighty acres of land that had formerly belonged to his father-in-law, and has since turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, of which he has a thorough, practical knowledge. He has brought about forty acres of this land under high cultivation and has a small orchard, while the remainder of his land is principally devoted to the raising of hay, grain and potatoes and until quite recently he also engaged in dairying. Mr. Brickell's place is one of the attractive and valuable properties in this vicinity. The buildings are substantially constructed and well repaired, the grounds surrounding the residence tastefully arranged and everything about the premises bespeaks the capable supervision and careful regard for details that invariably accompany prosperity.

Mr. Brickell was married on the place where he now resides, in 1890, to Miss Maggie J. Gustin, and to them have been born two children, both of whom are living at home. They are; Montie C., who was born in 1891, obtained a common-school education and is assisting his father with the operation of the farm; and Laurel M., who was born in 1892, also finished common school and is now staying home.

His political prerogatives Mr. Brickell exercises in support of the men and measures of the republican party and he has given efficient service in both the capacity of road supervisor and school director. He is one of the progressive citizens of the community, who takes an active interest in all matters of public welfare and exercises his influence in promoting the development of every worthy movement that promises the betterment of local conditions or the elevation of civic standards.

ALFRED EVAN REAMES. Among the honored and capable sons of Oregon few have acquired a more distinguished reputation or have achieved greater success than Alfred Evan Reames of Medford. Highly educated as a lawyer and for many years a practitioner of his profession, he early in his career attained honorable political preferment and as such became widely known in his native state. Identified with many of the leading business enterprises of Medford, where he resides, he is popular among her leading professional and business men. Mr. Reames was born in Jacksonville, Oregon, February 5, 1870, a son of Thomas G. Reames, who was an early settler of Jacksonville. The paternal grandfather, Woodford Reames, settled in Oregon in 1853. With his family he crossed the plains with ox teams and on arriving in Oregon he took up a donation land claim in Jackson county. This farm comprised three hundred and twenty acres and he lived upon it for many years but before his death retired to Jacksonville and there passed away at the age of eighty-five years. He was by trade a blacksmith.

The father was but a boy when the family removed to Oregon. He remained under the parental roof until he attained his majority and then engaged in the general mercantile business in several places in the state, afterward becoming identified with the banking business as a member of the firm of Beekman & Reames of Jacksonville. In 1885 he was appointed by President Cleveland as postal inspector for Oregon, Idaho, Washington, Montana and Alaska but resigned his position after eighteen months' service. In 1874 he was appointed deputy sheriff of Jackson county and in 1887 he was elected sheriff of the same county, serving for one term. Being a prominent democrat, he was in 1878 nominated for the position of secretary of state but on account of the preponderance of the opposition, was defeated by a small majority. He served as state and county committeeman at various times and was well known in political circles throughout the state of Oregon. Mr. Reames chose as his life companion and helpmate Miss Lucinda Williams, a native of Missouri, and together they shared life's joys and sorrows until 1900, when Mr. Reames passed away.

A member of a family of ten children, Alfred E. Reames was educated in the common schools of Jacksonville and in 1888 and 1889 attended the University of Pacific at San Jose, California. The following three years he spent as a student in the University of Oregon, where he took a short preparatory course for the purpose of fitting himself to take up the study of law. In 1892 he entered Washington and Lee University of Lexington, Virginia, from which he was graduated in 1893. Having completed his law course, he returned to Oregon and entered upon the practice of his profession with Eugene Skipworth, of Eugene. In 1894 he went to Portland, in which city he was associated in practice with C. M. Idleman, who later became attorney general of the state. Returning to Jacksonville in the fall of 1896, he formed a law partnership with William M. Colvig, with whom he remained associated until 1900, when the partnership was dissolved. In that year Mr. Reames was elected district attorney for Jackson, Josephine, Klamath and Lake counties on the democratic ticket, receiving a majority of four hundred and eighty-nine votes, although the counties went republican by a majority of seven hundred and fifty. Upon the death of his father-in-law, the late Congressman Tongue, in 1903, Mr. Reames received the democratic nomination for congress from the first congressional district. He is identified with many of the leading enterprises of his community. He owns a controlling interest in the Deep Gravel Mining Company, being secretary of that corporation; is president of the Three Pines Timber Company, which owns ten thousand acres of land in Jackson and Josephine counties; and in Jacksonville he built and owns the city lighting plant, the only one in existence in that part of the state. He owns one of the finest libraries in his county, an acquisition which has stood him in good stead in his long and successful professional career.

In 1895 Mr. Reames was married to Miss Edith L. Tongue, who was born in Hillsboro, Washington county, Oregon, August 26, 1871, a daughter of the late Congressman Thomas H. Tongue. Fraternally Mr. Reames is a member of the Masonic order, belonging to Chapter No. 4, R. A. M., of Oregon; Commandery No. 1, K. T., of Portland; and Al

Kader Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Portland. He is affiliated with the Pine Cabin Native Sons of Oregon, and he is also a member of Pocahontas Tribe, No. 1, I. O. R. M. The city of Medford is fortunate in having among its citizens so capable, honorable and successful a man as the subject of this review. He takes an active interest in many matters of import which concern the business and social life of his city and may always be counted upon to put his shoulder to the wheel in encouraging and promoting new industries and of interesting parties to locate here. He is actively associated with the movement which has for its purpose to attract population toward this city and has been successful to promote the growth of his community along that line. He is popular in fraternal circles as well as in his business and social connections and there are few men in his city who are more widely or favorably known. His many estimable traits of character together with his geniality and warm cordiality have won for him an extended list of friends and with them he is a prime favorite. He is a valuable man in the community, of which he is a foremost member and his career, of which he may justly be proud, has given him an extended acquaintance throughout the state.

CHARLES R. LA FOLLETTE, who resides eight miles southwest of Gervais, was born in Marion county, Oregon, July 8, 1880, on the home place, where he is now residing, his parents being A. M. and Margaret (Townsend) LaFollette. The father was born in Crawfordsville, Indiana, in 1845, and is a son of David LaFollette, who is of French lineage. At the age of nine years A. M. LaFollette left Indiana with his parents and crossed the plains with ox teams in 1854. After arriving in the west they settled first in Calaveras county, California, where they remained for three years farming rented land. At the end of that time they came to Oregon and located near Dallas, where they again engaged in agricultural pursuits on rented land. Desiring to take up a farm of his own David LaFollette removed to Mission bottom and took up a donation land claim of three hundred and twenty acres, upon which he resided for twenty-five years. During this time he proved himself a successful agriculturist, and so cultivated his land that it became one of the most highly productive farms in the district. At the end of twenty-five years' work he removed to Salem, where he lived retired for ten years before finally settling in McMinnville, where his death occurred in 1909.

A. M. LaFollette, the father of our subject, was one of seven children, the others being: Irene, who was the wife of George Sopingfind, deceased, and who later married L. T. Griffith, of Weiser, Idaho; Susan, who is the wife of Perry Gobbett of Stockton, California; Ollie, who is married to H. W. Scott of Forest Grove, Oregon; Brant, deceased; Emma, the wife of Simon Wall of Gaston, Oregon; and Mary, deceased. Mrs. A. M. LaFollette was the eldest of eight children, the others being: Josephine, the wife of William Reeves, of Independence, Oregon; Melinda, who is married to John Wickham of Ione, Oregon; Marion, a resident of Portland, Oregon; LaFayette, of Salem, Oregon; Amanda, who is the wife of G. Lake, who is living in Salem, Oregon; Ann, also a resident of Salem; and Minnie, who is married to John Dimmick of Hubbard, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. A. M. LaFollette were married in Yamhill county, and to this union nine children were born: Joseph W., of Salem, Oregon, who has two daughters; Mary, deceased; Perry L., who is a resident of Cornelius, Oregon, and who is married and has two children; Marion, deceased; Clyde M., a resident of Amity, Oregon, who is married and has five children; Ina, the wife of Robert Cole of Salem; Charles R., the subject of this review; Elva M., who is married to Brith A. Aspenwall of Brooks, Oregon; and Grace M., who is residing at home with her father and mother.

Charles R. LaFollette started upon his independent career at the age of twenty-three years. For two years he was employed by the month on a farm, but at the end of that time went to Washington, D. C., where he served as messenger in the United States senate. During this service he had the opportunity and privilege of meeting many of the men who are making our national history. After remaining in this position for three years he returned to the home farm and began making a careful study of the most profitable and advanced methods of agriculture. He soon rented a tract which contained three hundred and twenty acres, of which he has had complete charge for the last three years. During this time he has been unusually successful in raising grain and also in stock-raising. The farm is well equipped with modern buildings and presents an attractive appearance.

On the 22d of November, 1905, Mr. LaFollette was married to Linnie LaChapell of Forest Grove. Her birth occurred in 1885, and she is a daughter of John and Emma LaChapell. Mr. and Mrs. LaFollette are the parents of two children: Charles R., whose birth occurred on the 25th of August, 1906; and Evelyn Frances, who was born September 17, 1910.

Mr. LaFollette gives his political allegiance to the republican party. He holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal church and also in the Masonic order. He has proven his worth and ability as a farmer, and because of his energy and progressiveness his career promises to be most successful.

SAMUEL BALL is a true son of the American northwest and is exemplifying in his life the sturdy qualities which made his parents, when a newly married couple, turn their faces toward the west and, then, when fortune had been unkind and the ravages of the climate had destroyed their stock, caused them to start over again with no assets other than a great determination and a dominating faith. Samuel Ball is a native of Oregon, born in Douglas county, July 5, 1867.

His parents were Zachariah C. and Amanda (Eels) Ball, the former a native of Illinois and the latter of Iowa. Both crossed the plains to Oregon with ox teams and were married at Jeff Chapman's place on Deer creek, Douglas county, about the year 1860. They settled at the head of Oak creek, where they lived for two years and acquired a small herd of stock, which was their only fortune. The severe winter of 1861-2 destroyed their entire herd with the exception of one cow, and they subsequently moved to the South Umpqua river, five miles southeast of Canyonville, where they took up a homestead, upon which the father died November 1, 1898. His wife survived him until March 27, 1905.

Samuel Ball was reared on his father's farm and educated in the common schools of the district. In his boyhood days he worked at ranching, receiving for his labors a small salary. When the railroad was built through Douglas county he worked as teamster in a construction gang and was the first man to drive into the Buck Rock tunnel. In 1887 Samuel Ball settled on a ranch owned by J. L. Clough on the South Umpqua river, operating the same as a renter for two years. He then removed to his father's place near Canyonville and remained there for one year. He spent the next eleven years on the John Arzner ranch, two miles north of the town of Riddle, subsequently moving to the place which he now rents and operates. This property is one of the largest ranches in this section of the country and lies two miles south of Riddle. It is owned by H. Woolenburg. Samuel Ball owns one hundred and one acres of the richest farm land in Oregon, four miles south of Riddle, near the ranch where he resides. He recently planted thirteen hundred and twenty-five prune trees upon this tract and takes a keen interest in their cultivation.

On January 12, 1887, Mr. Ball was united in marriage to Miss Sarah C. Buttler, who came as a child to Douglas county from Illinois. They are the parents of seven children: Ralph H., who lives with his wife in Riddle, Oregon; Fred, Elbert R., Ethel and Marvin H., at home; Helen M., deceased, a twin sister of Marvin H., and Juanita M., who lives with her parents.

Samuel Ball is a staunch democrat and a firm believer in the policies of that party. He takes no very active part in public affairs but served for two terms as supervisor of roads. He is a member of Riddle Lodge, F. & A. M. of Azalia Lodge, I. O. O. F. He is active in the affairs of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Samuel Ball loves the outdoor life, the great stretches of ranch lands and the cool, bracing climate of Oregon. He knows the west in all its aspects and is the more loyal to it because of that knowledge.

OSCAR A. ERICKSON. Although a young man and just fairly launched in his life pursuit, Oscar A. Erickson, of Warren, has won enviable standing and gives promise of attaining high rank in the business world. He is a native of Columbia county, born March 4, 1887, and can claim descent from good Swedish stock in both branches of the family. His parents are Joseph and Cora Erickson, both of whom were born in Sweden. The father came to America in 1860 and after spending a short time in Michigan resumed his journey westward and established a home in Colorado. In 1884, believing that conditions were more favorable in Oregon than he observed further southward, he came with his family to Columbia county and has since engaged in ranching here. There are ten children in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Erickson: Joseph, engaged in the mercantile business at Warren; Anna, who is the wife of G. Olson, of Portland; Ida, who married J. B. Lovegren; Oscar A., of this review; Otto, at home; Alice, bookkeeper for J. Erickson & Sons; Charles; Walter; Bertha, who is the wife of J. E. Monteith; and Erwin.

Oscar A. Erickson attended the common schools and as he grew to manhood assisted his father upon the home ranch. However, his interest was attracted to mercantile life rather than farming or stock-raising and he became associated with his brother Joseph in business at Warren under the title of J. Erickson & Sons. The firm carries a general mercantile stock, valued at fourteen thousand dollars, the store being one of the most attractive outside of Portland and Astoria in western Oregon. The merchandise is carefully selected and, as the business is excellently managed, the patronage is steadily increasing.

On the 28th of May, 1911, Mr. Erickson was married to Miss Pearl Lindsey, who was born in Idaho, a daughter of E. C. and Susan (Drake) Lindsey, both of whom are now living. Fraternally Mr. Erickson is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Improved Order of Red Men, and he is an earnest believer in the principles of those beneficent organizations. Politically he adheres to the republican party as the one best adapted to subserve the interests of the people of the entire country. A young man of pleasing appearance and address, he readily makes friends and in their opinion there is no doubt as to his continued advancement in business and social circles.

MARTIN RUSSELL is one of the successful farmers of Coos county, his highly developed ranch of eighty acres being located near Cooston, where he is successfully engaged in general farming. He was born in Illinois, December 2, 1867, and is a son of John and Mary (Nelson) Russell. The father died in Illinois when the subject of this review was an infant. The parents were natives of Denmark and shortly after their marriage emigrated to America, settling in Illinois. Their family included five children.

Martin Russell was reared at home and shortly after his father's death returned with his mother to her native country, where as a boy of nine years he earned a living by herding sheep and cattle. He learned the blacksmith's trade and at the age of sixteen subsequently returned to the United States and settled in California, where he was engaged in the pursuit of his trade for many years, during which time he owned his own shop and also was engaged in work for others in various shops in that state. He later removed to Coos county, settling in Marshfield, where he remained for five years, but changed his location in 1898 to Libby, Oregon, where he was engaged in mining until March, 1911, at which time he purchased eighty acres of land located near Cooston, upon which he moved and has since been devoting his attention to general farming and to the operation of a small but successful dairy plant.

On May 23, 1896, Mr. Russell was united in marriage to Miss Amelia Crawford, a native of Oregon and a daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Wolf) Crawford. Mr. and Mrs. Russell are the parents of seven children: Martha, who was born July 20, 1897, and is now a pupil in the public schools; Ronald, who was born August 15, 1899, and is attending the public schools; Martin, born in 1900, also attending school; Roy, born May 30, 1902; Mabel, born July 7, 1904; Lillian, born June 12, 1907; and Archie, born July 14, 1910.

Mr. Russell is affiliated with the republican party and is a member of the Masonic order. He is one of the enterprising men of the section in which he resides and his highly developed farm of eighty acres is among the most valuable of its kind in his section of the state.

EMANUEL EPTON is engaged in the real-estate business in Portland, largely handling his own properties which constitute both business and residence holdings. He was born November 19, 1862, in Canada, and in the years, in which he has been connected with business affairs has gradually made his way westward until he is now permanently located on the coast. His parents were John and Elizabeth (Edwards) Epton, who were natives of England, as were also their parents. The father and mother of our subject were married when the former was twenty-three years of age, and immediately afterward they sailed from their native country to Canada, settling near Toronto, where the father purchased four hundred acres of land and there carried on farming for thirty-one years. He was also engaged in the meat business and lived a life of well directed industry and thrift, but eventually disposed of his farm in Canada and in 1880 went to North Dakota, where he purchased two hundred and twenty acres. There he took up the active work of cultivating the soil and continued to engage in farming in that locality for twenty years. Once more he sold out and retired to private life, making his home in Neche, North Dakota, until he came to Oregon in 1905. In that year he settled in Portland and purchased city property, which he occupied until the time of his wife's death on the 5th of March, 1909. He then sold his home and now resides with his children, who live in different parts of the country. To Mr. and Mrs. John Epton were born eleven children: Samuel, who makes his home at Aurora, North Dakota, and has three children; Mary, who died in infancy; Elizabeth, the wife of John Welch, of Canada, and the mother of thirteen children; John, who is married and resides in Seattle; Emanuel, of this review; Carrie, who became the wife of Andy Darling, of North Dakota, and died leaving three children; Alice, the wife of Michael Theodore, of Neche, North Dakota, by whom she has two children; Lucy the deceased wife of Jacob Chopper, of Manitoba, Canada, and the mother of two children; Eliza, who married James McGregor, of Manitoba, Canada, and has eight children; Emma, the wife of Alexander McGregor, of North Dakota, and the mother of seven children; and William, of North Dakota, who has six children.

During the boyhood and youth of Emanuel Epton he met the usual experiences that fall to the lot of the lad who is reared upon a farm. He started out in life on his own account at the age of twelve years. He subsequently took up a homestead in North Dakota and purchased one hundred and sixty acres, making in all three hundred and twenty acres, which he cultivated and improved for twelve years. He then became actively engaged in the butchering business and as he prospered, he added to his landed possessions, purchasing in 1895 six hundred and forty acres, which he retained, together with his original farm until after he came to Oregon in that year. He has since sold his property in that state but in 1907 he purchased six hundred and forty acres near Manitoba, Canada, which he still owns.

On removing westward to Oregon, Mr. Epton purchased six acres of land at the corner of Burnside and Seventy-third street in Portland, and for two years engaged in farming that tract. He also invested in a large number of lots and turned his attention to the real-estate business. He has made many improvements on his property and has secured a good clientele in his operations in real estate. He today holds property to the value of seventy-five thousand dollars, including both business blocks and residences. He is thoroughly informed concerning realty values in Portland and his judicious investments have enabled him to make profitable sales.

Mr. Epton was united in marriage to Miss Emma Somerset, who was born October 16, 1860, a daughter of John and Margaret (Daly) Somerset. The wedding was celebrated June 5, 1886, and to this marriage have been born seven children. Hurl Glenville, born November 28, 1887, has had a business-college education and lives at home. Festus Edwards, born in 1890, pursued his education in the public schools, is married and has one child. Myrtle Irene, born in 1891, has studied in the high school and is now at home. Ferdinand E., born August 9, 1893, has had a business-college education and is now employed in the Hibernia Bank at Portland. Chester, born in 1895, has a business-college education. Lula, born in July, 1897, and Seil, born March 9, 1901, are both attending school.

In his political views Mr. Epton has always been a republican since age conferred upon him the right of franchise and while not an office seeker he served for two terms as supervisor of his county in North Dakota. He prefers, however, that his public service shall be done as a private citizen and in many ways he has contributed to general progress. His religious faith is that of the Baptist church, to which his wife and children also belong. Fraternally he is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to the subordinate lodge, the encampment and the Daughters of Rebekah. He is also connected with the Independent Order of Foresters. He resides at No. 73 East Seventy-fourth street, in that portion of Portland known as Montavilla.

WILLIAM RICHARD MCKAY. One of the most prominent and successful farmers of Marion county is William Richard McKay, who resides four and one-half miles northeast of St. Paul, Oregon. Born in 1849, a native of Marion county, he is a son of James and Cecelia (Lawson) McKay, the father a native of Ireland and the mother of Scotland. The parents were married in Scotland and on coming to America they settled in Illinois, but in 1847 they removed to Oregon, locating near St. Paul. The father then went to California, where he accumulated a fortune in gold mining, making as much as three hundred dollars per day when he had to retire on account of ill health. He then returned to his family in Oregon, settling on a donation claim, and bought the Old Mission saw and grist mill, which he operated for thirty-five years. At the time of his death he owned property in a great many of the cities of Oregon. His estate was valued at over twenty-five thousand dollars but was really worth much more. Fifteen years before his death he moved to Portland, where he passed away at the advanced age of eighty years. In his family were eight children: James and William, who died while crossing the plains; William Richard, of this review; Mary, who lives in Portland; John, of St. Paul, Oregon; Kate, who is the wife of John McCormick, of Woodburn; James, deceased; and Cecelia, who is the wife of John Kirk, of St. Paul.

William R. McKay started out in life of his own accord at the age of twenty-one. He went to California and worked for several years on the Glen ranch and then, returning home he helped to manage his father's estate. In 1885 he moved to the farm where he now lives and where he has one of the finest homes in this locality. His residence is a large, two-story house, beautifully surrounded by shade trees and situated on a tract of eight hundred acres, five hundred of which are under cultivation. He is engaged in raising wheat, oats and hops. He also raises live stock, including horses, Jersey cows, Poland China hogs, sheep and Angora goats.

In 1885, at St. Louis, Oregon, Mr. McKay was united in marriage to Miss Anna Kavanaugh, a daughter of Daniel and Catharine (Doyle) Kavanaugh. She was born in 1861 and was the second in order of birth in a family of eight children. The others are: Andrew L., of Portland; Sarah, the wife of Elmer Savage, of Salem, Oregon; Edward, of Gervais; Mattie, the wife of A. L. Clarke, of Portland; John P., of Portland, who is judge of the third district court; Henry J., a physician in Albany, Oregon; and Mary, who lives with her mother in Portland. Mr. and Mrs. McKay have become the parents of five children. Stanley J., born in 1886, lives in Portland and is connected with a paving company on street work. He has a college education. Arthur W., born in 1888, is married and has one child. He lives on his farm near St. Paul and is also a college graduate. Stella is a sister in a convent in Oswego, Oregon. Justin L. lives at home with his parents and has a college education. Albert is now in college in Portland.

In politics Mr. McKay is a staunch republican, believing the principles of this party to be most conducive to good government, and in religion he strictly adheres to the Roman Catholic faith. He has always taken an active interest in educational matters and has given much help toward that end in his community. He is a strong advocate of good roads. He is widely known as a public-spirited man, who has the welfare of the community at heart and may well be called one of the most prominent citizens of his county.

A. J. COLVIN. Everything that is useful in the world is the product of labor, either of mind or body, and too much prominence is apt to be attached to attainment along scientific and professional lines at the expense of those men who have labored earnestly and sincerely in a humble calling and have raised themselves by their own efforts to honored positions among their fellowmen. A man of this class is A. J. Colvin, who began life as a laborer and is now manager of one of the most important box factories in Glendale, Oregon, and owner of a half interest in one of the largest hardware stores in that city. He was born in Nebraska on August 16, 1877, a son of Henry and Emma (Nelson) Colvin. His father was a native of Ireland who came to America when he was a young boy and located in Illinois, where he married. He later removed to Nebraska and died in that state. The mother was a native of Indiana and after her husband's death moved to Oregon and died in Grants Pass. They were the parents of the following children: R. J., who is a resident of California; Susan, who married O. Ranford, of Vancouver, Washington; George, who resides in Josephine county, Oregon; Henry, who makes his home in Glendale; A. J., of this review; and Ellen, who is deceased.

A. J. Colvin's educational opportunities were limited. He attended the common schools of his district until he was sixteen years old, when he began to work in a box factory. He remained with the same firm for fifteen years, learning the business and rising rapidly through various positions until at the time of his resignation he was general superintendent. He became well known in manufacturing circles of Glendale, where his uprightness of character and strict integrity won him many friends. At the present time he is acting as manager of an important box factory in Glendale and is also owner of a half interest in a local hardware store. He is an extensive owner of real estate and is engaged in business along that line. He owns an interest in a large lumber camp near Glendale and has five acres of farm land under cultivation in Grants Pass.

In 1906 Mr. Colvin was united in marriage to Miss Mary Bartle, a native of Oregon and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Bartle, residents of Portland. Mr. and Mrs. Colvin are members of the Presbyterian church. He is a consistent supporter of the republican party and has been active in local public affairs. He is at present mayor of the city of Glendale and is making a remarkable record as an efficient public servant. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic lodge at Grants Pass and his wife holds membership in the Order of the Eastern Star and is now one of the conductors in that organization. Mr. Colvin is one of the foremost citizens of Glendale today. He has carved out his own career and has risen from a humble capacity to that of mayor of his city and is a man prominent in its business and social circles.

EDWARD LEE RAYBURN is one of Oregon's self-made men who, prompted by laudable ambition, has wisely used his time, talents and opportunities in attaining the present creditable position, which he occupies in business circles of Multnomah county. He now makes his home in Lents and is numbered among Oregon's native sons his birth having occurred in Corvallis, March 15, 1861. His parents were Stephenson and Jane (Higginbotham) Rayburn, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Iowa. The father left Kentucky when nineteen years of age and thereafter made his own way in the world. He went first to Illinois, where he resided for several years and then removed to Iowa, where he met and married Jane Higginbotham. They began their domestic life in Iowa, where they remained for several years and then crossed the plains with ox teams in 1852, settling in Lafayette, Oregon. They remained there for a short time and then went to Corvallis, where the father engaged in carpentering and contracting, in which business he continued until his retirement from active life. His death occurred in Idaho in 1905, at which time he was visiting his son, William Francis Rayburn. He was then seventy-nine years of age. He had long survived his wife, who passed away during the early boyhood of her son, Edward L. They were the parents of twelve children but six died while crossing the plains to the northwest. Those who reached maturity were: James W., who is a practicing attorney of Seattle, Washington; William Francis, a resident of Moscow, Idaho; Charles D., who is living in Pendleton, Oregon; Edward L., of this review; Ella, the wife of E. O. Chamness, of Portland; and Fred W., who is living in Los Angeles, California.

The story of the west is a familiar one to Edward Lee Rayburn, who has always resided on the Pacific coast and has been an interested witness of the growth and progress that has here occurred. After attending public school he spent a year in Smith College and then borrowed enough money to go to eastern Oregon. He secured a position in a grocery store in Pendleton, where he spent one winter, after which he went to Pilot Rock, where he worked in a large general mercantile establishment for three years. On the expiration of that period he returned to Corvallis, where he entered college, studying stenography for a year. He afterward entered his brother's law office and pursued the study of law under his brother and Colonel John Kelly for two years, at the same time acting as stenographer and clerk in their office. At the end of that period he came to Portland at the request of ex-Mayor Rowe and entered the employ of the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company, with which he continued for three years. The road was then sold to the Union Pacific, after which he became connected with the Northern Pacific Railroad in the passenger department under A. D. Charlton. He continued in that position for seventeen years as stenographer, ticket clerk and city passenger agent. He was also for seven years traveling passenger agent for the road. Thus gradually he worked his way upward, his ability and energy winning him recognition and his fidelity gaining for him the confidence of all concerned. In 1907 his health failed him and he came to Lents, where he owned seventy town lots. Here he owned a general store, which he has since conducted. His business has prospered and his trade is extensive, requiring the assistance of three clerks.

Mr. Rayburn was married October 5, 1888, in Benton county, Oregon, to Miss Edith Buckingham, the wedding being celebrated on her father's old donation land claim. He was one of the early pioneers of this state and one of the first legislators of Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Rayburn have been born five children. Harold Edward, born in 1890, had completed a public-school course and was preparing for the practice of law, when in 1906 he passed away. Fay Buckingham and Frank Rodell, twins, were born February 6, 1892. They completed the grade work in the public schools of Portland and spent a year in the high school. They are now equal partners with their father in his business and as soon as they are capable enough to handle the store they are to have full charge. Both attended business college and are enterprising, progressive young men, whose record is most creditable to the family. George Buckingham, born July 5, 1903 is attending school. Edith Lora, born March 3, 1909, completes the family.

In his political views Mr. Rayburn is a republican, staunchly supporting the principles of the party. He is not a politician in the sense of office seeking, but believes firmly in the political position which he advocates and is therefore giving to the cause loyal support. The only office he has held has been that of deputy sheriff, in which he has continued for five years. Fraternally he is connected with the Woodmen of the World. He is president of the Commercial Club, which has been the vital force in introducing and promoting various improvements in Lents. Mr. Rayburn and three others stood good for the electric lights that have been installed on the streets here, and his influence and aid are ever on the side of advancement and improvement, along material, intellectual and moral lines.

A. S. SKYLES, manager of the Astoria plant of the Townsend Creamery Company, has in this capacity manifested excellent executive ability and sound judgment and is a leading and prominent resident of his town. His birth occurred in southeastern Iowa on the 5th of November, 1869, his parents being Thomas and Elizabeth (Conee) Skyles. The father was born in Illinois on the 28th of February, 1834, while the mother's natal day was April 23, 1830. Thomas Skyles, who followed farming throughout his active business career, is now living retired at Fort Madison, Iowa. His wife was called to her final rest on the 2d of July, 1910. Benjamin Skyles, the paternal grandfather of our subject, was a veteran of the Mexican war and one of the earliest pioneers of Iowa, settling in that state in 1840. The maternal grandfather, Reuben Conee was one of the first legislators of Iowa. The Skyles family has been represented in every war of the country. Unto Thomas and Elizabeth Skyles were born six children, as follows: William, who resides on a farm in Illinois; John, also an agriculturist of that state; Mary E., at home; H. A., who is engaged in the real-estate business at Fort Madison, Iowa; A. S., of this review; and Anna, the wife of Alex Bullard, Jr., and resides on a farm in Iowa.

A. S. Skyles obtained his early education in the public schools of Fort Madison, Iowa, subsequently attended Johnson's Business College and then pursued a post-graduate course at Ames, Iowa. When a young man of twenty-two years he removed to Yamhill county, Oregon, where he embarked in the creamery business on the 25th of April, 1892, conducting the enterprise for six years and shipping his products to Portland. His creamery was the only one in the county at that time and twenty-five miles distant from any other. Subsequently he spent eighteen months in the gold mines of eastern Oregon as manager of a transfer, freight and stage outfit. On the 1st of April, 1899, he became connected with the Townsend Creamery Company, installing their plant at Nehalem, Tillamook county. On the 7th of May following he installed a plant at Astoria and has since remained its manager. He makes both butter and ice cream and is a wholesale dealer in these products. The Townsend Creamery Company has eight branches and has the largest butter plants on the coast. Mr. Skyles is one of the stockholders of the concern and his efforts have contributed to its success in no small degree.

On the 6th of September, 1895, Mr. Skyles was united in marriage to Miss Nora A. Baker, a native of Keokuk county, Iowa, and a daughter of Captain D. C. Baker and Virtue A. (Milton) Baker, who were born in the years 1833 and 1838 respectively. The father, who was a captain in the Civil war, connected with the Fortieth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, passed away on the 25th of February, 1911. The mother had died in November, 1890. Mr. and Mrs. Skyles have three children: Theron G., born in Yamhill county, and Norman B. and Elizabeth Ann, both born in Astoria. Mrs. Skyles traces her ancestry by three lines back to Revolutionary times and is an applicant for membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution.

In politics Mr. Skyles is independent, supporting men and measures rather than party. He is a member of the school board and also holds the responsible position of president of the Chamber of Commerce. His religious faith is indicated by membership in the Presbyterian church, of which he is one of the trustees. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He is a thoroughgoing business man, improving his opportunities for the attainment of financial success, and his diligence has been the source of his prosperity.

ALEXANDER WHITE. The lumber industry has been the chief source of revenue in Oregon and the timber tracts of the state yet exceed in extent and value those of any other state in the Union. Men of marked business ability have engaged in the manufacture and sale of lumber and success has crowned their enterprise and intelligently directed efforts. Among those now well known in connection with the lumber trade of Oregon is Alexander White, treasurer of the Westport Lumber Company which is operating one of the largest mills between Portland and Astoria. His life record began in Ontario, Canada, on the 16th of May, 1864, his parents being John and Margaret (McLaughlin) White. The father was born in Glasgow, Scotland, and the mother in Toronto, Canada, where they were married and made their home for a few years. Subsequently they resided at Onawa, Iowa, for twenty years, and went thence to Idagrove, Iowa, where they spent the succeeding decade. Their next place of residence was at Breckenridge, Missouri, where the father died December 27, 1900. The mother afterward made her way westward, settling at Santa Cruz, California, where she is still living. In their family were three sons and a daughter:

A. S. SKYLES

Archibald, who died in South Dakota; Daniel, who passed away in Idagrove, Iowa; Mary A., the wife of M. D. Bardwell, of Santa Cruz, California; and Alexander.

Alexander White was a youth of fourteen years when he undertook the task of providing for his own support and he early came to realize that unfaltering industry and perseverance constitute the surest foundation upon which to build success. He secured a clerkship in a hardware store and that he was capable and efficient is indicated by the fact that he remained there for about five years. He afterward clerked in a retail lumber yard for ten months and subsequently was appointed manager of the S. H. Braman Lumber Company at Mapleton, Iowa, remaining in charge of the business at that place for about five years. His thrift enabled him during that period to save from his earnings, a sum, sufficient to purchase an interest in a hardware store, and for a year he was in partnership with S. W. Harms in the conduct of a business of that character at Idagrove, Iowa. On selling out he accepted the position of manager with John Powell at Algona, Iowa, where he worked for several years. He next removed to Breckenridge, Missouri, where he purchased an interest in a hardware, lumber, coal and implement business and at the same time handled real estate, remaining at that place for three years. The west proving to him an irresistible attraction, he left the Mississippi valley for Chehalis, Washington, where he began sawing and manufacturing lumber, continuing in that business for five years when he disposed of his interests, preparatory to removing to Portland. He lived for a year and one half in the Rose city and then purchased an interest in a mill at Bay City, Oregon, which he has since operated. With a partner, he also purchased a tract of timber land, and a logging camp at Quincy, Oregon, and organized the Beaver Logging Company. Since that time he has been developing the business and manufacturing lumber quite extensively. He is president of that company and, in 1909, became the treasurer and manager of the Westport Lumber Company which has one of the largest mills between Astoria and Portland. His interests are extensive and his business is growing substantially. The result is gratifying and his ability is evidenced in the prosperity which has come to him.

On the 6th of February, 1902, Mr. White was married to Miss Gertrude V. Billings, who was born in Butler county, Iowa, February 28, 1869, a daughter of George W. and Ada M. (Cramer) Billings, the former born in the state of New York and the latter near Hamilton, Ontario. With their respective parents, Mr. and Mrs. Billings removed to the middle west in early life and were married in Iowa. For some years they resided in that state and then went to Rockford, Illinois, where they lived for twenty years. They afterward spent a few years in Minnesota and thence came to the Pacific coast, settling at Upland, California, whence they later went to Portland where they are still living. The father engaged in farming in Iowa and conducted a hardware store in Illinois but is now living retired.

In considering the political situation of the country Alexander White has been led to give his support to the republican party. He became a member of the Masonic lodge at Algona, Iowa, and served as past master for two years, and is now affiliated with the order in the west. During his residence in Oregon he has readily recognized his business opportunities and as the years have gone by he has so utilized the advantages that have come to him for investment, that he has become well known and prosperous. He never hesitates to venture where favoring opportunity leads the way and the steps in his orderly progression are easily discernible. As the architect of his own fortunes he has built wisely and well and the course that he has pursued indicates the possibilities for business development and success in the west.

FRED W. FIELDHOUSE, who is the proprietor of a jewelry store at Gresham, Multnomah county, was born in England, February 22, 1863, a son of John and Maria (Teasdale) Fieldhouse. The parents were both natives of England, were married in that country and came to America in 1869, settling in Wisconsin. They resided in that state until 1907, when they removed to Oregon, settling in Multnomah county, where the mother passed away in 1908. The father is now living there, having reached the age of seventy years. All his life he has followed the occupation of masonry and contracting. In his family were four children, the eldest of whom is the subject of this sketch. The others were: A. H., who died in Wisconsin in 1903; and A. J. and Mrs. Nellie Gullikson, both of Gresham.

Fred W. Fieldhouse being only six years of age when brought by his parents to America, received his early training in the district schools of Wisconsin, and since that time he has acquired a thorough business education. He remained under the parental roof until twenty-three years of age, when he went into partnership with his father in masonry and contracting work in Wisconsin, in which occupation he was engaged for eleven years. He then entered into the jewelry business in that state, remaining there until 1907, when he came to Oregon, settling at Gresham, where he established his present jewelry store.

In 1885 Mr. Fieldhouse wedded Miss Louisa Wilkins who was born in Wisconsin in 1860, a daughter of Gottlieb and Louisa Wilkins, both of whom were natives of Germany. The parents were married in that country, and on coming to America settled in Chicago, Illinois. Later they removed to Wisconsin and afterwards to Oklahoma, where the father passed away in 1903. The mother then came to Oregon, and is now living at Gresham. In their family were eight children: Sophie, deceased; Mrs. Fieldhouse; Mrs. Annie Munder, of Clackamas county; Charles, of Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs.

Charlotte Martins, of Gresham; William, of Montana; Gottlieb, of Oklahoma; and Emma of Cottage Grove, Oregon. Mrs. Fieldhouse is well educated, is an accomplished musician, and was a teacher previous to her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Fieldhouse have an adopted daughter, Florence, who is nineteen years of age. She received her education partly in Wisconsin and completed the same in the Gresham high school. She also has had a thorough musical education. She at the present time, is teaching school, and has been in that profession since she was sixteen years of age.

In politics Mr. Fieldhouse is a republican and fraternally he is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America. Both he and his family are affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal church. During his residence here he has won the respect and esteem of all with whom he has come in contact, and he is considered one of the progressive and successful business men of Gresham.

W. C. HEMBREE. The first home of W. C. Hembree in Oregon was a log cabin. Today he is the owner of the finest residence in McMinnville and is now living retired, for the years of his close connection with farming interests brought to him a substantial competence, enabling him now to rest from further labors. He has passed the eighty-second milestone on life's journey, his birth having occurred in Warren county, Tennessee, in 1829. His parents were Jordon J. and Sarah Hembree, both natives of Tennessee, whence they crossed the plains in 1843, making the journey with ox teams. At that time W. C. Hembree, a youth of fourteen years, drove one of the teams and his was one of the first wagons that came clear through to a point west of the Cascade mountains. The family settled in Yamhill county, Oregon, but this was long before the admission of the state into the Union. The father secured a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres and W. C. Hembree took a claim of three hundred and twenty acres. The parents continued to occupy the old homestead until called to their final rest. The father built a log cabin upon his place and with characteristic energy began the development of the farm, upon which not a furrow had been turned nor an improvement made when he took possession. Year by year his labors wrought substantial results in converting the wild land into productive fields, from which good harvests were gathered. It was in 1868 that Jordon J. Hembree passed away, having for thirteen years survived his wife, who died in 1855. To them were born twelve children, of whom four sons are still living.

W. C. Hembree pursued a common-school education in his native state ere the start was made for the Pacific coast. He well remembers the many interesting incidents of the long journey across the prairies, over the plains and through the mountain passes until the family reached their destination. The slow-plodding oxen covered only a few miles each day and at times the road was little more than a trail but after weary months of travel the journey was ended and then the family faced the difficult conditions, which are ever to be found on the frontier. Mr. Hembree shared in all of the hardships and privations incident to such a life and early became familiar with the arduous task of developing a new farm. In time the land which he owned became very valuable, owing to the improvements which he placed upon it and also to the fact that the country became settled. Year after year he continued the work of tilling the soil, and his labors were rewarded by good harvests. Thus his income increased as time passed by and at length with a substantial competence he retired to private life. He is still the owner of two productive and valuable farms in Yamhill county, while his home in McMinnville is the finest residence in that city.

In June, 1861, Mr. Hembree was united in marriage to Miss Nancy A. Garrison, a native of Iowa, who made the journey across the plains at an early day. By her marriage she became the mother of nine children: Rose, the wife of W. E. Stevens, a resident of California; Walter L., who is living in McMinnville; C. P., whose home is in Polk county; Nellie, the wife of George Housman, of Portland; Eva G., the wife of J. J. Rector, whose home is in Brownsville, Oregon; Maud, the wife of George Morrison, of Hot Springs, Alaska; and three who are deceased. The wife and mother passed away in 1892 and later Mr. Hembree married Mrs. Nancy J. Crisp, who was the widow of M. R. Crisp and a native of Kentucky. Her parents were William and Lucinda (Thompson) Beagle, who were likewise natives of Kentucky, whence they made the long journey across the plains in 1843. Mr. Beagle secured a donation claim in Washington county, Oregon, whence in 1854 he removed to California, spending eight years in that state. He then returned to Oregon, living in Umatilla county until his death, which occurred in Pendleton, Oregon, in 1888. His wife survived him for about ten years, passing away in 1898. In their family were ten children, of whom six are now living, including Mrs. Hembree, who by her first marriage, to Mr. Crisp, became the mother of eight children: B. H., who is living in eastern Oregon; Cynthia, the wife of W. C. Tilton, a resident of Seattle, Washington; Bell, the wife of E. R. Wheeler, also of Seattle; and five, who are deceased. The death of Mr. Crisp occurred in 1886.

In his political views Mr. Hembree has always been a democrat and has filled a number of local offices, the duties of which he discharged with promptness and fidelity. He is a member of the Grange and has long been closely associated with the agricultural interests of this part of the state, where he still owns farming property although he now leaves the active work of his farms to others. There are few residents in the state who have remained longer within its borders than Mr. Hembree, for through sixty-eight years he has lived in Oregon and is, therefore, largely acquainted with its history from pioneer times down to the present. When he came here the Indians were far more numerous than the white settlers and at different periods occasioned considerable trouble to the pioneers, who were attempting to plant the seeds of civilization in the soil of the northwest. Portland at the time of his arrival was a tiny village and it was believed that Oregon city would become the more prominent place. Many of the now thriving towns and cities of the state had not yet been founded and the great forest tracts which have been a source of gigantic income to the state were still standing in their primeval strength. Mr. Hembree has lived to see remarkable changes and in the community, where he has resided, has always borne his part in the work of public progress and improvement. That his business interests have been carefully conducted is indicated in the success which has crowned his efforts, for he started out in life here empty-handed.

JAMES E. BLACKBURN. Montavilla owes its development and improvement in no small measure to the efforts of James E. Blackburn, a well known contractor and builder, whose handiwork has found expression in many of the leading structures of this city, which was but a small and unimproved district at the time of his arrival here, but has grown rapidly and along substantial lines. Mr. Blackburn was born, November 10, 1865, in Muskingum county, Ohio, his parents being Thomas Jefferson and Nancy (Crawford) Blackburn, both of whom were natives of Ohio. The former was a son of James and Mary Blackburn, who were born in the Empire state, while the maternal grandparents of our subject came from Pennsylvania. To Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Jefferson Blackburn were born the children of whom short mention follows. Athea, deceased, was the wife of Russell Prondy. Alta became the wife of Joseph Prondy, of Ohio, and they have five children, Cheney, Homer, Frantz, Russell and Paul. Mary, Lucy and Clara are deceased. James E. is our subject. Elma is the wife of Fred Straus, of Guernsey county, Ohio, and has two children, Grace and Gladys.

James E. Blackburn spent his youthful days in his native county and after acquiring a public-school education started out to make his own way in the world. He was sixteen years of age when he began learning the carpenter's trade with his father and at the age of twenty felt qualified to assume the responsibilities of providing entirely for his own support. On leaving home, he went first to Hutchinson, Kansas, where he resided for three years and was married. He afterward went to Spokane, Washington, where he spent two years, and next came to Portland. In 1891 he established his home in Montavilla, where he purchased land and erected thereon his present residence. He began buying and selling property and doing a contracting business. When he took up his abode in Montavilla there was no car line there and the town was in its embryonic condition. He has witnessed its growth and development, noting the great strides it has taken in the adoption of modern improvements as well as in expansion. With its upbuilding he has been closely, prominently and helpfully associated. He erected practically all of the schoolhouses and churches of the town, also built the broom factory and many dwellings not only in Montavilla but all over Portland. He built up a large business and as opportunities presented themselves made judicious investment in property, and is now the owner of twelve lots and two business houses, in addition to a tract of seven acres inside the city limits. He also owns other residence property here and a half section of timber land in Josephine county.

At Hutchinson, Kansas, on the 23d of February, 1889, Mr. Blackburn was united in marriage to Miss Alta Woodruff, a daughter of P. J. Woodruff. She is one of a family of four children. Addie Woodruff, her sister, is the wife of Joseph Clark, of Pendleton, Oregon, and they have six children, Paul, Grace, Jane, Fae, Hazel and Earl. Emmie Woodruff is the wife of Isaac Perkins, of Portland, and they have five children, Floyd, Earl, Raymond, Ruby and Helen. Luther Woodruff, of San Bernardino, California, is married and has two children, Lora and Frieda.

Mr. and Mrs. Blackburn have been blessed with six children. Lula is deceased. Mabel, born March 9, 1892, has completed a high-school and a commercial course. Lura, born March 16, 1894, has a business education. Marjorie, born March 11, 1901, Jeannette, born May 14, 1903, and Fred E., born May 1, 1907, are attending school.

James E. Blackburn's political allegiance has always been given to the republican party. He was elected road supervisor and filled that office for three terms but has never been an office seeker in the commonly accepted sense of that term. He is well known in various fraternal circles, holding membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Rebekahs, the Woodmen of the World and the United Artisans. His religious faith is that of the Baptist church, to which his family belong.

VICTOR STAUFF is one of the most successful dairy farmers of Coos county. His ranch comprises two hundred acres, located near Cooston, where he is engaged in farming, making a specialty of dairying. He was born in Finland, in 1866, and is a son of John and Mary (Svarver) Stauff, both of whom were natives of Finland, and to them five children were born: Victor, the subject of this review; William, deceased; Emilie, who married Oscar Moore, of Alameda, California, by whom she has three children; Arana, the wife of Harry Yeast, of Alameda, California, and the mother of three children; and Oscar, deceased.

Victor Stauff was reared at home and received his elementary education in his native country. At the age of thirteen years he started in life for himself, finding employment in a brickyard and continuing in that occupation for a period of two years. At the age of eighteen years he emigrated to the United States, settling at North Bend, Oregon, and found employment in the shipyards in that place. He continued to work as an employe in the shipyards for fifteen years, after which time he purchased two hundred acres of land, upon which he erected a fine residence and other buildings. He has since been engaged in dairy farming, of which he has made a great success. He plants a large acreage of potatoes and is also one of the successful fruit growers of this section of the state.

Mr. Stauff was united in marriage August 9, 1888, to Miss Vendla Smith, a daughter of Ulrik and Beattie (Moore) Smith, both of whom were natives of Finland. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith six children were born: Ulrika, deceased; Vendla, the wife of the subject of this review; John, a resident of Washington; Hilda, the wife of Charles C. Johnson, of whom an extended review is published in another part of this work; and Junas and Amanda, both of whom are deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Stauff five children have been born. Oscar, born April 23, 1889, is a pupil in the Oregon State Agricultural College at Corvallis. Hugo, who was born August 19, 1891, is also a pupil in the Oregon State Agricultural College, at Corvallis; Violet, born May 21, 1892, who was educated in the Coos county public schools, is engaged in teaching on Larson's Inlet. Gladys, born July 9, 1898, resides at home with her parents and is a pupil in the public schools. Ivy, who completes the family, was born October 24, 1900, and is a pupil in the public schools.

Mr. Stauff gives his political support to the socialist party. He has been a member of the Woodmen of the World and he and his wife are members of the Lutheran church. Mr. Stauff's ranch of two hundred acres of valuable land is one of the best improved and most successfully managed farms in his locality and stands as a monument to his ability and industry.

ARCHIE PHILIP is one of the well known and respected citizens of North Bend, where he has charge of the logging operations of the Simpson Lumber Company, which is one of the largest mill and lumber concerns of Coos county. He was born April 4, 1868, and is a son of Robert and Helen (Webster) Philip, both of whom were natives of Scotland. The father removed with his family to England in 1871, where he later became the manager of the Marquess of Bath's estate, which position he held for twenty-one years. At the expiration of that time he was retired on a pension and died in 1894, the mother dying of a broken heart thirty days later. They were the parents of ten children, six of whom are living.

Archie Philip was reared at home and received his education in the schools of his native land. He emigrated to America in 1887, at the age of nineteen years, going to Chicago, Illinois, where he remained for six months. He then went to Duluth, Minnesota, and there continued to reside until 1902, when he removed to Idaho and was there employed for a period of five years by the Cordelaine Lumber Company. In 1907 he settled in Coos county, Oregon, and became engaged as a timber cruiser and later had charge of a lumber camp. In 1909 he took charge of all the Simpson Lumber Company's logging operations and to that work he has since given his entire attention. He is the owner of a fine residence at North Bend and in that city he also owns two blocks located in the best portion of the residence district.

Mr. Philip was united in marriage, July 5, 1893, to Miss Nellie Kenyon, whose birth occurred at Sparta, Wisconsin, where she received her early education. Her father passed away there when she was a small child and her mother died at the same place in 1909. They were the parents of six children, of whom three are still living: Melvin, a resident of Le Sueur, Minnesota; George, who resides in San Francisco, California; and Nellie, the wife of the subject of this review. To Mr. and Mrs. Philip four children have been born: Percy F., born February 24, 1895, who is an engineer and resides at home; Archie, who was born in 1897, and is attending school; Olive, born in 1900, who is a pupil in the public schools; and Carol, born in 1907. Mr. Philip belongs to the republican party but often votes independently, especially in local issues. He and his wife are members of the Episcopal church of North Bend. Mr. Philip is one of the well known, enterprising men of North Bend and is a man highly esteemed for his integrity in business matters and in every way entitled to be numbered among the progressive and useful citizens of this part of the state.

JOSEPH MICELLI. Among the enterprising and active business men of Roseburg Joseph Micelli holds an important position, being a manufacturer of brick and also mayor of the city. He is highly esteemed as a man of energy, ability and sterling integrity, and is a well known representative of fraternal interests, having at one time been grand master of the grand lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. A native of Italy, he was born October 1, 1864, in Rieti, which was likewise the birthplace of his father, Grant Micelli. Born and reared in Rieti, Grant Micelli learned the brick-making trade when young and was there engaged in business for a time as a brick manufacturer and contractor. Coming to the United States in 1872, he located first in Nevada, remaining there for three years. In 1880 he went to Hailey, Idaho, where he established a brickyard and has since been successfully employed as a brick-maker and contractor. He married Margaret Biancolini, who was born in Italy and was the daughter of an expert wood carver. In 1886 she came with her family to America, joining her husband at Hailey, Idaho, where she has since made her home. Of their children four are living: Mary, whose home is in Idaho; Joseph; Frank, an attorney of Roseburg; and Louis, of Montecristo, Washington.

Educated in the public schools of Rici. Joseph Micelli remained in his native city until 1878, when he went to Pettau, Austria, where he continued his studies in the public schools for a time. He subsequently learned the trade of a baker and confectioner in that city and followed it for a number of years, traveling as a journeyman through Austria-Hungary. In 1884 he came with his sister to this country and after his arrival in Hailey, Idaho, attended the common and high schools in the acquirement of the English language. On leaving school he entered the employ of the Idaho Forwarding Company which has several stores in different states, becoming a clerk in the store at Hailey. He afterward worked for his father as a brick maker for two years and, having become familiar with the trade, conducted a brickyard at Silver Mountain, Idaho, where he remained in business for a year. Coming to the Pacific coast in 1889 he was employed in the manufacture of brick at Tacoma, Washington, for a year, and in January, 1890, he located in Roseburg, buying a tract of land on which he established a brickyard. He has since continued in business, having about seven acres of land in his yard, and each year he manufactures about a million brick which he ships to coast markets. He has built up a large business in this connection which is now conducted under the firm style of Micelli Brothers, his brother having joined him in 1903. They own a quarter interest in the Hamilton addition of Roseburg, a tract containing twenty-seven acres. In addition to his other interests Joseph Micelli is a director and a member of the finance committee of the Douglas National Bank and is vice president of the Douglas Abstract Company.

Mr. Micelli was married in Roseburg to Miss Grace Preschern, who was born in Denver, Colorado, a daughter of John Preschern, who is now engaged in agricultural pursuits near Roseburg. They have become the parents of two children, Victor and Albert.

Mr. Micelli is very prominent in fraternal relations. He belongs to Roseburg Lodge, No. 326, B. P. O. E., and is a member of Rose Lodge No. 16, A. O. U. W. He is perhaps most widely known in his connection with the Odd Fellows. In 1886 he joined Rising Star Lodge, No. 12, I. O. O. F. at Hailey, Idaho, and withdrew in 1890 to become a member of the Philatelian Lodge, No. 8, I. O. O. F., of Roseburg, of which he was noble grand in 1891. In 1892 he entered the grand lodge of Oregon and at its session held in Roseburg in 1898 was appointed grand conductor. The following year he was advanced to the position of grand marshal and in 1901 was elected grand warden. In 1902 he served as deputy grand master and in 1903 at the session held in Portland was chosen grand master of the grand lodge. In 1904 he finished his term in that position and was elected grand representative of the sovereign grand lodge, attending the sessions at San Francisco and at Philadelphia in 1904 and 1905. He is also a member and past chief patriarch of Union Encampment, No. 9, and a charter member of Roseburg Rebekah Lodge, No. 41. He likewise belongs to the Kremlin Baku, of Portland, is a member and past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias lodge, for three terms served as its representative to the grand lodge and was representative to the first state convention held by that order. He belongs to the Board of Trade and is a member of the Commercial Club, of which he was formerly a trustee. Mr. Micelli is equally widely known as a political leader. In 1900 he was elected a member of the city council of Roseburg, representing the third ward, and was appointed chairman of the street committee. Twice thereafter he was elected and retained the chairmanship of that committee during three terms of the council, within which time all of the present street improvements were made, including ten miles of street paving and sewers in three districts, making Roseburg the best drained city in the country, there being not a single house in that city that is not connected with the sewer. He deserves great credit for this as it is a valuable factor in sanitation and health, as well as cleanliness. In 1911 he was elected mayor of the city on the democratic ticket for a two years' term, which will expire on the 6th of November, 1913. Already during his administration he has accomplished much for the city's welfare and improvement. Though born across the water he is thoroughly American in interest and thought, and is imbued with the spirit of progress that is manifest in all of his connexions and especially in his service as chief executive of Roseburg.

W. A. BRANSON, much of whose life has been given to public service, was born in Polk county, Oregon, March 24, 1861, a son of Eli T. and Sarah Catharine Branson. The father was a native of Springfield, Illinois, born May 15, 1829, and spent his youth and early manhood upon a farm, but in 1852 he crossed the plains with ox teams to Portland. He then proceeded up the Willamette river to Oregon City where he worked in a sawmill owned by Nathaniel Lane, the grandfather of ex-mayor Lane. From there he went to Polk county where he purchased eight hundred acres of land in the northern section, near the town of Sheridan. He experienced the usual hardships and privations of life on the frontier, including service in the Indian wars whereby the red men were forced to abandon their hostile attitude toward the incursions of the white race into this territory. He continued upon the farm which he purchased until 1869, when he sold that property and removed to McMinnville, where he lived retired until 1872. He then went to Sheridan and purchased three hundred and twenty acres, one mile and three-quarters west of the town and made his home in that city until 1877. In that year he took up his abode upon the farm, residing on that place until 1899, when he sold the property and once more established his home at McMinnville, purchasing the Nauver farm adjoining the city limits. He rented the property and lived in the town, enjoying well earned rest to the time of his death, which occurred March 8, 1910, when he was about eighty-two years of age. His wife, who was born in Illinois, crossed the plains with her parents at an early date, the family home being established in Yamhill county, Oregon. The town of Willamina was named in honor of her father, as it lies on his old donation claim. To Mr. and Mrs. Eli T. Branson were born five children: W. A., of this review; Edward Baker, who died in 1862 when eight years of age; C. E., who died in 1906 at the age of thirty-seven years, after fourteen years' service as surveyor of the county, during which period he was known as a very successful civil engineer, doing the work of the new Morrison street bridge in Portland; and two daughters who died in infancy.

W. A. Branson was educated in the county in which he makes his home. After completing the common-school course he attended the old Baptist College at McMinnville. He was, moreover, a student of the practical lessons of life. He was reared upon a farm and to the development and improvement of land he gave his attention until 1899, his labors bringing to him substantial results for he brought his fields into a high state of cultivation. He then came to McMinnville and was appointed deputy assessor, which position he held for four years under John E. Hubbard and for three years under the present assessor, Martin Miller. He has assessed the precincts fifteen miles each way from McMinnville and his work has at all times been thoroughly satisfactory to those under whom he serves. He has held the offices of school clerk and road supervisor. He has ever been a republican, staunchly advocating the principles of that party, yet never becoming a politician in the usually accepted sense of the term.

In 1880 Mr. Branson was married to Miss Minnie E. Young, a native of Tennessee and a daughter of John L. and Catharine (Bewley) Young. Her father was a Civil war veteran and took part in many of the famous battles that led to the victory of the Union forces. He served also throughout the Mexican war, and stood at the side of Jefferson Davis when the latter was shot in an engagement of that conflict. Mr. Young made his home in Tennessee until 1882 when he came to Oregon, settling in Sheridan, where he lived for a number of years. Subsequently the family removed to Portland where both he and his wife died. To Mr. and Mrs. Young were born three children of whom Mrs. Branson is the eldest. Her sister, Mollie, now deceased, was the wife of John A. Ingram, who was a railroad man, running out of Portland. He lost his life in a railroad wreck and his wife passed away a year later. A brother, John Young, lives in Tennessee. To Mr. and Mrs. Branson has been born one child, C. R. He was born in September, 1891, and attends school, making a specialty of the study of electricity.

W. A. Branson is a member of the Elks lodge at Salem, Oregon. His brother, C. E.

Branson, was a Royal Arch Mason in McMinnville, an accomplished musician and was identified with all of the musical organizations of the city. In McMinnville and throughout the county W. A. Branson is widely known. His life has been an active and useful one for he has ever been found reliable in business, faithful and loyal in citizenship and true at all times in his friendships.

JACOB C. and NANCY (ORNDORF) SPORES. All credit and honor is due to the worthy pioneer settlers who planted the seeds of civilization in the northwest, braving not only hardships and difficulties but dangers in establishing their homes upon the Pacific coast at a period when this region was much more thickly inhabited by Indians than by representatives of the white race. Among the pioneers were Jacob C. and Nancy (Orndorf) Spores, who arrived in Oregon in 1847. The former was born in Onondaga county, New York, July 23, 1795, and the latter in Logan county, Kentucky, in 1812. Mr. Spores was a son of Jacob Spores, a native of Germany, who when very young emigrated to America, settling on the Mohawk river. He lived to the remarkable old age of one hundred and fifteen years. In the veins of Mrs. Nancy Spores flowed the blood of German, Welsh and Scotch ancestry. Jacob Spores, Sr., followed the occupation of farming and to that pursuit his son Jacob C. Spores turned his attention. He had been educated in the public schools and from New York state he removed to Ohio, when the latter state was practically an unbroken wilderness. Subsequently he became a resident of Illinois, settling on the present site of the city of Bloomington, where he remained until he came to Oregon in 1847. He arrived in this state in September of that year and took up his abode about a mile south of where the city of Coburg now stands. As the party traveled westward they had no trouble with the Indians, for a Flathead Indian acted as their guide. Mr. Spores was captain of the train and the Indian was the interpreter for the company. Mr. Spores was well qualified to direct the party, for he had previously had some military experience, being a veteran of the War of 1812. He served under General Scott and participated in the battles of Lundys Lane, Sacket Harbor and other engagements until honorably discharged at the close of the war.

At length the journey to the northwest was accomplished in safety and Mr. Spores secured a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres, which he at once began to cultivate and improve. As the years passed he added to this until he was the owner of two thousand acres, largely devoted to stock-raising, chiefly cattle and horses. The unsettled country offered an excellent open range for the stock and the business was carried on successfully for a long period of years. With the work of general improvement Mr. Spores was also connected. He built the first ferry across the Mackenzie river and operated the line for many years, this being known as Spores Ferry.

MR. AND MRS. JACOB C. SPORES

Mr. Spores was married twice. On the 11th of August, 1816, he wedded Eliza Hand, of the state of New York, and to them were born the following named: Cornelia, born April 1, 1819; Eliza, October 1, 1821; Catharine, June 9, 1824; John and Esther, twins, September 1, 1826; Electa Ann, July 25, 1828; Jacob, May 17, 1831; Nancy, April 5, 1833; James Madison, May 19, 1835; and Martha J., November 20, 1836. Of these only one is now living, Nancy, who is the widow of William Griffith and makes her home in Dexter. The mother of these children having passed away Mr. Spores afterward wedded Mrs. Nancy (Orndorf) Trimmer, a daughter of Frederic and Mary Orndorf, the former of German and Scotch descent. Her parents were pioneers of Kentucky, whence they removed to Illinois, where both died. Her father was prominent in political affairs, as were his sons in Illinois. One of the sons, William, became a Presbyterian minister. Mrs. Spores was born in Kentucky and accompanied her parents on their removal to Illinois in early life. By her first marriage she had three children: Caturia, Malinda and William Frederic. The two daughters died in infancy but the son lived to manhood and married, although he has now passed away. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Spores were born four children. Lewis, born November 2, 1843, is now deceased. Henry, born February 6, 1846, is mentioned elsewhere in this work. Mary E., born November 17, 1848, probably the first white child born in Lane county, is the wife of William Bogard and lives near Coburg. Arminda, born April 25, 1851, was the youngest.

Mr. Spores held membership with the Masonic fraternity when in New York, being one of the first to join that order in the Empire state. His wife was a member of the Presbyterian church. He died in December, 1890, at the age of ninety-five and a half years, while Mrs. Spores passed away in March, 1891, aged seventy-nine and a half years. They were, indeed, worthy pioneer people of Oregon, widely known in the state and deserving of much credit for the part which they took in its early development.

CHARLES A. HOXIE is a highly respected and successful citizen of Josephine county, where he is engaged in general farming and in the successful operation of a shingle mill located near Williams, in that county. He was born in Jackson county, this state, February 22, 1860, and is a son of George W. and Nancy (Packard) Hoxie. The father, a native of Scotland, was born, March 24, 1832, and is a son of O. D. and Eliza (Stevens) Hoxie, both of whom were natives of that country. George W. Hoxie emigrated to America with his father in 1850 and after reaching the shores of the new world they continued their journey by way of Cape Horn to San Francisco. After establishing their home in the Golden State they engaged in mining for two years. George W. Hoxie then removed to Oregon and settled in the Rogue river valley, where he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres of land, upon which he established his home, and later disposed of that property and purchased one hundred and sixty acres in Josephine county, on which he now resides. In 1854 he was united in marriage to Miss Nancy Packard, who was a native of Indiana and died in 1875. To Mr. and Mrs. George W. Hoxie seven children were born, Matilda P., William, Charles A., George, Asa, Josiah and Obadiah. In 1876 Mr. Hoxie sold his homestead and later purchased one hundred and sixty acres near Williams, where he now resides. He is a supporter of the republican party, and one of the prominent members of the Dunkard church.

Charles A. Hoxie was reared at home and educated in the public schools. He remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-four years of age and in 1884 he started in life for himself and filed upon a homestead of forty acres located in Josephine county near Williams, upon which he established his home, and later purchased an additional forty acres, all of which he has brought to a high state of cultivation. He also owns and successfully operates a modern and well equipped shingle mill.

Mr. Hoxie was united in marriage in 1884 to Miss Maggie J. Hall, a native of Missouri, and to them nine children were born, William, Charles, Ralph, Edwin, Marvin, Hubert, Belle, Rhoda and James. Charles A. Hoxie is one of the highly respected men of Josephine county, where for many years he has been engaged in successful agricultural pursuits.

EDWARD LEE CAMPBELL. The commercial interests of Eugene find a worthy representative in Edward Lee Campbell, who is at the head of the Campbell-Fellman Company, dealers in house furnishings. He was born in Eugene, July 31, 1865, and is a son of Andrew J. and Mary A. (Luce) Campbell. The father was a native of Virginia, born near Jamestown, and his death occurred in 1870. In early boyhood he accompanied his parents on their removal westward to Oskaloosa, Iowa, and when he was twenty-one years of age he came with his wife and her parents across the plains to Lane county. This was in 1850 and he soon afterward settled in Eugene. He was a cabinetmaker by trade and in this city began to manufacture furniture, in which business he continued until he died. His allegiance was given to the democratic party and he was somewhat prominent as a local political leader, holding a number of offices and serving as a delegate to the state constitutional convention which framed the organic law of Oregon. He wedded Mary A. Luce, a daughter of Jacob Luce, who removed with his family to Iowa when Mrs. Campbell was but ten years of age and established his home on what is now the town site of Oskaloosa. Mr. and Mrs. Andrew J. Campbell were earnest and consistent Christians, the former holding membership in the Presbyterian church, while the latter was connected with the Baptist denomination. They had the following children: William T.; John R.; Ira L., who was editor of the Guard for twenty years and is deceased; Eugene, who has passed away; and Edward Lee.

Edward Lee Campbell has been a lifelong resident of Eugene and his salient qualities have ever commanded for him the respect and good-will of those with whom he has been associated. He acquired his early education in the public schools and afterward attended the University of Oregon. He learned the printer's trade with his brother, who was editor and owner of the Guard, and on leaving the newspaper office our subject entered the railway mail service, with which he was connected for a number of years. When his brother became ill, Edward L. Campbell assumed editorial charge of the Guard, so continuing to be engaged for five years. On the expiration of that period he sold his interest in the paper and has since been connected with the furniture business, becoming at that time one of the proprietors of the enterprise in which he still is a partner. This business was established in 1890 by Herbert Gordon and in 1905 the present owners purchased and incorporated it under the name of the Campbell-Fellman Company. Three years ago they erected a substantial and attractive business block, which is eighty-two by one hundred and twenty feet, is three stories in height and has a basement. Theirs is the largest furniture store between Sacramento and Portland. They carry a large and carefully selected line of goods, suited to all tastes and financial circumstances, and they not only handle the output of furniture factories but also manufacture their own mattresses and window shades and do upholstering. Their sales have reached an extensive figure annually and the business is constantly growing along gratifying lines.

Edward Lee Campbell married Miss Josephine Casey, a daughter of James Casey, of Woodburn, Oregon, and they have two children, Gilfray and Dewey. Mr. Campbell is widely known in the city, where his entire life has been passed, and, while he has never sought to figure prominently in any public connection, he has exerted a strong and beneficial influence in support of progress and improvement, of reform and advancement. His methods are progressive and measure up at all times to the highest standards of commercial ethics.

JAMES O. DAVIS, who is engaged in the general merchandise business in Cleone, was born in Topeka, Kansas, his parents being James M. and Anna L. (Lynn) Davis. The father was a native of Virginia and one of four children, the others being: Alfred, deceased; Hansford, a physician who is residing in Texas; and Ida, deceased. The mother, whose birth occurred in Ohio, was one of eleven children. Mr. and Mrs. James M. Davis are at present living about twelve miles from Portland. To them two children were born: Harry B., whose birth occurred October 27, 1880, and who is conducting a cafe in Portland; and James O., the subject of this sketch.

James O. Davis acquired his education in the Salem public schools, in which city the family resided for about ten years. Later he entered the public schools of Portland and also took a course in the Portland Business College, from which institution he was graduated in 1902. He was thus prepared to engage upon an active career and started out in life on his own account by working in a wholesale grocery house in Portland for four years before coming to Fairview and engaging in business on his own account. For the last four years he has been conducting a store which he purchased immediately after his arrival here and has built up a large business. Since this is a very prosperous and well settled farming district his store naturally enjoys a good patronage, and because of his careful study of the needs of his customers his trade is constantly expanding.

On the 26th of October, 1906, Mr. Davis was united in marriage to Miss Neomi R. Massey, whose birth occurred April 7, 1886, and who is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Massey. She is the youngest of three children, the others being: Alpha O., deceased; and Harvey, who is residing in Fairview.

In politics Mr. Davis gives his support to the democratic party and served as marshal of Fairview and deputy sheriff of this district. He holds membership in the United Artisans. Although he is still a young man, he has by conscientious labor and close application gained a position in the business circles of his community which well augurs for his future.

E. ARTHUR MEREEN, who dates his residence in Coos county from 1885 is regarded as an expert farmer, thoroughly modern and progressive in his business transactions, in the development of his fields and the raising of stock. He is a son of Samuel and Sarah Mereen, both natives of Maine. E. Arthur Mereen is one of five children: Nettie, the wife of William Mogary of Washington, by whom she has five children; May, who married Judson Downs of Washington and who later passed away leaving one child; E. Arthur, the subject of this sketch; Gilman, who maintains his residence in Washington; and one child, who died in infancy.

E. Arthur Mereen was reared in Nebraska until he was ten years of age. Even at that early time he was obliged to assist his father with the work upon the farm. When the family moved to Oregon he continued the education begun in his native state in the public schools of this section and remained at home until he was sixteen. His father settled on Coos bay and operated a farm in that region. His mother died in Nebraska when our subject was only nine years of age. Samuel Mereen operated the homestead which he took up on the Coos river until his death in 1891. This event necessitated Arthur Mereen's earning his own livelihood and in order to make money for himself he worked as a laborer upon neighboring farms and was active in the sawmills of Coos county for three years. He later came to the north fork of the Coquille river and spent his summers engaged in agricultural pursuits in the employ of others. During the winter months he attended school and continued so for four years. He engaged in the logging business with a partner and carried on this enterprise in conjunction with agricultural labors for eight years. In the meantime he purchased eighty-one acres of productive land, to which he later added by buying ninety-one acres in Coos county. He moved upon this property and began its cultivation. In 1909 he sold his eighty-one acres in order to give his entire time and attention to the development and expansion of his present large farm. He has made all the improvements upon his property, built fine barns and outbuildings and has twenty acres of his holdings in a high state of cultivation. He specializes in dairying, keeping a large herd of cows for this purpose. He raises thoroughbred horses and is known throughout Coos county as an expert in this line.

In 1900 Mr. Meeen was united in marriage to Miss Sophie Tillman, a daughter of Albert and Ann (Bunch) Tillman. Mrs. Meeen's mother was twice married. She is now the widow of Charles Watkins, a native of England and makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Meeen.

Mrs. Meeen is one of three children born to her parents. The other two are: Elsie, who lives in Washington; and one child, who died in infancy. Our subject and his wife were married in Coos county and to their union four children have been born: Bessie and Dorothy, both of whom died in infancy; Wallace, who is now attending school; and Marjory.

In his political affiliations Mr. Meeen is a consistent republican but has never been an office seeker. He holds membership in the Seventh Day Adventist church and is recognized as a man of high character. He is regarded as an energetic and progressive agriculturist. He has a highly developed piece of property and under his care the fields are growing richer and more productive while his dairy is expanding and developing proportionately. For years he has figured among the prominent farmers in the community and by his well directed and specialized labor gained the prosperity which he is now enjoying.

PROFESSOR GUY W. HENDERSON, one of the most progressive educators in Oregon is principal of the Oakley Green school of Portland. He was born in Logan county, Ohio, October 19, 1873, and is a son of Henry E. and Rachel (Rounds) Henderson. He represents an old Virginia family and his great-grandfather, Samuel Henderson, was one of the soldiers of the Revolutionary war, while the son Samuel Henderson, was a soldier of the Mexican war. The father of Professor Henderson displayed the same military spirit in his loyal and patriotic defense of the Union as a member of the One hundred and thirty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He was born in Virginia and when a young man accompanied his parents on their removal to Ohio, where the Hendersons became identified with agricultural interests. The maternal grandparents of Professor Henderson were of English birth and nativity, but his mother was born in Ohio.

In the acquirement of his education Guy W. Henderson attended the high school of Springfield, Ohio, and later entered Otterbein University at Westerville, Ohio, where he won his Bachelor of Arts degree. He was also, for a time, a student in the Northern Indiana Normal School at Valparaiso, and has had two years of post-graduate work at Harvard. He has engaged in teaching since starting out in the world on his own account, following the profession in Ohio and Indiana until 1905, and being principal of grammar and high schools in different localities. In the year mentioned, he came to Portland and became a teacher of mathematics and Latin in the Lincoln high school, where he remained for three years, when he came to his present position as principal of the Oakley Green school. The spirit of progress animates him in all of his professional duties. He is constantly seeking out new methods to render his labors more effective in preparing the young for the responsibilities of later life and the consensus of public opinion ranks him with prominent educators in the state. In April, 1912, he was a candidate, at the primaries for nomination, for county superintendent of schools and on that occasion made a creditable showing which is evidence of the fact that he has a large following here. On this occasion there appeared an article in the Portland Journal relative to his candidacy which read: "When we consider the place the schools occupy in the fabric of society and government it is evident that this one is of exceeding importance. Like Caesar's wife, he should be a man above suspicion in moral character, that parents may feel entirely safe in placing their sons and daughters under his care and control. He should be a man of extensive practical experience along all lines of school work and education. He should be abreast of the progressive forces of education; alert to the demands of the present, and wholesomely optimistic as to the future. Have we such a man among the candidates for the office? The writer is glad to be able to answer that question in the affirmative. Principal of Oakley Green school, Guy W. Henderson, fills the above description admirably. I have taken some care in looking up the antecedents of this candidate, and having my home on the peninsula and feeling a patriot's interest in education, especially in the city and state of my adoption, I have obtained a communication from President T. J. Sanders of Otterbein University, Westerville, Ohio, where Professor Henderson was educated. It is as follows: 'I take pleasure in speaking of the character and worth of Guy W. Henderson. He is a man of excellent moral character, thorough and energetic as a student, progressive as a teacher. He is reliable in all his dealings. I am willing to vouch for him. He is one of our best.' Charles W. Eliot, the ex-president of Harvard University, gave this endorsement: 'I am pleased to state that G. W. Henderson has taken advanced courses in mathematics and science, Roman language and literature in Harvard University.' Mr. Henderson is a man of more than ordinary ability and excellent attainments. Mr. Henderson has filled the position of township superintendent of public schools, principal of grammar schools, teacher in high school, principal in high school. These all in Ohio. In Portland he has been teacher in Lincoln high school and principal of Ockley Green school, so that his continued school experience for years abundantly qualifies him for the position to which he aspires. I write these facts in the interests of the people of Portland and Multnomah county." Although he did not receive the nomination, it is well known that he is firmly established in public regard as an able educator and one, who is making continuous progress in his profession. He is a member of the Oregon State Teachers' Association and keeps in touch with the advanced work that is being done by other representatives of educational work in the state.

Professor Henderson was married to Miss Ona Graffort, a daughter of W. A. Graffort, of Logan county, Ohio, and they have two children, Winfield L. and Gene. Mrs. Henderson is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. They are prominently known socially and occupy an enviable position in those circles, where true worth and intelligence are accepted as the passports to good society.

IRA WIMBERLY. Business success like prosperity in commercial or industrial lines is the result of correctly applied methods. Ira Wimberly, a prominent furniture dealer and undertaker of Drain, Oregon, and one of the foremost men in that city, has built his career upon this firm and thorough foundation. He was born in Douglas county, July 2, 1858, and is a son of Enoch and Nancy Ann (Marks) Wimberly, the former a native of Warren county, Missouri, and the latter of Knox county, Illinois. Enoch Wimberly came to Oregon in 1846, and he was only sixteen years of age. He crossed the plains with his foster father, Nicholas Shrum, with whom he had lived for some time previously. The journey was made with ox teams and the party located in Marion county at Waldo Hills, five miles east of Salem. Enoch Wimberly remained in this section of the country until 1849, when he joined the California gold seekers and worked in the gold fields of that state for some time. He became ill after a few months of hard labor and returned to Portland in a sailing vessel. He embarked at San Francisco and his vessel, meeting with adverse winds, was driven south. It was fifty-one days before the boat got back to the latitude from which it had started and, when it reached the Columbia river it was compelled to lie outside the bar for sixteen days before it could make the passage. When the vessel landed in Portland Enoch Wimberly returned to Marion county and in 1854 came to Douglas county, where he spent a few months before locating on the north fork of the Umpqua river, eighteen miles east of Roseburg. He was accompanied by two of the sons of his foster father, Thomas and Henry Shrum. Here Mr. Wimberly took up a donation claim and was married three years later, on September 3, 1857. He lived upon his holdings until he removed to Roseburg in 1887 and in that city he and his wife died. Mr. Wimberly's death occurred on August 7, 1908, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. Mrs. Wimberly survived her husband until October, 1910, her death occurring when she was seventy-two years old. Mrs. Wimberly crossed the plains in 1852. Her father had died in Illinois some months previously to this event and Mrs. Wimberly was accompanied on her long journey by her widowed mother. She was married in Douglas county and in this section her son Ira Wimberly was born.

Ira Wimberly was reared at home and acquired his education in the district schools. He pursued his studies for five months during the year and worked upon the farm during the remaining time. This routine continued up to his twentieth year, when he entered the Umpqua Academy at Wilbur, Oregon, where he remained for two years. He supplemented this education by a course in the Portland Business College and upon his graduation from this institution was thoroughly equipped to meet life's activities. In his early manhood he taught for two terms in the district schools of Douglas county and engaged for a short time in farming in the same section. In 1890 he came to Drain and for five years followed the occupation of clerk and bookkeeper in a local mercantile establishment. He resigned this position in 1897 to go into the general merchandising business for himself. He was successful along this line but gradually specialized in the furniture line and evolved from his general business a large and flourishing furniture store. Three years ago he added an undertaking department. For the past fifteen years he has been prominently identified with business interests in Drain and is known as one of its leading and foremost men.

On July 3, 1881, Mr. Wimberly was united in marriage to Miss Fannie Kent, a daughter of Levi Kent, who left his native state of Ohio at an early date to come to Illinois and was among the early pioneers of Oregon. He was at work in the gold fields in the famous California settlement of 1849 and his life in Oregon was spent as a farmer. He was an enthusiast in the raising of blooded stock, sheep, horses and cattle, and did much to improve the standard of stock-raising in his neighborhood. He owned sixteen hundred acres of land two and a half miles south of Elkton, Douglas county, and was one of the leading agriculturists of that region at the time of his death. To Mr. and Mrs. Wimberly have been born three children: Glenn V., assistant cashier in the Douglas National Bank of Roseburg, Oregon; Carl E., a prominent member of the Oregon bar and city recorder of Roseburg; and Lester L., associated with his father in the undertaking and furniture business.

Politically Mr. Wimberly is a democrat and has served his party in several capacities with great ability. He was mayor of Drain for two terms and held the office of district clerk of the school board for several years. His public life was always distinguished by strict honesty and incorruptible political methods and his influence was always given to right and worthy causes. He is a charter member of Mountain Lodge, No. 103, I. O. O. F., and is prominent in the affairs of Drain Lodge, No. 62, A. O. U. W. He and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal church and Mr. Wimberly serves on the board of trustees in that institution. As a business man, as a private citizen and as a public servant Mr. Wimberly has been one of the upbuilding and constructive forces in the growth of the city of Drain. In his business relations he is honest and straightforward, as a private citizen he is highly esteemed and deeply respected and his public service has been distinguished by honorable work for worthy ends.

JOHN HAYES. In the death of John Hayes, in 1905, agricultural interests in Coos county, Oregon, lost a worthy representative and a man, who had won success for himself and added one hundred and sixty acres of well improved and developed land to the wealth and resources of his state. He was born on March 18, 1825, and was a son of William and Dolly (Castle) Hayes, natives of North Carolina. After their marriage Mr. Hayes' parents removed to Tennessee and remained in that state during the period of the Civil war. When hostilities closed they returned to North Carolina, where they both died.

John Hayes received his education in the public schools of North Carolina and Tennessee. His residence in Oregon dates from 1872, in which year he settled on the south fork of the Coquille river, where he took up one hundred and sixty acres of land as a squatter's right. He began its cultivation, and during the years of his residence in Oregon constantly improved and developed it until upon his death it was one of the most prosperous enterprises of its kind on the Coquille river. He farmed along progressive and scientific lines and gave his attention to every phase of his work. He improved his property by modern and sanitary buildings and planted his acres in the most suitable grains. His labors were productive of good results because they were followed along practical lines, and his continued success ranked him at the time of his death among the representative men of his district. He remained upon his original tract until his death in 1905.

On November 26, 1854, Mr. Hayes was married to Miss Susan Wagner, a native of Jackson county, Tennessee, and a daughter of David and Catherine Wagner, both of whom were born in the eastern part of that state. They lived in Tennessee until 1870, in which year they came to Oregon and settled on the south fork of the Coquille river, where the father bought a tract of land and entered a claim for twenty-seven additional acres. He was constantly adding to his holdings and at the time of his retirement was the owner of one hundred and ninety-four acres of highly improved and developed land. He abandoned agricultural labors about 1897 and went to North Carolina to spend the remaining years of his life. He died in that state at the advanced age of ninety-two years. His wife had passed away ten years before. To their union were born thirteen children, seven of whom are still living: Sarah, who lives in Coos county; Susan, the wife of our subject; Rebecca, Elizabeth, Nancy and Catherine, all residents of North Carolina; and John L., of Coos county. To Mr. and Mrs. Hayes were born the following children: James, Henry, Joseph, John, Jacob and Thomas, all of whom are residents of Coos county; Peter, who owns one hundred and sixty acres of land on the Coquille river and who makes his home with his mother; Martha and Dolly, both deceased; Julia, the wife of Benjamin Gant, of Coos county; Laura, who married C. Gant, a resident of Coos county; Mary, the wife of Leonard Hartly, of the same district; Eva, deceased; one, who died in infancy; and Margaret, who passed away in Tennessee.

In his political affiliations Mr. Hayes was a consistent democrat and always voted the party ticket. He was a member of the Dunkard faith and his religion influenced his everyday life. He won prosperity by diligent laboring at a useful occupation, but counted his truest success in the building up of an honorable and worthy life.

GEORGE W. STACY. A productive tract of land of one hundred and sixty acres is the property of George W. Stacy and is well improved. It lies near Beagle, Jackson county, and is devoted to the raising of cereals, fruit and garden products. Mr. Stacy is one of the worthy citizens that Missouri has furnished to Oregon, his birth having occurred in Johnson county of the former state, November 7, 1865. In 1872 his parents, I. J. and A. L. (Smith) Stacy, brought the family to Oregon. The father was a native of Missouri and the mother of Tennessee. After coming to the northwest they settled near Hillsboro in Washington county. There they lived until 1883 when they took up their abode in Jackson county, where the mother died in 1907 at the age of sixty-five years. The father makes his home in Medford. In the family were seven children, of whom two daughters are deceased while three sons and two daughters are still living.

George W. Stacy was a lad of less than seven years when the family arrived in the northwest, and since 1883, or for a period of almost three decades, he has lived continuously in Sams valley. He was reared to the occupation of farming and has made it his life work. Energy and industry have enabled him to overcome many obstacles and difficulties and win for himself a creditable and substantial position among the representative agriculturists of this part of the state. His farm embraces one hundred and sixty acres of rich land, and in addition to cultivating plants best adapted to soil and climatic conditions here, he also raises fruit and vegetables, and each branch of his business is constituting an element in his success.

On the 7th of October, 1888, Mr. Stacy was united in marriage to Miss Minnie B. Rodgers, who was born in the Willamette valley in Linn county, Oregon, in 1862, and came to Jackson county with her parents, James B. and Martha J. (Mansfield) Rodgers, who were natives of Missouri, the father born in 1826 and the mother in 1831. They made the long and arduous trip across the plains in 1850 and became pioneer settlers of Linn county where Mr. Rodgers secured a donation land claim of six hundred and forty acres, a mile below Harrisburg on the Willamette river. There he lived for twenty-one years after which he sold the property, that he had in the meantime developed and improved, and came to Jackson county, where he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres of land and purchased three quarters of a section in the Upper Sams valley. He was thereafter identified with agricultural pursuits in this part of the state to the time of his demise, which occurred January 31, 1899. Throughout his entire life he was a farmer and stock-raiser, and carried on business on an extensive scale. He was a soldier in the Mexican war and his widow now receives a pension. In their family were eight children:

J., who is living in Sams valley; Minnie, now Mrs. Stacy; J. F., a resident of Jackson county; J. M., living on a stock ranch in the same county; H. E., of Sams valley; Anna, the wife of W. T. Houston of the trail district of Jackson county; Lilly, the wife of Charles Curtis of Gold Hill, Oregon; and Oscar, who resides on the old homestead.

To Mr. and Mrs. Stacy five children were born: Alberta, a school teacher; and LeRoy, Flora, Odessa and George Raymond, all at home.

George W. Stacy votes with the republican party, being one of the staunch advocates of its principles. His religious faith is that of the Baptist church. He is connected with the Redmen at Medford and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. His long residence in the county, covering almost three decades, has brought him a wide acquaintance. He was only eighteen years of age at the time of his arrival here, so, throughout the entire period of his manhood he has lived in this section, and his admirable business qualities and traits of character bring to him the confidence and good-will of those with whom he associates.

JOHN A. MULKEY who is living retired in Lakeview, is a veteran of the Civil war and is a representative citizen of the northwest who has been identified with various phases of the development of the Pacific coast country. He was born in Johnson county, Missouri, June 11, 1841, and is a son of John L. and Amanda (Carpenter) Mulkey, the former a native of western Tennessee and the latter of Kentucky. The parents were reared and were married in Missouri, where they remained until 1853, when they started with their family for Oregon with five ox teams. The mother died in Idaho while en route to the coast, and with his motherless children the father continued the journey, locating first in Benton county, where he remained through the winter, after which he took up his abode in the Umpqua valley in what is now Douglas county. He secured a donation claim and began farming and stock-raising but his labors were soon terminated by death, for he passed away in 1855. In his family were seven children: Thomas and George, both deceased; John A.; Mrs. Ann Bagley, who has also passed away; Commodore, who died in 1855; Amanda, who died at the age of five years; and one who died in infancy.

The father passed away at the home of Charles Applegate and John A. Mulkey remained with Mr. Applegate for a year thereafter and then spent a year in Corvallis. He next went to California, where he engaged in running stock for three years for others, and in 1863 he made his way to the mines of Idaho, where he engaged in prospecting and packing for two years. These different kinds of work made him familiar with many of the phases of pioneer life. At the time of the Civil war, however, he put aside business and personal considerations and enlisted in 1865 as a member of Company H, First Oregon Infantry, with which he served for seventeen months. He participated in a number of skirmishes with the Indians in the Harney and John Day country and was on duty in defending the frontier. With the close of the war he returned to Douglas county where he engaged in farming on his own account, purchasing a tract of land near Oakland. In 1873 he removed to Lake county and has since resided in that county with the exception of two years spent in Modoc county, California. He has remained continuously in the Goose Lake valley since 1873 and gave undivided time and attention to ranching and stock-raising, using the range for a considerable period. He had two hundred acres on the west side of Goose Lake which he sold in the present decade, and since 1905 he has lived retired in Lakeview.

In 1868 Mr. Mulkey was married to Miss Sarah Dickinson, who was born in Iowa in 1850 and in 1854 was brought across the plains by her parents, S. D. and Margaret (Jacobs) Dickinson, who spent their remaining days in Douglas county. Mr. and Mrs. Mulkey have become the parents of eleven children: Philip, a ranchman of the Goose Lake valley; William, who is engaged in sheep-raising and makes his home in Lakeview; Susie, the wife of C. S. Benefield; Lulu, the deceased wife of George Perkins; Thomas, whose home is on Albert lake; John, a sheep man of Lakeview; Maggie, the wife of J. H. Dickinson, of John Day, Oregon; Bert, living in California; Frank, a sheep man of Lakeview; Irena, the wife of F. D.

Paxton, of Crooked lake; and Ralph, a sheep man of Lakeview.

Mr. Mulkey is now enjoying a well earned rest. He prospered in his business undertakings, winning a comfortable competence, and the government grants him a pension in recognition of his services in the Civil war. He belongs to the Grand Army of the Republic and thus maintains pleasant relations with the boys in blue. In matters of citizenship he is as true and loyal to his country today as when he enlisted under the old flag to aid in the defense of the frontier when war was being waged through much of the land.

DAVID McNAIR is the owner of two hundred acres of land in Coos county, Oregon, which he has brought to a high state of development and improvement by his own labor. Upon this land for fifteen years he carried on one of the largest dairy enterprises in the section, and by his expert knowledge and progressive methods made his influence felt in the growth of this industry. He was born in New Brunswick, March 28, 1844, and is a son of David and Janet (Ferguson) McNair, both natives of Scotland. They were the parents of nine children: Jean, the widow of George White, of California; Nathaniel and John, who also reside in that state; Ebenezer, who has passed away; David, the subject of this sketch; James, who lives in California; Alexander, who resides in Tillamook, Oregon, and who is the father of two children; William, a resident of California and the father of two children; and Archibald, of Bandon, Oregon, who is married and has seven children.

David McNair was educated in the public schools of his native country and started active life for himself when he was twenty-one years of age. At that time he went to Massachusetts and obtained a position in a factory, which he held until 1867. He then went to California and obtained employment as engineer in a sawmill, a position he held for a number of years before he came to Oregon and purchased a ranch of two hundred acres in Coos county. He then settled upon his property and began its clearing and cultivation. The soil was undeveloped and Mr. McNair gave his entire attention to making it fertile and productive. He had seventy-five acres under cultivation and was extensively engaged in the dairy business. He operated a large enterprise of this kind for fifteen years and had one of the finest establishments in the county. He kept Jersey cows for dairy purposes and erected suitable buildings equipped with modern machinery. With the exception of the seventy-five acres he planted in grain he kept his farm for pasture purposes. His dairy increased in value every year and its products obtained a ready sale on the market. Mr. McNair continued his identification with this branch of agriculture until 1908 when he purchased a large home in Myrtle Point, and has since resided in that city. He is interested in the growth of the community and owns real estate within its borders. He has another house and lot which he rents and is now giving his entire time to the management of his interests in Myrtle Point.

In 1872 Mr. McNair was united in marriage to Miss Elsie Annie Chase, a native of Maine and a daughter of A. and Elsie J. (McPherson) Chase, also natives of Maine. To Mrs. McNair's parents were born nine children: Eliza, the widow of S. Lawery, of Wisconsin; Mary, who is deceased; Sarah, the wife of Joseph Buckstoft, a resident of Wisconsin; Martha, the widow of John Buchanan, of Washington; William and Milo, both deceased; Aldin S., of Washington; George, who has passed away; and Elsie Annie, the wife of our subject. To Mr. and Mrs. McNair were born three children: William A., of Coos county, who married Miss Anna Beman, a native of Oregon, by whom he has four children, Irma, Waldo, Paul and Vera; Howard F., also of Coos county, who married Miss Lena Rookard, by whom he has two children, Leland and Verna; and David N., who lives at home. All the children born to Mr. and Mrs. McNair have received an efficient education in the district schools of Coos county.

Politically Mr. McNair is a consistent democrat but has never sought public office. He belongs to the Presbyterian church of Myrtle Point and his fraternal affiliations include connection with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Farmers' Union.

JAMES HUGHES is a true son of the soil and has been a practical farmer all his life. He has attained in his chosen occupation a degree of success which is the result of expert knowledge and long, practical experience. He was born in Tennessee, April 19, 1827, a son of Robert and Elizabeth (Daybolt) Hughes the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Pennsylvania.

James Hughes is the only surviving member of a family of five children. He received his early education in the common schools of Tennessee and worked upon his father's farm until he was twenty-seven years old, gaining an expert knowledge of the various details connected with the pursuit of agriculture. He left home at the age of twenty-seven and was engaged in farm work in his native state until 1873, when he sold out and came to Marion county, Oregon, where he remained for two years. At the end of that time he removed to Washington and engaged in farming in that state. His holdings there amounted to four hundred acres, which he operated and developed with great success for four years. At the end of this time he sold his farm in Washington and bought four hundred acres in Benton county, where he worked for three years. He sold out at the expiration of that period and bought a farm in Douglas county, upon which he now resides. His present holdings amount to one hundred and eighty acres of well cultivated farm land. He has made extensive improvements, has added to his stock, erected new barns and outbuildings and modernized his equipment. He is now the owner of one of the model farms of Douglas county.

On September 3, 1854, Mr. Hughes was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Kitzmiller, a native of Tennessee, and they are the parents of four children: Lonisa, who died in infancy and is buried in Tennessee; and John R., David and George W., all of whom are living at home. Mr. Hughes is a consistent republican in his political affiliations and held the office of postmaster of Piney Flats, Sullivan county, Tennessee, when he was farming in that district. The farm upon which he now resides is thoroughly equipped and modern in every detail and through the energy and resourcefulness of Mr. Hughes has become one of the most valuable ranches in Douglas county.

CHARLES S. WARNER, owner of two hundred acres of productive land in Coos county and prominent in this section as an agriculturist, was born August 11, 1875. He is a native son of Oregon, his parents having come to Coos county in 1852. Mr. Warner is a son of Calvin and Fannie Warner, the former a native of the District of Columbia and the latter of Indiana. The father crossed the plains in 1852 while the mother has been a resident of Oregon since 1850. Their marriage occurred in Coos county and they made this section of the country their home until the father's death in 1882. Mrs. Fannie Warner is still living and makes her home in Myrtle Point, Oregon. They became the parents of eleven children: S. W. and Mrs. Maggie Strong, both of whom reside at Myrtle Point; Vernon, living near Oakland, California; William, whose home is near Myrtle Point; John, deceased; Ernest and Mollie, now Mrs. Hagerty, both of whom reside at Walla Walla, Washington; Charles S., of this review; Henry and Mrs. Jessie Johnson, both of whom reside near Myrtle Point; and Horace, of Walla Walla, Washington.

Charles S. Warner received his education in Coos county but his advantages in this respect were limited. He started in active life for himself at the age of fifteen and worked at various occupations until his marriage at the age of twenty-four years. He then started farming on a tract of land which he had purchased, which constitutes the farm he now owns. His property is located on Myrtle creek, nine miles above Bridge, in Coos county, Oregon. Here Mr. Warner has been successful as a general farmer and as an expert stock-raiser. He also engages in dairying on a large scale and his activities in these branches make him a representative citizen of Coos county. His stock is all of a high quality and forms a profitable source of income to him. He raises cattle, sheep and hogs and takes pride in keeping his barns clean and sanitary in every particular.

Mr. Warner was united in marriage to Miss Florence Houser, who was born in Coos county, September 3, 1878, a daughter of Christian V. and Sarah Houser, natives of North Carolina. In that state their marriage occurred and after residing there for some years they came to Oregon in the early '70s, settling on the Coquille river, where the mother's death occurred in 1910. The father is still living on his homestead of two hundred acres near Bridge. In their family were nine children: Mrs. Mary Machado of Myrtle Point; James, residing at Bridge; Maggie, deceased; Florence, now Mrs. Charles S. Warner; Finis and Inis, twins, both of whom reside in Coos county; Laura, the wife of Thomas Rookard, of Coos county; Edna, deceased; and Josie, whose home is in Coquille. Mr. and Mrs. Warner are the parents of three children: Hulda H. E., who was born July 1, 1901; Ada F., born October 1, 1902; and Delma A., born June 19, 1903.

In his political affiliations Mr. Warner is a socialist believing in the principles which that party advocates. He takes an intelligent interest in public affairs but never seeks public office. Productive agriculture aims first of all to be practical. Experience has its place here as it has in all other walks of life and it influences the successful cultivation of the soil to a remarkable extent. Mr. Warner owes his prosperity to his familiarity with soil and weather conditions, to personal labor in the fields and among the stock, and to an intelligence which dominates his activities and has its result in increasingly abundant harvests.

JAMES T. TUFFS occupies a central place on the stage of business activity at Grants Pass, where for nine years he has been identified with banking interests, having for six years held the position of vice president of the Grants Pass Bank & Trust Company. There was no unusual or spectacular phases in his career, but his life record is that of one, who recognizes and embraces his opportunities, who meets his obligations, and who is ever faithful in the discharge of the duties that devolve upon him. He was born in November, 1861, about two miles west of the city in which he now lives and has always resided in this locality. He is a son of James P. Tuffs, who was long an honored and esteemed resident of this section. The father was born in Eastport, Maine, January 12, 1825, his parents being John and Catherine (Fitzgerald) Tuffs, the former a native of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and the latter of Ireland. John Tuffs on leaving his native state removed to Maine, where he engaged in contracting and building for a long period but both he and his wife died in Chelsea, Massachusetts.

James P. Tuffs, who was one of a family of ten children, learned the ship carpenter's trade, working in the yards at East Boston, Charlestown, Medford and South Boston, Massachusetts. As a carpenter on the Plymouth Rock he sailed from Boston, December 28, 1849, and made the voyage around Cape Horn and after six months spent on the sea landed at San Francisco, June 28, 1850. Working on the streets of San Francisco through the summer, assisting in putting down the first paving ever done in that city, he received a wage of nine dollars per day, which was paid in Mexican dollars. These accumulated so rapidly that he soon had a bushel of those coins, which he exchanged for gold. Becoming interested in mining, he worked in the vicinity of Yreka and came to Canon creek, Josephine county, Oregon, following the discovery of gold in this locality. In two years he had made five thousand dollars in mining there. He next became a partner of Lewis Barnes in purchasing and operating a ferry and they also bought a stock of goods and began merchandising on the Rogue river. Mr. Tuff's disposed of those interests, however, in 1853, and took up his abode on a donation claim two miles farther up the river where he set out an orchard. He subsequently became a resident of Grants Pass and was not only prominent in business circles of the city but also in its public affairs. For two terms he served as a member of the city council and became a member of the first board of county commissioners of Josephine county, which position he also filled for two terms. He erected the building at the corner of Sixth and Eighth streets, which is now occupied by the Grants Pass Banking & Trust Company. On the sale of the John K. Jones' estate about 1865 he purchased three hundred and twenty acres of land for three dollars and a quarter per acre. Thereon he erected a fine residence and made other improvements and as time passed he extended the boundaries of his property until he was the owner of six hundred and twelve acres of valuable land adjoining the old site of Grants Pass. In 1889 he built a home adjacent to the city limits, which he occupied to the time of his death on the 27th of April, 1906, when he was eighty-one years of age. He had been a member of the Masonic fraternity from 1858, having been initiated into the blue lodge at Kirby, Oregon, whence he transferred his membership to Grants Pass Lodge, No. 84, F. & A. M. He was made a Royal Arch Mason in Reames' Chapter, No. 28, and a Knight Templar in Melita Commandery, No. 8, at Grants Pass.

In 1854 James P. Tuff's was married to Miss Margaret Croxton, who was born in Stafford, England, November 10, 1838. It was in 1843 that she was brought to America by her mother, the other member of the party being her brother, Walter Croxton. They made their way to Alton, Illinois, where they joined the husband and father, who had come to the United States a year and a half before and had prepared a home for his family. Subsequently they resided for a time in St. Louis, Missouri, but afterward returned to Schuyler county, Illinois, where they remained until 1852, when they crossed the plains to Oregon, Mr. Croxton taking up a donation land claim at Ten Mile, Douglas county. In the fall of 1853 his daughter Margaret came to the Rogue river valley with her aunt, Margaret Demick, and here met Mr. Tuff's. On the 11th of May, 1854, they were married at the home at Ten Mile where she has since resided. She made the trip to Grants Pass a few days after her marriage—a seventy mile ride—in the saddle. Several times she rode back and forth on horseback to see her parents Thomas and Anna (Box) Croxton. Her mother died at Grants Pass in 1867 when fifty-two years of age, and the father passed away at Ten Mile in 1868, also at the age of fifty-two years. They were the parents of four sons and three daughters of whom three sons and two daughters are yet living. Following their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Tuff's lived for ten years on the old donation claim and then removed to the farm, on which Mrs. Tuff's still makes her home. The place comprised six hundred and twelve acres before any of it was platted. She now has about ten acres, much of it within the city limits. She is the oldest resident of Grants Pass and the lower Rogue river valley, the town not having been founded at the time when she took up her abode here.

To Mr. and Mrs. James P. Tuff's were born seven children: Mrs. Hattie White, who died in 1889 at the age of thirty-three years, leaving three children; Lydia, who is the widow of Robert H. Dean, a resident of Grants Pass; Jennie M., the wife of C. D. Sessions of Lake View, Oregon; Mary Maud, who is the wife of L. M. Kane, of San Francisco; James T.; Minnie L., who has been a teacher in the public schools of Grants Pass since 1889 and is with her mother; and William G. who died in 1889, when in his twenty-second year.

James T. Tuff's, of the above mentioned family, has always resided at Grants Pass, remaining upon the home farm until about twenty years of age, during which period he acquired a district school education. On attaining his majority he went to Portland, where he attended business college, and following his return he engaged in clerking in a store, until feeling that his initial experience and training as well as his capital justified him embarking in business on his own account, and he opened a store here. Later he began the operation of a sawmill and has been identified with the lumber business for the past eighteen years. He has found a profitable field here, so conducting his interests as to win substantial financial returns. He has been a partner in the Tuff's-Willers Lumber Company, of Dorris, Siskiyou county, California, for the past two years, and he was connected with the Booth-Kelley Lumber Company of Eugene, Oregon, until about two years ago. That company was the successor of the old Sugar Pine Door & Lumber Company, with which he had formerly been associated. For nine years he has figured prominently in banking circles of Grants Pass and about six years ago was elected president of the bank in which position he continued until 1909, when he retired and was chosen vice president. He is also a stockholder in the Douglas County National Bank of Roseburg and has been a stockholder of the First National Bank of Grants Pass almost continuously since its organization. His connection with banking interests further extends to the Butte Valley State Bank of Dorris, California, in which he owns stock. His industrial and financial interests are of an important character, his name figuring prominently in connection with lumbering and banking.

In 1889 Mr. Tuffs was married to Miss Addie Smith, a native of Turner, Oregon, and a daughter of L. S. Smith. They have three children, William G., Rex L. and James H. Mr. Tuffs has attained the Knight Templar degree in Masonry and is a member of the Commercial Club, being in hearty sympathy with the purposes of the organization in its efforts to promote public progress, upbuild the city and exploit its advantages. In politics he is a republican and has served as a member of the city council and as city treasurer but prefers to keep within the pale of business life and manifest his loyalty to and interest in the community in other ways than by holding office. He is an alert, enterprising man, possessing sound business judgment and unfaltering energy and through the exercise of those qualities has made continuous advancement since he started out in the business world on his own account.

WILLIAM RUFUS KING, (lawyer), born near Walla Walla, Washington, October 3, 1864; son of David Rufus and Elizabeth (Estes) King; grandson of William Rufus and Sarah (Hood) King; and great-grandson of John and Mary (Dupuy) King, of North Carolina. This John King was a cousin of William Rufus King, vice president of the United States under President Pierce, and moved from North Carolina to Arkansas, where he engaged in the mercantile business. Judge King's father (1828-1903) emigrated to California in 1852, and was one of the sturdy pioneers who made it possible for the people of the east and south to build their homes among the verdant vales of the Pacific slope. In 1860 he was captain of an emigrant train from Sharp county, Arkansas, which located in a small valley known as Dry creek, six miles northwest of Walla Walla. In 1874 he removed to Jordan valley in Malheur county, Oregon, and as a successful farmer contributed to the upbuilding of the state.

"Will R." (by which designation he is familiarly known through Oregon), was educated in the public schools, at the State Agricultural College (1882-1885) at Corvallis, Oregon, and in the law department of the Central Normal College at Danville, Indiana, graduating therefrom in 1891 with the degree of LL. B. He began the practice of his profession as a lawyer in June, 1892 at Vale, Oregon; removing the following March to Baker City, where in April, 1895, Francis M. Saxton, of Indiana, became associated with him under the law firm name of "King & Saxton." Four years later he severed his connection and removed to Ontario, Oregon. Although residing in this moderate-size town he enjoyed a lucrative practice, not only in the state and federal courts of Oregon but neighboring states as well, until his appointment to the supreme bench.

His political career began shortly after his admission to the bar, through his election on the democratic ticket in 1892 to the lower house of the state legislature. Two years later he was elected state senator from Baker and Malheur counties. A peculiar coincidence was that on the latter occasion he carried Malheur county by 113 votes, being by the same majority which he secured when elected representative. He considers the number thirteen "lucky," as in 1912 he received a plurality in the same county of two hundred and thirteen votes over all other candidates for delegates to the national democratic convention. Before the close of his term of office as state senator in 1898, he became democratic candidate for governor of the state, and although Oregon had a very large republican majority the nominee of that party only defeated him by a small plurality.

Judge King has always been identified with the progressive political movements in his state, and so far as its practical effect is concerned is the father in this country of the Initiative and Referendum, for he was the first to introduce in any substantial form into any legislative body in the United States this system of law making, which he did by presenting in the Oregon senate a constitutional amendment to that effect (See Or. Sen. Jr. 1895, p. 155; 1897, p. 154). It had previously been discussed and urged only in its "obligatory form," which meant the abolishing of all legislative bodies and the substitution of direct vote on all legislative matters, but the form presented by him was the "optional" form now in use in Oregon and other states. The proposed amendments failed to pass, but one of similar import was subsequently adopted and is now part of the fundamental law of Oregon. Since that time many other states have adopted "the Oregon system."

At the session of 1897 Judge King, then senator, also introduced and procured the adoption by the senate of a forcible resolution calling upon congress to recognize the independence of Cuba and if necessary, to intervene in behalf of the Cuban cause (See Sen. Jr. 1897, p. 31); and the following year congress in effect pursued the course recommended in this memorial.

After the campaign of 1898 Judge King devoted himself exclusively to the practice of his profession and rapidly extended his reputation as a lawyer of prominence throughout the states of Oregon, Idaho and Washington, and on February 23, 1907, he was appointed a commissioner of the supreme court of Oregon. Two years later he became an associate justice of that court, his term of office ending January 1, 1911. He was nominated by his party for election to the office and was indorsed by the State Bar Association and the members of the profession at large, but the preponderance of the republican vote elected the candidate of that party. Upon his retirement from the supreme bench Judge King opened a law office with his old-time partner, Mr. Saxton of Baker, at 1517-1523 Yeon Building, Portland, Oregon.

While on the supreme bench Judge King wrote many important decisions. His opinions as a whole are regarded by all as models of clear statement and sound reasoning.

Will B. King

His opinion in the case of Hough v. Porter, 51 Or., 318, which passed upon many new and weighty questions of water rights, is considered by far the most comprehensive opinion ever written upon the subject. It covers one hundred and forty-six pages of the official Oregon reports and determined more than eighty legal points; it is in fact a book on water rights, and is now used as a text on that subject at the Ann Arbor (Michigan) law school. Other of his opinions of note are the cases of Straw v. Harris, 54 Or., 424, and McMinville v. Howenstein, 56 Or., 451, involving constitutional questions arising under the initiative system of law making. These are the first, and regarded as the leading cases bearing upon the questions there involved.

A case, however, of national importance is Kiernan v. Portland, 54 Or., 466, in which Judge King wrote the opinion upholding the constitutionality of the Initiative and Referendum, which was later sustained by the United States Supreme Court (223 U. S., 151).

He was a delegate to the democratic national convention at Baltimore in 1912, there elected national committeeman for Oregon, and then selected by Governor Woodrow Wilson, the presidential candidate, as one of the fourteen members of the executive committee to conduct his campaign for the presidency. Pursuant thereto his headquarters were established at Chicago, where he had charge as chairman of the division for Pacific and intermountain states and of the special bureau for the supplying of literature to all the states in the western jurisdiction of the national committee.

Judge King is a thirty-second degree Mason, an Elk, a Knight of Pythias, a member of the Royal Arcanum and of the Woodmen of the World, and is an attendant of the Unitarian church. He was married December 6, 1892, to Lizzie Myrtle, daughter of John M. and Margaret (Marshall) King (of no relation), of Danville, Indiana; and has one son, Eldon P., and one daughter, Myrtle Marion.

MACK C. ADAMS is engaged in general agricultural pursuits eight miles west of Eugene on the Lorane road, where he has resided for more than eleven years. He was born in Pennsylvania in 1864 and is a son of John and Margaret Adams, who were likewise natives of Pennsylvania. The family of Mr. and Mrs. John Adams numbered eight, as follows: Sarah, who is deceased; Lydia, who is living with her father in Lane county; Charles, a resident of Seattle, Washington; Ella, the wife of Frank Perella, of Lane county; Mack C., our subject; Marion, who is deceased; Jennie, the wife of John Penny, of Indiana; and Albert, who is teaching school in the vicinity of Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Mack C. Adams was reared at home and educated in the common schools. At the age of twenty-five he was married and leaving the parental roof he started out to make his own way in the world. He first engaged in logging but later he rented some land which he cultivated in connection with his other work, continuing to follow these two occupations during the succeeding eleven years. In 1900 he came to Lane county, settling at Eugene, and six months later he purchased two hundred and seventy-four acres of land for his father, who came out the next fall and placed one hundred acres of this tract under cultivation. They have ever since been associated in the operation of this ranch, their principal crops being wheat and oats, while they make a specialty of breeding and raising percheron horses, and are meeting with very good success in their business.

In 1889, Mr. Adams was united in marriage to Miss Cora Etta Fellows, a native of Wisconsin and a daughter of Victor and Alyda (Mosher) Fellows, the father a native of New York and the mother of Wisconsin. Eleven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Adams: George, who was born in 1891, assisting his father on the ranch; Frank, born in 1892, also at home; Harold, whose birth occurred in 1894; Roy, who was born in 1896; Bruiton, born in 1897; Gladys, born in 1898; Ione, who was born in 1899; James, born in 1900; Earl, whose birth occurred in 1903; Teddie, whose natal day was in 1905; and Jessie, who was born in 1909.

Ever since granted the right of franchise Mr. Adams has voted the republican ticket, but he has never held any public office. He is energetically applying himself to the operation of his ranch, and his efforts in this direction are rewarded with success.

LEE BARKER. A leading citizen of Drain, Oregon, actively interested in its political, commercial and social expansion, who at the same time succeeds in promoting his own large poultry and dairy interests, is Lee Barker, who has been a resident of Douglas county all his life and who is representative of the best qualities of western American citizenship. He was born in Douglas county, January 24, 1868, and is a son of Absalom Y. and Emaline (Duncan) Barker, the former a native of Illinois and the latter of Indiana. The father removed from his native state to Missouri with his parents when he was a child and remained there until 1859. In that year he crossed the plains on horseback, driving a herd of cattle, to Oregon. The mother of our subject came to this state with her father, John Riley Duncan, making the journey some time previous to 1859. Her grandfather was among the earliest settlers on Clover creek, Douglas county. Absalom Barker upon his arrival in Oregon took up a homestead claim eleven miles northeast of Roseburg on Oak creek and lived upon this property until 1907. He was successful as an agriculturist and brought his land to a high state of development before his retirement. He later moved to the city of Roseburg, where his wife died in October, 1910, and where he has since resided, making his home with his children. At the time he abandoned agriculture he was the owner of six or seven hundred acres of land, all improved and developed along modern lines, and was one of the representative farmers in his district.

Lee Barker was reared at home and acquired his education in the Roseburg city schools. He then took a post-graduate course and at twenty years of age had fitted himself for teaching. He was successful in this line of occupation for four years but later abandoned it in order to take up farming. He rented land near Roseburg and after several years was able to buy three hundred and forty acres of land in the vicinity of Drain, where he cultivated the soil along the most approved lines for fifteen years, following general farming and specializing in the dairy and poultry business. In the fall of 1909 he gave up the operation of his farm and removed to Drain in order to concentrate his attention upon his rapidly developing business interests. He is now the owner of the largest poultry and dairy business in the city.

On December 15, 1892, Mr. Barker was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Applegate, a daughter of Daniel W. and Virginia (Estes) Applegate, and a granddaughter of Jesse Applegate. To Mr. and Mrs. Barker have been born six children, five of whom are living: Ula B., the wife of E. T. Burdett, of Oregon; and Earl, Ivan, Darrel and Jesse, all of whom are still with their parents. In his political views Mr. Barker is democratic and is now a member of the school board and doing efficient work in that position. He has sought success in business fields and has won prosperity by methods of commercial honor and integrity. The city of Drain is the richer by his activities, not only in business resources but in the quality and standard of its citizenship.

JOHN J. LAMB came to Coos county in 1873 and since that time has been an important factor in many phases of its development. He has been identified with agricultural pursuits, clearing and cultivating two fine farms, and since taking up his residence in Coquille has become connected with so many of its most important and representative business enterprises that he is regarded as one of the individual forces in local progress and upbuilding. He was born in Lauderdale county, Alabama, December 10, 1843, a son of John and Ann (Houston) Lamb, the former a native of Alabama and the latter of North Carolina. The father was an important planter in Lauderdale county and afterward followed the same line of occupation in Arkansas, where he cultivated and improved two hundred acres of land, upon which he died in 1895, having survived his wife since 1871. In their family were six children: James H., a ranchman of Coquille; Mary, deceased; John J., of this review; David, of Lorado, Arkansas; Elizabeth, who died in infancy; and Robert M., who passed away at the age of twenty-six years.

John J. Lamb was educated in the district schools of Lauderdale county and spent his childhood upon his father's plantation in Alabama. When he was ten years of age his father removed to Arkansas, and there Mr.

Lamb remained until the outbreak of the Civil war, when he enlisted in the Confederate army, being at that time seventeen years old. He saw four years of active service and participated in many of the most important engagements. In the battle of Shiloh he was wounded three times and was in the thick of the conflict at Perryville, Kentucky, in which engagement he was also shot. He was present at the battle of Murfreesboro and was wounded in the left leg so seriously that in 1862 the limb was amputated.

After his discharge Mr. Lamb returned to his home in Arkansas and farmed in association with his father until his marriage. He then purchased land of his own, which he sold after a few years and came to Oregon, locating in Coos county in April, 1873. Here he bought a ranch on Rink creek, near Coquille, which he sold after nine years in order to purchase land near Fish Trap creek. Of his first farm he cleared sixty acres and of his second one hundred acres, felling the heavy timber and digging out the stumps. In this way he did what was probably the hardest work of his life since in those times the farmers of the section often spent many years in wresting their land from the wilderness. He still owns the last farm which he purchased, a fine tract of land of one hundred and forty-two acres, but he leaves the active work of the fields to others. With the exception of eight years during which he served as county clerk he maintained a continuous residence upon this ranch until he moved to Coquille, where he purchased a hardware store which he operated for six years. At the end of that time he sold out his interests to his son and retired from business life. He erected a beautiful and pleasant home near the center of town and in this he now resides. He is one of the representative citizens of Coquille and his organizing and constructive skill have been factors in the upbuilding of the city. He aided in the organization of what is now the First National Bank and was its president for three years. He was one of the founders of the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Coquille and is still a stockholder. In association with others he built the Boxton Hotel. He helped organize the Coquille Creamery and is identified with the management of various other important local enterprises.

On September 9, 1866, Mr. Lamb was united in marriage to Miss Mary Ann Lindley, a native of Tennessee and a daughter of John and Sylvia (Billington) Lindley, the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of Tennessee. Mrs. Lamb had one brother, Hugh Lawson Lindley, who has passed away. Her father is also deceased, having died in February, 1873, but her mother is still living and makes her home with the subject of this review. To Mr. and Mrs. Lamb were born seven children. Ada E. is the wife of Rev. W. B. Smith, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Myrtle Point, Oregon, and they have four children. John B. died at the age of three years. Leona A. is the wife of J. M. Byers, of Chula Vista, California, and they have seven children. James A., a hardware merchant of Coquille, Oregon, is married and has one child. May Marvin is the wife of W. H. Lyons, a hardware merchant of Coquille, and they have two children. Elizabeth passed away at the age of seventeen months. Florence Irene, who completes the family, is the wife of W. F. Jones, of the firm of Tyrres & Jones at Coquille.

Mr. Lamb gives his allegiance to the democratic party and is active and prominent in local public affairs. For eight years he held the office of county clerk, having been elected for the first time in July, 1884. He moved to Empire, which was then the county seat, and served in this capacity for four terms. For one term he acted as assessor and for two terms served on the city council. He was school director for a number of years and in this capacity aided the cause of education. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and prominent in the affairs of the Masonic order and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is living retired in Coquille as one of the foremost citizens of his section. He has influenced the welfare of this part of Coos county in an agricultural, business and political way, gaining success in the management of his various enterprises by steadily adhering to methods, which neither sought nor required disguise.

HAZEN D. JOHNSON is engaged in farming, residing on his property, which is located four and one-half miles northeast of Florence, on the north fork of the Siuslaw river. He was born in Nebraska in 1878. His paternal grandfather was a native of Vermont and his maternal grandparent was one of the early pioneers of Michigan. He is a son of Maurice D. and Nellie M. (Hazen) Johnson, the former a native of Wisconsin and the latter of Michigan. To them nine children were born: Hazen D., of this review; Laura, the wife of Richard Coryell, of Mapleton, Oregon, and the mother of two children; May, who married Charles Lewis, of Crow, Oregon, and has three children; Jay, who resides with his father at Florence; Floss, who became the wife of Claire Hinkson, of Florence, and has one child, Clarice; Beryl, who is attending the high school at Florence; Eunice, also a pupil in the public schools of Florence; Fay, attending the public schools of Florence; and Ann, who died in infancy.

Hazen D. Johnson was reared at home and educated in the public schools of the district in which he lived. He started to take up life's activities at the age of twenty-one. During his early life he was engaged with his father in logging and upon attaining his majority he purchased a ranch of sixty acres, upon which he lived for seven years. He then sold this property and invested in sixty acres and for three years gave his attention to the improvement of this tract, which he eventually disposed of at a handsome profit and removed to Florence in May, 1911, where he engaged in draying and teaming for a time. In January, following, he purchased fifty-two acres of land on the north fork of the Siuslaw river, where he has established his home and is now engaged in dairying, operating on a large scale.

Mr. Johnson was married to Miss Fannie May Layne, on the 6th of July, 1901, at Eugene, this state. Mrs. Johnson is a daughter of George and Rachel (Mohler) Layne, the former a native of Iowa and the latter of Pennsylvania. After their marriage they settled in Osborne, Kansas, and in 1888 drove thence across the country to Eugene, Oregon. Mrs. Johnson, their eldest child, crossed the plains with her parents and two brothers, Harry and Charles in 1883. The former resides with his parents at Crow, Oregon, but the latter is now deceased, as is a sister, Minnie. The family left Osborne, Kansas, on the 1st of August, with a large mule team, and reached Eugene on the 1st of October. They endured many hardships and privations, often going without water and food when such were needed and at one time they had nothing but a little flour to feed their team, but the "old fellows," lovingly called Jack and Jim by the children, ate the meal provided, with evident relish and finally the end of the journey was reached in safety. They saw many Indians but they were peaceable and occasioned the travelers no trouble. Water was very scarce along the way and the family had to pay exorbitant prices to obtain it. At different times many coyotes were seen to follow the wagon. The constant companion of the children on the trip was old Shep, the faithful dog, who was well taken care of to the end of her days. On reaching Eugene in October, 1883, Mr. Layne engaged in the draying business, which he followed until the next May. He then sold his team and went to Kansas, intending to engage in farming, but on arriving there he became disgusted with the hot winds, with cyclones and other unpleasant features of the district, and again started for Oregon, this time by train. Once more reaching this state he decided to take up a homestead, so made his way to the Siuslaw river and located on a claim of one hundred and sixty acres. Only three other settlers had taken up their abode in the district then and there were many difficulties and privations to be borne incident to life on the frontier. Upon reaching the mountains the family found only a sled road and pack trail to a point within four miles of their homestead. Leaving their provisions there they built a road that they might continue on their way to their new home. The farm was near the old Mound postoffice, which has long since been discontinued, and for fifteen years Mr. Layne served as postmaster there. Upon his claim he reared his family, giving them the best educational advantages possible. He obtained supplies but often found it necessary to carry such on his back for a distance of twenty miles. Soon, however, other settlers followed, among them Maurice Johnson, the father of Hazen D. Johnson, who took up a homestead near by. In time a school was organized and a log schoolhouse was built which is still standing. The children of both families attended there and it was during their schooldays that there sprung up the attachment which eventually resulted in the marriage of Hazen Johnson and Fannie Layne at Eugene, Oregon, on the 16th of July, 1900. To them three children have been born: Benlah Christine, born June 3, 1902, who is attending school; Orville, who was born October 25, 1905, and is also attending school; and Lovell, born September 10, 1910.

Mr. Johnson politically is an adherent of the socialist party. He has served as justice of the peace in Lane county and for three years was a member of the school board of the district in which he lives. Mrs. Johnson was also one of the school directors during one of the years that her husband served. She is a member of the Daughters of Rebekah. Fraternally Mr. Johnson is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. His home is located four and one-half miles northeast of Florence on the north fork of the Siuslaw river. Mr. Johnson is one of the well known and successful agriculturists of this part of the state. His reputation throughout this county is that of a man of high ideals of business and social life. He has always been known as an enthusiastic and public-spirited citizen, identifying himself with every measure of a public character, having for its object the improvement of the people.

JAMES I. WILLIAMS is a well known and prominent representative of agricultural interests in Yamhill county. His home is about a mile north of the city of Yamhill and in addition to the cultivation of cereals best adapted to soil and climate he gives considerable attention to the cultivation of strawberries and other fruits. He is a native of Tennessee, born November 24, 1868, his parents being Osborn Z. and Sarah Frances (Lundy) Williams. The Williams family has long been represented in Tennessee, where the great-grandparents settled in pioneer times. The grandfather, the Rev. Josiah Williams, was reared in that state, as was his wife. He was a minister of the Christian church and it is said that he married more couples than any one minister of his time and that there was never a divorce among any of them, so far as is known. His life was one of marked usefulness in the moral progress of the communities in which he lived. He died at the age of sixty-eight years and was long survived by his wife, who reached the remarkable old age of ninety-four years. In their family were eight children: John, who is living in Jackson county, Tennessee; Mrs. Lucy Taylor, who lives at Hickory Valley, Tennessee; Harold, of Lebanon, Tennessee; Mrs. Caroline Golden, whose home is in White county, Tennessee; Osborn Z.; and Mary, Elizabeth and Hanna, all deceased.

The son Osborn Z. Williams became the father of James I. Williams, of this review. He was born in White county, Tennessee, December 17, 1829, and after arriving at years of maturity married Sarah Frances Lundy, whose birth occurred in the same county, February 1, 1845. Her parents, Daniel and Elizabeth (Wisdom) Lundy, were also natives of White county, her mother having been born there, on the 9th of April, 1825. The latter was a representative of the Wisdom family and her father, the great-grandfather of James I. Williams, was a native of England, as was the great-grandfather of Mr. Williams in the Lundy line. They came to America at the ages of fifteen and ten years respectively and were passengers on a sailing vessel which bore the name of the first ship that brought its cargo of Puritan ancestors to Plymouth, Massachusetts—the Mayflower. Both settled in Virginia and afterward became residents of Tennessee. The great-grandfather Lundy studied medicine under Dr. Franklin and afterward went to France, where he pursued a post-graduate course, remaining in that country for two years. Before his return to America he wedded Mary Pickerel, of that country, and her sister also returned with them to Virginia when Dr. Lundy once more came to the new world. Dr. and Mrs. Lundy became the parents of Daniel Lundy, the grandfather of our subject, and had also the following children: Mrs. Martha Christina Scott, of Tennessee, deceased; Mrs. Polly Bryant and Mrs. Elizabeth Brown, both of Texas; Mrs. Sarah Scroggin, living in Kentucky; Celia, deceased; and Mrs. Rhodie Howard, of Arkansas.

Mr. Williams' great-grandfather in the Wisdom line was a planter and raiser of fine stock and owned a large number of slaves upon his plantation in Tennessee. He married Sarah Frances Holman, who was of German descent and was a sister of James Holman, who for twenty-one years served as a member of the Tennessee legislature. James Holman made his home in Nashville and at his death left a family of five children. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Wisdom were born eleven children: Mrs. Susan Pennington, of Missouri, deceased; Mrs. Julia Wilhout, of Tennessee, also deceased; Mrs. Talitha Deering, who resides in Tennessee; Mrs. Elizabeth Lundy, wife of Daniel Lundy, of Cumberland county, Tennessee; Mrs. Jane Jones, of Tennessee; Mrs. Levina Stuart, of Arkansas, whose husband was killed while serving in the Confederate army; Mrs. Clementine Courtney, of Tennessee, who was married a second time; William, James and Thomas, all deceased; and Sarah, who is living on the old homestead in Tennessee. All but the youngest daughter were left widows with families.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Lundy, the maternal grandparents of James I. Williams, spent their entire lives in Tennessee, where he engaged in general farming and in raising fine horses. In their family were ten children: Mrs. Osborn Z. Williams; Mrs. Elizabeth Susan Neal, of Missouri, now deceased; Wisdom S., who was a resident of Cumberland county, Tennessee, but has now passed away; James B., living in Jackson county, Tennessee; Rhoda C., deceased; Mrs. Rachel Stanley, Mrs. Annie Jarvis, Daniel and Mrs.

Martha Hamilton, all of Pleasant Hill, Tennessee; and William D., deceased. It was the eldest daughter of this family—Sarah Frances Lundy—who became the wife of Osborn Z. Williams. They were married on the 13th of November, 1864, and to them were born six children: Daniel J., who was born January 30, 1866, and is living in Night-hawk, Washington; James I.; John M., who was born December 26, 1870, and makes his home in Yamhill, Oregon; Thomas S., who was born November 1, 1873, and is living in Republic, Washington; David W., who was born June 26, 1878, and is also a resident of Yamhill; and William J., deceased. It was in 1882 that Osborn Z. Williams brought his family to Oregon, settling near the Southern Pacific depot in Yamhill. Finally he purchased a place of three hundred and twenty acres and became identified with agricultural interests in this part of the state.

James I. Williams was a youth of about fourteen years when the family arrived in the northwest and at the age of seventeen years he started out in business on his own account. He worked in a tile factory for twenty years and then resumed the occupation of farming, with which he had become familiar in his boyhood days through the assistance that he had rendered his father. Since that time his attention has been given to agricultural and horticultural pursuits, for in addition to general farming he also raises fruit, having three acres planted to strawberries and four acres to other fruits. He raises only the best varieties and because of the excellence of flavor as well as by reason of size he finds a ready sale for his products on the market. He now cultivates fifty acres beside the home place of forty acres, which he rents. His place is pleasantly located about a mile north of Yamhill so that his market is of easy access.

On the 13th of November, 1890, Mr. Williams was united in marriage to Miss Mabel C. Moor, who was born in Yamhill county and is a daughter of Henry P. and Eliza B. (Burton) Moor. Her grandmother Moor was a resident of Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, and her mother was living at Wyoming, Pennsylvania, at the time of the Indian massacre during the Revolutionary war. The town was besieged by Indians but by crawling on her hands and knees she managed to make her escape. The grandfather and grandmother of Mrs. Williams started for the Pacific coast on the 9th day of April, 1845. One of the distant relatives of Mrs. Williams was Tom Payne, who assisted in framing the constitution of the United States. She has letters from General George A. Thomas to her grandfather Moor, saying that when the railroad was built across the United States he would pay a visit to the west. He was a '49er in California. He was in California at the time the Sacramento river overflowed its banks, washing down gold in large quantities. Her father was born in Peoria, Illinois, in 1836 and her mother's birth occurred in Yamhill county, May 17, 1850. They were married October 30, 1869, and to them have been born five children: Mrs. Williams; Mrs. Lula Stickler, of Cloverdale, Oregon, whose birth occurred in 1872; Katie B., deceased; Cap R., who was born December 23, 1881; and Mrs. Owen Miller, of Cloverdale, who was born July 18, 1887. To Mr. and Mrs. James I. Williams five children have been born: Forest, who was born October 29, 1891, and is a high-school student; Harrell, who was born January 2, 1893, and assists his father; Hilda, who was born August 19, 1894, and has completed a high-school course; James R. L., deceased; and Elmer, born November 19, 1908. Mrs. Williams is an artist of marked ability, having painted some beautiful landscapes and also showing excellent skill in animal painting. When her teacher started for British Columbia she turned over the class to Mrs. Williams, feeling that the work of instruction would be carried on most ably by her pupil. Both Mr. and Mrs. Williams are well known socially in this locality and have an extensive circle of warm friends.

HENRY LOUIS HENDERSON, M. D., a successful and capable representative of the medical profession in Astoria, was born in Clay county, Missouri, November 15, 1859. His father, James A. Henderson, was a native of Irvine, Kentucky, and in his youthful days removed with his parents to Missouri, where he was engaged in farming and lived for many years. In later life he became a resident of Edmond, Oklahoma, where he carried on agricultural pursuits on an extensive scale. He was an officer in the Confederate army and served throughout the Civil war with the rank of captain, taking part in many hotly contested battles, including the engagements at Vicksburg, Shiloh, Grand Gulf, Fort Donelson, Iuka and others. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Anna M. Mooney, was born in Virginia and was a daughter of Alexander Mooney, also a native of the Old Dominion, but later a resident of Clinton county, Missouri, where he engaged in farming. For many years he remained active in business but was living retired at the time of his death. In the family of James A. and Anna M. Henderson were three children: Henry L.; Alexander Shelby, who is now living in Springfield, Missouri; and Mrs. Anna May Williams, a widow.

Dr. Henderson acquired his early education in the country schools of Clay county and in 1875 entered the University of Missouri at Columbia, but left that institution at the close of the junior year to engage in teaching for one term. In 1879 he went to St. Louis, where he entered the American Medical College, an eclectic school, studying for a year in that institution. In 1882 he was graduated from the Eclectic Medical Institute of Cincinnati, Ohio, with the degree of M. D., and located for practice at Plattsburg, Missouri, there remaining until 1887. He afterward went to St. Louis, where he pursued a post-graduate course in the American Medical College, which appointed him to the chair of theory and practice in the college. In addition to private practice he gave clinical demonstrations at the St. Louis City Hospital and made for himself a creditable position in professional circles there. However, in 1896 he resigned his position and came to Oregon. For a year thereafter he practiced medicine at La Grande, Union county, and in 1897 came to Astoria, where he has since built up a large and lucrative practice, becoming one of the foremost representatives of his profession in the northwest. In 1900-1 he was city physician of Astoria and on the 1st of March, 1903, he was appointed by Governor George E. Chamberlain, state health officer for the port of Astoria, filling the position until the office was abolished in 1906. He has been a constant student of the science of medicine and all that bears upon the work of the profession and is most conscientious in his practice, while his ability inspires his patients with the utmost confidence. He is now a member of the National Eclectic Medical Association, a member and ex-president of the Missouri State Eclectic Medical Association, a member of the American Medical Association, the Clatsop County Medical Society and the Oregon Medical Association.

Dr. Henderson was married in Clay county, Missouri, to Miss Lulu J. Morgan, a native of Clinton county, Missouri, and a daughter of John K. Morgan, a prominent lumberman and grist manufacturer. Dr. Henderson is well known in Masonic circles, being a past master of St. Louis Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., while in 1893 he was deputy grand lecturer and, in 1894, deputy grand master of the state. He became a Knight Templar in 1886 in Kadoch Commandery, No. 21, at Cameron, Missouri, and the following year was transferred to Commandery No. 18, K. T., of St. Louis, with which he was identified until 1909, when he became a member of St. Aldamar Commandery, No. 11, K. T., of Astoria. He likewise belonged to Moolah Temple of the Mystic Shrine, which he joined at St. Louis in 1890. In 1900 he was transferred to Al Kader Temple of Portland, and he is also a member of Oregon Consistory, No. 1, A. A. S. R., of Portland. He likewise belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks at Astoria and is a past exalted ruler of the local lodge, while in Concomly Tribe, No. 7, I. O. R. M., he is a past sachem and also a past great sachem of Oregon. His political allegiance is unflinchingly given to the democratic party and in December, 1910, he was elected mayor of Astoria, in which connection he is giving a public-spirited and business-like administration, characterized by many needed reforms and improvements. He is a typical resident of the fast-growing northwest—alert, determined and enterprising—and has here found opportunity for that individual development which brings out the strongest and best in mankind.

JOHN H. McNAMER, a prosperous and respected citizen of Forest Grove, has for the past eight years been engaged in the livery business and is also connected with agricultural interests. His birth occurred in Louisa county, Iowa, on the 20th of March, 1848.

his parents being Noah and Mary (Hurley) McNamer, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of England. Noah McNamer, whose natal year was 1828 and who was a farmer by occupation, removed from the Blue Grass state to Illinois and thence to Iowa. Subsequently he went to California, where he staked a mine. After coming to Oregon he invested in land in Washington county and there spent the remainder of his life. His wife, who was born in 1833, passed away in Iowa. To them were born five children, as follows: Will, deceased; Miranda, who gave her hand in marriage to John Wilson and passed away, leaving four children; Elizabeth, who is the wife of Frank Pierce and resides near Mount Hood, Oregon; Margaret, the wife of William Dean, of Portland; and John H., of this review.

John H. McNamer acquired his education in the common schools of Washington county and during the greater part of his business career has been engaged in the live-stock business. During the Civil war he joined the First Oregon Volunteer Infantry and was stationed on the plains in order to protect emigrants against the Indians. He spent three years with Wells Fargo & Company as shotgun messenger on stage coaches and was subsequently engaged in the live-stock business in California for sixteen years. On the expiration of that period he came to Oregon and for seven years conducted a butcher shop at Forest Grove. At the end of that time he embarked in the livery business and for the past eight years has enjoyed a gratifying patronage in that connection. He also runs a stage line to Tillamook, owning a half interest in a livery business at both Tillamook and Forest Grove. He likewise cultivates two leased farms at Gales Creek and in addition has a camp, called McNamer's Haliway Camp, between Forest Grove and Tillamook. In the conduct of his varied interests he has displayed excellent business ability and capable management, and the success which has crowned his labors is but the merited reward of his untiring and well directed industry.

Mr. McNamer's present wife bore the maiden name of Nora Wells and is a native of Kentucky. By a previous marriage he had three children. Frank, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in association with his father, wedded Miss Mary Herrick, by whom he has six children. Fred, who resides in Forest Grove, is married and has one child. Addie gave her hand in marriage to John Dollarhide, by whom she has six children.

JACOB RUECK, who has extensive landed possessions in Klamath county and is a successful rancher whose prosperity is attributable entirely to his own labor, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, April 8, 1861, a son of Adam and Margaret (Grueb) Rueck, who in 1881 became residents of Willshire, Van Wert county, Ohio, there joining their son Jacob who had preceded them to the new world a few months. The entire family went to Fort Wayne, Indiana, settling on a farm there in the fall of that year. The father died upon that farm in 1887 when about fifty-five years of age, and the mother now resides in the Yonna valley with her son Michael, the youngest of her four children. The others are: Caroline, the wife of George Ritter, also of the Yonna valley; Jacob, and Rosa, the wife of Paul Keller, of Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Jacob Rueck was reared on a farm in the fatherland and was the first of the family to come to the United States, arriving in the spring of 1881. After spending a few months in Ohio he went to Indiana and in 1882 removed to Michigan, where he worked on a farm, after which he returned to Indiana, but again went to Michigan, where he was once more employed at farm labor. In 1884 he arrived in Portland, Oregon, and spent a few months in working in the Willamette valley. He was then employed in the vicinity of Sacramento, California, for a few months, after which he returned to Yamhill county, Oregon. In 1885 he came to the Yonna valley and preempted one hundred and sixty acres of land near the present site of Dairy. He proved up that property and it is still in his possession. He also took up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres a mile below his present residence and this is also in his possession. His wife homesteaded the place on which they now live and Mr. Rueck purchased it from her after their marriage. He has also bought other land and he and his wife together own eleven hundred and twenty acres, all in the Yonna valley, of which two hundred and fifty acres is under cultivation. Their holdings include one hundred and sixty acres of timber while the remainder of the land was covered with sage brush. They have resided on their present place since 1890, where Mr. Rueck owns eight hundred acres of land in one body. Stock is the principal feature of their place and Mr. Rueck now has about twenty-five head of horses and forty head of cattle. He has had one hundred and seventy-five head of range cattle and has become well known in connection with stock-raising in this part of the state. In 1906 he was instrumental in having established the postoffice at Yonna, of which he has since been postmaster. He has also been vice president of the Bank of Bonanza since its organization and he is president of the Horse Fly Irrigation District, which was organized in November, 1911, under the state laws to irrigate twenty thousand acres. The preliminary surveys have already been made. This tract was formerly included in the Klamath project but the reclamation fund was low, so that Mr. Rueck went to Washington and had it released from the Klamath project. This Horse Fly project will be pushed to completion as soon as possible and will constitute an important element in the development of the district.

In 1890 Mr. Rueck was married to Miss Ada Shook, who was born in Iowa and came to the northwest with her parents, Amon and Katharine Shook. They have two children, Carl and Ward. Mr. Rueck votes with the republican party but has never held nor desired office. The cause of education, however, finds in him a warm and helpful friend and he has done important work as one of the directors of the Hildebrand school district. He is an exemplary representative of Bonanza Lodge, I. O. O. F., and a faithful member of the Lutheran church. Sound judgment and keen perception enabled Mr. Rueck to make judicious investments at a time when land values were low and he is now reaping the benefit thereof, for the land is constantly increasing in value, owing to the rapid settlement of the district and the improvements which he has placed upon his property.

WILLIAM S. WINSOR is living retired at Gold Beach. He was the pioneer shipper of white cedar, being the first to place lumber of that character upon the market, and it was he, who originated the name of Port Orford Cedar, which is now famous the world over. He was born in Jamestown, New York, in 1832, a son of Samuel and Anna (Sears) Winsor, the mother a native of New York and the father of Connecticut. His ancestral history is traced back to the time of the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock. The family numbered seven children: Ruby and Henrietta, both of whom are deceased; William S., of this review; Woodley, who is a resident of Olean, New York; Clinton, living in Jamestown, New York; Mary, the wife of Richard Baker, of Jamestown, New York; and Helen, an artist, who resides with her sister Mary in the Empire state. The father was a carpenter and millwright of New York and in the Empire state William S. Winsor was reared, remaining there until he had attained his majority. He then went to California, which was in the period of its pioneer development and worked for a short time in a sawmill but afterward came to Oregon and settled at Port Orford in 1854. He engaged in mining on the beach and made some money, but the red men went upon the war-path and Mr. Winsor joined the volunteers in the Rogue River Indian war of 1855-6. He served for five months, being engaged in active duty most of the time as a member of Company K, Oregon Mounted Volunteers, under Captain Bledsoe and General Lamrick. When hostilities had ceased Mr. Winsor rented a sawmill, which he operated for three years, sawing and shipping the first white cedar that was ever put on the market. He placed this on sale under the name of Port Orford Cedar and, its value becoming immediately recognized, it is now known throughout the world. Others followed in his lead and the shipment of white cedar has constituted one of the most important sources of revenue in lumber circles. Later Mr. Winsor went to Pennsylvania, where he engaged in merchandising, remaining for five years in that business. He then returned to California, where he spent two years in the operation of a sawmill, after which he came to Gold Beach, building a sawmill which he operated for a year. He then sold out and removed to Port Orford, where for six years he was identified with the business interests of that city as a merchant. About the time his wife died he disposed of his store. A year later he was elected county treasurer of Curry county, which position he filled for one term and since the close of his official service has lived retired, making his home at Gold Beach. Indolence and idleness have ever been utterly foreign to his nature and he here has a small shop and keeps busy making odd pieces of furniture for his own diversion.

In 1858 Mr. Winsor was married to Miss Charlotte White, a native of New York, whose parents died during her infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Winsor traveled life's journey happily together for about forty years and were then separated by death in 1898. In their family were six children: Anna, the wife of William Gauntlett, of Seattle, Washington, by whom she has five sons, George, Clinton, James, Victor and Charles; Mary, the wife of Alfred Gauntlett, of Gold Beach, and the mother of four children, Harry, Wesley, Lottie and Estelle; Charles, who is president of the Bank of Oregon at North Bend and is married and has two children, Joseph and Helen; Harvey, who was drowned in the Yukon river; and Nettie and Ruby, both deceased.

In politics Mr. Winsor has long been a staunch democrat, never faltering in his allegiance to the party. He has held but one public office, preferring to do his duty as a private citizen, but at all times he has been loyal to those interests and projects which he believes will further the welfare of the community. His fraternal relations are with the Masons and he is an exemplary representative of the craft.

The following article, entitled "A Scout to Rogue River in 1856," was written by Jeremiah Huntley of Gold Beach.

"The first news of the Indian outbreak at the mouth of Rogue river was brought to Port Orford by Charley Foster, whose company of home guards, of volunteers, were attacked and routed by the Indians at their camp on the north bank of Rogue river at a point since known as Bagnell's Ferry, on the early morning of February 23, 1856. Several men of the company were killed and wounded at the first volley; the others fled to the timber and brush near by and hid the best they could. A few were discovered by the Indians during the day and killed. Foster succeeded in eluding the Indians and when it became dark started for Port Orford, thirty miles distant, where he arrived the second day, almost famished, and gave the alarm. Foster did not know the fate of the people at the mouth of the river but reported that he believed that all the whites in that vicinity had been killed. From his hiding place in the jungle he saw many strange Indians passing during the day, from which he judged that the hostiles from up the river had come down and, joining with the coast Indians, had killed all the whites they could find. At that period Port Orford was a thriving little town of about two hundred people, mostly miners and packers, though a few families had recently been added to the town. The Indians in that vicinity were not very numerous or warlike, and the few who lived thereabouts gave the people no concern.

"Several days passed after Foster's arrival, but nothing more was heard from Rogue River, so one Jerro, a storekeeper, in company with four or five others, whose names have been forgotten, manned a whaleboat, loaded it with provisions, guns and ammunition, and pulled out for Rogue river to assist the people there, should they find any alive. It was known that a small fort or earthwork had been partially built a short time previous about one mile north of the mouth of the river by some miners who feared an outbreak, and thither the men in a boat directed their course. The boat was spied and hailed by the people in the fort, and in an attempt to make a landing all the occupants of the boat, save one, were drowned in the surf.

"The little fort was besieged by hundreds of Indians, who kept at a safe distance, however, as the occupants had good rifles and knew how to use them. With plenty of provisions, a good log fort carefully constructed with loopholes and protected by a wide ditch on the outside, the miners had no fears of their ability to repel any assaults of the Indians. But they needed every man present, so had not tried to send for assistance. Several days passed, and as no word was received from Rogue River or the occupants of the whaleboat, W. S. Winsor and George Wasson, two miners, but experienced Indian fighters, volunteered to go to Rogue River and locate the white people, if any were alive, or learn their fate. Winsor and Wasson secured the best horses they could find, and at dark on the evening of March 3, 1856, were ready to undertake the perilous journey. Armed with good rifles and revolvers, and with four days' rations tied on their saddles, the two men shook hands with the friends who had assembled at the only store in town to see them off, mounted, and soon disappeared in the darkness down the beach. Both had traveled that trail many times, and as the night was not very dark they made good time. No one resided on or near the trail, so it was pretty certain that the only human beings they were apt to encounter would be Indians. As the scouts hurried along that lonely trail they were frequently startled by wild animals scampering off through the forest, through brush and over logs, making considerable noise. The clink of the shoes on their horses against the many stones in the trail made more noise than was pleasant to hear, as such noise might be heard by some lurking warrior picketing the trail. But such noises could not be avoided, and our scouts went forward as fast as it was prudent in the darkness.

"The scouts approached Mussel creek, fifteen miles south of Port Orford, about eleven o'clock, where they knew that several Indian families lived close to the trail. In fact all Indian huts were located on the side of the trails in early days. Several fires were burning in the village and Indians were seen moving about, all of which indicated to the scouts that something unusual was doing, as it was well known that all Indians usually retired early in the evening. On nearing the village the scouts paused to determine what was best to do to pass the camp in safety. A rocky beach to the right and an impenetrable jungle to their left, above the village, made it almost impossible to pass the village without riding through it. Wasson suggested that Winsor hold his horse while he advanced on foot to reconnoiter, but the latter objected to such a move, saying: 'George, there is no use of monkeying round that camp, for we must either ride through or go back; and as we have no time to loose, let's get a move on. What do you say?' The only reply Wasson made was, 'Go ahead.' Wasson was one of those fearless, cautious mountaineers of the early days who never hesitated to do things when brought face to face with danger. In fact, he was chosen by Winsor as one, upon whom he could rely on the perilous journey. The scouts dismounted, tightened their saddles, mounted again and, with drawn revolvers, moved forward, forged the creek and, putting spurs to their horses, quickly passed through the village, uttering war whoops, and reached the timber on the hillside before the astonished Indians knew what had happened. As the scouts passed through the village they did not see many Indians, and those whom they saw had no arms and wore no war paint.

"When clear of the village the scouts increased their pace, satisfied that they had left no hostile Indians behind them—a fact which might prove of inestimable value should they suddenly encounter a war party and be compelled to retreat. The next Indian village was located at Euchre creek, about five miles below the village they had just passed, and as the tide was nearly high they must cross that creek at the village. The scouts feared that some of the hostiles from Rogue River might be encountered, but they were determined to get through if possible. The village was built on sand, which enabled the scouts to approach it without making the usual noise on horseback. When within a short distance of the huts the scouts paused to 'size up the outfit,' as Wasson put it. There was little life or bustle in the village save the beating of a drum in a hut near the trail, and as few Indians were astir, the scouts breathed easier. But the scouts did not hesitate long and, putting spurs to their horses and bending low in their saddles, quickly passed through the village, forded the creek just beyond and disappeared in the darkness down the beach. If they were seen by the Indians the latter made no outcry or gave them a parting shot. Afterward the scouts learned that there was a band of about one hundred warriors from the camp at Rogue River asleep as they passed through the village. Below the village the trail led along the beach and, though the tide was in and the beach heavy, the scouts made good time till they left the beach. They were now approaching the danger zone and must advance with greater caution than they had thought necessary during their ride. They turned into the timber and brush to the left and climbed the mountain, searching for a place where they could get a view of the country beyond, to pass the coming day in security. Fortunately they found some grassy glades near the open ground and here they unsaddled, picketed their horses and prepared to pass the day. The long, weary ride had sharpened the appetite of the scouts and they did ample justice to their lunch, after which they enjoyed their first smoke since leaving Port Orford. A faint glimmer in the east proclaimed the approach of another day and, to the delight of the weary men, not a cloud was visible, though it was yet the rainy season. When it was light enough to see, the scouts sought an open space at the edge of the timber and fortunately were enabled to get a good view of the country to the south. And when it grew lighter the keen eyes of scouts saw the outlines of the little fort on the bluff near the ocean, about five miles distant. The old flag was floating over the fort, which was proof positive to the scouts that the miners were there in force, defiant and full of fight. The mountain on which the scouts were standing sloped gently to the south to a small valley, through which coursed a creek which emptied into Rogue river, about five miles beyond. Beyond the valley, about three miles distant, a bald, flat mountain rose about six hundred feet. To the right the mountain sloped off to the westward, forming a high bluff on the shore of the ocean. The trail to Rogue river was plainly visible where it crossed the hill on the west.

"Soon after sunrise several straggling bands of Indians, warriors no doubt, came in view from the east, presumably the river, going towards the fort, some riding, but mostly men on foot, and disappeared over the mountain in the direction of the fort. The scouts estimated the war party, for such it evidently was, to be fully three hundred. No doubt there was a force equally as large occupying the country between the fort and the river, but that part of the field was shut out of view by intervening mountains. The distance was too great to hear the report of firearms or see the smoke of battle, if one was in progress. Several small bands of Indians, mostly squaws, passed up and down the little valley during the day but at nightfall returned towards the river, which indicated that the main camp of the hostiles was on the river to their left. The day passed slowly to the scouts, who were anxious to get to the fort and learn the extent of the massacre of the whites. About sundown the warriors, who went over in the morning, or about the same number, returned and disappeared over the mountain, whence they came in the morning. During the day the scouts took careful note of the country beyond and picked out their route to the fort. They believed that the fort was not closely picketed by the Indians during the night and that the quickest and perhaps the safest move on their part was to ride directly to the fort, keeping a close lookout, of course, for Indians.

"As the shades of evening fell over hill and valley the scouts saddled their horses and rode down to the little valley below, then to the trail, along which they advanced with more caution till the little fort was visible on the bluff near the ocean beach. As they were apt to encounter the Indian pickets, if any were on duty on the hillside, the scouts dismounted and, leading their horses, moved forward with caution. They frequently paused and anxiously peered into the darkness to catch the least sound of an enemy, if present, but no sound except the occasional bark of a dog in the fort broke the awful stillness. After a long halt the scouts believed that no pickets were on guard on that part of the field at least, so they tied their horses in a thicket near by, crawled to a friendly knoll about three hundred yards from the little fort and, in a low tone at first, hailed the people in the fort. Receiving no answer, they hailed again in a louder voice, which was soon after answered by some one in the fort. After hurriedly telling the people in the fort who they were, the scouts were directed to come forward slowly. The scouts were now in extreme peril, for should there be lurking pickets in that vicinity to fire upon them, the people in the fort might think it a night attack and fire a volley in the face of the scouts. The scouts, sensible of their peril, lost no time in reaching the fort, where they were met with many guns pointed at them as they crossed the plank laid across the ditch to admit them. The scouts were greeted with many handshakes and were glad that their perilous journey was at an end. Accompanied by men from the fort, they returned and led their horses into the fort.

"The scouts found about eighty people, mustering about seventy guns. They had plenty of ammunition and provisions, were full of fight and did not appear to be greatly disturbed by their surroundings. The hostile Indians appeared upon the hillside above the fort the next day but kept at a safe distance. In about a week after the scouts reached the little fort, the siege was raised by the arrival of several companies of regular soldiers from the south. The Indians then withdrew up the river and the war was practically ended.

"James Brooking and James McVay, of Smith River, California, E. H. Meservy of Agness, and W. S. Winsor of Gold Beach, Oregon, are the only occupants of that little fort known to be alive. And men of their mettle made the Oregon country."

JEREMIAH HUNTLEY is recognized as the foremost lawyer of Curry county who makes his home at Gold Beach, and in other ways has been connected with the professional, business and political interests of his part of the state. He was born June 11, 1845, in Meigs county, Ohio, a son of John and Louisa (Conner) Huntley, natives of New York and Ohio respectively. The mother died when her son was but three years of age but the father long survived. The paternal grandfather, Joseph Huntley, brought a brig around Cape Horn for the Astor Company and, stopping two days south of the Columbia river for water, discovered gold in the black sand of the beach, probably at the present site of Port Orford. John Huntley came to Oregon by way of the Isthmus of Panama and engaged in mining in southern Oregon for two years. He then returned to Illinois in 1857. Several of his brothers also made their way to the northwest, settling on Santiam river in 1847. On the discovery of gold in California they went south to that state, where they engaged in mining and later became residents of Douglas county, Oregon, settling near Roseburg. The uncles of Mr. Huntley are now deceased but their descendants are scattered over the state, living in various sections. John Huntley became a resident of Myrtle Point, Oregon, after having lived for some time in California, and passed away at that place in 1908, aged ninety-four years. In the family were seven children, of whom three are now living: Mary, the wife of John Treat, of Iowa; William who is a resident of Hopland, California; and Jeremiah, the subject of this sketch.

Jeremiah Huntley acquired his early education in the schools of Illinois and at the Umpqua Academy of Wilbur, Oregon, and spent much of his youth in the gold mines of his father. At the time of the Civil war he went to California and joined the volunteer army in 1863, serving for two years in the war of which he is now a pensioner. After being mustered out he went to Illinois and was there married to Miss Mattie Gaffin, a native of that state and a daughter of Horace and Elizabeth (Thompson) Gaffin, in whose family were but two children, the elder being Mary, now deceased. It was on the 22d of November, 1868, that Mr. and Mrs. Huntley were married and to them have been born nine children, as follows: John and Charles, who are deceased; two, who died in infancy; Jennie, the wife of Story Pierce, who represents Curry county in the state legislature; Edna, the wife of Willis Tompkins, of North Bend, Oregon, by whom she has five children; Alma, who married William Goff, of Waverly, Washington, and who has four children; Harry G. residing in North Bend, Oregon; and Floyd, an engineer now employed in Alaska and also a noted football player.

Mr. and Mrs. Huntley began their domestic life in Illinois, but in 1870 he returned with his wife to Oregon and settled at Gold Beach. He engaged in mining in the black sand on the beach, yet did not confine his attention exclusively to private interests, for his fellow townsmen, appreciating his worth and ability, elected him clerk of Curry county, in which position he served for a full term. He was next appointed school superintendent to fill out an unexpired term, at the end of which time he turned his attention to the practice of law and has since continued in the profession. He studied alone and was admitted to the bar in California in 1876. Five years later he was admitted to the Oregon bar and he now has the leading practice in Curry county, maintaining an office at Gold Beach. His political support is given to the republican party and his fraternal relations are with the Masons. He is a past master of the local lodge and is one of the exemplary representatives of the craft, always loyal to its teachings concerning mutual helpfulness and brotherly kindness. Much of his life has been spent on the Pacific coast and he is thoroughly imbued with the spirit of enterprise and progress which has been the dominant factor in the rapid upbuilding and substantial growth of the northwest.

CHARLES E. DREW. The growth of Oregon can be marked almost by the settlement of its different valleys. Its earliest inhabitants clustered around the mouth of the Columbia, later the rich lands of the Willamette valley were discovered and utilized and the work of progress has been carried forward as pioneer settlers have ventured into one valley after another, reclaiming the productive land by the side of the waterways. Charles E. Drew was born in Langells valley and is now a resident of the Yonna valley. He is widely known as a buyer and seller of cattle, handling about eight hundred head per annum, and his realty holdings embrace about four hundred acres. He is yet a young man to whom the future holds out attractive promise of success. He was born January 30, 1880, his parents being Nyran and Mary (Faith) Drew. The father was born in Maine in 1850 and the mother's birth occurred in Iowa in 1856. They arrived in Jackson county, Oregon, about 1878, were married there and the following year removed to Langells valley. The father died in the Yonna valley in 1905 and the mother still resides there. He followed ranching and stock-raising throughout his entire life, having about one thousand acres of land and planting about two hundred acres to grain while the remainder was used for pasturage. His political views accorded with the principles and teachings of the republican party. In his family were five children: Charles E.; Eva D., the wife of W. R. Campbell, of Langells valley; Nettie R., a teacher of Klamath Falls; Jesse N., of the Yonna valley; and Waive, at home.

The usual experiences of the boy reared on a ranch came to Charles E. Drew in his youth, but he has engaged in ranching on his own account for the past eleven years, previous to which time he had remained on the old homestead. He had attended the San Jose Normal School and had pursued a commercial course in Ashland, so that his educational privileges well qualified him to enter upon a business career and work his way steadily upward. He is now making continuous progress and is the owner of four hundred acres of land in the Yonna valley at Hildebrand. His pasture is on the Indian reservation mostly. He buys and sells cattle, handling about eight hundred head each year, and his excellent judgment in regard to stock enables him to make judicious investments. He is associated with George Ritter in the development of the first irrigation project in the Yonna valley. The system was completed in 1910 and Mr. Drew is two-thirds owner of it. The reservoir covers sixty-two acres and is more than twelve feet deep. He expects to irrigate four hundred acres and thus make an otherwise somewhat sterile tract richly productive.

In 1903 Mr. Drew was united in marriage to Miss Iva McKee, who was born in Kansas, in 1878, and came to Oregon about 1888 with her parents, William and Elizabeth McKee, who are now residents of Siskiyou county, California. Mr. and Mrs. Drew have two children, Fae and Dale. Politically Mr. Drew is a republican; fraternally is connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen; and religiously with the Presbyterian church. This is indicative of his interests aside from business, and the principles which govern his actions. His life has been well spent and those who know him esteem him highly for the sterling worth of his character.

WILLIAM MASON COLVIG was born on the 2d of September, 1845, in Ray county, Missouri. He came to Oregon with his parents in the year 1851, where they remained at the city of Portland until the summer of 1852, when they removed to southern Oregon. Mr. Colvig was raised on a farm in that part of the state, where he remained until the 5th of April, 1863, when he enlisted as a soldier in Company C, First Oregon Cavalry. For the succeeding three years his life was in this service, on the plains of eastern Oregon, and in Idaho, Nevada and Utah. Upon his discharge in April, 1866, he went from Portland to Nicaragua, and after remaining there a few weeks, he went to the city of New York. Spending a year in Virginia and a portion of a year in Ohio, engaged in oil mining, he went to western Missouri, where for two years he was engaged as foreman of a large hemp plantation, owned by General Joseph Shelby, of Confederate fame. In 1870 he entered a small college situated in Tremont, Tazewell county, Illinois; after spending eighteen months in this school—and all his money—he then taught school eighteen months in the same town. He then was engaged as a proof-reader in the Lakeside Publishing Company of Chicago, Illinois, and during this employment was placed in charge of the preparation of a history of the state of Minnesota and lived for nearly a year in the city of St. Paul. While attending school and teaching in Illinois he had pursued the study of law, spending some months in the office of Judge A. W. Rodecker, of Pekin, Illinois. Returning to southern Oregon in the fall of 1875 he lived at the home of his parents near Rock Point in Jackson county for about one year. He ran for the legislature on the democratic ticket in the year 1878 and was defeated by a majority of nine.

In 1879 he was married to Addie Birdseye, a native daughter of Jackson county. There were seven children born of this marriage, four girls and three boys, of whom three girls and two boys are still living. His wife died in February, 1912. For many years Mr. Colvig practiced law in Jacksonville, Oregon, and later in the city of Medford. He was elected school superintendent of Jackson county, Oregon, for two terms, holding that office from 1882 until 1886, at which time he was elected district attorney for the first judicial district of the state of Oregon, which during his term of office embraced Jackson, Josephine, Klamath and Lake counties. He held this office for three successive terms. He now lives in the city of Medford, having been for five years past president of the Medford Commercial Club and one of the directors of the Medford National Bank.

Mr. Colvig cast his first vote for president in 1868 in the state of Missouri. He voted the democratic ticket on national issues until the election of President McKinley, having ran for elector on the Cleveland ticket. He has remained a consistent republican ever since the McKinley campaign.

JOHN FITZPATRICK, deceased, was one of the popular and successful men of Oregon, who for many years was identified with business and financial interests of this state and was recognized as a leader, worthy of the highest confidence and respect. He was a native of Ireland, born at Kilkenny in 1824. At the age of sixteen years he secured employment as a dry-goods clerk at Waterford, where he continued for two years, at the end of which time he came to America and for about four years was engaged in fishing in Nova Scotia. In 1846 he enlisted in the United States navy and served on board the frigate Ohio during the Mexican war. He greatly admired the institutions of the American republic and often said "America is good enough for me and is good enough for anybody," this sentiment being his motto for many years. After receiving his honorable discharge from the navy he joined the great army of gold seekers on the Pacific coast and witnessed many fluctuations in his quest of the yellow metal. He was personally acquainted with Mackay, Flood, O'Brien and many of the great mining leaders of those days, and as he was a man of ready wit and pronounced social instincts he was a prime favorite wherever he appeared. He made his home in San Francisco for several years and there served as justice of the peace, proving thoroughly efficient and fearless at a time when the office called for a man of unusual nerve and a practical knowledge of human nature. In 1861 he came to Oregon and a year later was placed in charge of a flatboat belonging to the Oregon Steam Navigation Company, his duties being to receive cattle and other live stock at Sandy and deliver them to the upper country. It was while engaged in this business that he was given the title of Captain, by which he was known during the remainder of his life. In 1863 he went to Klickitat and engaged in hauling wood to Portland but the year following was again seized by the gold fever and went overland from The Dalles to Boise basin. After prospecting and mining for a year he returned to Rainier, Oregon, where he engaged in fishing. When the river rose in June, he went down to Hunt's Mill and packed salmon for the remainder of the season. In 1867 he built a packing house in the slough just above his seining ground, about twenty-five miles up the river from Astoria, and devoted his attention systematically to catching and delivering salmon to the market. He associated with Messrs. Bradley and Davis in 1875 in the organization of the firm of Fitzpatrick, Davis & Company and built a large cannery, which they operated with marked success for three years, when it was disposed of to Mr. Laidlaw. He then returned to his original seining ground which was one of the best on the river. In 1891 he came to Newport and bought the property, where his widow now makes her home, embracing one hundred and fifty-three acres. Soon after coming here, he erected the Monterey Hotel, a handsome and spacious two-story building, for which the lumber was brought from Corvallis. As the years passed he acquired a fortune and invested extensively in real estate at Skamokawa, Portland, Albina and Yaquina Bay and became known as one of the wealthy men of the state.

In 1867 Captain Fitzpatrick was married to Miss Mary Du Cheney, of Oysterville, Washington, who was born at Chinook, Washington, October 12, 1852, a daughter of Louis Roque and Marie (Rondeau) Du Cheney, in whose family were six children. The maiden name of the mother was Marie Rondeau. She was born at Salt Lake City, Utah, and came to Fort Vancouver at the age of six years and was made a member of the household of Sir James Douglas. There she met her future husband who was clerk in a store of the Hudson's Bay Company, and they were married in 1844. She was a granddaughter of Chief Concomley, who was head of all the tribes on the Columbia river and a brother of Chief Skamokawa. Chief Concomley was one of the most noted Indians of the northwest and is mentioned in highly favorable terms in the writings of Washington Irving. Mrs. Marie (Rondeau) Du Cheney passed away on June 16, 1911, at the age of eighty-three years in Portland. Nine children were born to Captain and Mrs. Fitzpatrick, namely: Nora, who married George Wood, of Astoria; Walter Raleigh and John Roque, both of whom are residents of Altoona; Jefferson, who died at the age of twenty-one years; Mary Ellen, who makes her home in British Columbia; Katherine, who resides with her mother at Newport, Oregon; Agnes Alice, now Mrs. Charles Eastland, of Garibaldi; Sarah Sophie, also of Newport; and Rebecca Regina.

Captain Fitzpatrick died May 9, 1894, at Portland, as the result of a relapse following a surgical operation. In religious belief he adhered to the Roman Catholic church and politically he was identified with the republican party and served as justice of the peace at Skamokawa. He was a man of remarkably pleasing personality—genial, kind-hearted and generous, even to a fault. He possessed sound business judgment and during the course of an active and eventful career made several fortunes. In all relations of life, public and private, he showed the highest integrity and trustworthiness and few men in Oregon could claim a greater number of personal friends. He was a descendant of a noble Irish family, which was represented by the Earl of Ossory, a member of the Irish parliament in 1790, who gained great credit for his support of the rights of the people.

JOHN LEWIS KRONENBERG. One of the greatest individual forces in the commercial expansion and development of Coos county is John Lewis Kronenberg, a native son. His administrative ability has directed and influenced the organization and establishment of important industrial and business institutions and his energies have controlled their growth and progress. For well over a quarter of a century his well timed aggressiveness, his shrewd policy, and his business instinct have been directed toward the accomplishment of large ambitions and have made him a power in important affairs. He was born in Coos county, December 9, 1861, a son of John and Catherine (Beekler) Kronenberg, the former a native of Hanover, Germany, and the latter of Baltimore, Maryland. The father came west to California around Cape Horn in 1849 and the mother came to the same section a few years later. John Kronenberg, Sr., mined in the gold fields of Eldorado county for ten years and gained a comfortable fortune as a reward for his labors. With this money as a working capital he came north to Oregon, settling in Coos county in 1850, one of the early Oregon pioneers. He took up a homestead claim on Hall's creek, near Argo, and upon this property lived for thirty years. He cleared the land, built a home and rented his farm, retiring to Coquille in 1880, in order to rest after an active, eventful, and representative career. He died in that city in June, 1909. He was the father of five children: Emma, the wife of Joseph Blakely, of Lodi, California; John Lewis, of this review; Fred W., of Denver, Colorado; Rachel, the wife of A. J. Marsh, of Curry county; and Ida K., the wife of Dr. C. W. Owens, of St. Louis, Missouri.

John L. Kronenberg, of this review, received a limited education in the district schools of Coos county and remained upon his father's farm until he was twenty-five years of age. Leaving home he went to Parkersburg where he became foreman of a lumber camp and acted in this capacity for twelve years. His business ability gained him rapid advancement and he eventually assumed entire management of the mill and has never severed his connection with it. After the death of the owner the business was incorporated under the name of the Coquille Mill & Tug Company with Mr. Kronenberg as director and stockholder. The other men interested in the business live in various parts of the United States and Mr. Kronenberg as the only local stockholder has a position of importance and responsibility which he fills ably and efficiently. Among his largest business interests may be mentioned the Bank of Bandon, of which he is president and director and the Coquille Tow Boat Company, which he organized and incorporated with a capital stock of forty thousand dollars. He is now its president and manager and also one of the largest stockholders. He is extensively interested in river traffic and also freight traffic on the Pacific ocean between ports on the coast and has directed his activities along this line for many years. He was responsible for the building of the ship Oregon, plying along the Pacific coast and owns a large amount of stock in this vessel. He is prominent and well known in the logging business and has extensive interests along this line, being at the head of a company which handles twelve million feet of lumber every year. Among the other important enterprises with which he is connected may be mentioned the Bandon Hardware Company, which he organized and the Bandon Dry Goods Company, of which he is president and a stockholder.

On October 29, 1887, Mr. Kronenberg was united in marriage to Miss Otilie K. Parker, a native of New York and a daughter of Captain Judah Parker, one of the pioneer ship captains on the Pacific coast and prominent in the Pacific mail service for a number of years. He died May 20, 1909. In his family were four children: Georgia A., the wife of William Poley, a druggist, of Ashland; W. C., of Prosper, Allen, who has passed away; and Otilie, the wife of our subject. Mr. and Mrs. Kronenberg have three sons: John, born in November, 1897, who is a pupil in the high school and is of a mechanical turn of mind; George, whose birth occurred April 15, 1904, and who is attending school; and Harry Parker, who passed away at the age of twenty years, on the 21st of June, 1908.

Mr. Kronenberg gives his allegiance to the democratic party but his absorbing business interests prevent his taking an active part in political life. Preeminently a man of large affairs he has made his career a great force in industrial development of his native section. He possesses the power of making his varied interests separately effective and has the keen discernment, courage, and initiative which make the true type of modern business man. His ability has commanded many opportunities which his public spirit has made factors in the general welfare.

AHAZ WASHINGTON BRYAN is a very busy and industrious man, owning five hundred and sixty acres on Clover flat, in Lake county, for he not only carries on general agricultural pursuits but also conducts a blacksmith shop. He was born in Mercer county, Missouri, December 16, 1858, his parents being Daniel Boone and Mary Jane (Farley) Bryan. The father was born in Tennessee, April 10, 1828, and the mother in Ohio, March 1, 1839. They became residents of Missouri at the age of twenty-two and ten years respectively and were married in Mercer county, that state, there residing until the spring of 1864, when they followed the many bands that had already crossed the plains to the northwest. With ox teams they started on the journey and after six months' travel reached Yamhill county, Oregon, where Mr. Bryan secured a homestead claim, upon which he lived during the greater part of the time until 1880, when he came to Lake county. He died at the home of his son, A. W. Bryan, July 6, 1911, while the mother resides on a ranch two miles south of her son's ranch on Clover flat. He followed farming in early life but in 1861 became a member of the State Militia of Missouri, with which he served for one year, when he was disabled and discharged. After coming to the northwest he resumed agricultural pursuits and also carried on stock-raising to some extent. His religious faith was that of the Christian church. In the family were five children: Ahaz W., Amanda Ellen, the wife of C. F. Strohm, of Yamhill county; David Morgan, who is with his mother; Lucy Jane, the wife of H. E. Reed, of Roseburg, Oregon; and Mary Helen, the wife of George Sherman of Lake county.

Ahaz Washington Bryan was a lad of six years when he crossed the plains with his parents and he remembers many incidents of the journey over the long stretches of sand and across the mountains. He came with his parents on their removal from Yamhill to Lake county and secured a homestead two miles south of his present place in 1887. This he improved and he resided thereon until 1902. It comprised one hundred and sixty acres, which he still owns. He next bought his present place, a ranch of five hundred and sixty acres, upon which he has made many modern improvements, having here a good residence and substantial outbuildings. He also built a blacksmith shop and does work of that character not only for himself but also for his neighbors. His ranch is situated twenty-three miles from Lake View and nineteen miles from Paisley on the main road and was the station until two years ago, during which period he had accommodated many travelers with entertainment, for there was no regular hotel or stopping place for a distance of seventeen and a half miles on the south with no place to the north. Mr. Bryan had the sub-contract for carrying the mail from Lake View to Paisley from 1898 until 1902 and then secured the contract direct from the government for a period of eight years, thus carrying the mail for twelve years over a route of forty-five miles in length. In 1910 he purchased a small sawmill which he put up and operated until it was destroyed by fire in the fall of 1911.

On the 24th of June, 1892, Mr. Bryan was married to Miss Jennie M. Moss, who was born in Modoc county, California, June 7, 1872, and has resided in Lake county since six months old. She is a daughter of the Hon. S. P. and Susie (Casteel) Moss, of Lake View. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Bryan are Bessie Eleanor, Tressie Hazel, Annie Laurie and Vaneta Fay. Mr. Bryan is a member of two different fraternal organizations, the Woodmen of the World and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and he gives his political allegiance to the republican party, which he has always supported since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. He has never been afraid of labor—earnest, persistent labor—and in this is found the secret of his progress and his success.

ALFRED S. MILLER, whose property holdings embrace nine hundred and sixty acres in the vicinity of Gold Beach, Curry county, was born in Marion county, Oregon, January 13, 1862, a son of William C. and Permelia (Turner) Miller the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Missouri. The year 1847 witnessed the arrival of the father in the Sunset state and five years later Permelia Turner also came to Oregon, settling in Oregon City. They afterward lived in Marion county being for several years honored and worthy pioneer residents and valued citizens of that district, whence they removed to Curry county in 1868. There the father died in 1892, while the mother passed away in 1896. In their family were six children, of whom four are yet living: Alfred S.; John R., a merchant of Port Orford; Eva, who is at Roseburg, Oregon; and Elva, the wife of R. H. C. Wood, of Roseburg.

Alfred S. Miller was a lad of about seven years when the family home was established in Curry county, the father securing a tract of government land, upon which the subject of this review was reared. He started out to provide for his own support when a young man of twenty-two years, securing a pre-emption claim and engaging in stock-raising. He ran his cattle on the open range previous to this time and later herded his cattle on his range, but after several years sold his first place. He then purchased the old family homestead of seven hundred and sixty acres, together with two hundred acres adjoining, all pasture and dairy land, and his wife owns three hundred acres adjoining Gold Beach. Mr. Miller is now engaged in dairying and stock-raising, and careful management and intelligently directed effort have brought him a gratifying measure of success. He keeps high grades of stock and his dairy products, because of their excellence, find a ready sale on the market.

In 1886 occurred the marriage of Mr. Miller and Miss Eliza Cunniff, a native of Gold Beach and a daughter of Dennis and Margaret (McCaflery) Cunniff, in whose family were three children: Dennis, living at Gold Beach; Margaret, the wife of John M. Howell, of Cheteo, Oregon; and Mrs. Miller, who by her marriage has become the mother of eight children. These are: Pearl the wife of Walter Custer, of Albany, Oregon; Sylvia, who is the wife of Charles Doyle, of Wedderburn, and has one child Blanche; Ethel, the wife of Edward Huitt, of Wedderburn, and the mother of two children, Irene and Stephen; Georgia, who is attending school; and Carl, Gladys, Howard and Robert, also in school.

Politically Mr. Miller is numbered with the progressives and keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day. He believes that government affairs should be administered for the benefit of the majority rather than of the few and gives his aid and cooperation to all movements that he believes will bring about needed reform and improvement. He has never held office save that of stock inspector which position he filled by appointment for two years. He holds membership with the Woodmen of the World and the Fraternal Order of Eagles. His home is situated four miles up the river from Gold Beach, on the north side of the stream, near the Bagnell ferry. He is now pleasantly situated and is enjoying the fruits of his toil, for he is now well established in business and has promoted his interests to such a point that they are proving profitable.

REUBEN HENRY WHITE was a lifelong resident of Klamath county save for a few months spent in Siskiyou county, California. He was born in Klamath Falls, February 26, 1871, and passed away at Yuma, Arizona on the 15th of February, 1912, when almost forty-one years of age. His parents were Henry and Katharine White. The father was a native of Missouri and married a full-blooded Klamath Indian. He became closely identified with the interests of the northwest and was accidentally killed at Klamath Falls. In the family were two children: Rosa Bell, the wife of William Skeen, who resides on Klamath marsh; and Reuben Henry. After losing her first husband the mother became the wife of Wesley Cole, who is now in the Soldiers' Home, while Mrs. Cole resides at Fort Klamath. There were two children of that marriage: John Cole, who is with his mother; and Maggie, the wife of Harry Pearson, of Keno, Klamath county.

Reuben Henry White was reared in Klamath county and after arriving at years of maturity was married, in 1890, to Miss Margaret Moody, who was born in Siskiyou county, California, October 1, 1865, and is a daughter of William and Nellie (Gwin) Moody. Mr. Moody was a white man while his wife was a full-blooded Indian. He died in Keno, August 8, 1890, while Mrs. Moody now makes her home in Klamath Falls. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. White were four children, Ethel, Eva, Ruby and Beulah. The eldest is the wife of John Copeland, of Fort Klamath and they have two children, John and Jesse. Mr. White was in Arizona for his health when death claimed him. Mrs. White acquired her education in Jacksonville, Oregon. She was reared in Siskiyou and Jackson counties and never resided on the reservation until she was married. Mr. White devoted his entire life to stock-raising and had charge of eight claims on the Klamath reservation—his own, his mother's, his wife's and those belonging to his children. Mrs. White still has charge of these eight claims, each one of which comprises one hundred and sixty acres of land and is valued at twenty-five thousand dollars. In their management Mrs. White displays excellent business ability and keen discrimination and her enterprising and progressive methods are winning for her and her family substantial success.

GEORGE W. SMITH. Strong proof of the popularity and ability of George W. Smith is manifest in the fact that since July, 1902, he has been continuously elected to the office of county clerk of Curry county, in which position he is still serving. In late years he has not sought reelection to that position but it has come to him unsolicited, showing that his fellow townsmen regard him as splendidly qualified for the duties of the office. He was born in Jackson county, West Virginia, and is one of thirteen children of David and Sarah E. (Chapman) Smith, natives of Pennsylvania and Virginia respectively. Eight of the family are still living: George W.; Emma, the wife of C. S. Hulin, of Newburg, Oregon; Lottie, the wife of William Kennedy, of Montana; Mary, the wife of John Barr, of Cottage Grove, Oregon; Walter, of Agnes, Oregon; Susie the wife of Moses Gumm, of Irving, this state; Mabel, the wife of William Barr, of Springfield, Oregon; and Ada, the wife of Dr. Randolph Barr, also of Springfield.

During the early boyhood of George W. Smith his parents removed from West Virginia to Minnesota, where he was reared upon the home farm, early becoming familiar with the duties and labors incident to plowing, planting and harvesting. On attaining his majority he engaged in teaching school, which profession he followed for ten years. Having come to Oregon in 1889 he settled in Lane county, where his parents had previously located. For three years he engaged in teaching school at Acme, and then came to Coos county, living at Porter, near Marshfield, for a year. He next removed to Curry county and for seven years followed the profession of teaching at Langlois. Turning his attention to commercial pursuits he was employed in a store there for three years and in July, 1902, was called to public office when elected to the position of county clerk. He has been elected at each successive term since, but in 1912 refused to accept the nomination in order that he might become the nominee for the office of school superintendent. His name was not even placed on the ballot and yet he was elected. What higher testimonial of public confidence could be given—for public confidence is always the recognition of fidelity and capability on the part of the individual. He has ever remained an interested friend of the cause of education and was chairman of the board of school directors at the time the new schoolhouse at Gold Beach was begun. In politics he is a republican and is one of the recognized leaders of the party although not a politician in the usually accepted sense of the term. In addition to his professional and political services he has become known in Curry county as the owner of a sawmill at Agnes and of considerable timber land.

On the 5th of April, 1899, Mr. Smith was united in marriage to Miss Marian B. Russell, a daughter of J. P. and Nancy (Looney) Russell, both of whom were natives of Tennessee. Mrs. Smith, who was born in Curry county, is one of thirteen children, twelve of whom yet live. By her marriage she has become the mother of three sons and a daughter: Marshall, born October 20, 1901; Homer, January 15, 1903; Harold, May 22, 1904; and Nancy, November 26, 1907. The family residence is a pleasant home in Gold Beach which Mr. Smith owns. He holds membership in the Woodmen of the World and is a popular citizen in fraternal, political and professional circles, possessing genial qualities and sterling worth, which have gained him high regard.

F. J. BOLTER, who was the owner of valuable land in Marion county, Oregon, was born in Northampton, Massachusetts, in 1852, his parents being G. T. and Julia (Mayer) Bolter, the former a native of Canada and the latter of Massachusetts. After their marriage in the Old Bay state the parents took up their residence there until 1854, the year in which they came west and located in Jackson county, Oregon, making the trip to San Francisco by way of the isthmus. From that city they set out for Crescent City and subsequently crossed the mountains to the Illinois River mining country, where the father mined for gold and also operated a sawmill. He engaged in these occupations for two years before removing with his family to Salem. He made that city his home until 1863, when he removed to Portland, where he resided until 1874. In the latter city he engaged in the broom and brush business, a trade which he had learned in his youth. This was most successful but he soon removed to Monmouth, where he operated a store for a few years before trading it in part payment for a farm in Polk county, which he cultivated for seven years. At the end of that time he removed to Los Angeles, California, and is still residing there with his son, at the age of eighty-four years, while the mother is eighty years of age. They became the parents of seven children, five of whom survive, as follows: Mrs. McQuerry, who is residing in Portland; E. C. and Mrs. Stewart, both of whom are residents of Los Angeles, California; W. E.; and Mrs. Webb, of northwestern Oregon.

F. J. Bolter started out upon his independent career at the age of sixteen years. For five years he accepted employment at various occupations but at the end of that time he started farming on the property of two hundred and forty acres which he still owned at the time of his demise. Realizing that this is an age of specialization, he departed somewhat from the lines of general farming and specialized in hop raising, becoming one of the most extensive hop growers in his neighborhood. Throughout the active years of his life he exercised every means at his command to meet with success in his chosen occupation. Industry, energy and careful study were among his most valuable assistants and are responsible for much of the success with which he met. He passed away on the 14th of February, 1912, leaving the impress and influence of a well spent and helpful life.

In 1874 Mr. Bolter was married to Miss Philomena Moisan, who was born in Marion county and was a daughter of Thomas and Harriet Moisan, the father a native of Canada and the mother of Vancouver, Washington. The latter came to Oregon with the Hudson's Bay Company in pioneer times and the father arrived in 1840. They were married in this state and have always resided in Marion county. The father passed away in 1888 but the mother is still living at the age of eighty-seven years. To Mr. and Mrs. Bolter nine children were born: Frank H., who was accidentally killed at the age of thirty-two years while employed as a locomotive engineer; George H., who is a locomotive engineer residing in Roseburg; Mrs. Emily M. Decker, of Santa Paula, California, who never made use of the education she received for teaching but engaged in the merchandising business; A. M., who was formerly a railroad engineer but is now living in Marion county; R. J., who was employed by a railroad in Vancouver but is now managing the home farm; Ernest B., a railroad brakeman; and two daughters and one son who passed away in infancy.

In politics Mr. Bolter gave his support to the republican party and, although he took an active interest in the issues of the day and was enthusiastic in his support of the party, he never sought office. In the localities in which he was a property holder he was looked upon as a man of stability and integrity and because of his close attention to the details of citizenship was highly respected and esteemed.

GEORGE FARRIER has, since he was sixteen years of age, been identified with farming, first in California and later in Oregon. For twenty-six years he has been recognized as one of the leading agriculturists of Curry county and an important force in the development of the section. He owns a one hundred and sixty-eight acre farm three miles south of Langlois which he operates along the most modern and progressive lines. He was born in Arkansas, in 1842, and when he was ten years of age crossed the plains to California with his father, his mother having died in Arkansas, when he was five years of age. Arriving in California the father settled in Mud Springs and there mined for two years subsequently going to Humboldt county in 1864. There he took up a land claim and operated this property until his death in 1874. He and his wife had four children: Sarah, the wife of George Singley, of California; Anna, who married Thomas Cook, also of California; George, of this review; and William, a resident of Mexico.

George Farrier received his education in the public schools of Arkansas and California and when he was sixteen years of age started his independent career. Since that time he has devoted his attention to farming and has gained a success in this line of occupation which is the direct result of concentrated effort and early experience. In 1886 he came to Curry county and bought one hundred and sixty acres which he cleared, cultivated and improved. He has since added eight acres to his holdings and upon his farm carries on a successful dairy business, his able management of the enterprise, placing him among the most successful and representative men of his section.

Mr. Farrier has been twice married. In 1866 he wedded Miss Nancy Counts, a native of California, and they became the parents of twelve children: William, deceased; Louis, of Denmark, who is married and has four children; Evie, who has passed away; Charles, who is married and has one child, and who resides with the subject of this review; Andrew, of Denmark, who is married and has two children; Walter, who resides in Bandon, and is married and has two children; Daisy, the wife of Andrew Phinegar, of Bandon, by whom she has four children; A. J., a rancher of Curry county, who is married and has three children; and Georgia, Minnie, Rosie, and Robert, all of whom have passed away. Mr. Farrier's first wife died in March, 1886, and some time afterward he was again married, his second union being with Mrs. Mary J. Woodruff, who had the following children by her first marriage: Calvin, who resides in Gold Beach, California, and is married and has three children; Nora, deceased; Chancey, of Langlois, who is married and has four children; Carrie, the wife of Charles Finley, of California, by whom she has three children; and Carnie, who resides in Langlois.

Mr. Farrier is prominent in the Masonic order. He gives his allegiance to the democratic party and is one of the public-spirited men in this part of the state. For over half a century he has been a resident of Oregon and has a personal interest in its development. As road superintendent he did able work for three years, and his knowledge and ability have been factors in securing modern thoroughfares in Curry county. His work along this line like all his other activities was well directed and is an example of the quality of his interests and his ability to make them effective.

M. C. FINDLEY, M. D., engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery at Grants Pass, since October, 1901, being the second oldest physician in years of continuous practice here, specializes largely in the treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, for which he particularly qualified in post-graduate study. He was born near Lyndon, Osage county, Kansas, August 19, 1872, and is a son of David and Mary Ann (McFeaters) Findley, both of whom were natives of Indiana county, Pennsylvania, born near Pittsburg. In that locality they were reared and married and in 1871 removed to Kansas, where the father homesteaded a tract of land. He has made farming his life work and now resides at Hill City, Kansas, where his wife passed away when their son Dr. Findley was but fourteen years of age. He was the youngest son in a family of eleven children and the ninth in order of birth. His brother John F. is conducting business under the name of the Eureka Drug Company at Bartlesville, Oklahoma, and is a graduate pharmacist. Another brother, Dr. Luther Findley, is a physician practicing at Hill City, Kansas, and a sister, Mrs. Nettie (Findley) Bell, is a graduate pharmacist, now located at Bartlesville, Oklahoma.

Dr. Findley, whose name introduces this record, supplemented his early education by three years' study in the state college at Manhattan, Kansas, and afterward entered the University Medical College at Kansas City, Missouri, from which he was graduated with the M. D. degree in 1896. He then opened an office in Baldwin, Kansas, where he remained for four and a half years. He next spent a year in the Chicago Polyclinic, making special study of the diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. In the same period he studied psychology and did other special work at Northwestern University, thus broadening his general knowledge at the same time he was promoting his professional skill and efficiency. In October, 1901, he came to Grants Pass, opened an office here and is now the second oldest physician of the city. While he engages to some extent in general practice he concentrates his attention most largely upon the treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. In 1904 he pursued a course in that department of the New York Post Graduate Medical College of New York city, and in 1905 he further continued his studies along this line in the New York Eye & Ear Infirmary. He likewise pursued a clinical course under Professor Herman Knapp and thus broad study and research have given him superior skill and ability along that line. In 1899 he was a student in Morfield's Ophthalmological Institute and also in Gray's Inn and the Ear, Nose & Throat College, each of those institutions being in London, England. In the latter part of the same summer he took a course in the eye, ear and throat department of the American Medical Association at Vienna. For eleven years he has practiced continuously in Grants Pass save for the periods spent in study in this country and abroad. In addition to his professional duties he is identified with banking and real-estate interests here, and occupies a prominent and honored position in business as well as professional circles.

On the 10th of May, 1899, Dr. Findley was married to Miss Anna May Hair, who was born in Nebraska City, Nebraska, January 6, 1871, a daughter of E. F. Hair. Mrs. Findley won the degree of Bachelor of Arts at Baker University in Baldwin, Kansas, in 1894, and the Master of Arts degree was conferred upon her in 1896. She taught in her alma mater for one year and then accepted a position in the high school at Kansas City, Kansas, becoming head of the Latin department, in which connection she continued until the time of her marriage. She is a member of the Tri Delta, a college sorority. Dr. and Mrs. Findley have seven children:

Mary, Bayard, Genevieve, Dwight, Louise, Pauline and Edith. Dr. and Mrs. Findley hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, which he joined after his marriage, having previously been connected with the Presbyterian church. His associations along professional lines keep him in touch with the advanced work of the medical fraternity. He is a member of the American Medical Association of the United States and a life member of the American Medical Association of Vienna. He was a member of the Ninth International Ophthalmological Congress, belongs to the Northwestern Surgical Association, the Oregon State Medical Association and the Southern Oregon Medical Society. He has a wide acquaintance among physicians and surgeons in Oregon and his close conformity to a high standard of professional ethics has brought him the admiration and high regard of all. He follows the most advanced standards and ideals, recognizing the grave responsibilities of the profession and his labors have been attended with success that could only have been won through conscientious effort based upon broad, comprehensive and accurate knowledge.

JOHN EMBUM. From the rich farming district of Oregon there have come many men who have won success in agricultural lines and who are now living retired, enjoying the fruits of their labor. To this class belongs John Embum, of Dallas, Oregon, who is yet in the prime of life and to whom his well directed energy of former years has brought a competence, which supplies him with all the necessities and many of the comforts of life without recourse to other labor. He was born in Sweden, on the 12th of April, 1855, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Larse Oleff. The father was a carpenter in Sweden and worked at his trade in that country for many years before coming to the United States in 1863. He located first in Calumet, Michigan, where he worked in the copper mines and in the timber tracts. He resided there for fifteen years before coming to Oregon in 1878. Here he located in Astoria, and the next year his family also came to that town. He again followed his trade and accepted employment in various parts of Oregon until the time of his death which occurred in Seattle, in 1908, when he was seventy-eight years of age. His wife had previously passed away in Astoria.

John Embum was an only child and but eight years of age when he arrived in America with his parents. His training was received in the common schools of Calumet, and when his age and experience justified it he followed his father's trade and also did contracting work. He resided in Umatilla county for three years before going to Tillamook, where he purchased one hundred and thirty-six acres of good land. For twenty-seven years he devoted his energy to agricultural pursuits, giving his principal attention to dairying, but at the end of that time rented his property and removed to Dallas, where he is now residing. Mr. Embum met with a good measure of success, and his energies, which were given entirely to the arduous task of developing and cultivating his farm, have been amply rewarded. As he prospered in his undertakings he added to his place all the modern equipments and accessories of a model farm, and at the time of his retirement the improved appearance of his farm was proof of his careful supervision and practical methods. As he was financially enabled he has purchased property in Willamina, which he holds as an investment.

In 1884 Mr. Embum was married to Miss Jessie Johnson, a daughter of William and Rhoda Johnson, agriculturists of Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Embum three children have been born: Rhoda, who is the wife of Frank Easter, a liveryman in Willamina, Oregon; and Earl and Clark, both of whom are residing at home and attending school. Mr. Embum is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Tillamook, and in politics is a democrat, casting his vote with democracy in all matters of public moment. In looking over his life's record it is seen that persistent, earnest work has constituted the foundation, upon which he has built his prosperity, and his diligence may well serve as an example for others to emulate.

JOHN DAVID FARRA. The life history of John David Farra is a proof of the fact that intense industry makes most of our successful men. He may justly be called a self-made man for he came to Lake county empty-handed and whatever he now possesses has come to him as the reward of earnest, persistent labor. He has ever manifested the spirit of enterprise which has led to the rapid development of the great section west of the Mississippi. He was born in Jackson county, Kansas, September 6, 1861, a son of David R. and Mary Rice (Agie) Farra, natives of Kentucky and South Carolina respectively. Following their marriage they became residents of Kansas and in 1862 removed to Missouri whence in 1870 they came to Jackson county, Oregon, where they continued to make their home until called from this life. The mother passed away in 1871 and the father in 1874, when about fifty years of age. He also followed farming and improved a homestead which he took up in Jackson county about two miles south of Eagle Point. By his first marriage he had a son, Thomas Jefferson, who was drowned in British Columbia a few years ago. By his marriage to Mary Rice Agie there were born six children: John David; Mary, the widow of C. E. White, of Jackson county, Oregon; Edward Lee, of Central Point, Oregon; Lucy Jane, the wife of James Singeltery, of Portland; Walter Hedrick, of Josephine county; and Samuel Jefferson, of Che-waucan valley.

John David Farra accompanied his parents on their various removals, being about nine years of age when the family arrived in Jackson county, Oregon, where he remained until the spring of 1880. Since that time or for a period of thirty-two years he has resided continuously in Lake county and during the greater part of the time has been engaged in the stock business, handling both cattle and horses. For twelve years he conducted a livery business in Paisley but has now leased his barn. He was at one time the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of land in Little Chewaucan valley which he sold three years ago. He always resided upon a ranch until he established his home in the town of Paisley in 1900. When he first came to this county in 1880 he worked for wages on a stock ranch in the Silver Lake country for about two years. He next went to the Goose Lake valley and was foreman of the XL ranch for more than five years, during which time about ten thousand head of cattle were run upon that place. He then removed to Chewaucan valley about 1887 and engaged in the stock business on his own account, devoting ten years to that undertaking, after which, in 1897, he established a livery business in Paisley. At one time he was the owner of two ranches in this district comprising five hundred and fifty acres. He was a poor boy when he came to Lake county but he scorned not honest labor and his unflinching industry, determination and faithfulness won him advancement until he was able to engage in business on his own account. His purpose and honorable dealing thus gained him further success as the years passed and he is now one of the substantial citizens of the valley.

On the 9th of June, 1902, Mr. Farra was married to Miss Frances Bell Taylor, who was born in Umatilla county, Oregon, in 1882, a daughter of Preston Alexander and Clara Victoria (Wilson) Taylor, who are natives of Oregon and Kansas respectively and are now residing in Colusa, California. Mr. and Mrs. Farra had four children: Virga Loretta, Earl Merritt and Opal Esther, all living and Fred Alexander, who was drowned on June 19, 1908, at the age of two years, six months and twenty-three days. In politics Mr. Farra is a democrat and has filled the office of justice of the peace and constable, but office holding has had little attraction for him, for his business affairs have made constant demand upon his time and energies and he has ever realized that it is close application that counts and intense industry has made him one of the successful men of the Chewaucan valley.

JOHN WEISNER, who has been a resident of Linn county for a quarter of a century, devotes his attention to the pursuits of general farming and stock-raising and is the owner of a tract of land comprising one hundred and ninety-six acres and situated six miles northwest of Lebanon. His birth occurred in Austria on the 10th of August, 1853, his parents being John and Annie (Schrofer) Weisner, likewise natives of that country. Emigrating to the new world, they established their home in the state of Kansas in 1870. Of their eleven children, six are yet living, as follows: John, of this review; Margaret, living with our subject, who is the widow of Henry Mellon and the mother of three children—Bertha, Catherine and Albert; Annie, who is the wife of Dan Curtis, of Texas; Mary, who gave her hand in marriage to Dan Steel and resides in Kansas; William, who lives on the home place in the Sunflower state; and Louisa, the wife of William Steel, of Kansas.

John Weisner, who was a youth of seventeen when his parents took up their abode in Kansas, remained on his father's farm in that state until 1880, the year of his marriage. Following that important event in his life he operated a rented farm in Kansas for seven years, on the expiration of which period he disposed of the property and came to Oregon, settling in Linn county in 1887. Here he cultivated rented land for three years and then bought the farm of one hundred and ninety-six acres on which he has resided to the present time. He has made many substantial improvements on the property and in his undertakings as a farmer and stock-raiser has won well deserved success, being now numbered among the prosperous and representative citizens of his community.

In 1880 Mr. Weisner was joined in wedlock to Miss Mary E. Riat, a native of Kansas, by whom he has the following children: Louisa, who is the wife of Frank Feltzer, of Albany, Oregon; Henry E., a resident of British Columbia; Fred W., who is an agriculturist residing at Crabtree, Oregon, and the father of one child; George, who likewise makes his home at Crabtree, this state; Elizabeth, who is the wife of Mortz Overhoff, of Lebanon, Oregon, and the mother of one child; and Louis, John, Mary and Francis, all of whom are attending school.

In politics Mr. Weisner is a republican and, though not an office seeker, has served in the capacity of road supervisor and for a few years acted as a member of the school board. In religious faith he is a Catholic. A man of exemplary habits, of high principles and of upright conduct, wherever he is known he commands the good-will and trust of those with whom he is associated.

HARRY S. BELLE, a well known and successful real-estate dealer, is one of Salem's pioneers, having first located here thirty-seven years ago. He was born in Norway on February 29, 1848, and there he was educated and reared to the age of nineteen years.

In 1867 he decided to come to America to seek his fortune, so he took passage for the United States and after several weeks at sea landed at New York city. During the succeeding five years he followed various pursuits at different points in the east, acquiring a very good knowledge of the language and an understanding of American commercial methods. In 1872 he came to the northwest, locating in Portland, where he remained for three years. At the expiration of that period, in 1875, he removed to Salem to assume the duties of a clerkship in the store of Bregman Brothers. Later he severed his connection with this firm and took a position in a dry-goods store but subsequently gave this up also and turned his attention to agricultural pursuits. He followed this vocation in the vicinity of Salem with excellent success for seven years, and at the end of that time once more identified himself with commercial activities. From early youth he had been taught to appreciate the value of thrift and industry and had always saved a portion of his earnings, however small they might be. As a result he acquired sufficient means to engage in business for himself. Therefore, when he left his ranch he purchased a dry-goods and shoe store in Salem which he operated for eight years under the name of "The Palace." Mr. Belle has always been a man of much perspicacity and foresight, whose enterprising spirit and ambition have kept him constantly alert, seeking for opportunities to promote his advancement in a business way. He early recognized that the constantly increasing trend of migration to the northwest was going to afford excellent opportunities for large financial returns in real estate, so disposing of his store he established an office and has ever since been engaged in this business.

Salem was the scene of Mr. Belle's marriage on the 9th of November, 1876, to Miss Nancy Swegle, a native of this city and a daughter of Charles Swegle, a farmer and broker of Salem, who crossed the plains to Oregon with an ox team in 1848. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Belle as follows: Blanche, the deceased wife of T. A. Young of Portland, who left a daughter, Thelma, who has always lived with Mr. and Mrs. Belle; Adiline deceased; Claude S., who owns and conducts "The Belle Confectionery," of Salem; and Lucile Belle and Eugenia, both of whom are living at home. The former is a musician of more than average ability, and the latter, who possesses a most promising voice, is devoting her entire attention to the study of music.

Mr. Belle is a charter member of the Woodmen of the World, and the United Artisans, and has filled all of the chairs in the latter organization. His political support he has given to the republican party ever since granted the right of franchise. Mr. Belle is one of the many citizens of the northwest who emigrated to this country in their early youth, and although they possessed no capital, their ambition sustained by their tireless energy and determination of purpose has enabled them to achieve success.

MANLEY CROMWELL CURRIER, a resident of Paisley connected with ranching interests in Lake county, although he is now practically living retired, was born in Benton county, Oregon, July 6, 1856 a son of Jacob and Marie (Foster) Currier the former a native of New England and the latter of Missouri. They crossed the plains in 1846 and settled on a donation claim in Benton county about ten miles south and three miles west of Corvallis, upon which he still resides at the venerable age of eighty-five years. The mother died when her son Manley was but two and a half years old and the father afterward married Sarah Lena Buchanan. There were four children by his first marriage: William Andrew, of Sumner Lake, Oregon; Lorena S., the wife of J. W. Bellknap, living near Hanover, California; Manley C.; and Annie, who died in infancy. There were also four children by the father's second marriage: Elizabeth, at home; John, who died at the age of twenty-two years; Sarah, at home; and Eva, who is the wife of Dick Scott, who is aiding in the operation of her father's farm.

Manley Cromwell Currier remained on the old homestead until 1880, when he removed to Sumner Lake and was engaged in ranching in that district for eight or nine years. He then removed to the vicinity of Paisley, where he has a ranch of two hundred and ninety acres of meadow land a mile east of the town, and also owns elsewhere one hundred and sixty acres in pasture. He is also the owner of town property and upon his ranch he runs from three to four hundred head of cattle. He is likewise a stockholder in the Wauacan Mercantile Company of Paisley and is thus busily employed with interests which are already large and of growing importance. His cattle are of good grades and the systematic and methodical manner in which he manages his business is bringing to him gratifying success.

On the 11th of November, 1903, Mr. Currier was married to Miss Kittie Belle Hanan, who was born in Lake county, Oregon, August 13, 1879, a daughter of John C. and Margaret L. (Hadley) Hanan. The father was the first white child born in Oregon City, his natal day being February 29, 1844. He spent his entire life in this state, where he was a ranch and stock man. While engaged in mowing grass he was killed by a runaway team at Sumner Lake, July 29, 1906. He was a son of George and Jane (Evans) Hanan and was reared in Douglas county, but became a resident of Lake county about 1870 and there resided for thirty-six years. His wife was born in Douglas county, Oregon, March 19, 1854, and died in Lake county, October 2, 1902. They were the parents of nine children: George W., living in Paisley; Emma A., the wife of J. S. Kelsey, a stockman of Paisley; Kittie Belle; Charles M. and Henry E., both of Paisley; Andrew J., of Adel, Oregon; John E., of Warm Springs, this state; Raymond L., of Paisley; and one who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Currier have one child, Lorena Belle, born May 27, 1908.

Mr. Currier is an Odd Fellow and he gives his political support to the democratic party, having advocated its principles since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. His father is today one of the oldest native sons of Oregon and Manley C. Currier has for fifty-six years resided in this state which has made wonderful progress during that period. No longer is it a frontier district.

deprived of all the advantages of the older east and isolated from the civilization of the section of the country long since settled. The railroad has brought it into close proximity with other districts and the development of its rich natural resources and the establishment of business enterprises have placed it on a par with the states whose products are one of the sources of the nation's wealth. Mr. Currier can remember the time when the early railroads were built and it was considered a marvelous thing to ride upon a railroad train; he has seen the forests cut, the arid lands reclaimed, the mines developed and the agricultural districts improved, and rejoices heartily in what has been accomplished.

F. A. STEWART is prominent in business, social and political circles of Port Orford and is one of the representative and enterprising citizens of Curry county. He has lived in Oregon since his childhood and from the beginning of his active career has been engaged in various important and successful enterprises. He is now associated with his son in the conduct of the Port Orford Tribune and is meeting with the same success in journalism which rewarded his efforts as a school teacher, general merchant, miner and stock-raiser. He was born in Cass county, Illinois, January 25, 1843, and is a son of Joel and Sarah (Thurston) Stewart, the former a native of New Bedford, Massachusetts, and the latter of Cincinnati, Ohio. In the latter city their marriage occurred and in 1826 they moved to Illinois, settling near Beardstown on a farm. The father carried on general agricultural pursuits upon this property until his death which occurred in 1847. His wife has also passed away, her death having occurred while crossing the plains to Oregon in 1854. She was twice married. To her first union thirteen children were born, three of whom are still living: Mrs. Thomas Smith, who makes her home on the Rogue river, near Wedderburn; F. A., the subject of this review, and Susan L., who became the wife of John Reynolds, of Portland. After the death of her first husband the mother of our subject was united in marriage to Captain John P. Sutton, a native of Tennessee, who made his first journey to Oregon in 1851. Two years afterward he went to Illinois and organized a large colony of settlers with whom he came to Oregon in 1854. Most of these people located in Polk county, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Sutton was born one son, Walter, who served in the state legislature in 1886. Captain Sutton passed away in Jackson county in 1880.

F. A. Stewart received most of his education in the public schools of Dallas, and Bell-passe, Marion county. He began active life for himself when he was only twelve years of age and paid all the expenses incident to his schooling. He made use of every opportunity to study that came his way and fitted himself for teaching, following this occupation for some time in various parts of the Willamette valley, including district No. 1, at Champoege, the oldest district in the state.

In 1869 he became junior member of the firm of Riley & Stewart, conducting a general mercantile, lumbering and fishing business in Gold Beach, and for ten years Mr. Stewart was active in the affairs of this concern. When he at length disposed of his holdings he engaged in stock-raising and beach mining on the Pacific coast near the Rogue river and continued thus for a number of years. He also purchased land at Ophir, which he later sold. Subsequently, in 1904, in association with his son he purchased the Port Orford Tribune and this journal he is now conducting. He has made his paper successful by giving constant attention to it and by uniting ability as a journalist with business discrimination of a high order. He is alive to the important phases of the day's events and has an instinct for news together with an editorial facility in pointing out its bearing and importance. His business ability has made his enterprise successful and has gained him a place of prominence and importance among his fellow citizens. Mr. Stewart has a firm belief in the future of his section and does his utmost to promote growth and development. He owns twenty acres of land in Curry county and property in Port Orford and Bandon, besides a valuable timber claim near the coast.

Mr. Stewart has been twice married. His first wife was Miss Hattie M. Riley, who passed away one year and a half after the marriage. In 1872 the subject of this review wedded Miss Laura E. Riley, a native of Port Orford and the first white girl born in that city. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart became the parents of five children, three of whom are still living. Hardy T. was born in 1879 and is associated with his father in the conduct of the Port Orford Tribune. He married Miss Eva Hall, who came to Oregon with her parents in 1892, and settled in Coos county. They have three children: Dorothy, Byron and Helen. Ruby was born in 1882, and is the wife of A. J. Krantz, a business man of Portland. Pearl married Thomas L. Carey, a merchant and salesman in Port Orford. The two oldest children born to Mr. and Mrs. Stewart, Frank R. and Fred D., are deceased.

Mr. Stewart gives a general allegiance to the republican party but often votes independent of party affiliation, following his own judgment to guide him in support of a candidate. He is one of the prominent figures in local and state politics and has served in various capacities. He was in the state legislature in 1882 and again represented his fellow citizens in that body in 1905. He served as collector of customs in southern Oregon for four years and was treasurer of Curry county for a like period. He was also school superintendent and has served as deputy in nearly all the county offices and also as deputy postmaster. He formerly belonged to the Masonic order but has discontinued his connection with that organization. He does not affiliate with any particular church but is a devout adherent of the universal religion of kindness and goodwill. He is a keen and discriminating business man, an able politician and above all a loyal and public-spirited citizen and is entitled to the prosperity he is now enjoying and the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens.

B. F. ADAMS. When B. F. Adams died May 18, 1912, the agricultural interests of Coos county suffered a distinct loss. He had been engaged in the cultivation of the soil in that locality since 1883 and was recognized as one of the county's foremost citizens. He was born in Wisconsin in 1850 and was a son of William and Mary (Vine) Adams. His parents were born in Europe but were married in New York. Both are now deceased. They were the parents of eleven children, seven of whom are still living: George, who is now deceased; Lorenzo D., who is still living; one child who died in infancy; B. F., of this review; William P., who now resides in California; Mrs. Annie Miller; Mrs. Adelia Phillips; Mrs. Emma Jolley; William; George, alive; and Mrs. Blanch Brown, who has passed away. All of the surviving children are residents of California.

B. F. Adams received his early education in the public schools of California, whither he removed in early boyhood with his parents. At the age of twenty-one years he engaged in freighting across the mountains and continued in that business until 1883. In that year he moved to Oregon and settled in Coos county, one and a half miles from Ten Mile lake, where he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of fine farm land for eight hundred dollars. He cultivated his land and continuously improved the place until the time of his death. He made a specialty of dairying and took great pride in keeping this branch of his business in excellent condition. At one time he added one hundred and sixty acres to his holdings but deeded this to his two sons some years before his death. He carried on farming along scientific lines, constantly added new improvements and was personally interested in keeping his dairy clean and sanitary. At the time of his death he owned one hundred and sixty acres of finely improved land in Coos county, two houses and the lots upon which they stood in the town of North Bend and was one of the leading and progressive men of the district.

In 1883 Mr. Adams was united in marriage to Miss Kate Shearer, who was born in Orville, California, and received her early education in that state. Her father died when she was a small child. Unto him and his wife were born seven children: Mrs. Virginia Patterson, of Colorado; Kate, the widow of our subject; William J., Mrs. Sadie Adams and Fred, all of whom are now deceased; and two children who died in infancy. Mrs. Adams' mother, previous to her union with Mr. Shearer, had been Mrs. Huston, and upon the death of her second husband was again married, her third union being with Nahum Ames, by whom she had two children: Mrs. Emma Blodgett, of Medford, Oregon; and Nahum, Jr., of California. Mr. Ames died in 1905 having survived his wife since 1878. Mrs. Adams is now the owner of the two houses and lots in North Bend which were the property of her husband before his death. To them were born six children: Winnie, who is at home with her mother; Mrs. J. T. Davis, who resides near the home farm; V. D., W. F., David and Lolo all of whom are living on the old homestead. The children were all educated in the public schools of Coos county.

Mr. Adams gave his political allegiance to the republican party and was a staunch supporter of the principles of that organization. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church in which faith he was reared. He also held membership in the Order of Foresters and was prominent in its affairs. He was a successful, broad-minded and liberal man, a loyal friend and an exemplary father and husband. His death left a place in the community which will be difficult to fill.

DANIEL KNIGHT WARREN. The family of which Daniel Knight Warren represented the fifth or sixth generation in this country, was established long before the Colonies began to rebel at English tyranny, but the exact date of the British emigrant's departure from the land of his forefathers is clothed in uncertainty. The traveler is supposed to have settled in or near Boston, Massachusetts, where Phineas Warren, the great-grandfather of Daniel K. Warren, was born about 1745, being a first cousin of General Warren of Revolutionary fame. Phineas, son of Phineas, and the next in order of birth was born in Marlborough, Windham county, Vermont, October 12, 1776, and married Mary Knight, born in the same locality, December 22, 1777. The grandparents had ten children, seven of whom were sons, and of whom Danforth, the father of Daniel and the fourth child, was born in Saratoga county, New York, September 22, 1806. He married, in Steuben county, New York, Amanda Pike, a native of Springfield, Massachusetts, born April 9, 1808. There were four sons of this union all born at Bath, New York, all now deceased, and Daniel Knight, born at Bath, Steuben county, New York, March 12, 1836, was the youngest of the family. The family, at no time prosperous, was reduced to dire straits upon the death of the father, August 23, 1837, the oldest of the four sons being then scarcely six years of age. Mrs. Warren proved herself one of the heroically molded women, and supported herself and children by spinning and weaving. Later Mrs. Warren married a Mr. Baxter and moved to Illinois with her family. Her death occurred in Princeton, Illinois, in September, 1881. As a youth of thirteen Daniel K. Warren started out to earn his own living by working on a farm, with the understanding that he was to receive for his services an amount which at that time was considered a fair remuneration for able-bodied men. For three years he followed this life, performing the ordinary duties of the farm and attending school during the winter. In the spring of 1852 he joined his three brothers in a trip across the plains. This never to be forgotten journey was well planned, the boys having their own teams, and arrangements were made with Captain Thomas Mercer to pilot them to the coast country. Each agreed to give the captain one hundred dollars, and to do his share of the work on the trip and all fulfilled their contract to the letter, finally parting from the amiable captain, who afterward settled in Seattle, Washington. The company crossed the Missouri river May 21st, and soon afterward camped on the present site of Omaha. At this point the company was thoroughly organized, there being fourteen wagons, forty horses and sixty-six men. Reaching The Dalles September 2, 1852, they met the first white men who had founded homes in that town and from there they proceeded on barges down the Columbia river, finally boarding the steamer at Cascade Locks, which brought them in safety to Portland, September 9, 1852, the trip consuming six months. In many respects this was a fortunate party, for the Indians were not troublesome, and only one member died on the way. All enjoyed good health until reaching Powder river, when Mr. Warren was taken ill with mountain fever and did not fully recover until after reaching his destination in Oregon. At Portland the brothers separated, Daniel going alone to the mines in southern Oregon, engaging in mining on Rogue river, being at that time only sixteen years of age. Not meeting with success he retraced his steps and arrived in Astoria in June, 1853, his available assets at that time being his much worn clothes and three dollars in currency. Finding employment in a sawmill camp he worked diligently and in 1855 with the savings of several months tried his luck in mining again. Not being successful, he engaged in lumbering until February, 1859, when he left Astoria for New York via Panama. On February 24, 1863, he was married to Sarah E. Eaton, a former schoolmate, who was born in Salisbury, New Hampshire, July 28, 1840. She was a daughter of John Ladd and Lovey B. Eaton of sturdy, thrifty New England stock of sterling ancestry. In 1845 the family moved from New Hampshire to Princeton, Illinois, traveling by canal boat from Buffalo and by the lakes to Chicago, thence by teams to Princeton. The marriage was solemnized at 8 o'clock in the morning and at noon the young people started on their long journey for Oregon via Panama (there being at that time no trans-continental railroads), consuming a month on the trip. Arriving at San Francisco April 26, 1863, and at Astoria May 1st, they were soon comfortably settled on a small farm previously owned by Mr. Warren, thirteen miles above Astoria, the present site of the town of Knappa, but then known as Warren's Landing. A philosopher always, Mr. Warren recalled the hardships of these early days with much pleasure since they were the stepping-stones to the success which followed his industry and good management. From this farm Mr. Warren moved to Astoria, where he engaged in the mercantile business for fourteen years, being one of the most prominent and influential men of the town and materially promoting its commercial well being. In 1883 Mr. Warren moved across the bay from Astoria to the present site of Warrenton, where he had purchased and reclaimed by dyking about nine hundred acres of land then of little value. Mr. Warren was the first man to build dykes on the lower Columbia and was forced to employ Chinese labor. The result of his effort was a most substantial advance in value of the land reclaimed. Here he built a spacious residence which is the family home at the present time. While his main endeavors were centered around his home and the town of Warrenton, which it was his pride to beautify and improve, many other interests engaged a share of his attention, and at the time of his death he was president of the Astoria National Bank and vice president of the Astoria Savings Bank. He was one of the organizers and one of the first stockholders of the railroad running between Warrenton and Seaside, which was built in 1889. Some years later the road was extended to Astoria and Portland and is now known as the S. P. & S. Railway. All along the course of his busy life, Mr. Warren took a keen, if not conspicuous, interest in republican politics and filled many of the prominent local offices. In 1876 he was appointed to fill the unexpired term of Solomon Smith in the state senate. During the memorable fight for common point rates, Mr. Warren lent valuable assistance, his appeals for recognition of the Oregon seaport attracting the attention of the people of the entire state and compelling the admiration even of those who differed from him. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Warren. Lucy Alice, the oldest daughter, married Henry C. Thompson of Portland. Maude M. is the wife of Charles R. Higgins of Astoria. George W. married Florence E. Baker, now living at Warrenton, Oregon. Fred L. married Ruth Smith and is now doing business in Astoria. Perhaps a quotation from the pen of Senator Charles W. Fulton would most fittingly close this sketch: "In the death of Daniel K. Warren (which occurred September 4, 1903) not only did the immediate family lose a devoted husband and father, but neighbors, friends and citizens were deprived of a considerate friend, wise counselor and deep sympathizer, and the state one of its ablest minds." Wise in counsel, courageous in action, in misfortune and adversity cheerful and undaunted, Mr. Warren was ever a leader in whom his friends and neighbors had perfect confidence and reposed perfect trust. He was public-spirited to a fault. Every public movement in the interest of, and important to, the people found him at the head. The needy and unfortunate never appealed to him in vain. A strong man and a lovable character in every station in life, public or private, it is no surprise to those who knew him that his death has cast so great a sorrow over the community. His life was one of exceptional industry and activity. It was a successful life, successful far beyond that attained by the average man, that is, he accomplished more in the upbuilding of society and the community where he lived as well as in the narrower field of acquiring wealth. He accumulated and left his family a considerable fortune by reason of his industry, frugality and intelligence, but what is more to us and dearer far to them, he left them the priceless treasure of an untarnished name and the memories of a useful life. All that Mr. Warren accomplished, and it was much, he accomplished in the face of great obstacles and under many and great disadvantages. There is no better lesson for our young people than the story of his life.

JOHN O'NEIL. Among the men in the northwest who aided in supplanting the conditions of frontier life with the evidences of modern civilization John O'Neil was numbered. He was born in County Down, Ireland, April 7, 1842, his parents being Henry and Sarah O'Neil. During the early boyhood of their son they crossed the Atlantic and, landing in New York city, there remained until called to their final rest. John O'Neil had two brothers who died in boyhood and a sister, Mrs. Mary Smith, who now resides on Staten Island, New York.

John O'Neil made his home in New York city until he reached maturity. He enlisted there in the regular army under Captain A. J. Smith and came to Rogue river, Oregon, fighting against the Indians in the Rogue River war. He took part in the worst of the fighting during that period and was thus active in supplanting the barbarous rule of the red men with the civilization of the white race. On the 26th of January, 1860, he was honorably discharged. Having become imbued with a love of the west, he decided to remain and for several years worked in the gold mines of Idaho. He worked with a surveying party for the Hudson's Bay Company for a time after leaving the army and in 1868 he came to Goose Lake valley in company with Captain Cook. Subsequently he was connected with pack trains and eventually he took up the first ranch on the Oregon side of the line in Goose Lake valley. This is now known as the Lehman ranch and is situated a mile north of New Pine Creek. Eventually he disposed of that ranch and removed to the town of New Pine Creek, where he resided for five years prior to his death, which occurred May 23, 1908. He owned one hundred and ninety acres, which he developed and improved until it was considered one of the best ranches in the valley. Upon his place he ran sheep for many years and was a very successful sheep man, keeping about three thousand head. Two or three times he suffered heavy losses by wintering his sheep on the desert.

On the 14th of June, 1874, Mr. O'Neil was united in marriage to Miss Nannie Fitzgerald, who was born in Tennessee, July 9, 1852, and went to Missonri with her parents, James T. and Sarah Elizabeth (Neal) Fitzgerald. Later a removal was made to Ashland, Oregon, and thence to Goose Lake valley, where Nannie Fitzgerald became the wife of John O'Neil. The children of this marriage were seven in number: Eva, who became the wife of George Sherman and died June 4, 1907, leaving two children. Monta and Newell; Mary the wife of Mike Barry, of Lake county, Oregon; James, of Fort Bidwell, California; Etta, the wife of John Larkin, of Modoc county, California; John, of New Pine Creek; Nora, who died at the age of fifteen years; and one, who died in infancy.

In politics Mr. O'Neil was a lifelong democrat but, while interested in the growth and success of the party, never sought office for himself. He was, however, officially connected with the schools and the cause of education found in him a stalwart champion. At the time of his death he held membership with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Every phase of pioneer life in the northwest was familiar to him. He went to Klondike, Alaska, in 1898 and nearly starved to death. He lost all his horses and proceeded on foot. He spent fifteen months there and all he had to eat for a time was some birds which he killed. He was a frontiersman during all his life and aided in paving the way that others have followed, so that the present generation is reaping the benefit of his labors and others will so do for years to come.

Mrs. O'Neil has a good home in the center of New Pine Creek, on the California side of the state line, and is conducting a rooming house. She also receives a pension for her husband's services in the Rogue River war. She is a very capable woman, businesslike and energetic, and has been an interested witness of much of the growth of this section of the country.

SAMUEL T. WYATT, a capitalist living in Philomath, is one of Benton county's native sons and represents a family which has long been prominent and influential in this district. He was born on his father's donation claim about one mile north of Philomath, on the 15th of March, 1859, his parents being William and Mary Theodocia (End) Wyatt. Both were born in England, the father's birth occurring in Buckinghamshire, in October, 1816, while the mother was born in London, March 31, 1822. Coming to the new world in early life, they were married in New York and later took up their home in Illinois, while in 1847 they migrated to Oregon, crossing the plains with ox teams. They located in Benton county and in the fall of 1849 removed to the donation claim which the father had secured and upon which the rest of their lives was spent. Mr. Wyatt was a stock-raiser and farmer by occupation and carried on agricultural pursuits on an extensive scale, at one time owning forty-seven hundred acres all located in Benton county. The old homestead consisted of thirty-seven hundred acres of that property, and this Mr. Wyatt brought under a high state of cultivation, making it one of the most valued and desirable properties of the county. He gave his political allegiance to the republican party and was an active and consistent member of the United Brethren church. Recognizing the value of higher education, he was one of the founders of Philomath College, and all matters pertaining to the material, intellectual and moral development of his community found in him a staunch champion. He passed away in February, 1903, while the mother's death occurred on March 14, 1906. In their family were eleven children, of whom four passed away in early life. The others are: Eliza Ann, the wife of A. J. Williams, of Philomath; Ezra Columbus, deceased, whose widow and children now live in Philomath; John E., residing two miles west of Corvallis in Benton county; Cynthia, the deceased wife of J. G. Springer; Mary Eva, who lives on the old home place; Samuel T., of this review; and Franklin, who makes his home on part of his father's donation claim.

Samuel T. Wyatt attended the district schools near his parents' home and upon his father's farm he received his training for the practical duties of life. Upon attaining his majority he started out independently along agricultural lines and for many years devoted his entire time and attention to the cultivation of his fields, which were brought to an excellent state of tilth. He has since sold a portion of his property but still retains in his possession some farm land, although he now makes his home in Corvallis. His business interests today are confined mainly to his duties as a director of the Philomath State Bank, his connection therewith making him well known in financial circles of the community.

Mr. Wyatt was married, in 1890, to Miss Mary O. Davison, who was born in Washington in 1865 and came to Oregon with her mother when twelve years of age. A man of high worth and sterling character, Mr. Wyatt is widely respected and honored in the county wherein his entire life has been spent, his record being one which has ever been in harmony with that of his honored father.

JESSE DE WITT BRIGHT owns and operates a farm of eighty-five acres on the Gravel Ford road and his business qualifications and genuine personal worth entitle him to a place among the enterprising and representative citizens of Coos county. He is a native son of Oregon and his birth occurred in 1874 on the old home farm in Coos county where his father had settled two years before. His parents were J. S. and Augustine (Mabee) Bright, who were pioneer settlers in Coos county. The father is still living and is associated with his son in the cultivation of the farm, being now eighty-two years of age. In his family were nine children: Philip, deceased; James, of Gaston, Oregon; Tom Tucker, a resident of California; L. of Iowa; Albert, living on the old home farm near Gravel Ford; Martha, the wife of William Brady, of Gravel Ford; Mary, the wife of Lee Weekly, also residing in Gravel Ford; Missie, now deceased; and Jesse D., of this review.

Mr. Bright was reared at home and received a practical education in the details of ranching and in the tilling and cultivation of the soil by working upon his father's farm. His history has been identified with agricultural pursuits from an early age. He has never moved from the property upon which he was born and has spent his life in its development. He has been instrumental in making most of the improvements upon the land and spent his boyhood in digging stumps and clearing the timber. He is now the owner of eighty-five acres, constituting a part of the old homestead, fifteen acres of which are in a high state of improvement and cultivation. He has been a hard and industrious worker during his life, taking upon his own shoulders the entire responsibility for the management and direction of the enterprise with which he is connected. He operated it in its entirety before his father's death and when that event occurred and the property was divided Mr. Bright turned his attention to the development of his own share. He has added many of the new farm implements and always keeps himself abreast of the times in the constantly developing science of agriculture. In addition to the tilling of the soil he also makes a specialty of dairying on a small scale and all the products of this branch of his enterprise find a ready sale upon the market.

Mr. Bright has been twice married. His first wife was Miss Emma Gilbert, a daughter of William and Alice Gilbert, of Coos county. To this union was born one child, Murray Pleasant, whose birth occurred in 1899 and who is now attending school. The first Mrs. Bright died in 1901 and some years later Mr. Bright was united in marriage to Miss Vina Cornwell, a native of Kentucky and a daughter of George Cornwell, who came to Oregon in 1906, settling in Coos county. Mrs. Bright is one of three children. The other two are James and Clay, both of whom are enterprising agriculturists in Coos county.

In his political views Mr. Bright affiliates with the socialist party, being a firm believer in the efficacy and truth of its principles. He takes an intelligent interest in public affairs but has never been an office seeker, preferring to devote his time to the development of his farm. As agriculture has progressed as a science Mr. Bright has progressed with it and is a representative of the class of farmers who are making the cultivation of the soil among the most honorable occupations in America.

GEORGE HENRY NEWELL, the owner of a two hundred and seventy acre ranch near Lakeview and interested in stage lines in this part of the state, was born near Oregon City, Oregon, February 3, 1855, a son of George P. and Emma (Weston) Newell. The father was born in an English ship on the Irish sea in 1810. His father was a quartermaster in the king's guard. At eighteen years of age, George P. Newell came alone to the United States, settling in New York, but in 1849 made his way to the opposite extremity of the country, crossing the plains to San Francisco, California, whence he made his way northward to Oregon City about 1851. Before coming to this state, however, he returned to New York and started with his family for the Pacific coast by way of the isthmus route. The mother and two of the children, however, died on shipboard and were laid to rest in a San Francisco cemetery. It was subsequent to this time that George P. Newell married Emma Weston in Oregon City. He was collector of the port at Vancouver at that time through appointment of President Fillmore. He was also well known as a music teacher, in which connection he traveled to a considerable extent. He probably was the best musician on the coast in his day. He taught both vocal and instrumental music, the latter including piano, violin and organ, and he held a choral festival, or cantata, in every town where he felt his pupils were far enough advanced for the work, it requiring about fifty pupils to present the entertainment. At length, however, he secured a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres near Oregon City and thus became identified with the agricultural development of the state. He was a well known and highly esteemed citizen and died at Albany in 1876. He was married four times and had fifteen children by the first three wives, three sons and two daughters being born of his third marriage, which was with Emma Weston. The daughters are now deceased but the sons are yet living, namely: Charles H., a resident of Reading, California; George H.; and William Alvah, assistant postmaster of Grants Pass.

After George H. Newell was eight years of age his parents for some years lived at various places in Oregon and California. In 1872 he came to Lake county, where he has made his home for the past forty years, although the town of Lakeview had not been established at the time of his arrival. He spent twenty-five years in Drews Valley, in this county, and he still owns a ranch of two hundred and seventy acres, which he secured from the government. During the past four years he has made his home in Lakeview and is interested in stage lines to Plush and to Klamath Falls, his son-in-law, Oliver Corey, having a contract for running stages. Mr. Newell is the owner of four acres of land in the city. He is practically living retired merely supervising his interests, for his business activity in former years brought to him a measure of success which is most creditable.

In 1878 Mr. Newell was united in marriage to Miss Harriet C. Hammersley, who was born in Missouri in 1860 and in 1863 was brought to Oregon by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Hammersley, who in 1869 took up their abode near Pine Creek. They traveled with a train of eight wagons and were among the first families to locate in the vicinity of Pine Creek. After taking up his abode here he spent his remaining days in the valley, as did his wife. To Mr. and Mrs. Newell have been born six children: Laura Etta, who became the wife of Joe Sanders and died leaving one child, Mary, who lives with her grandfather, our subject;

Martha, the wife of Oliver P. M. Corey, of Lakeview; Ethel, the wife of L. G. Thomas, of Goose Lake valley; Herbert and Walter, who met death June 9, 1910, at the ages of twenty-four and twenty-two years respectively; and Henry, who is married and resides on his father's ranch. Mr. and Mrs. Newell are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and are people possessed of many sterling traits of heart and mind, interested in the welfare of the community in which they live and manifesting deep sympathy for the individual for whom necessity or distress has rendered hard the way of life.

HENRY L. REED. Like several of his neighbors, Henry L. Reed gave some of the best part of his life to facing bullets of the enemies during the Civil war and enduring the hardships and privations of army life. He drifted westward with the increasing tide of emigration after the war was over, finally settling in Oregon, and now lives near Murphy where he owns a fine farm of one hundred and twenty acres. He was born in Jefferson county, New York, July 30, 1843, a son of Hiram S. and Martha (Stephenson) Reed, both natives of the state of New York. To the parents were born a family of ten children, who were reared and given the advantages of the public schools of the Empire state.

Henry L. Reed pursued his education until the age of eighteen years and then left home to enlist in the Union army under General McClellan. He served with that officer for eighteen months and then was under General Banks. He was for a long time on picket duty before Petersburg and assisted in the movements against General Lee, also taking part in the battle of Appomattox in which that noted southern general surrendered. During his army life he was in eighteen hotly contested battles and thirty-two skirmishes, being wounded three times. After peace was declared he was mustered out of the United States service and migrated to Wisconsin, where he remained for seven years on a farm which he had purchased and of which he disposed at the time of his removal. From Wisconsin he went to British Columbia and after remaining there for a time settled in Oregon, where he bought a farm of sixty acres. He sold that farm in 1906 and bought the Adams homestead of one hundred and twenty acres near Murphy, which he has improved and brought under a very good state of cultivation.

Mr. Reed was married January 1, 1906, to Mrs. Mary H. Hickman. By a previous marriage he had six children, namely: Sarah M. Clarke, who resides in New York; Nettie E., who is the wife of Mr. Stitt, of New York, who is in the employ of the government; Nellie M., also of the Empire state; Roy T., at home; George H., who is also under the parental roof; and Eveline, the wife of H. Kish, living in Medford.

In his political views Mr. Reed is a republican and has held the office of constable in Wisconsin for several years as well as the position of road overseer. Not alone on account of his military record, but for his excellent traits of character as well Mr. Reed enjoys a fine reputation in the community of which he is a member and has come to be regarded as one of the best citizens of his locality. He possesses the genial nature characteristic of most veterans of the Civil war and his friends greatly enjoy listening to his reminiscences of those stirring days. He is esteemed very highly by those who know him and is received warmly into the best circles of society.

GEORGE C. FITZGERALD is the owner of a ranch of three hundred acres, which he purchased in 1889 and which was the old family homestead. The varied work of farm life claims his attention and his energies are so wisely directed that excellent results crown his labors. He was born in Laclede county, Missouri, August 20, 1865, and is a son of James T. and Sarah Elizabeth (Neal) Fitzgerald, both of whom were natives of Tennessee. Coming to the west, they died on a ranch five miles south of Lakeview in 1908, the mother passing away in March, at the age of seventy-five, and the father in August, at the age of seventy-seven. They were reared and married in Tennessee and in the fall of 1860 removed to Missouri. In the fall of 1870 they made their way to the Rogue River valley of Oregon and in the fall of 1871 came to Lake county, settling on a ranch six miles south of Lakeview. When their son George was fifteen years of age they sold out and removed to the west side of the valley. In the spring of 1889 they took up their abode upon the ranch which is now the property of their son George. At one time they conducted a dairy for Jesse Applegate on the Rogue river, an old Indian assisting in herding the cows. In the fall following the attainment of the age of twenty-one years James T. Fitzgerald joined the Masonic fraternity and was laid to rest by the Masonic lodge of Lakeview. Both he and his wife were consistent members of the Baptist church at Lakeview. In all matters relating to the public welfare they were deeply interested and Mr. Fitzgerald gave his cooperation to many movements for the public good. He was a teamster in the Modoc war and was near Colonel Canby when he lost his life. At the time of the Civil war he joined the army and for three months was under the command of General Price. Mr. and Mrs. James T. Fitzgerald became the parents of five children: Nancy, who is the widow of John O'Neil and resides at Pine Creek, Oregon; Mantaza, who died in Missouri, at the age of twelve years; Etta, who is the wife of L. W. Carter, of Los Angeles, California; John, of Lake City, Modoc county, California; and George C.

George C. Fitzgerald, whose name introduces this record, always resided with his parents until their deaths, never being away from them for over two months at a time. His filial love and devotion added much to the happiness of their lives, especially in later years. He worked for wages the greater part of his life until twelve or fifteen years ago and then began running sheep and cattle on his own account. He now owns the old home ranch, which the family has occupied since 1889 and which comprises three hundred acres of rich and valuable land. He also owns three hundred acres of mountain land three miles east of the home place, which has been improved by Mr. Fitzgerald. When it came into his possession it was fenced and upon the place was a log cabin, which had been built of fir logs by William Greeman, the first settler in the valley. Mr. Fitzgerald afterward tore down this cabin, finding that the logs were perfectly sound after forty years. He now runs about five thousand sheep and he also has a few horses and cattle upon his ranch but confines his attention largely to the raising of sheep. He also puts up about two hundred tons of hay annually.

In 1905 Mr. Fitzgerald was married to Miss Anna Morris, who was born in Dade county, Missouri, May 12, 1877. In the spring of 1878 her parents removed to Ashland, Oregon, and settled in Goose Lake valley, where they lived for eight years. Her father, George W. Morris, died in this valley in 1899, while the mother, Mrs. Sarah S. (McManus) Morris, now resides in Stockton, California.

Fraternally Mr. Fitzgerald is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is always loyal to its teachings. He endeavors also to follow in the footsteps of his father, a straightforward, honorable man—"the most honorable I have ever known," says the son. The name of Fitzgerald has, indeed, been a synonym for much that is commendable during the residence of the family in this part of the state.

ANTONE CASTEL. Prominent among the residents of Klamath Falls, Antone Castel is numbered, and with the development and progress of Klamath county he has been closely associated from the early pioneer period. As the years have gone by his labors have been an effective element in the work of progress and prosperity here, for he has ever manifested a deep interest in the welfare and upbuilding of his community. He was born in the attractive city of Cologne on the Rhine, Germany, January 17, 1859, and after acquiring an education in the schools of his native country, during which period he learned the English language, he shipped as a deck boy on a merchantman when but fourteen years of age and before he reached the age of twenty years had visited every leading port in the world. He had also circumnavigated the globe and had acquired a close and comprehensive knowledge of many points of interest in various parts of the world. In 1879 he landed in New York and abandoned the sea. From the eastern coast he made his way to Chicago and for three or four years thereafter he was an extensive traveler throughout the United States, visiting nearly every state and territory in this country. Finally in 1884 he made his way to southwestern Oregon and selected a location at Klamath Falls. He had made a study of surveying while he was a sailor and in 1892 he was elected to the position of county surveyor. In 1894 he was reelected on the republican ticket and made an excellent record in that position during his four years of incumbency in that office. In 1897 he was appointed postmaster at Klamath Falls and acted in that capacity for five years. In 1902 he received the nomination on the republican ticket for county clerk but could not overcome the great democratic majority then in the county. From 1889 until 1892 he was engaged in the livery business and in 1903 he erected a brewery in Klamath Falls, which he still owns and conducts. His business interests produce substantial financial results.

On the 1st of May, 1894, Mr. Castel was united in marriage to Miss Alpha Engle, who was born in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and they have one child, Alfred B., born June 6, 1895. Theirs is an attractive home in Klamath Falls and its hospitality is enjoyed by their many friends. They have always lived in this section and their labors have been an important element in the growth and development of the region.

ALFRED S. BENNETT, of Wasco county, Oregon, and engaged in law practice at The Dalles, was born at Dubuque, Iowa, June 10, 1854, and was reared in Floyd county, Iowa, until eleven years old, when he was brought across the plains by his parents in 1865. They first settled in Yamhill county, Oregon, and then removed to Washington county, that state, where they resided until 1870. About that time Alfred S. Bennett left home and started out for himself, as a farm hand, continuing as such until 1873. From that time on he was engaged in teaching school and reading law, pursuing his studies until he was admitted to the bar in 1880. Since then Mr. Bennett has been almost continuously engaged in practicing law at The Dalles, Oregon.

Mr. Bennett was elected school superintendent for Wasco county in 1878, and in 1882 was elected a member of the legislature from that county. On being appointed judge of the circuit court for the fifth circuit, then including all of eastern Oregon, he resigned from the legislature, before taking his seat upon the bench and served as judge for two years. He has since been a candidate on the democratic ticket for supreme court judge in 1894, and for congress, in 1896, but was defeated. Mr. Bennett also was a delegate to the national convention at Kansas City, in 1890, and again to the convention at Baltimore in 1912.

Alfred S. Bennett was married on November 7, 1887, to Miss Mary McCauley, of Dayton, Washington.

H. B. MOYER, a native son of Linn county and during the entire period of his active life prominently identified with business interests of the section, was born in Brownsville in 1861. His parents were John M. and E. D. Moyer, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Missouri. Both were early settlers in Oregon, the father having come to the state in 1852 and the mother having crossed the plains with her parents when she was still a child. Her father was one of the first settlers in Linn county and the town of Brownsville is named in his honor. The parents of our subject were married in Oregon and immediately afterward the father bought land in Brownsville, where he resided until his death. For five years he followed the carpenter's trade but abandoned this occupation eventually in order to operate a planing mill. He conducted this enterprise until he was injured in an accident and then became interested in a woolen mill in partnership with Thomas Kay. Later he built a mill at Albany and after a number of years engaged in the clothing business in Portland, which he conducted until his retirement in 1896. He then took up his residence in Brownsville and lived there until his death in 1904. His wife resides in the old home in Brownsville and has reached the age of seventy-two. Mr. and Mrs. John M. Moyer became the parents of six children, two of whom are living: E. D., of Portland; and H. B., of this review.

H. B. Moyer began his active career in 1882 after completing his education in the Brownsville public schools. His father's business had long attracted him and accordingly he bought a saw and planing mill, which in association with his brother he operated for seven years, buying out his partner's interest at the end of that time. This enterprise he conducted alone until 1894 and then leased it until 1898. In the following year he erected a sawmill sixteen miles beyond Brownsville and operated this in conjunction with his planing mill until 1906, when he disposed of the first enterprise and managed the planing mill only until 1909. For the last eight years he has also given his attention to the operation of a fine garage and he also furnishes water to the city of Brownsville. Being a keen and active business man Mr. Moyer has from time to time invested extensively in city property and owns, besides his own residence, valuable residence property in Brownsville. He is also the owner of two hundred and twenty acres of timber land in Linn county and has a half interest in a small ranch. He is also a heavy stockholder and vice president of the Bank of Brownsville, of which institution his father had been one of the founders.

Mr. Moyer married, in 1882, Miss Jessie Sawyer and to this union was born one daughter, Goldie E., the widow of William J. Hooker, formerly of Falls City, Polk county. In 1907 Mr. Moyer wedded Miss Hazel M. Darlin, a native of South Dakota, and a daughter of F. M. Darlin. Mrs. Moyer came to Oregon with her father in 1903, her mother having passed away in South Dakota. In the Darlin family were six children, four of whom are still living: Hazel, the wife of our subject; William; George; and Estella.

During the course of a long, active, and useful life Mr. Moyer has been an important factor in the business progress of his native city and in the agricultural development of the county. The secret of his success lies in his integrity, his steady industry and his perseverance and above all, in his power of recognizing and using the opportunities which his ability commands.

JESSE DAVIS is one of the prosperous farmers near Ten Mile Lake, Coos county, Oregon, where he is carrying on an extensive dairy and poultry business. He was born in Polk county, Oregon, October 20, 1865, and received his education in the common schools of Douglas county. He laid aside his books at the age of fifteen and worked as a farm hand until 1900. In that year he took up a homestead claim which he improved and operated for some time. When he sold his holdings he invested his money in Marshfield town property and lived in that city but later disposed of his lots in Marshfield and bought eighty acres of land near Ten Mile Lake in Coos county, upon which he has lived for the past eight years. He has made extensive improvements on his farm and has made a specialty of dairying and poultry raising. He has a thorough understanding of the intelligent care of chickens and ducks and his pursuits along this line have been profitable. His dairy is one of the most modern and scientifically equipped in Coos county and its products obtain a ready sale upon the market.

On September 28, 1894, Mr. Davis was united in marriage to Miss Maud Adams, a daughter of B. F. and Kate Adams. A sketch of Mrs. Davis' parents appears on another page in this work. She received her education in the public schools of Coos county and has always been a resident of Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Davis are the parents of three children: Rubie M., born June 24, 1895, who is a graduate of the public schools of Coos county and who is living at home; Gladys V., whose birth occurred on March 2, 1903, and who is a student in the public schools of Coos county; and Lela L., who was born October 7, 1910. Politically Mr. Davis is a socialist and is active in the affairs of the local organization. He is interested in education and has served as school trustee of his district for some time. He is rapidly gaining success and his prosperity is based upon hard and concentrated work and intelligent and honorable business methods.

WILLIAM ANDREW GELLATLY, formerly a prominent farmer and stockman in Benton county, is now serving as county sheriff, in which capacity he is giving excellent satisfaction, his reelection to the office indicating his popularity with his fellow citizens and their confidence in his ability. He was born in Grass Valley, Nevada county, California, April 24, 1864, a son of Andrew and Isabella (Lyle) Gellatly, both natives of Scotland, the former born in Greenock, and the latter in Perth county. Both left the old country in early life. Andrew Gellatly came over at the age of fifteen and sent for his mother about three years later, his father having died when he was quite young. The mother of our subject was a little maiden when she crossed the ocean with her parents and both family homes were established in Madison county, Wisconsin, in which state Andrew Gellatly and Isabella Lyle were later married. In 1862 they came by way of the Isthmus of Panama to California, and in 1870 came to Oregon, settling on a farm about two and a half miles west of Philomath, in Benton county. The father was a farmer by occupation, his entire life being devoted to that occupation with the exception of about seven years spent in the gold mines of California. He died on his farm in Benton county in 1898 at the age of fifty-nine years, while his wife survived until the 23d of March, 1912, passing away at Wenatchee, Washington, at the age of seventy years. In their family were eleven children, of whom eight survive.

The eldest in order of birth, William Andrew Gellatly was reared upon the home farm and acquired his education in the country schools and in Philomath college. In the summer months he assisted his father in the cultivation of the fields, and thus early became acquainted with the tasks that fall to the lot of the farm lad. Upon attaining his majority he wisely chose as his vocation the occupation with which he was familiar and secured land in Blodgett's valley, about fifteen miles west of Corvallis. He became the owner of twelve hundred acres of land and eventually became known as one of the largest farmers in the county. In addition to tilling the fields he gave a large portion of his time and attention to his stock interests, being for a time one of the most extensive stock feeders and raisers in Benton county. He raised cattle, sheep and goats, and was one of the heaviest cattle feeders in his section of the state, making a specialty of that branch for twenty years. He not only ran a large amount of stock over the range but engaged to a large extent in stall feeding, and was one of the most experienced and able men in this line in the county. Few men were better known in agricultural circles throughout a long period than was Mr. Gellatly, and when he gave up his farming and stock interests in order to accept public office those branches of activity lost one of their most successful and influential representatives. Mr. Gellatly was also engaged in threshing, doing a great deal of work along this line, in which he was well known to the farmers of the district.

Business, however, has been but one phase of his life, for in him intellectual and moral progress, as well as material, find a champion, recognizing as he does that each has its place in the scheme of the world. His religious faith is that of the Evangelical church, its teachings proving the guiding influence in his life, while as a member of the Commercial Club of Corvallis he is deeply interested in furthering the general welfare of the community. He is not unknown in fraternal circles, holding membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World, the United Artisans and the Knights of Pythias. He has ever taken a great interest in the development and improvement of the school system in the county and has held official positions in connection with educational affairs. His political allegiance is given to the republican party and in 1908 was elected on that ticket to the office of sheriff of Benton county. Indorsement of his work in that capacity came in his reelection to a second term and he is now his party's candidate for a third term. In this connection he has manifested a courageous spirit in the face of large responsibilities and has performed his duties with a faithfulness and fearlessness that have won the complete trust and confidence of all law abiding citizens, while his indefatigable efforts in checking lawlessness have made his name a menace to criminals of all classes.

Mr. Gellatly was married, in 1892, to Miss Emma Taylor, who was born in Kansas, in 1872, a daughter of Joseph Taylor, by whom she was brought to Oregon in her childhood. To Mr. and Mrs. Gellatly were born nine children, of whom one, Andrew, passed away in infancy. The others are Nellie, R. Ward, William J., Isabella, Margaret, Mary, Jennie and John Harold. Mr. Gellatly is widely known throughout the county, and especially in the Willamette valley has he a large acquaintance, not only because of his extensive business interests in the past and his present public position, but also because his personal characteristics are such as easily win and hold high regard and esteem. Preeminently a self-made man, his has been a busy and useful life, crowned by a high degree of success, which is reckoned not only by material gain, although that has come to him in substantial measure, but also by the honorable place which he has won for himself in the opinion of his fellowmen.

WALLACE FREYER, one of the substantial and representative citizens of Douglas, his native county, owns and operates a ranch of two hundred and eighty acres at Kellogg and also cultivates about six hundred additional acres under lease. For a number of years he has likewise operated a threshing machine. His birth occurred in Kellogg, Oregon, on the 14th of December, 1868, his parents being John and Mary (Kellogg) Freyer. The father, who was born in New York, on the 11th of April, 1826, made his way to California via the isthmus route in 1849 and spent two years in the gold mines. Hearing that his brother Abraham, who had been a sailor, was living in Oregon, he came north to this state in 1851 and in association with his brother took up a donation claim (now the Hedden farm) on the Umpqua river in Douglas county. Subsequently he turned his interest therein over to his brother and bought a donation claim from James Cooper, another from a Mr. Laughlin and another from a Mr. Robinson at Kellogg, owning in all about eight hundred and seventy acres. He was killed on the 11th of April, 1908, by being thrown from a wagon, the wheel of the wagon passing over his head. In politics he was republican but never sought nor desired office. John Freyer owned and operated one of the first threshing machines brought into Douglas county, having it shipped around the Horn. After his demise it was operated by his sons and is still in good condition at the present time, being occasionally used by our subject. Mr. Freyer was a veteran of the Modoc Indian war and in other ways did his full share toward promoting the progress and improvement of this state in pioneer days. The period of his residence in Douglas county covered fifty-seven years and his upright and honorable life won him the regard and esteem of all with whom he came into contact. Mrs. Mary (Kellogg) Freyer was the daughter of John M. Kellogg, who came to Oregon in 1849, crossing the plains with ox teams and locating on the Umpqua river, at what is now Kellogg, in Douglas county. That postoffice was named in his honor. Here he took up a donation claim, built a brush dam across the river and began the construction of one of the first mills erected in Douglas county. While at work on the same, however, he was killed by falling from the structure, which was afterward completed and operated by his sons, Lyman and Barney. His daughter Mary, the wife of John Freyer, passed away in the year 1870.

Wallace Freyer was reared under the parental roof and attended the public schools in the acquirement of an education. When a youth of sixteen he began to provide for his own support by working on a ranch. Four years later, in 1888, he purchased the donation claim of his grandmother Kellogg and a few years afterward sold the same to A. L. Hutchinson. Subsequently he bought a ranch of two hundred and eighty acres at Kellogg, which he still operates together with the Rapp ranch, comprising about six hundred acres. His undertakings as an agriculturist have been attended with success, and Douglas county numbers him among its prosperous and enterprising citizens. For years he has operated a thresher, now having three modern machines in his possession.

Since age conferred upon him the right of franchise Mr. Freyer has supported the men and measures of the republican party, believing that its principles are most conducive to good government. Fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World, belonging to Oakland Camp, No. 258. His entire career has been characterized by high ideals and noble principles, and in every relation of life his record has ever measured up to a high standard of honorable manhood.

WILLIAM H. TAYLOR. One of the leading business houses of Hillsboro is that owned by William H. Taylor, who is dealing in pianos, wall paper and paints. In this connection he studies the wishes and needs of his patrons and carries a stock that will meet the public requirements. His business methods, too, are reliable and his commercial integrity constitutes a feature in his success. He was born in Washington county, Oregon, March 27, 1860. His father, Dr. I. C. Taylor, was a native of Missouri, born in 1833, and in early manhood wedded Mary McKinzie, whose birth occurred in Wisconsin in 1836. It was about the year 1851 that Dr. Taylor came to this state, which was then under territorial rule, and settled in Washington county. At the present writing he is residing in Washington, D. C. In the family were two children, the daughter being Mary Jane, the widow of H. H. Clark, who was a son of J. Clark.

William H. Taylor devoted his youth largely to mastering the course of instruction given in the common schools of Yamhill county. As a young man he engaged in farming but afterward learned the painter's trade, which he has followed for twenty years. In July, 1909, he took up his abode in Hillsboro and the following year became identified with its mercantile interests as a dealer in pianos, wall paper and paint. He carries a large and well selected line and for his goods finds a ready sale because they are attractive and his business methods are thoroughly trustworthy.

On the 5th of December, 1885, Mr. Taylor was united in marriage to Miss Dora Nell Jobe, of Washington county, whose father, Noah J. Jobe, came to the county in 1847 and secured a donation land claim upon which he spent his remaining days, actively engaged in farming. He passed through the usual hardships and experiences of pioneer life in a frontier district, where the Indians were still numerous and where the work of development and progress seemed scarcely begun. He served as a soldier in the Cayuse Indian war. He married a Miss Garwood and she shared with him in all the difficulties of establishing a home in a frontier district. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Taylor were born five children: Robert Harold, William Ernest, Fred Ray, Glenn and Florence Ruth, all of whom have been educated in the schools of Hillsboro and are yet under the parental roof. Before removing to this city the family lived upon one farm a quarter of a century. Mr. Taylor is a republican in politics and is conversant with the leading questions and issues of the day. His fraternal relations are with the Woodmen of the World and he has held the office of adviser in the local society. For more than a half century the history of Oregon has been familiar to him and he has watched the wonderful transformation which has been wrought, converting this from a wild and sparsely settled district into a leading state of the Union with all the advantages known to the older east.

ANDRU MANIKI is one of the many sturdy sons of Finland who are bringing their strong national virtues of industry and well directed determination to bear upon the cultivation of the rich and fertile farm lands of Coos county. He was born in Finland, in 1871, and is a son of Mathew and Louisa (Goske) Maniki. He is one of five children born to his parents: Erick, who is now deceased; Marie, who married Alexander Joyk, of Finland; Andru, the subject of this sketch;

Andru Maniki received his early education in the public schools of Finland. He was brought up on his father's farm and remained at home until he was nineteen years of age, when he came to America and settled immediately in Astoria, Oregon. Here he became identified with the fishing industry for two years and spent one year in the timber woods of the state. He then came to Coos county and worked at lumbering and coal mining in that section for some time. He spent one year in the coal mines of Rock Springs, Wyoming, and at the expiration of that time returned to Coos Bay, where he engaged in various activities for fifteen years. He finally took up a homestead claim of eighty acres on Shutlers arm of Ten Mile lake and has been engaged in the cultivation of the soil since that time. He farms in a scientific and progressive manner and has attained a gratifying degree of success since he has been independent. He has constantly improved his holdings and is interested in every new development connected with farm machinery.

In April, 1893, Mr. Maniki was united in marriage to Miss Mary Maniki and to their union two children were born: Sveda, deceased; and Linda, who since leaving school has studied music at home. Mr. Maniki is independent in his political views, preferring to vote for the men regardless of party. He is a devoted member of the Lutheran church and his family also hold membership in that organization. His life has not been an easy one. He was obliged to work hard and to labor earnestly for his daily bread, but he is now, as reward of his energy, in possession of a fertile farm and enjoys the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens.

WILBUR F. BOOTHBY. One does not have to carry his investigations far into the history of Salem to learn of the important part that Wilbur F. Boothby has played in its upbuilding, development and adornment. He was at one time closely associated with its industrial interests as owner of a sash and door factory and later as an architect and contractor, in which connection he has erected splendid structures that still stand as monuments to his skill and ability. He was born in Limington, Maine, July 12, 1840, a son of Arthur and Jane (Moody) Boothby, who spent their entire lives in the Pine Tree state, where the father followed farming for many years. The family is of English origin and was founded in Maine in early colonial days, and Asa Boothby, the grandfather of Wilbur F. Boothby, was a native of that state. Arthur Boothby and five of his brothers who were born in Limington still reside there.

Wilbur F. Boothby is the only one living of a family of three children, a younger sister and brother, Susan and Frank B., being deceased. His youthful days were spent under the parental roof and his education was pursued in the public schools and in the Fulton (N. Y.) College, in which he completed a course with the class of 1858. He then returned home, continuing with his parents until 1861, when he removed to Portland, Maine, where he entered the grocery business in connection with Cyrus H. Moody. A few years later they came to California by way of the isthmus route. Mr. Boothby settled first at Freemont, where he engaged in mining, and also worked in a sawmill for a short time. He was for a period proprietor of a store there but eventually sold out and on the 4th of June, 1864, arrived in Oregon, since which time he has been a resident of Salem. The town contained a population of one thousand at the time of his arrival and Portland was little larger. Mr. Boothby came to Salem, canvassing for a book on the Civil war. He formed the acquaintance of "Father" Waller, who purchased a volume from Mr. Boothby and became interested in him, advising him to seek a situation with Jones & Reed, proprietors of a sash and door factory. Mr. Boothby followed this advice and remained with that firm as foreman until the fall of 1865. He then resolved to engage in business on his own account and bought out the sash and door factory owned by Samuel Bass. This he conducted for several years but eventually turned his attention to other business pursuits, becoming well known as an architect and contractor. In 1872 he erected the present courthouse at Salem and has since been well known as a leading architect of the capital city. He planned and erected the state insane asylum, also much of the state house and the penitentiary. In fact he has been identified with the construction of most of the public buildings in this part of the state and fine structures stand as a monument to his skill, his enterprise and his ability.

Throughout the period of his residence here Mr. Boothby has been closely, actively and helpfully associated with the work of public progress and improvement. He was the first president of the Salem waterworks and his cooperation has always been counted upon to further any project or movement for the public good. He operated the Drake foundry and machine shop of Salem for two years, which was the last position in which he actively engaged. In 1886 he retired and returned to Maine to visit his parents, spending two years on the Atlantic coast. He owns property interests here from which he derives a substantial income, his realty holdings including four dwellings and two business blocks.

In 1865 Mr. Boothby was married to Miss Rebecca A. Dalglish, who was born in Scotland, March 21, 1842, and came to America with her mother, the family settling in Lawrence, Massachusetts, where she remained until eighteen years of age. Her father, Jesse Dalglish, was a woolen manufacturer in Scotland and died in that country, after which his widow brought her family to the United States. They lived for some time in Lawrence, Massachusetts and then came west to Salem, Oregon. To Mr. and Mrs. Boothby have been born two children who are yet living: Charles, of Portland; and Veva, the wife of John McCourt, the present United States district attorney for Oregon. Those deceased are: Edward, who was drowned on his eighth birthday and who was the eldest of the family; and Minnie, Jesse and Willie, all of whom died in infancy.

In his political views Mr. Boothby is republican and has ever kept well informed on the questions and issues of the day, but has never been a politician in the sense of office seeking. He has now passed the seventy-second milestone on life's journey and his has been an active and useful life, his labors continuously increasing in scope and importance and bringing him at last a comfortable competence that enables him to live retired.

GEORGE M. WALKER. Two miles up the Templeton road on Ten Mile lake is located the model dairy of George M. Walker. Here in partnership with his brother-in-law he operates a large farm of two hundred and forty acres and makes his dairy a special feature of the enterprise. He was born in Maine, on July 17, 1856, and is a son of Wilnot and Eliza (Abbott) Walker. He is one of three children born to his parents, and is the eldest, the others being: Ella, who is the wife of E. J. Henley, of California; and Frank J., deceased.

Mr. Walker came from Maine to Siskiyou, California, with his parents when he was two years of age. He received his education in the public schools of that section and started in active life for himself when he was eighteen years old. His father was a miner and was also associated with agricultural interests in Siskiyou and when George Walker was eighteen years of age he entered his father's employ and worked in the gold mines until he had reached the age of twenty-two years. In 1879 he entered the employ of others and mined for a short time. He later prospected for himself and spent the years from 1879 until 1906 in the gold regions of California. He was fairly successful in his prospecting operations yet fortune never favored him with a rich strike. In 1906 he and his brother-in-law, L. F. Faulkenstein, came to Templeton, Oregon, and bought a farm of two hundred and forty acres two miles southwest of the town of Templeton, on Ten Mile lake, and here they are carrying on a model dairy. George Walker owns a half interest in this property and is responsible to a great extent for its improvement and cultivation. The dairy is operated along modern and sanitary lines and they keep twenty-five cows for milking purposes.

In June, 1882, Mr. Walker was united in marriage to Miss Louisa Faulkenstein, a daughter of Lewis and Margaret (Wiese) Faulkenstein, of California. Mrs. Walker's brothers and sisters are: Mary, who became the wife of William Cleaver, of California; C. J., a resident of San Francisco, California; Catherine, who has passed away; Wilhelmina, who married J. C. Luchner of San Francisco; John, who makes his home in Sacramento, California; George, who is a resident of the same state; L. F., who is living in North Bend, Oregon; and Jennie, the wife of David Davidson, of Napa, California. Mr. and Mrs. Walker are the parents of two children: Daniel L., born in 1887, who was educated in the public schools of California and in a business college in Oregon, and who is associated with his father in the dairy business; and Margaret, born July, 1890, who received a business education in California and is living at home with her parents.

Politically Mr. Walker gives his allegiance to the republican party. He has never been an office seeker and has never held a public position in Oregon. He, however, served as one of the county officials during his residence in California and did able and efficient work in this capacity. He is affiliated with the Independent Order of Foresters but beyond this has no fraternal connections.

WILLIAM K. McCORMACK is the owner of a well improved ranch in the Summer Lake valley not far from Paisley, which has been in his possession for twelve years. Upon this he is engaged in the raising of grain and breeding of stock and in his business career indicates that he is thoroughly conversant with the fact that intense industry, not special ability, makes most of our successful men what they are. A native of New Brunswick, he was born August 16, 1875, and is a son of William and Elizabeth (McKinzie) McCormack, who were also natives of New Brunswick, born in 1849 and 1854 respectively. They were married in that country and in 1876 went to California, settling near Sacramento. The mother died in San Diego, California, in April, 1910, and the father still makes his home in that city, where he has lived for six or seven years. He followed ranching during the greater part of his life but is now retired. The family came from Rosedale, California, to the Cheaucan valley in Lake county, Oregon, in 1887 and there resided until 1900, when they returned to the southern state. Their children are three in number: J. R., who is living in California; Annie, who is the wife of L. A. Moss, of Paisley; and William K.

The last named has been a resident of Lake county for a quarter of a century and throughout his entire life he has devoted his attention to ranching and stock-raising. He worked with his father until fifteen years of age and then started out in life on his own account. For the past twelve years he has carried on farming independently and he is now the owner of ten hundred and eighty acres on section 11, township 33, range 17 east. This is situated at the south end of Summer Lake and is largely devoted to the production of grain and the raising of stock. He puts up four hundred tons of hay annually and he has upon his place at the present time seventy-five hundred head of sheep and fifty head of horses. He also owns eight hundred acres of timber land, and he likewise has one hundred and sixty acres on sections 34 and 35, township 17, which he homesteaded. This is all of the land which he secured from the government, the remainder having been purchased by him. His ranch is a very well improved place, being supplied with all modern equipments and accessories, and he employs eleven men in the haying season. Upon his ranch he has all varieties of fruits and nuts grown in Oregon and he has the surest fruit crop in the county, the climatic conditions around Summer Lake being such as further horticultural pursuits. He has ever been a hard worker and has made his efforts tell in the attainment of success.

In 1899 Mr. McCormack was married to Miss Frances M. Akren, who was born in Nebraska in 1874 and is a daughter of W. R. and Frances J. Akren, who reside at Gladstone Park, Oregon. Her brother W. S. Akren, is a man of national reputation in his discussion of political and economic problems. Mr. and Mrs. McCormack are the parents of four children: W. R., eleven years of age; Elizabeth, aged nine; Francis; and Thomas, who died at the age of two years.

Mr. McCormack votes with the republican party and his fraternal relations connect him with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. He is a self-made man, one who started out in life empty-handed, yet at the outset of his career realized that prosperity has its root in indefatigable industry. He has ever taken pleasure in his work, has wisely used his time and opportunities and as the years have gone by has gained a position as a representative of Oregon's agricultural and stock-raising interests that is most enviable.

R. W. TOWER, leading a busy and active life, is engaged in the operation of a saw-mill and also in ranching, owning five hundred and twenty acres of land four and a half miles northwest of Worden. He was born in Boulder, Colorado, August 13, 1863, and is a son of Stephen W. and Celestia M. (Parker) Tower, who were natives of Ohio, born in Licking and Delaware counties respectively. They were reared in the Buckeye state but were married in Iowa, having removed thither with their parents, who were pioneers of that state. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Stephen W. Tower went to Colorado. He had previously visited the state in 1859 but returned to Iowa in 1861 and after his marriage took his wife to Boulder. Again, however, he returned to Iowa, where he resided until 1883 and then went to Nebraska, where his death occurred in 1905, when he was sixty-seven years of age. His widow now resides with their eldest daughter in Butler county, Kansas. Mr. Tower was a harness maker by trade but devoted the greater part of his life to farming.

R. W. Tower was the second in order of birth in a family of four sons and two daughters. He was but two years of age when the family returned to Iowa and when nineteen years of age he went with his parents to Nebraska, where he made his home until about nine years ago. He then came to Oregon and settled upon a homestead which is now his place of residence. It is pleasantly and conveniently located about four and a half miles northwest of Worden and the tract of five hundred and twenty acres is largely covered with timber, making this a valuable property. In 1911 he purchased the sawmill of the Cow Creek Lumber Company on his place and has since operated it, his lumber interests being extensive and important. In addition he manages his ranch and upon the place is a good apple orchard. He also cultivates various cereals and is engaged to some extent in stock-raising, making a specialty of horses. His varied interests make his life a most busy one and at all times he displays excellent business ability and sound judgment. His sawmill has a capacity of two million feet in a season.

On the 15th of September, 1886, Mr. Tower was united in marriage to Miss Fannie L. Miller, a native of Scott county, Iowa. They have eight children, namely: Raymond I., Harold H., May I., Chesley H., Charles, Robert, Elizabeth and James. Mr. Tower votes with the republican party and keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day, but is not a politician in the sense of office seeking, although he once served as assessor in Nebraska. He was one of the organizers of the building association of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which erected the Odd Fellows Temple in Klamath Falls. He is greatly interested in the work of his lodge and exemplifies in his life its beneficent spirit and principles. He has worked hard, has progressed steadily and has not only won a creditable measure of success but also the good-will and confidence of his fellow-men.

ANDREW J. STONELAKE is a native of Finland and has been in this country only seven years, but he has in that short time become known as one of the successful farmers and dairymen of Coos county, where he is engaging in the cultivation of one hundred and sixty acres of land three miles above Lakeside. He was born in 1885 and is a son of Ely and Mary Stonelake, both natives of Finland, where his father died. His mother is still living in her native country at the age of seventy-three years. They were the parents of five children, those beside our subject being: Ely, who is deceased; Hilma, the wife of Mathew Bay, of Marshfield, Oregon; Alec, a resident of Ten Mile Lake; and Minnie, who has passed away.

Andrew J. Stonelake received his early education in the public schools of his native country. He came to America in 1905 and settled immediately in Coos county, Oregon, where he worked in a logging camp for nine months. He then obtained employment in a shipyard, where he worked for two years. At the end of that time he mined for eight months in the Beaver Hill coal mines in Coos county and then came to Ten Mile Lake, where he is now residing. He bought one hundred and sixty acres of land three miles above Lakeside and has improved and operated this tract up to the present time. He engages in general farming but makes a specialty of dairying. He is interested in every new development along agricultural lines and it is his constant ambition to keep his dairy and equipment modern and sanitary.

On March 31, 1910, Mr. Stonelake was united in marriage to Miss Selma Shutter, who was born in Marshfield, Oregon, on March 29, 1892. She is a daughter of John and Hannah Shutter. Her father is a prosperous farmer residing near Ten Mile Lake and is still active in the cultivation of his land. Her mother died in 1894. Mrs. Stonelake received her education in the public schools of Coos county. She is an active worker in the Lutheran church, to which faith her husband also gives allegiance. In his political views Mr. Stonelake is republican but does not take an active part in public affairs. He is a member of Marshfield Camp, Woodmen of the World, and is prominent in that organization. Outside of this he has no fraternal affiliations, preferring to devote his time entirely to the cultivation of his lands. He has attained a gratifying degree of success during his short residence in America and is highly esteemed and respected by his fellow citizens of Coos county.

JOHN AXEL HAGNER is the proprietor of a fine ranch in Coos county, Oregon, fifty acres of which he has under cultivation mostly in potatoes. He has developed his holdings from a state of wilderness to a cultivated farm and has built for himself a beautiful home upon his land. He was born in Finland, June 7, 1865, and is a son of Frank Dove and Maggie Hagner. He is one of six children born to his parents: Frank D., a sailor, who makes his headquarters in England; John Axel, the subject of this review; Victor, who resides in his native country, Finland; Gus, deceased; and Maria Sophia and Wilhelmina, both of whom live in Finland.

John Axel Hagner's active life began at the early age of nine years when he found employment in a sawmill in Finland at twelve cents a day. He retained his connection with this mill for eight years, gradually rising and advancing in salary as he grew older. In 1882 he shipped as a sailor and for a number of years followed the sea, touching the principal sea ports of the world. He finally arrived in Philadelphia and sailed from that point for five years. At the end of that time he made the journey overland to California where he engaged in various occupations for a short time and then came to Coos bay. Here he worked at ranching in the employ of John Bear for one year and later engaged in the lumber business for several years. At the end of that time he took up a homestead claim on Ten Mile lake two miles above Lakeside and remained upon his holdings and operated his farm for ten years. He eventually sold out and purchased two hundred acres on Ten Mile lake and has resided upon his holdings since that time. He has fifty acres of this land under cultivation and carries on his work intelligently and scientifically. He makes a specialty of his dairy and does an extensive business in its products. Most of his cultivated land is planted in potatoes and his potato crops are increasing in quantity and quality with each year, finding a ready market at good prices.

In 1899 Mr. Hagner was united in marriage in Finland to Miss Anna Olreka, a native of that country. Mr. and Mrs. Hagner have no children of their own but are rearing and educating two children of Mrs. Hagner's sister.

In his political views Mr. Hagner is independent and gives his allegiance to no particular party, preferring to keep his judgment free and unbiased. He is interested in education and is now serving with great ability as a director of the school board. He is a member of the Lutheran church and to this faith his wife also gives allegiance. Mr. Hagner in the development of his farm out of a tract of wild brush land has shown a steadiness of purpose and a dominating ambition which are his principal characteristics, and his success has been one of the leading influences in the upbuilding and improvement of Coos county.

DOM J. ZAN is president of the firm of Zan Brothers, a name inseparably associated with the manufacturing interests of Portland on account of the extensive business conducted in the manufacture of brooms, willowware and woodenware. A spirit of enterprise and progress characterizes him in all that he does and while he entered upon a business already established, he has displayed undaunted energy and capable management in enlarging and developing this and in carrying forward its interests to successful completion.

He was born in San Francisco, October 15, 1867. His father, Marino Zan, was born in Dalmatia, Austria, and died April 7, 1960. The father followed the sea for ten or eleven years, or until about the time he attained his majority, when he made his way to New York and abandoned a sea-faring life. He then learned broom manufacturing and about 1865 went to San Francisco, where a few years later he established a broom manufactory on his own account. The new enterprise grew and prospered and in 1868 he came to Portland, and with his brother, Frank Zan established a branch factory under name of Zan Brothers. Again success attended him in his venture and about 1872 he added willowware and woodenware departments. Later he began the manufacture of some lines of woodenware and the continuous growth of his business in this city led him to establish the family home here in 1875. The business was also continued in San Francisco until about 1906. At one time Mr. Zan established a factory in Melbourne, Australia, for the manufacture of brooms and conducted it for a number of years. He was active in business as long as he lived and his indefatigable industry, his sound judgment and his initiative spirit enabled him to win a most gratifying position as a representative of manufacturing and commercial interests on the coast. His high standing as a business man is indicated in the fact that he was chosen the president of the Portland Manufacturers Association, of which he was one of the organizers, continuing in that position for several years.

Marino Zan married Hannah Chllen, of New York city, and they have four children who reached adult age: Dom J.; Madeline C., who is the wife of W. E. Coman; James C., a practicing physician; and Jordan V. All of the children save the last named were born in San Francisco. The mother is still living and yet makes her home in Portland.

Dom J. Zan completed his education in Santa Clara College of California. He then went into business with his father and eventually the enterprise was incorporated with D. J. Zan as president, Mrs. Jennie F. Zan as vice president, and Jordan V. Zan as secretary and treasurer. They cover the entire Pacific coast with their output of wooden and willowware and they also manufacture brooms and other articles of a similar nature. This is one of the oldest established houses of the kind on the coast and throughout all the years it has enjoyed an unassailable reputation for excellence in workmanship, for promptness in delivery and for reliability in trade transportation.

In 1894 Dom J. Zan was married to Miss Alice Jackson, a daughter of Walter H. Jackson, of Albany; and they now have two children, Nancy Jackson and Alice Virginia. Mr. Zan is a member of the Multnomah and the Arlington Clubs, to which his brothers also belong, and he likewise holds membership in the Commercial Club. The company has a well equipped plant which is the visible evidence of their capable management, resulting in success. Dom J. Zan enjoys in a large measure the confidence and high regard of business colleagues and contemporaries and his life record is proof of the fact that prosperity and an honored name may be won simultaneously.

JAMES S. ROBERTS is a native of Coos county and one who has been familiar with its agricultural conditions since his boyhood. He is engaged in the cultivation of two hundred and sixty-one acres on Benson creek and is one of the most prosperous farmers in that district. He was born in Libby, Coos county, January 15, 1877, and is a son of Benjamin and Mary (Thomas) Roberts. His mother was a native of Maryland and his father was born in England. They were married in Maryland and came to Coos county in 1872, where they settled in Libby. Benjamin Roberts then took up a homestead claim on Ten Mile lake and established his wife and children upon his holdings while he himself remained in Libby and worked in the mines. Here the father worked for twenty-two years and here the mother died in 1909. The former is still living and makes his home at Templeton, Oregon. In their family were eleven children, namely: Heskia, the wife of Nels Munson, of Templeton; Janie, deceased;

David, who also makes his home in Templeton; James, the subject of this sketch; Elizabeth, who has passed away; Emma, who married Charles Liggett, of Templeton; Edith, the wife of Alde Benson; and George, Abe, Allen and Joe, all of whom reside in Templeton. James S. Roberts was reared at home and received his education in the public schools of Coos county. At the age of twenty-two years he started in active life for himself and went to North Bend, Oregon, where he worked in the employ of the Simpson Lumber Company for five years. He married during that time and went to his wife's home, where he remained until he moved to Wyoming. He lived in that state for a year and a half and then returned to the home farm. He gradually bought land for himself and is now in association with his wife the owner of two hundred and sixty-one acres on Benson creek which he has improved and cultivated along modern and progressive lines. He makes a specialty of his dairy and milks daily fifteen cows.

On January 1, 1904, Mr. Roberts was united in marriage to Miss Albina Coleman, a daughter of William Coleman, of Iowa. Mrs. Roberts was one of four children born to her parents, the others being: Bettie, the wife of Daniel Hallock, of Englewood, Kansas; Charles, of Templeton, Oregon; and one child, who died in infancy. To Mr. and Mrs. Roberts have been born four children: Albina, whose birth occurred in December, 1905; Ora, born in February, 1907; Gale, born on May 13, 1908; and Allen, whose birth occurred in November, 1911.

Politically Mr. Roberts is a firm republican but has never sought public office, as his farm and his dairy require his constant attention. Coos county is rapidly developing under the guidance of the men who own and operate its land. It is becoming one of the best and most fertile sections of the state of Oregon and the American northwest and its growth and progress are the result of intelligent activity along agricultural lines. No man has done more worthy and excellent work in this connection or has contributed more to the upbuilding of the section than has Mr. Roberts.

HON. VIRGIL CONN. Every year new towns are springing up in Oregon as the state is becoming more thickly populated by an enterprising and progressive class of citizens—men who see and improve the opportunities of the Pacific coast country. Such a man is the Hon. Virgil Conn. now postmaster and merchant at Paisley, which town came into existence in 1911 and already displays conditions that would be a credit to a city of longer existence. Its founders and those who are now active in its business affairs, have been men who have recognized the essential and valuable elements in town building and have used such in making Paisley a progressive western city.

Mr. Conn was born in Logansport, Indiana, January 31, 1847, his parents being Henry and Mary (Stultz) Conn. The father, whose birth occurred in Williamsport, Pennsylvania, October 23, 1816, was a son of David Conn, a native of Kentucky and a descendant of ancestors from the north of Ireland who came to America in early colonial days. Members of the family served as soldiers in the Revolutionary war. David Conn was a pioneer of Lycoming county, Pennsylvania, and afterward of Logansport, Indiana, his death occurring in Cass county Indiana, when he was in his eighty-eighth year. Virgil Conn remembers many of the pioneer residents of that state—the men who were the founders and promoters of the great commonwealth of the middle west. His mother was born in Hamilton, a suburb of Cincinnati, Ohio, in May, 1821, and there resided until her marriage. Her mother was a Wallace, belonging to a prominent family of Hamilton county, Ohio. Henry and Mary Conn resided in Indiana from 1838 until 1854, when they crossed the plains to Douglas county, Oregon, making their home near Roseburg until called from this life. Both were eighty years at the time of death and their remains were interred in the Roseburg Masonic cemetery. On coming to Oregon they secured a donation claim which continued to be their place of residence throughout their remaining days. The father was a prominent free-soil democrat in early life and one of those men who took an active part in the organization of the Union party which eventually developed into the republican party. He became a Royal Arch Mason when few members of the fraternity had taken the chapter degrees. The community in which he lived recognized in him a good business man who by judicious investment became the owner of four thousand acres of fine land, and at his death he left a large estate, most of which is still owned by his children who were eleven in number, namely: George, a resident of Paisley; Henry, who resides near Roseburg; Harmon S., of Seattle, Washington; Virgil; Francis, of East Portland; James W., living near Roseburg; Elizabeth, who died at the age of thirty-five years; Mrs. Anna McCurdy and John C., both deceased; Lafayette E., an attorney of Lake View, Oregon; and N. L., also living near Roseburg.

Virgil Conn accompanied his parents on their emigration to the northwest when a youth of seven years and remained upon the old homestead until seventeen years of age, when he went to college, pursuing his studies in the Willamette University at Salem. He left that institution, however, when a junior and entered mercantile circles in Roseburg, where he remained for eleven years, connected with the firm of Flood & Company. On the 26th of October, 1882, he came to the present site of Paisley and established in connection with his brother, George, a general mercantile store under the name of V. & G. Conn. On the 1st of April, 1889, he purchased his brother's interest and the business has since been conducted under his own name. He now has the largest mercantile establishment in Lake county. In February, 1883, he was made postmaster and has since filled that office with the exception of a period of four years during President Cleveland's administration. He is also interested in the Pacific Carbonic Gas Company of East Oakland, California, and he has extensive real-estate interests in Paisley and Lake county. His property holdings also include a section of the old homestead which he inherited from his father and which is a very desirable piece of property. He is seldom if ever at fault in matters of business judgment and carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes.

Mr. Conn has been very prominent in public affairs in his part of the state. He served for two terms in the lower house of the state legislature in the '90s and was recognized as an earnest, working member, whose support of any measure indicated his firm belief in the principles involved or the results to be attained thereby. He is now a member of the town council of Paisley, which town was incorporated in November, 1911. He had served for about seventeen years as school clerk and school director here and no movement tending to promote the welfare and advance the interests of the district has ever sought his aid in vain.

In 1880 in Logansport, Indiana, Mr. Conn was married to Miss Frances Long, who was born in that city, May 1, 1857, and is a daughter of John Long. Their children were Earl, who died April 4, 1884, when a year old; Vera, who is a member of the class of 1913, De Pauw University of Indiana; and Velma, who is a student in the Illinois Woman's College, at Jacksonville, Illinois, of the class of 1913.

Mr. Conn belongs to Paisley Lodge, No. 86, F. & A. M., and is also a Royal Arch Mason and a member of Portland Consistory, A. A. S. R., and of Al Kader Temple of the Mystic Shrine, of Portland. He likewise belongs to Rob Morris Chapter of the Eastern Star, at Paisley, and to the Elks lodge at Roseburg. His acquaintance by reason of his activity in business, social, fraternal and political circles has become a wide one and wherever he is known he is held in high regard. He has never deviated from the course which he believes to be right and at all times has been actuated by the spirit of progress which seeks to benefit the community as well as to advance his individual interests.

MILO M. PIERSON is essentially a self-made man. He was obliged to earn a livelihood for himself when he was only nine years of age at farm work and at thirteen was a newsboy on the San Francisco streets for some time. Today he is the owner of the only general merchandise store in Lakeside and has attained a respected and successful place in the world. He was born in Nodaway county, Missouri, in 1883, and is a son of James and Martha (Creason) Pierson, both natives of Missouri. The family is of English and Welsh descent but has been founded in America for many generations. The grandparents on both sides were natives of Virginia. Mr. Pierson is one of three children born to his parents, as follows: Dolly Myrtle, the wife of F. A. Pierce of Coos county, Oregon, by whom she has four children: Nora Ethel, the wife of D. O. Kenyon, a native of Missouri, now living in Lakeside, Oregon, by whom she has one child; and Milo M., the subject of this review. After James Pierson's death his wife was again married, her second union being with Oliver Landruth and to this marriage one child was born, Alice M., who is living in Roseburg, Oregon. Both Mr. and Mrs. Landruth are now deceased.

Milo M. Pierson was obliged to face the world for himself when he was only nine years of age. After his father died he left home and worked at farming in the employ of different people along the Coos river until he was thirteen years old. When he had attained that age he went to San Francisco, where he sold newspapers upon the streets for one year. In 1897 he returned to Coos Bay and took a position as cook on a rafting scow. He remained in this capacity only a short time and later went to Washington and worked on the farms in that state until he removed to Idaho, where he spent two years as a dairy workman. On the Columbia river he then ran a donkey engine and when he returned to Coos river was active as an engineer in the rock quarries of that district for some time. For six months he worked as a fireman on a tug boat in Astoria, Oregon, and then went to lower California as superintendent in a rock quarry. After six months' work along this line he made a trip through the northwest, working as a sheep shearer in various states. He married at the age of twenty-one and worked at Gardiner, Oregon, for a short time. He spent one year and a half in the real-estate business in Coos Bay and at the end of that time came to Lakeside, where he purchased two hundred and fifty-nine acres of land upon which he built his home. He engaged in the mercantile business in a small way, handling only oils and launch supplies. He met with a gratifying degree of success in this line and his business prospered. Gradually he enlarged his capacity and added different departments. His enterprise branched out in various directions and became so large that at length he was obliged to purchase another small store and he now owns and operates the only general merchandise business in Lakeside. He has recently built a large two-story building, thirty feet long by fifty feet wide, and carries a seven thousand dollar stock. He has been extremely successful and his success is due entirely to his own efforts. His life has been hard and filled with privations, but his dominating determination and his power of concentrated industry have brought him to final prosperity. He owns a large amount of property in Marshfield where he is the proprietor of eighty-one town lots and has extensive holdings in the Ocean View addition to North Bend.

On October 22, 1905, Mr. Pierson was united in marriage to Miss Flora Krick, a native of Oregon, and a daughter of F. P. and Mary (Smith) Krick, both natives of Missouri. Mrs. Pierson was one of nine children born to her parents: William, deceased; Charles, who is engaged in the timber business in Multnomah county, Oregon; John, who follows the occupation of fishing in Empire City, Oregon; Thaddeus, who is married and lives in Marshfield, having one child; Belle, who married Alex Corlson of Lakeside, Oregon, by whom she has five children; Flora, the wife of our subject; Maud, who married Willis A. Henderson, a contractor in Marshfield, Oregon; Ella, who lives with her parents in Lakeside; and Gertrude, who also lives at home. To Mr. and Mrs. Pierson have been born five children: Mary Ethel, whose birth occurred October 27, 1906, and who is attending school in Coos county; Milo Frederick, who died at the age of three years and nine months; William, born August 10, 1908; Irvin, whose birth occurred May 11, 1909; and Hazel, who was born in September, 1911.

Mr. Pierson is independent in his political views and does not affiliate with any particular party. He is intelligently interested in public affairs but has never been an office seeker. His only fraternal affiliation is with the Fraternal Order of Eagles in Lakeside, Oregon. He is a true type of the modern business man, shrewd and keen, gifted with a discriminating knowledge of values, anxious for his own rights and careful for those of others and a man of unquestioned integrity and honorable business methods, which are the basis of his prosperity.

FRANCES L. GORE, living about three miles east of Sherwood, is a representative of one of the old pioneer families of Washington county. Her father was Captain George A. Gore, who was born in Detroit, Michigan, May 21, 1848, and was a son of John and Anne (Clancy) Gore, the former born in County Clare, Ireland, and the latter in the city of Dublin. John Gore came to America at the age of nine years, landing at New York with his parents, a brother and two sisters. They went direct to Michigan, where the parents took up donation claims of three hundred and twenty acres each. Arthur Gore, the father, sold his property twenty years later but his wife retained hers and from the proceeds of that property her heirs have become wealthy. In their family were four children, of whom the eldest, John, is deceased. Ann took up the dressmaking and millinery business in Detroit with her sister, when they were about twenty and eighteen years of age respectively and later they invested their earnings in real estate, from which they have derived a handsome income. The youngest was Mary, who became Mrs. Van Antwerp and had six children: Eugene, Arthur, Frank and Arthur, of Detroit, who became priests of the Catholic church; Pauline, of New York city, and Lydia, also of Detroit.

With the spirit of adventure strong within him, Captain George A. Gore ran away from home when fourteen years of age, to see something of life and make his own way in the world. He learned to cook on board a steamer and such was his industry and fidelity, that he was soon promoted from the ship's galley and at the age of sixteen years was signed on as first mate on a large steamer. Before he reached the age of seventeen years he attained the position of captain and engaged in steamboating throughout the remainder of his life, holding many responsible positions in connection with steamship companies prior to his death, which occurred on the 28th of May, 1905. In appreciation of his exceptional ability and loyal service the company not only continued his salary up to his death but even paid to his family his stipend for one month after his demise had occurred, and it was given in appreciation of the value of the services which he had rendered and received in that spirit by the family, who were not in need of a gift, but on the contrary were left by him with ample means and in comfortable circumstances. His record was at all times an enviable and honorable one. He never lost a life nor had an accident during the twenty years that he was captain of the Tacoma, and for six months before the completion of that boat he was paid a regular salary in order to retain his services. The company further showed their appreciation of his worth and fidelity by sending several of its officers to the funeral, some of them coming as far as from St. Paul, Minnesota. He was a man greatly beloved by all who knew him, for he was genial, courteous and kindly in spirit and at the same time was a strict and careful disciplinarian, where the interests of his ship were involved.

Captain Gore was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Peck. They had been acquainted practically their entire life. They attended school together and were sweethearts even in that early day. Mr. and Mrs. Peck, her parents, were natives of the east; coming west they settled in Michigan in early life being married in Buffalo, New York, which was Mrs. Peck's home. It was in Detroit, on the 13th of November, 1867, that Elizabeth Peck became the wife of Captain Gore. They continued to reside in Michigan for about six years longer and in 1871 came to Oregon, settling in Washington county, near Tualitin, on a tract of eighty acres which he purchased. George A. Gore was one of a family of seven children, namely: Cecelia, now deceased; Charles E., who is living in Kalama, Washington, and has five children, two of whom are in Ann Arbor, Michigan; Captain John C. Gore, who makes his home in Nelson, British Columbia, and is married and has two children; Mrs. Anne Hedges, deceased, who has seven children; Mary, who has departed this life; and Mrs. Drucilla Bronson, who has three children and lives in Alaska.

In the family of Captain and Mrs. Gore were seven children: Frances L.; Margaret, now deceased; Mrs. Grace H. Robinson, a resident of Tualitin, Oregon; Mrs. Helen C. Seed, of Portland, whose husband is a contractor and builder; George C., deceased; Mrs. Lilly M. Baker, who has also passed away; and Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson, of Salem, Oregon, where her husband owns a large brewery. The death of Captain Gore occurred May 28, 1905, and was the occasion of deep regret to all who knew him—the company whom he represented, his many friends and most poignantly his immediate family, to whom he was a loving and devoted husband and father. He was a republican in his views but his activity naturally precluded his connection to any considerable extent with political affairs.

Frances Gore now resides upon the eighty acres of land which her father first purchased on coming to the northwest and has never lived anywhere else, save the period which she spent as a student in school and college in Portland. She has a wide acquaintance in this part of the state and is much beloved by all who know her. She is a lady of liberal education and broad culture and possesses, moreover, excellent business ability. She leases all of her land for a cash rental and thus has a comfortable competence which enables her to live most pleasantly in a fine old home. She has in her own name eighty acres of land and also an interest in other property. Her religious faith is that of the Congregational church and she is a member of the Order of the Eastern Star and the Rathbone Sisters.

CHARLES C. LIGGETT has been a farmer since he was nineteen years of age and is now cultivating one hundred and sixty acres of land three miles from Lakeside, on Ten Mile lake. He also operates a model dairy and engages to some extent in logging. He was born in Polk county, Oregon, on May 24, 1872, and is a son of John W. and Susan (Davis) Liggett. His father was born in Oregon, August 25, 1843, and his mother is a native of Missouri. John W. Liggett engaged in the cultivation of the soil in Polk county until his death, in 1873. He and his wife were the parents of two children: Charles C., of this review; and Mrs. Laura Houser, of Oakland, California. A short time after her first husband's death Mrs. Liggett was united in marriage to C. W. Sanford and to this union were born nine children, eight of whom are still living: Ernest, who is a resident of Oakland, California; Mrs. Ida Nollner, of North Bend, Oregon; Herman W., who makes his home in Sumner, Oregon; Cora D., who married C. J. Sanford, of Alsea Bay; V. P., who is living on the north fork of Coquille river; Mrs. Maggie Bower, who resides on a tributary of Ten Mile lake; Grace, who makes her home in Alsea, Oregon; and Mrs. Minnie Simpson, of North Bend, Coos county.

Charles C. Liggett received his early education in the public schools of Oregon and laid aside his books at the age of nineteen years and has been engaged in farming since that time. He purchased forty acres of land in Coos county and improved and operated it until 1906. He made constant additions to his holdings and in the latter year traded two hundred acres of well cultivated land for the one hundred and sixty acre farm which he now owns. It is located three miles from Lakeside near the Lakeview schoolhouse and is one of the best cultivated properties in the district. Mr. Liggett makes a specialty of dairying and has been very successful in this branch of agriculture. He owes his rapid success to his thorough knowledge of the details of farming and the scientific and progressive methods by which he carries on agriculture. Besides his holdings on Ten Mile lake he also has an interest in six hundred and four acres of the family estate.

On January 12, 1902, Mr. Liggett was united in marriage to Mrs. Markham, a daughter of Benjamin Roberts and the widow of Charles Markham. She is a native of Oregon and in her parents' family were the following children: Mrs. Munson, of Templeton, Oregon; Jane Stewart, deceased; David, who resides in Templeton; James, Mrs. Edith Benson, George, Abraham, Allen and Joseph, all of Templeton; and Lizzie, deceased. Mrs. Liggett received her education in the public schools of Coos county. Her mother died in 1909 and her father is still living at Templeton, Oregon, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. Mrs. Liggett had three children by her first marriage: Milton, born in 1893, who is living at home; Earl, whose birth occurred in 1895 and who is also residing on the home farm; and Edith, born in 1897. To Mr. and Mrs. Charles Liggett five children have been born: Clinton, whose birth occurred December 12, 1902; Reta, born on the 18th of July, 1904; Bernetta, born on January 5, 1906; Elsie M., born May 28, 1907; and Geneva, whose birth occurred on June 23, 1909. Mr. Liggett gives a general allegiance to the republican party but has often been independent in his political views. He takes an intelligent interest in public affairs but in politics, as in all other relations of his life, he keeps his mind unbiased and his judgment broad.

FRANK ROGERS has for a period of twenty-three years been a resident of Lake county, having taken up his home in Lakeview in 1889. He was born in Portugal, August 27, 1852, a son of Frank and Mary (Frances) Rodrique, for so the name was originally spelled. His parents are still living in Portugal, the father being now nearly one hundred years of age, while the mother is more than eighty. The former was a stone mason in active life, following that trade for many years. In his family were nine sons and two daughters, of whom five sons and one daughter came to the United States and all are residents of California with the exception of Frank Rogers, of this review. After coming to this country they changed the spelling of their name to the present form. The first of the family to cross the Atlantic was Manuel Rogers, who came in 1864. In 1872 Frank Rogers arrived in Boston, Massachusetts, but thinking to find still better opportunities in the western coast country made his way to California in March, 1874. He worked for wages on a ranch for a time and later preempted land in Santa Clara county, California. He subsequently lived in Siskiyou county for three or four years, and then left California for Oregon, arriving in Lakeview in the spring of 1889. He has since been a resident of this county, where he was employed by others until he began dealing in sheep on his own account, being connected with the sheep industry until 1911, when he disposed of his herds. He homesteaded a tract of land near Lakeview in Goose Lake valley, and took a desert claim at Cox's Springs. He was also at one time owner of the Plush Hotel, at Plush, and a resident of that town. He is still the owner of twenty acres of land near Plush but has sold his other properties there.

Mr. Rogers gives his political allegiance to the republican party. He is filling the office of road supervisor and has charge of the road from Plush to Warner Canyon, a distance of about forty miles. During the two years of his incumbency he has done considerable work on the road, greatly improving the public highway. His fraternal relations are with the Masons and the Elks. For fifteen years he has been a Master Mason and also belongs to the Eastern Star, while in 1910 he became a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He has never regretted his determination to come to the new world. He crossed the Atlantic at the age of twenty years, empty-handed, but has gradually worked his way upward and year by year has been made to count in his search for success, so that he is now one of the substantial residents of Lakeview.

FREDERICK J. SCHLIEMANN is engaged in general merchandising at Gold Beach and also has important stock-raising interests near the town upon a ranch of six hundred acres. Oregon has drawn her citizens from every state in the Union and among the quota furnished by Illinois is Mr. Schliemann, who is a native of Peoria. He was born July 3, 1852, one of the ten children of Julius and Matilda (Kahlbrock) Schliemann. Seven of the number reached adult age, those beside our subject being: John, of Hennessey, Oklahoma; William, a resident of Los Angeles, California; Ferdinand, of Susanville, California; Helen, the wife of Rev. Walter Evans, of Plainfield, Illinois; Louisa, who married Rev. Mathias Kaufman, of Boston, who is the editor of a religious paper of that city; and Mary, who married Charles A. Kelsey, of Sherman, Texas, from whom she became legally separated.

In his father's home in Illinois Frederick J. Schliemann spent his youthful days and at times assisted his father in the bookbinding business. His education was acquired in the public schools, the work of the grades being supplemented by a high-school course, and later he pursued a course of study in the medical department of the Northwestern University at Chicago. He left home at the age of twenty-two years and located for the practice of his profession in Wisconsin in 1874. There he remained in active practice until 1903, when he came to Curry county, settling at Gold Beach, where he practiced for a time. He also lived at Wedderburn, Oregon, just across the river from Gold Beach, and at length, abandoning professional activities, purchased a ranch of two hundred acres, cultivating and residing thereon for about four years. He still owns the property but is now renting it out. In 1909 in connection with his son-in-law he purchased a mercantile business, carrying a large stock and enjoying an extensive trade. He also continues in the practice of medicine and he has important stock-raising interests, he and his wife owning about six hundred acres of land near Gold Beach, upon which he is raising stock of good grades. His various interests are bringing substantial returns, for he is an enterprising business man, watchful of opportunities and utilizing his advantages with good results.

On the 26th of September, 1875, while a resident of Wisconsin, Dr. Schliemann was married to Miss Charlotte L. King, a native of St. Lawrence county, New York, and a daughter of Robert and Sarah (LeClaire) King. The father, a native of Quebec, was of Scotch-Irish descent and the mother was a native of Canada. Mrs. Schliemann is the only one now living of a family of nine children and by her marriage has become the mother of two children: Fredericka, who was born February 13, 1892, and is the wife of Wesley Miller, who is in partnership with her father in merchandising in Gold Beach; and John, who was born September 14, 1895, and is in school. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have two children, Myra A. L. and Lorana. The family is socially prominent and Dr. Schliemann is a valued member of the Modern Woodmen camp. Independent in his political views, he holds to progressive methods, believing that advancement should be made along political lines just as surely as along business or professional lines. He held various offices while a resident of Wisconsin, including that of supervisor, and was officially connected with the schools. At the present writing he is serving as health officer of Curry county. At all times he has kept in touch with the onward march of the profession, following scientific methods in his practice and rendering valuable aid to his fellow townsmen.

E. A. PRIDAY is postmaster of the town of Plush, Lake county, and the president of the Warner Valley Mercantile Company, owning and conducting the only store of the town. The business interests which claim his attention are large and of growing proportion, nor is his activity confined alone to merchandising, for he deals in various products produced in this part of Oregon and also handles real estate. He was born in Gloucestershire, England, August 11, 1871, and is a son of Albert J. and Mary (Dipper) Priday, who were also natives of England and about 1877 came with their family to the new world, settling in what is now Crook county, Oregon. They sailed first to New York, thence to San Francisco and proceeded on their way by boat to Portland, being over a month on that trip. The father died in Cook county in 1902, when fifty-two years of age. He had followed farming in England and in this country had engaged in sheep-raising and conducting a sheep ranch. The mother still makes her home in Crook county, fourteen miles north-east of Madras, on Willow creek, the family having resided on that ranch for a quarter of a century. They have altogether about seven thousand acres of land on which they pasture extensive herds of cattle and to some extent engage in raising other stock. The sons and daughters of the family were six in number: E. A., of this review; Mary, the wife of Hugh Davy, of Idaho; Leslie, who conducts the home ranch; Ida, who is married and resides near Pineville, Oregon; Percy, who died at the age of twenty-two years; and John, at home.

E. A. Priday remained in Crook county with his parents until twenty years of age and early became familiar with the different phases of stock-raising and herding. When two decades of his life had passed he went to Arizona, where he engaged in railroading for eight or nine years, and then returned home where he spent three or four years. In 1905 he came to the town of Plush and entered merchandising, organizing the Warner Valley Mercantile Company which was incorporated in 1905. Its incorporators were E. A. Priday, N. L. Caldwell and J. J. Van Keulen, who are respectively president, vice president and secretary and treasurer. Mr. Priday and Mr. Van Keulen are both active in the store, the former being continuously prominent in its management since the incorporation. In January, 1912, he was appointed postmaster at Plush and is now filling that position. The mercantile company is capitalized for twenty-five thousand dollars. They handle a large and well selected stock of general merchandise and in fact buy and sell everything native to this region, also handling real estate.

In 1898 Mr. Priday was married to Miss Belle Caldwell, of Tulare, California, a daughter of Dr. Caldwell. Theirs is a hospitable home and their friends in Lake county are many. Mr. Priday is a Royal Arch Mason and gives his political allegiance to the republican party. He ranks with the enterprising, progressive business men and the salient traits of his character have gained him classification with the representative citizens of this county.

T. J. SULLIVAN is the manager and lessee of the Plush Hotel, in the town of Plush, and is among the citizens of foreign birth who have come to America to enjoy the broader business opportunities of the new world, where advancement is more quickly secured. He was born in County Cork, Ireland, November 10, 1881, his parents being John R. and Johanna (Lane) Sullivan. The mother died on the Emerald Isle, June 15, 1890, and the father still follows farming in his native country. In the family were six sons and four daughters, of whom T. J. Sullivan is the sixth in order of birth. Three of the brothers, Dennis, John and T. J., came to the United States, making the voyage in the order mentioned, and all are now residents of Lake county, Oregon.

It was in March, 1903, that T. J. Sullivan landed in New York, whence he made his way direct to San Francisco, where he resided until about four years ago. He worked in a dry-goods store all his life until he came to Lake county, where he herded sheep for a few months. He afterward was employed in a saloon at Plush until June, 1910, when he leased the hotel which he is now conducting, greatly improving the service, accommodations and facilities and building up a gratifying patronage by his genial and pleasant manner, which most truly expresses that hospitality which makes for the comfort of his guests. He has a number of claims in the Windy Hollow gold-mining district in this county and his investments argue well for success in the future.

On the 17th of November, 1911, Mr. Sullivan was married to Miss Christina Flinn, a native of County Cork, Ireland, who in 1901 crossed the Atlantic to New York and spent about seven years as a nurse in a hospital in that city, coming thence to Oregon. She is a daughter of Michael Flinn, still residing in Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan hold membership in the Catholic church of Lake View and his support is given to the republican party, the principles of which he considers to be most conducive to good government.

C. B. PARKER is superintendent of the "MC" ranch, the property of the Warner Valley Stock Company, Inc. For six years he has acted as superintendent of this ranch of thirty-two thousand, nine hundred acres, the largest in Lake county, and the responsibilities which devolve upon him in this connection are of a most extensive and arduous character. He was born in Siskiyou county, California, January 13, 1863, and is a son of Louis R. and Mary (Fogerty) Parker, natives of Ohio and New York respectively. They were married in the east and crossed the plains in 1849, with Siskiyou county, California, as their destination. The father died in 1867 but the mother now makes her home in Modoc county, California.

C. B. Parker, the youngest son and second youngest child, was reared in Siskiyou and Modoc counties, California, with the usual experiences of the boy who spends his youth upon the ranch. He served for two terms or four years as sheriff of Modoc county, to which position he was called as the republican candidate. Otherwise he has largely devoted his attention to stock-raising and at one time was the owner of a ranch of four hundred and forty acres in Modoc county. He sold this, however, before coming to Lake county six years ago. He now owns three hundred and twenty acres in the Coleman valley. He was formerly quite extensively engaged in the sheep industry in the vicinity of Paisley for four years and still has about two thousand head. His attention, however, is now chiefly given to the interests of the Warner Valley Stock Company of which he is one of the stockholders and its secretary and superintendent. The place is known as the "MC" ranch, by which name it is usually spoken of throughout the district because of the brand "MC" being used upon the cattle. While the company makes a specialty of the raising of cattle, having five thousand head, they also raise and herd sheep and horses. Mr. Parker employs fifteen buccaroos throughout the year and employs forty men in the haying seasons, which last for about two months. They put up three thousand tons of hay or more and also purchase a considerable amount. They cut altogether about ten thousand tons. This indicates something of the great volume of business and the interests which command the attention of Mr. Parker, who at all times displays a spirit of enterprise in his control of business affairs. He recognizes the vast possibilities of the northwest in stock-raising and ranching and sound judgment guides him in all of his undertakings.

In 1889 Mr. Parker was married to Miss Katie L. Fitzpatrick, a native of Shasta county, California, and a daughter of Alexander and Mary Fitzpatrick. Three children have been born to them, Arthur, Leland and Vera. A lifelong experience in his present line of occupation has well qualified Mr. Parker for the vast responsibilities devolving upon him and as a prominent stockman of southern Oregon he well deserves representation in this work among those who are proving potent forces in the development and upbuilding of this state.

CLARENCE INGRAM, cashier of the Lebanon National Bank, is a native son of Linn county and from an early date his interests have been identified with its development. He is familiar with agricultural life in this section and has been successful in it, has also conducted a mercantile store and is at the present time an important figure in financial circles. He was born upon his father's farm October 3, 1876, a son of W. H. and Mary (Miller) Ingram, the former a native of Portland, Maine, and the latter of Des Moines, Iowa. His father came to Oregon by way of Panama in 1852 and three years later the mother of our subject arrived in this state with her parents, having journeyed across the plains with ox teams. The father settled in Linn county near Albany, his parents having proved up a half section of land in that district and he bought a farm eight miles south of Lebanon. After his marriage he purchased the property upon which he resides. He owns six hundred acres of the finest and most productive land in the county and is numbered among the representative and substantial farmers. He is sixty-five years of age. His wife passed away in 1892. Their family of thirteen children, of whom nine are still living, is as follows: Herbert, who resides on the old homestead; Clarence, the subject of this review; Oscar, of Lebanon, who is employed as a traveling salesman; E. F., a mail carrier, of Lebanon; Hiram, who resides at home; Minnie the wife of Frank Ager, of Marcola; Emma, who also resides at home; Alice, who married Otto Frank of Linn county; Grace, the wife of Edward Knoy, of Lebanon; Caroline L., Albert W., and Blaine, all of whom have passed away; and one child, who died in infancy.

In the acquirement of an education Clarence Ingram attended the public schools of Linn county and Sodaville College, completing his studies in a business and normal college. He fitted himself for teaching and when he left school at the age of eighteen followed this occupation for ten winters, working upon the home farm during the summer months. In 1903 he went to Lebanon and there opened a general merchandise store which he conducted until 1909, when he disposed of his interests. Two years later he became cashier of the Lebanon National Bank and this position he still fills. He has made the best possible use of his many opportunities and has acquired a comfortable fortune, which he has invested judiciously. He owns one hundred and thirty acres of land in Linn county, holding the title in partnership with E. B. Day. He also owns his own home in Lebanon.

Mr. Ingram married in 1908 Miss Ethel Booth, who was born in Iowa, in 1886, a daughter of Jackson Booth, who died in 1911. His wife is living in San Jose, California. Mrs. Ingram is one of a large family, seven of whom are still living. Mr. and Mrs. Ingram have one son, William Jackson, who was born in 1910. The family belong to the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Ingram is a progressive republican and is serving as city treasurer of Lebanon. He is still in the beginning of his career and has made many changes during the course of his active life, all of which have advanced his interests, showing the quality of his business acumen and his knowledge of local conditions. There is every reason to believe that his future progress will continue along expanding lines as has his past advancement and that he is on the road toward greater prominence and success.

J. N. GIVAN has been the owner of two hundred acres of land near Adel since 1902 and is fast converting this into a valuable and highly improved property. He is leading a useful and busy life and is recognized as one of the progressive ranchmen of the Warner valley. His birth occurred in Keokuk county, Iowa, April 13, 1863, his parents being Henry C. and Phoebe (Jacobs) Givan, both of whom were natives of Indiana and were there reared, but they were married in Iowa. In the winter of 1870-1 they made their way to Modoc county, California, where they continued throughout their remaining days, the father passing away in 1911 at the advanced age of eighty-one years. He had always followed farming both in the east and in the west. In the family were four children: Tilda, who is the widow of C. B. Blake, and resides in Modoc county, California; J. N.; Lydia, who is a widow, also of Modoc county; and Emma, the wife of James McKee, of the North Warner valley.

J. N. Givan was but seven years of age when brought by his parents to the Pacific coast, and in Modoc county continued his residence until seventeen years of age, when he came to the Warner valley, where he has since spent the greater part of his time. He worked on the J. J. ranch at Plush for twenty-one years as a buccaro and in 1902 started ranching on his own account, having carefully saved his earnings until his capital was sufficient to enable him to purchase his present ranch. His home place near Adel comprises two hundred acres, all of which is tillable, and he also has a hay ranch five miles north of Adel. He also has two places rented, totaling three hundred and twenty acres, and is now extensively engaged in putting up hay and raising stock. He cuts about seven hundred tons of hay annually and has about seven hundred head of cattle and two hundred head of horses on the ranch. His brand is a bar drawn across a circle and his stock are known as the circle-bar stock. He employs nine men during the haying season, lasting from six weeks to two months, and also employs one man throughout the entire year, while he and his two sons are at the same time busily engaged in conducting his interests, thus making four men working at all times upon the place.

In the fall of 1890 Mr. Givan was married to Mrs. Dora E. Overton, who was born in Siskiyou county, California, in 1865, and is a daughter of Joel Rambo. By her former marriage she had two children: Plumber Overton, now deceased; and Daisy, the wife of J. A. Morris, who is mentioned on another page of this work. To Mr. and Mrs. Givan have been born three children, Ernest, Hazel and Dallas. Mr. Givan belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Although he is an advocate of all lines of public progress and improvement he has little time to devote to public activities because of the demands made upon him by his business interests, which are growing in volume and importance. He has always labored earnestly and his success is the ultimate outcome and merited reward of his energy and enterprise.

GEORGE FRED BURKHART, who passed away in Portland on the 29th of September, 1911, was long and successfully identified with general agricultural pursuits in Linn county on a farm situated three and a half miles north of Lebanon. He was a native son of Oregon, his birth having occurred in 1846, while his parents were crossing the plains, near the place where Marcus Whitman was massacred. His parents, who were natives of Illinois, settled in the Willamette valley in 1847 and took up a donation land claim in Linn county. George F. Burkhardt spent the first twenty-one years of his life on the home farm and following his graduation from Lebanon Academy, pursued a course of study in the Oregon State Agricultural College at Corvallis. Subsequently he taught school in Linn county for several years, imparting clearly and readily to others the knowledge which he had acquired. He then bought the farm which is now the home of his son Clyde, purchasing the property from a Mr. Wassom, who had originally taken it up. The cultivation and improvement of that place claimed his attention throughout the remainder of his active business career or until 1910, when he took up his abode in Portland, where his demise occurred the following year. In his passing the state of Oregon lost a substantial agriculturist and an esteemed citizen and one who, spending his entire life within its borders, had borne an active part in the work of its development and upbuilding.

In 1878, in this state, Mr. Burkhardt was united in marriage to Miss Serepta Cornelias, who was born in Missouri and came to Oregon with relatives. In 1898, after twenty years of married life, she was called to her final rest. To Mr. and Mrs. Burkhardt were born two children: Raymond, an agriculturist of Linn county, owning two farms, who is married and has one child; and Clyde M., who owns the old home place of one hundred and fifty-six acres in association with his brother. Seventy acres thereof are under cultivation and are devoted principally to the raising of grain. Clyde M. Burkhardt also has a large prune orchard and has won a gratifying measure of success in his farming operations. He wedded Miss Gladys Andrews, a native of Oregon and a daughter of David and Adeline (Hamilton) Andrews, who were born in Massachusetts and Wisconsin respectively and came to this state at an early day. Mrs. Gladys Burkhardt is one of a family of eight children, the others being as follows: Ora, the wife of Ralph Priest of Prineville, Oregon, by whom she has four children; Jessie, who gave her hand in marriage to Grover Caldwell of Lapine, Oregon, by whom she has three children; Thaddeus, who is a resident of Portland and the father of one child; Josephine, who is the wife of Henry Suter of Oak Grove, Oregon, and the mother of one child; Addie, the wife of Harry Sly, of Dorris, California; Reuben, who is a resident of California; and Ralph, who lives with his brother-in-law, Clyde M. Burkhardt. Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Burkhardt have one child, Karl, whose natal day was March 5, 1911.

In politics George F. Burkhardt was a democrat but never sought nor desired office as a reward for party fealty. His religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal church, while fraternally he was identified with the Maccabees and the Masons. His life was spent in accordance with the highest principles of honorable manhood and citizenship and his memory is cherished by all who knew him.

L. A. MOSS is the owner of two hundred acres of land adjoining Paisley on the east and devoted to the raising of hay and grain. He is also the secretary and manager of the Moss Telephone & Telegraph Company of Lake county and thus deserves classification with the representative residents of the district. He was born in Linn county, Oregon, May 22, 1862, and was the eldest of the three children of S. P. and Sarah (Robinet) Moss. The mother died in Linn county in 1868 and the father afterward removed to Modoc county, California, settling near Beaver, where he remained three years. He then came to Lake county in July, 1872, taking up his abode at the head of the Summer lake valley, where he is now living.

L. A. Moss remained with his father until 1888 and assisted him in the various duties of the ranch, but when twenty-six years of age started out for himself. In the fall of 1889 he went to Warner valley, where he engaged in ranching for six years, having a preemption claim and a quarter section of school land. At length he sold out there and came to his present place, comprising two hundred acres of fertile land adjoining Paisley on the east. All of this is under a high state of cultivation, being devoted to the raising of hay and grain. He also ran stock extensively until the past few years, having two thousand head of sheep and two hundred head of cattle at one time, while in connection with his father and brother he had three hundred and fifty horses. He spent most of his time on the range in his earlier days and has gone through all of the experiences of that life which is now fast becoming a thing of the past as the open territory is being taken up and the state divided into ranches. He has contributed to the general development and progress not alone along agricultural lines but also as the secretary and manager of the Moss Telephone & Telegraph Company of Lake county which has a line extending from Silver Lake to Lake View, a distance of more than a hundred miles.

On the 29th of September, 1889, Mr. Moss was married to Miss Anna McCormack, who was born in New Brunswick, December 27, 1873, and is a daughter of William McCormack. Their three children are Stephen W., Alfred G. and Mildred Ruth. Mr. Moss has voted with the democracy since age conferred upon him the right of franchise and has served in a number of local offices, including that of justice of the peace and constable. For eight years he has been school director and is a warm friend of good schools and good roads. For one term he was road supervisor and his aid and influence, whether in office or out of it, are at all times given to works of public progress and improvement. For the past twelve years he has been a member of the Woodmen of the World and he is a member of the Christian church, the teachings of which form the guiding influences of his life.

WILLIAM H. WILSON. The pioneer settlement of Oregon is a tale that is told. Its pages contain the story of many thrilling adventures of Indian warfare and of a contest for the dominion of the district. The story takes us along blazed trails, through uncut forests and into the mountain fastnesses, and leads us up to the development of a beautiful and fertile country, where every evidence of advanced agricultural methods are to be seen, together with the indications of progressive industrial, mining and commercial activities. This is the story of Oregon's settlement in outline. It is made up, however, of the individual struggles and efforts of many men, prominent among whom was William H. Wilson, whose death in February, 1902, marked the passing of one of the worthy pioneers and venerable citizens of Douglas county. He was born in Warren county, Tennessee, December 18, 1822, and in childhood accompanied his parents to St. Clair county, Missouri, where he lived until 1843, and then joined the famous Applegate emigration train with which he crossed the plains to Oregon. He had attained his majority by the time the end of the journey was reached, and until about twenty-eight years of age he was a resident of the Willamette valley. Indian depredations were a constant menace to the settlers and Mr. Wilson was one of a regiment of young men, who marched against the Cayuse Indians after the massacre of Dr. Whitman. He passed unharmed through various skirmishes but was finally severely wounded near Oregon City. His account of the early struggles of pioneer times is extremely interesting. Some years before his death he narrated the particulars of the engagement with the notorious Indian, Cock-Stock, whom he says "was an aggressive, impudent fellow, a kind of desperado, belonging to the Molalla tribe, not a chief of that or any other tribe, but the leader of a few young, reckless, hot-headed Indians. He was always trying to stir up and increase ill-will between the Indians and white people, and was especially vindictive towards the Methodist missionaries who had reprimanded him for his evil ways. Some time in February, 1844, I happened to be at Dr. Elijah White's house (he was a kind of Indian agent) when complaint was brought to him of some misconduct of Cock-Stock, who was reported to be at an Indian camp near by. The Doctor asked me to ride with him down to the camp and help him arrest the Indian. As we rode along he told me something of the trouble this Indian had been giving him and something of the uneasiness he felt in regard to disagreements between Indians and settlers that he was instrumental in creating. He gave me a description of his conduct, telling me how frightened the white women and children in the vicinity were of him. The Doctor seemed to think that there would be no end to his misconduct until Cock-Stock was arrested or killed. When we arrived at the camp we could find nothing of him. I had been working for Dr. McLoughlin for some time; had first been at work in the woods cutting saw logs, and later with a gang of men had been putting logs into the Willamette above Canemah for the Oregon Milling Company. I had tried to do my work well and to give faithful service to the good old Doctor, who was regarded with the greatest esteem by his employes. Perhaps he noticed that I was anxious to please; perhaps he thought me trustworthy; at any rate he selected me to take charge of the dry house, a position of care and responsibility. In this dry house lumber was being seasoned for the erection of a flouring mill. It was my duty to watch the furnaces—very simple affairs they were—keep them going and also to guard against fire. This work kept me constantly in the vicinity of the mill, but frequently left me a few moments of leisure.

Unfortunately for me, one of those came just right to get me shot with an Indian arrow. It was on the 4th of March, 1844, two or three weeks after my talk with Dr. White, that Cock-Stock and several other Indians—I think seven or eight—saucy young fellows, fully armed, came riding into Oregon City. They rode to the house of the Methodist missionary, Rev. A. F. Walter, and halloed several times, but no one came out of the house. Then they rode up and down the town, talking loud, and laughing and acting in an impudent and insulting manner, but not really molesting any one, though many of the people, especially the women and children, were terribly frightened, as they were very panicky about him anyhow. Finally the Indians tied up their ponies at the foot of the bluff and taking a boat paddled across the river to where there was a village of Calipooias. It was thought from some threats which Cock-Stock had made, that he was going to try to get a party together to do some injury to the mission or the people. I thought from all I had heard and seen, that that man would be doing a good deed for the community, who would rid it of this Indian, and while the Indians were over the river I went up to dinner, and when I came back to the mill I brought my gun with me. I believe that I was a little anxious to take a shot at the Indian, provided he would commit some overt act to justify me in doing so. When the Indians were seen coming back across the river several men collected about the mill and boat landing, which was under the mill. The mill was set up on timbers and persons could pass under it very easily. There was a bridge or log-way built of slabs sloping up from the ground, over which logs were hauled into the mill. It was built in a kind of curve. I was standing about the middle of this bridge. Sterling Rodgers was standing near me and Colonel J. W. Nesmith was near the end of the bridge on the ground. Nesmith and I were both armed but Rodgers was not. The Indians landed under the mill and came in sight from under the bridge going towards their horses. When they had gone a few steps some one yelled something at Cock-Stock. I did not catch the words but the Indian whirled instantly and fired into the crowd with a pistol. I and Colonel Nesmith both shot at him at the same time and when the blurr of smoke cleared so I could see, I saw him on his hands and knees, but scrambling up again. Then I caught sight of Le Breton and heard the report and saw the smoke of another pistol shot. The next thing I saw was Le Breton and the Indian struggling together about the end of the bridge. Then for an instant I saw the mulatto, George Winslow, rushing to them with a gun in his hands. The Indian was down and the mulatto did not strike with the gun, but he just drove the muzzle of it through the Indian's head as though it were a crowbar or a bayonet. When Cock-Stock fell the other Indians broke into a run for their horses, turning as they ran and shooting back bullets and arrows into the crowd. Le Breton was shot twice and badly stabbed in attempting to arrest Cock-Stock. All this had taken place in a few seconds. Rodgers and I still stood on the bridge looking on and, being up there, made a good target. At any rate Rodgers suddenly cried out, 'Look out, Bill, they are shooting arrows! I am hit.' Before he was done speaking an arrow hit me also, whereupon we both ran into the mill. Rodgers was wounded in the arm and the arrow hitting me buried itself in the fleshy part of my hip. Before I thought I caught hold of it and tried to jerk it out, but only partially succeeded, as it came out broken, leaving the head imbedded in the flesh, where I have carried it these fifty-six years. Several shots were fired after the Indians but they reached their horses, mounted and scrambled up the bluff. One pony was shot, however, and they had to leave it, but the Indians made their escape and were never caught that I know of. When Cock-Stock's body was examined there was found the mark of a bullet across the back of his head and neck, which no doubt was what knocked him down. I believe that was my bullet, for I was a good shot in those days, and from where I stood could have hit him in that way as he turned to run after firing his pistol. Colonel Nesmith thought that shot was his and I never disputed the honor, if honor it was, with him. However, ours were the only shots fired at that time. It was one of us, and it was a good job, whichever did it. Le Breton and Rodgers were taken to the hospital at Vancouver, where both died. Rodgers was not any worse hurt than I was at first, but blood poisoning set in, resulting in his death. I was urged to go to the hospital but I was more afraid of the doctors than of my wound. I used some simple remedies. My wound was very painful for awhile and was tender and sore for several years, but finally ceased to trouble me."

Mr. Wilson made his first trip to the California gold fields in 1848 but afterward visited the mines several times, making his home during that period with Jesse Applegate. In 1850 he married and came to Douglas county, making the journey with an ox team and securing here a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres, two and a half miles southeast of the present city of Yoncalla, in the most fertile part of the Yoncalla valley. He built a hewed log cabin of one room which for several years was the home of the family, but was later replaced by a more modern and substantial residence. The Indians were at times troublesome but never to such an extent that it became necessary to make war upon them, and Mr. Wilson spent many useful and happy years in the valley, his activities contributing to its development and improvement.

As stated Mr. Wilson was married in 1850, the lady of his choice being Mrs. Hannah Gillan, who was born in New Jersey, and was five years of age when her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Dickinson, removed to Columbiana county, Ohio, where they lived for seven years. In 1844 they went to Lee county, Iowa, where the father took up a government land claim. While living in that state the daughter Hannah became the wife of John Gillan and in 1844 they started across the plains for Oregon with four yoke of oxen. Their trip was beset with many perils and they were several times attacked by Indians. In the Goose Lake country a little girl of the train was severely wounded and for days was carried on a litter. She survived, however, became a Mrs. Hendrick and was well known in Oregon. In November, 1844, Mr. and Mrs. Gillan settled on a claim in Lane county, near Eugene, and there Mr. Gillan passed away in the following year. About five years later his widow became the wife of William H. Wilson and theirs was a happy married life covering fifty-two years. She has ever been a believer in the religion of cheerfulness and has led a consistent Christian life. She was widely known as one of the pioneer women of Douglas county, belonging to that brave band of mothers, sisters and wives who in a more quiet but none the less important way bore the brunt of the battle whereby Oregon was reclaimed for the purposes of civilization. In February, 1902, Mr. Wilson departed this life and thus closed an honorable and useful career, intimately connected with the early development of the state. He was an uncompromising republican and for several years served as county commissioner of Douglas county, while later he represented his district in the legislature. He never deviated from the straight path of duty and the line of strict integrity and incorruptible political principles. His word was his bond and was never broken for any cause. The part which he played in Indian warfare alone entitles him to prominent consideration in this volume, yet other chapters of his life history are equally notable and commendable. He was a consistent member of the Christian church and his religion constituted a vital force in his career. He bore the distinguishing marks of the early frontiersman who blazed the trail for the generation which followed, and his name is engraved high on the roll of Oregon's honored pioneers.

WILLIAM P. CHISHOLM, M. D., a practicing physician at Rogue River, who has been very successful in the work of his chosen profession, is the owner of mining properties and about three hundred acres of land. He was born in Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, November 4, 1865, a son of William and Jeanette Ferguson (McPhie) Chisholm, natives of Scotland. The father emigrated to Canada in 1842 or 1843, where he was later married. He was engaged in the lumber business all his life and died in Canada in 1873, when he was fifty years of age. The mother survived him until 1889, passing away at the age of fifty-seven years. The father was twice married and to him were born ten children, five by the first wife and five by the second. Dr. Chisholm is the eldest of the five children born unto his mother. He was educated in Hamilton, being graduated from the Hamilton Collegiate Institute in 1883. He then entered the University of Toronto, where he remained until 1885. He afterward entered Trinity Medical College of Toronto and in 1888 received the degree of M. D. He began practicing in 1889 in Hamilton and continued the work of his profession there until 1892, when in May, of that year, he removed to Colorado, where he practiced in Platteville, Ironton, Denver and Victor for five years. He then removed to southern Oregon, where for fourteen years he practiced his profession in Gold Hill, removing to Rogue River in 1911. The Doctor has for many years been interested in mining properties and during twelve years of his time spent in southern Oregon he was connected with that business in conjunction with his practice. His holdings, comprising about three hundred acres of land, contain some valuable mineral deposits.

Dr. Chisholm was married, December 15, 1898, to Miss Margaret R. Hammersly, who was born in Springfield, Oregon, August 21, 1877, a daughter of George R. and Martha (Borough) Hammersly, who now reside in Rogue River. To Dr. and Mrs. Chisholm have been born seven children, Margaret, James, Thomas, Donald Hugh, Stuart Thompson, Jeannette McPhie and John.

The Doctor in his political views is a democrat but has never been an office seeker. Although his arrival in Rogue River is comparatively recent, he has become extensively and favorably known in the community. Having had broad medical experience, he has succeeded in building up a good practice, which is constantly growing. Being an affable man and of an optimistic temperament he makes friends readily and has an extended acquaintance in the community.

VINCENT JACOB. Much credit must ever be given to the man, who through his own unaided effort attains a position that entitles him to the respect and esteem of the community in which he resides. This is particularly true in the case of a foreigner, as Vincent Jacob, who landed in America with a capital of eleven cents, and very little knowledge of the language or customs of the country. Handicapped in apparently every possible way, save mentally and physically, he began life in this country with the firm determination to win his way to affluence and he is rapidly achieving his ambition.

He is a native of Russia, his natal day having been the 13th of October, 1855, and his parents were Benjamin and Mary Jacob, also natives of Russia, whose family numbered nine. The father has passed away but the mother is living and continues to be a resident of her native country.

Russia was the home of Vincent Jacob until 1892, when he acquired the necessary passage money to bring him to the United States, feeling positive that here he should find the opportunity to prove his capabilities. The first four years of his residence were spent in Pittsburg, Kansas, and at the expiration of that period he came to the Pacific coast, being attracted by the wonderful stories he heard of its agricultural possibilities. He located in Tillamook county and for two years thereafter farmed as a renter. This proved to be a very profitable venture under his capable and energetic direction and in two years by means of the most rigid economy and self-denial he acquired capital enough to buy his present farm. It consists of two hundred acres of land, upon which he has erected substantial buildings, making it one of the well improved and highly cultivated properties of the district. Under his supervision the land is carefully cultivated and it yields abundant harvests, which command the highest prices in the market. Mr. Jacob's circumstances have steadily improved from year to year until he is now one of the well-to-do men of his community, and in addition to his fine homestead is a large stockholder in the Elwood Creamery. He makes a specialty of dairy farming and is now milking forty-five cows, this in itself netting him a large revenue.

While still a resident of Russia Mr. Jacob was married to Miss Walburga Stroh, also a native of that country. Ten children have been born unto Mr. and Mrs. Jacob, but three of whom, Ben, Peter and Pious, are living.

Mr. Jacob is a naturalized citizen of the United States and gives his political support to the republican party, but he has never been an aspirant to official honors. During the long period of his residence in this country, despite the discouragements and sorrows that have come to him as to every one, he has never for a moment regretted the transference of his allegiance to the United States. Success has not come easily, but as the result of careful management, unremitting labor and thrift, but his efforts have been well rewarded, netting him full returns.

JULIAN P. JOHNSON, A. M., M. D., a highly educated representative of the medical fraternity, is well known as a physician and surgeon of Ashland and also as a specialist in the treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. His birth occurred in Livingston county, Kentucky, on the 11th of August, 1867, his parents being Robert William and Perneca H. (Ward) Johnson, who were natives of Alabama and Missouri respectively. They were married in Carroll county, Illinois, to which state they had removed with their respective parents. Robert William Johnson served in the Federal army during the Civil war as a member of Company I, Twenty-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was later transferred to the Sixth Mississippi Cavalry, a colored regiment, of which he was made commissary. He was married while home on a furlough and after the close of hostilities located in Kentucky. In 1867 he removed to Springfield, Missouri, where his demise occurred in 1871 and where his widow still resides.

Julian P. Johnson was reared under the parental roof and acquired his early education in the common schools. Subsequently he pursued a high-school course and then entered the Southwestern Baptist College at Bolivar, Missouri, from which institution he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1890. Three years later the degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon him. He was ordained as a Baptist minister at the age of twenty-one and preached for that church for over sixteen years, during which time he spent two years in India as a missionary teacher. In 1894 he entered the University of Chicago and in 1899 was graduated from that institution with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In the same year he also won the degree of Bachelor of Divinity. However, a change of belief concerning the dogmatic theology of the orthodox church led to his abandonment of the pulpit and his entrance into the medical profession. In 1906 he entered the College of Homeopathic Medicine of the State University of Iowa, being graduated therefrom with the degree of M. D. in 1910. During these years he had also pursued special courses in various branches. Dr. W. L. Bywater, who held the chair of eye, ear, nose and throat in the college faculty of the State University of Iowa, was a personal friend of Dr. Johnson, who pursued special courses in this branch of medicine under the former's able direction. Immediately following his graduation Dr. Johnson came to Oregon and on July 2, 1910, located in Ashland, where he has since devoted his attention to his special work. In the short space of two years he has built up a lucrative practice and has won an enviable reputation in the field of his specialty. Through his membership in the Southern Oregon Medical Association and the American Institute of Homeopathy he keeps in close touch with the progress that is continually made by the profession.

On the 6th of September, 1910, Dr. Johnson was united in marriage to Miss Emily A. Horgan, of Corvallis, Oregon. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, belonging to Ashland Lodge, No. 23, A. F. & A. M.; Siskiyou Chapter, No. 21, R. A. M.; Malta Commandery, No. 4, K. T.; and Alpha Chapter, No. 1, O. E. S. Of the last named, the first chapter in Oregon, he is serving for the second term as worthy patron. He likewise belongs to the Woodmen of the World and acts as medical examiner of the local lodge. Genial in disposition, unobtrusive and unassuming, he is patient under adverse criticism and in his expressions concerning brother practitioners is friendly and indulgent.

J. A. MORRIS is acting as postmaster of Adel where he also carries on merchandising, and in the business circles of Lake county he is widely and favorably known. He was born in Dade county, Missouri, February 14, 1869, a son of William and Sarah (Cook) Morris, the former a native of Missouri and the latter of Kentucky. They were reared and married in Missouri and in 1877 started on the long journey across the hot sandy plains in a wagon to Jackson county, Oregon, settling near Rock Point, where they now reside. The father engaged in placer mining until about 1900, since which time he has lived retired. While in Missouri he followed farming save for the period of the Civil war, when he enlisted and served as a soldier. In his family were eleven children, ten of whom are now living and all are married with the exception of the youngest.

J. A. Morris, coming to Oregon when a youth of eight years, remained with his parents until 1890, and worked in the mines with his father, thus early forming habits of industry and perseverance. On the 9th of June, 1890, he arrived in Warner valley and for about twelve years worked as a buccaro. He afterward ran stock, handling horses and cattle on his own account for three years. He next turned his attention to merchandising and purchased two little stores in the valley, conducting one at what is now the town of Plush, in the first building upon the present townsite. In fact Mr. Morris platted the townsite and erected the first building there. He continued at that point until 1910, when he came to Adel at the south end of Warner valley. He bought property here and established business and in 1910 was appointed to the office of postmaster. He is an enterprising merchant, wideawake, progressive and active in all of his business affairs, and at the same time loyal to all of his public duties. He is not only the postmaster but also notary public, and at one time was justice of the peace but resigned. As a merchant he has done extensive business with the stockmen, fitting out sheep camps and stock ranches, and the careful management of his business affairs has brought him a substantial measure of prosperity.

On the 25th of December, 1898, Mr. Morris was married to Miss Daisy Overton, who was born in Fort Bidwell, Modoc county, California, a daughter of Major and Dora (Rambo) Overton. Mr. and Mrs. Morris have four children, Hallie, William Truman, Raymond and Rotha. Mr. Morris has always been an advocate of democratic principles and ever exercises his right of franchise in support of the men and measures of that party. His fraternal relations are with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Lakeview. He is numbered among those who are active in promoting public development of southern Oregon and his efforts are put forth along progressive lines which are proving not only a source of individual success but also an element in public progress and prosperity.

JAMES T. HALL, who is associated in the general practice of law with his brother, Judge John F. Hall, is one of the accomplished and highly respected citizens of Marshfield. He was born in Polk county, this state, January 1, 1859, and is a son of William and Martha J. (Cox) Hall. His father is a native of Tennessee, his birth having occurred near Greenfield in Greene county, on March 22, 1821, and his mother is a native of Illinois, in which state she was born February 6, 1836. William Hall emigrated to California in 1849, where he remained for one year only and then took ship to Portland, Oregon, and from there went immediately to Polk county, near Grande Ronde Indian reservation, where he filed upon a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres. The place is now known as Mill Creek. Here he established his home and began at once the development and improvement of his newly acquired possessions, continuing thus until 1868, when he disposed of the property and removed to what is now called Madron sheep ranch, in Douglas county. There he settled on unsurveyed government land and entered into partnership with William Day, being engaged in sheep-raising for one year, after which he moved to what is now known as Rock Creek, at a point five miles southeast of Enchanted Prairie. There he devoted his attention to stock-raising for two years, after which he removed to Isthmus Slough, where he located a preemption and homestead claim, which property is now known as Flag Staff, Millington and Alder Park, and is located three miles in a southerly direction from Marshfield. Upon that property he continued to live for the succeeding twenty years and then disposed of the place and purchased his residence in Marshfield, where he continued to live during the remaining years of his life. He was united in marriage in 1851 to Miss Martha J. Cox, who in company with her parents emigrated to this state in 1845, their party being one of a number who at that time made the journey across the great plains with Joe Meek's company. On reaching Oregon they settled in Polk county on a place located twelve miles from Dallas and six miles from the town of Sheridan. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. William Hall were nine children: Isam A., a ferry boat captain of Marshfield; William, who passed away in infancy in Polk county; Judge John F., extended mention of whom is made elsewhere in this work; James T., of this review; Andrew J., who died in 1911 at the age of forty-nine years; Mrs. Ida P. Patterson, of Marshfield; Mrs. Sarah A. TenBrook, of Merrill, Klamath county; Mary M., the wife of J. N. Crawford, of New Orleans, Louisiana; and Nellie Wilson, an adopted daughter, residing at Berkeley, California. The father of this family died in May, 1890, and the mother passed away at the age of seventy-two years, in 1908.

James T. Hall was reared at home and received his early education in the public schools of this state. He began his independent career as captain on a steamboat on Coos bay and continued in that occupation for a period of seven years, during which time he devoted himself to the study of law at every available opportunity his spare time afforded, and especially sought retirement at night where in more complete seclusion he was able to engage in uninterrupted and prolonged application to his text-books. Previous, however, to his employment as a steamboat captain he served for two years as deputy sheriff of Coos county under Colonel John Lane and later as deputy collector of customs. Having at last thoroughly prepared himself for the practice of the legal profession he was admitted to the bar and became associated in practice with his brother, Judge John F. Hall, with whom he has since continued to practice in all of the courts of the state and also in the United States court. He is the owner of a fine residence in Marshfield and is also possessed of other properties, among which is a large tract of excellent land in Coos county.

Mr. Hall was united in marriage August 6, 1893, to Miss Alice J. Stauff, who was born in Coos county and is a daughter of Alexander and Mary E. Stauff. Her parents were among the early pioneers of Oregon, the father passing away at Marshfield in 1911. His widow is now living at Riverside, California, at the age of fifty-four years. In their family were seven children: Alice J., who is the wife of James T. Hall; Charles F., of Marshfield; William, James and May R., all residents of Riverside, California; and Ernest and Edward, deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Hall one daughter has been born, Mary Elsie, born February 28, 1895, who is a pupil in the high school at Marshfield.

Mr. Hall is affiliated with the democratic party and is an influential man in the councils of that great political organization in his state, having served for the past eight years as chairman of the Coos county democratic committee. Fraternally he is connected with the Masonic order, being a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the Eastern Star. He also belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, to the Degree of Honor, and to Myrtle Lodge, No. 3, K. P. His family are members of the Episcopal church at Marshfield. Mr. Hall is regarded as one of the leading and influential citizens of Marshfield. He is an attorney of recognized ability and during the years, in which he has been engaged in the practice of his profession, he has established a large and lucrative practice, to which he gives his undivided attention. His influence and assistance can always be counted upon to advance every public measure, having for its object the educational and moral improvement of the people of his state and county.

WILLIAM ALBERT BISHEL, filling the position of county sheriff of Curry county since 1910, was born in Lafayette, Wisconsin, July 26, 1859, his parents being John and Hannah (Dodgeson) Bishel. They had a family of four children, of whom William A. is the eldest, the others being: Elizabeth Ann, the wife of Amos Deys, of Iowa; Arthur S., who is married and lives in Franklin county, Iowa; and John Oscar, who is also married and makes his home in Franklin county.

William Albert Bishel was reared in Wisconsin and was about seven years of age at the time of his father's death. When a youth of twelve he began earning his own livelihood and worked as a farm hand until twenty-two years of age, being employed by different agriculturists of his part of the state. He afterward learned the carpenter's trade and a year later took up the study of steam engineering, following that occupation for two years in Wisconsin. He next went to North Carolina and followed both trades in that state for seven years. When that period had passed he removed to Iowa, where he worked for three years, and in the winter of 1893 he came to California, where he remained for only a short time, working at both carpentering and engineering. He was employed in those capacities in various places on the Pacific coast and finally settled at Wedderburn, Oregon, where he took a contract for carrying the mail and was thus employed for six years. In 1906 he removed to Gold Beach and bought a hotel which he improved, building a large addition and equipping it according to modern methods. He is still proprietor of that hotel, in which connection he is widely and favorably known. Winning popularity as a business man, he was at length mentioned in connection with public office and in 1910 was elected sheriff of Curry county, in which position he has since creditably served. During his term of office, and in a measure due to his efforts, the new courthouse is being erected at Gold Beach. It is said that Mr. Bishel has kept the cleanest and most up-to-date city records that have ever been kept in this office since its establishment. He has made the acquaintance of a very large number of notable men, not only in performing the duties of his position but also in other ways, as he has traveled here and there, and he enjoys public confidence in large measure. His political allegiance is given to the republican party and in addition to the office of sheriff he has served as road supervisor, as constable and as deputy sheriff. It was his capability in those different positions that recommended him for his present office, in which he is now a most worthy incumbent. His religious faith is that of the United Brethren church. He holds membership with the Fraternal Order of Eagles. Mr. Bishel may be truly called a self-made man, for he started out in the business world on his own account when a youth of twelve years and has steadily worked his way upward. He is popular both as a hotel man and county official, being held in high esteem by the law-abiding citizens.

Mr. Bishel was married, November 25, 1894, to Miss Laura J. Miller, a native of Curry county, and a daughter of A. R. and Mary J. (Coy) Miller, the former a native of Dayton, Ohio, and the latter of Missouri. In their family were twelve children, of whom seven are living: John C., who is married and lives upon a ranch in Curry county, not far from Wedderburn; William R., and W. W., twins, and E. R., all living at Wedderburn; Walter S., who is married and lives in the same locality; George B., a farmer of Gold Beach; and Mrs. Bishel. To Mr. and Mrs. Bishel have been born five children: Roy E., who was born December 25, 1895, and is a high-school student; Vernon, born in 1898; Myrtle May, in 1902; Laurena, in 1905; and Lorin W., April 3, 1907. The children are attending the graded schools of Gold Beach and it is Mr. Bishel's desire that they should have good educational privileges and thus be well qualified for the practical and responsible duties of life.

JOHN WILLIAM HENRY ADKINS, residing at Gales creek, Washington county, Oregon, was born near Boonesboro, Howard county, Missouri, May 20, 1845, a son of Joshua and Narcysus Ann (Sevier) Adkins. The family is of English descent and Abraham Adkins, the great-grandfather, passed his life and died in England, his native country. His son, John Adkins, however, came to the United States in 1793. He settled in Pennsylvania, where he lived for four years, and then removed to Virginia, where he was married to a Miss Mullins in 1816. They became parents of three sons and four daughters including Joshua Adkins, father of our subject, who was born in Greenbrier county, Virginia, now West Virginia, September 13, 1819. He became a pilot on the Ohio river in early life and by trade was a blacksmith. He was well known in fraternal circles, holding membership with the Masons, the Odd Fellows and the Sons of Temperance. His political support was given to the whig party and his religious faith was that of the Baptist church. He was a good scholar, reading broadly and thinking deeply, and was well fitted for the position of prominence and leadership accorded to him in the town of De Witt, Carroll county, Missouri, where he made his home, his death there occurring June 13, 1858. His funeral services were conducted by the three societies in which he held membership. In early manhood he had wedded Narcysus Ann Sevier, a daughter of Henry C. Sevier, who was a grandson of General John Sevier, of Revolutionary war fame, the latter a son of Alexander Sevier and a brother of Alexander and Colonel Valentine Sevier. John Sevier became a brigadier general of the Revolutionary war and was a prominent resident of his community. He was married twice and at his death, which occurred in 1814, left sixteen children, six sons and ten daughters. His son, James Sevier, was one of the oldest of the family. He married a Miss Conway and they had nine children, five sons and four daughters, of whom Henry C. Sevier, the eldest, was the father of Narcysus Ann Sevier. Henry C. Sevier married Miss Fanny Wason in Pettis county, Missouri, in 1825. She was a daughter of John Wason, who was a grandson of Daniel Boone, and one of the pioneers of Missouri, going to that state with Daniel Boone, of Kentucky, and Henry C. Sevier, of Tennessee. In the party were also the Woods, Williams, Mullens and Turners. They settled in Boone county, Missouri, and built a blockhouse. It was there that Henry C. Sevier died in 1834, when fifty-seven years of age. He left six children, three sons and three daughters: Narcysus Ann, born February 13, 1826; Thomas Hendly, born

April 1, 1827; John Wason, born October 5, 1828; Susan William, March 7, 1830; Sarah Conway, October 23, 1831; and Joseph Henry, October 23, 1833. The eldest, Narcysus A. Sevier, on the 20th of January, 1844, became the wife of Joshua Adkins. They had a family of six children, John W. H., George W., Susan V., Mary O., Sarah and Oliver N. Following the death of her first husband the mother was married in 1859 to William J. Smith, and in 1883 they removed to Texas, where her death occurred June 4, 1889, when she was sixty-three years of age. She was a member of the Baptist church.

John W. H. Adkins pursued his education in De Witt, Carroll county, Missouri, until 1861, when he went into the army, completing his education after the war under Professor Oliver Millison, of Princeton Academy, Illinois, who acted as his private tutor from June until October 1, 1866. He went to the front during the war as a substitute for William J. Smith in Company A, Fifty-first Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, thus serving from the 22d of September, 1862, until the 2d of May, 1863. On the latter day he was enrolled in Company "C," Fourth Provisional Regiment of Enrolled Missouri State Militia at Richmond, Missouri, being transferred by United States muster roll, September 8, 1864. He held the rank of corporal and while in that service participated in the engagements at Liberty Landing, Blue Mill, Cooley Lake, where sixty men of the command were wounded or killed, and several minor engagements with Bill Anderson Thraikill and other bushwhackers. The term of his third service followed reenlistment on the 8th of September, 1864, as a member of Company C, Thirteenth Regiment of Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, under Captain Calvin S. Moore. With that command he pursued the troops of General Price in his last raid in Missouri, took part in several smaller engagements and was wounded in or below the left knee when in Pulaski county, Missouri. In May, 1865, he crossed the plains and was in several engagements with the Sioux, Cheyenne, Pawnee and Shawnee Indians, spending the winter twenty miles above Junction City on the Platte river, and on the 12th of May, 1866, he was mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. Since 1866 he has been granted a pension.

Following the completion of his education Mr. Adkins engaged in farming in Missouri until the fall of 1876, when he removed with his family to Kansas, purchasing a tract of land near LaFontaine, Wilson county. He followed farming there in the years 1877 and 1878. For four years he carried the United States mail from Toronto to Independence, a distance of seventy-two miles, his term expiring in 1882. He then resumed farming but in 1884 sold his Kansas property and came to Oregon. He made his home in Forest Grove, where he purchased a house and lot, and engaged in the sewing machine business, also conducting a general repair shop. In 1886 he was elected town marshal for a term of two years. He also served at this time as deputy postmaster for two years, and for four years carried the United States mail. In 1888 he was again reelected town marshal and was also appointed city tax collector and street commissioner, while in the same year he also received the appointment of notary public. He was also elected justice of the peace for the north and south Forest Grove precincts and was reelected to that office without opposition, proving a most capable official, his decisions being strictly fair and impartial. In 1890, having taken up a homestead, close to Gales Creek, Mr. Adkins resigned his position as justice of the peace and town marshal and in the year 1891 removed to his farm, whereon he has resided continuously since. He also sold his business and office in Forest Grove and has given his attention to general agricultural pursuits and other business interests and duties. He carried the mail from Gales Creek to the Wilson River postoffice, a distance of thirty-six miles, for four years beginning in 1904, and has been continuously appointed by the governor to the office of notary public, receiving his last appointment on the 2d of May, 1910, for a two years' term. In politics he has always been a stalwart republican, unfaltering in his support of the party.

On the 11th of October, 1866, Mr. Adkins was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Catherine Frances Campbell, a daughter of Jeremiah and Elizabeth Campbell, pioneers of Missouri, removing to that state from Tennessee. Her father, who was born in 1801, was a soldier in the early Indian wars, in the War of 1812 and the Mexican war, in which General Price was paymaster, Mr. Campbell becoming well acquainted with him. Mr. Campbell was a Douglas democrat until after the outbreak of the Civil war, when he voted for Abraham Lincoln. He was the owner of slaves and an extensive farm. His family numbered twelve children, four sons and eight daughters, of whom Mrs. Adkins was the youngest. Jeremiah Campbell died at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. In early womanhood Mrs. Adkins engaged in teaching school and following her marriage was a devoted wife and mother, who carefully managed the affairs of her household to the time of her death, which occurred July 26, 1904. To Mr. and Mrs. Adkins were born twelve children, six sons and six daughters, of whom three sons and two daughters are deceased. The seven living are: Julia E., the wife of Timothy J. Hoare, of Portland, Oregon; Mary O., the wife of Harry McFarland, of Marshfield, Oregon; Joshua J., who married Cora B. Pratt and lives in this state; John W., who wedded Julia Bennett and resides at Great Falls, Montana; Martha S. M., the wife of Clay Trites, of Hillsboro, Oregon; Charles M., who married Mrs. Alice Smith and lives at Wilson River, Oregon; and Lena G., who lives in Portland.

Mr. Adkins has been a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen since 1887 and has held all of the offices from inside watchman to that of deputy past grand. He organized Lodge No. 106 at Gales Creek in 1896 and has been very active in the order. He is likewise a member of James B. Mathen Post, No. 6, G. A. R., of Forest Grove, with which he united in 1886. He belongs to the Lincoln Club and in church work has ever been active and helpful. He was licensed to preach in Missouri in 1876 and was ordained to the work of an evangelist in Oregon on the 5th of June, 1885, in the Primitive Baptist church. For ten years he had charge of five churches. His influence has always been on the side of righteousness and truth, of progress, reform and improvement. He has ever been loyal to any cause that he has espoused and his name has come to be recognized as a synonym for good citizenship and for upright manhood in the community where he makes his home.

LORENZO D. BURK is a well known citizen of Bonanza where he took up his abode in July, 1890. He was born in Decatur county, Iowa, June 8, 1867, and was reared in Union county, Iowa, where he remained until eighteen years of age, spending his youthful days in the home of his parents, Robert Emmett and Caroline A. (Carter) Burk, the former a native of Decatur county, Iowa, and the latter of Decatur, Illinois. They were married, however, in Iowa, where Charles Carter, the father of Mrs. Burk, had settled among the early pioneers. He was a native of Virginia and on removing to the middle west invested largely in land, at one time paying taxes on about half the property in the county. He also did an extensive business as a railroad contractor and as a dealer in live stock. He reared a family of eleven children, four sons and seven daughters. The Burk family remained residents of Iowa until the 11th of March, 1885, when they came to the coast, settling at Red Bluff, California, where Mr. and Mrs. Burk still reside. The father has been a lifelong carpenter and contractor. Their children are: Lorenzo D.; Guy Clarence, living at Red Bluff, California; Charles Arthur, whose home is in Redding, California; and Daisy May, the wife of John Ginn, also of Red Bluff. Both of the brothers of L. D. Burk are carpenters.

Brought to California when a boy in his teens, Lorenzo D. Burk resided in Tehama county until he came to Klamath county, Oregon, in July, 1890, since which time he has made his home in Bonanza. Throughout his entire life he has engaged in farming and stock-raising and is now the owner of two ranches of one hundred and sixty acres each and a timber tract of five hundred acres. Three years ago he built a fine home in Bonanza and spends the winters in the town in order to give his children the benefit of the educational advantages offered by the city schools.

On the 27th of May, 1894, Mr. Burk was united in marriage to Miss Birdie Horton, who was born eight miles from Bonanza on the Horton ranch in Klamath county, May 27, 1875, and has always resided here. She is a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Poe) Horton, and Poe Valley in this part of the state was named for her grandfather. William Horton was a native of New York and his wife was born in the Willamette valley, where they were married, after which they removed to Poe Valley, being numbered among its first settlers. Their remaining days were passed here. Mrs. Burk was only a few days old when her mother died and was left an orphan at the age of eight years by her father's death. Mr. Horton built the first hotel and livery barn in Klamath Falls., the former being known as the American Hotel. He engaged in stock-raising during the greater part of his life and was a valued, early settler of this district. His family numbered five children: Charles, of Seattle, Washington, who built the Yonna Valley dam and has extensive interests in Klamath county; Anna, the wife of J. O. Hamaker; Jackson, living at Klamath Falls; Ella Jane, who died at the age of eight years; and Mrs. Burk, who by her marriage has become the mother of two children, Glenn and Milburn.

Mr. and Mrs. Burk are widely and favorably known in Klamath county, having a large circle of warm friends in Bonanza and throughout the surrounding district. His political allegiance is given to the republican party and, while not a politician in the usually accepted sense of the word, he has served as deputy sheriff and as school trustee for a number of years. He has led a busy life, and his energy and enterprise have placed him among the substantial citizens of the county.

JAMES H. RUSSELL, who passed away at Ashland on the 1st of October, 1895, came to Jackson county more than six decades ago and during much of the remainder of his life was actively engaged in the marble business here. He had the honor of erecting the first monuments in five counties of Oregon and was one of the very foremost representatives of that branch of activity in the United States. His birth occurred in Tennessee on the 5th of April, 1823, his parents being James and Mabel (Howard) Russell. They died in the prime of life, when their son James was but five years of age.

James H. Russell attended the public schools of Washington county, Ohio, near Marietta, until fifteen years of age and then went to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, to serve an apprenticeship at marble working and stone-cutting, following the completion of which he labored as a journeyman workman in that city. In 1849 he joined a party of seventy young men who were going to the gold fields of California, crossing the plains from the Missouri river with the "big mule train." After mining on the Yuba river for two years, Mr. Russell and three companions, Messrs. Gibbs, Hare and Barron, came to Jackson county, Oregon, locating at a place now called Barron. The first named of Mr. Russell's companions, Mr. Gibbs, was killed during the Indian war of 1853 by a supposedly friendly Indian. The comrades took up a donation claim of two sections of land and, continuing in partnership, engaged in farming and also established the Mountain House, a popular hostelry which they conducted until 1858. Mr. Russell was a veteran of the Indian wars of 1853-56 and held the rank of major in the regiment commanded by Colonel John Ross. In 1860, he located on Coleman creek, near Phoenix, where he opened a marble quarry and put in a marble mill which was operated by water power and where he produced Oregon marble. A year later he went to Canyon City and while working in the Blue Mountain mines was struck by a huge boulder which shattered his leg and inflicted such serious injury that he was unable to return home for eighteen months. On April 14, 1865, he removed with his family to Ashland, where he erected a marble mill, its site being at the rear of the lot now occupied by the Odd Fellows building. After his accident he had the able assistance of his wife, who had in his absence employed her leisure hours in developing her hitherto latent talent, becoming in the meantime an adept marble cutter and sculptor. Quarrying his marble in Josephine county, Mr. Russell had it hauled to Ashland by teams until the completion of the railroad as far as Roseburg, when he had it shipped from the east. He erected the first monuments in Jackson, Josephine, Douglas, Klamath and Lake counties and in Siskiyou county, California. After his first mill was destroyed by fire he ordered and had all his marble shipped from the east, continuing in this business during the remainder of his life. He built up an enviable reputation throughout the country, his name being fourth from the top in length of time in business and in financial integrity in the marble directory of the United States. A progressive and public-spirited citizen, he was a prominent factor in the erection of schoolhouses, churches and public buildings. He was an active and valued member of the Methodist Episcopal church and also belonged to the Jackson County Pioneer Association. He served in the capacity of town councilman and was a leader in the work of the prohibition party in Jackson county.

On the 9th of May, 1854, Mr. Russell was united in marriage to Miss Ann Haseltine Hill, a native of Sweetwater, Tennessee, who came across the plains with her father, Isaac Hill, when a maiden of fourteen years, settling in Jackson county, Oregon. Mr. Hill was six months in making the journey from the Missouri river to Portland, then but a village. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Russell has continued the marble business most successfully, her shop being in the rear of her residence. She is one of the pioneer marble cutters of the country and the oldest woman marble worker in the United States. Her work, which is of a superior order, is to be found in southern Oregon, northern California and eastern Oregon. Among the beautiful and artistic monuments which she has erected in Ashland are the Atkinson, Wagner, Chitwood, Dennis Tolman, McCall, Ganiard, Thomas Smith and Russell monuments, all the inscriptions on the same having been cut by herself. To Mr. and Mrs. Russell were born eleven children, as follows: James B., who is engaged in the marble business at Yreka, California; Mrs. Grace Fountain, an artist of ability residing in Oakland, California; Nellie, who is at home; Mattie, the wife of Rev. Boyd, of Woodland, California; Mrs. Mollie Enbanks, a twin sister of Mrs. Boyd, who died in Ashland; Mrs. Hortense Vining, of Los Angeles, California; Mrs. Theodosia Walter, of Portland, Oregon; Bertha, who is the wife of O. Winter and resides in Ashland; Mabel, an artist residing in Ashland; Carl, who is engaged in mining in Siskiyou county, California; and Pearl, now Mrs. James Potter, of Weed, California.

Mrs. Russell belongs to both the Jackson County Pioneer Association and the State Pioneer Association, is a member and ex-president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and is also an active member of the First Presbyterian church. At Rest Cottage in Evanston, Illinois, the last earthly home of Frances E. Willard, may be seen a beautiful piece of Mrs. Russell's handiwork. It represents the badge of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the white ribbon bow, carved in marble. It was first exhibited at the Jackson County Fair and later at the World's Fair and is now in the memorial room in Rest Cottage. Mrs. Russell is a lady of wonderful versatility and many accomplishments and is recognized as one of the best informed women on the history of southern Oregon in the state. She is frequently called upon to address local meetings on various subjects pertaining to early times here, being thoroughly familiar with the annals of Oregon from pioneer days down to the present.

CHARLES N. WAIT, a resident of Canby, is one of Oregon's most prominent citizens and one whose standing as an attorney, as a public official and as a politician has been brought about by the keen perception and the straightforward policies he has manifested at all times. His birth occurred in Oregon City, Clackamas county, on the 10th of February, 1856, his parents being Aaron E. and Mary Ann (Sprenger) Wait. He bears a name prominently identified with the legal fraternity of the state of Oregon. His American ancestors were connected with the early history of the eastern states, his paternal great-great-grandfather, Benjamin, having been born in Connecticut, from which state he moved to Hatfield, Massachusetts. This remote forefather was never wanting in physical or moral prowess, and because of his bold frontier experiences was known as an Indian annihilator. His fighting ability seems to have been inherited by his son, John, who was a soldier in the Whately Company, under Captain Henry Stiles, and afterward a sergeant in Captain Russell Kellogg's company, on the Beunington alarm. Joel, the son of John, followed the martial fortunes of Washington during the Revolutionary war and was in both the Hatfield Company, commanded by Captain Graves, and the company of Captain Murry.

Judge Aaron E. Wait, father of Charles N. and first chief justice of the state of Oregon, was born in Whately, Franklin county, Massachusetts, December 26, 1813, a son of Aaron Wait, also a native of Massachusetts, and a soldier during the War of 1812. Aaron Wait married Sarah Morton, a native of Whately and daughter of Solomon Morton, representative of a prominent Massachusetts family. Four children were born of this union: Eunice, Clementine, Charles G. and Aaron E. Aaron Wait died when his namesake son was an infant, and his wife afterward married again, in consequence of which the lad lived with his grandfather until his fourth year and then with his uncle until he was eight years old. His education was difficult of attainment owing to the lack of necessary funds and was chiefly acquired while serving an apprenticeship of four years at the broom maker's trade in Hatfield, Massachusetts, his spare money defraying the expenses attached to his schooling. For some time he subsequently engaged in teaching in New York, and in 1837 removed to the state of Michigan, where he studied law in Centerville, St. Joseph county, and was admitted to the bar of Michigan in 1842. Before leaving the state he was the military secretary to Governor John S. Barry.

Accompanied by Judge Lancaster, Aaron E. Wait made preparations to cross the plains in 1847, there being forty wagons in the train and a large number of stock. The journey was not attended by any disastrous occurrences, although terrific storms made progress difficult at times. It is recorded that Judge Wait made a deep impression upon the Indians with his glasses, which he wore for near-sightedness and which the red men believed to endow him with almost supernatural powers, permitting him to see enormous distances and through practically everything. Arriving in Oregon, Mr. Wait settled in Oregon City, and here he entered upon the practice of law with ex-Senator James K. Kelley, with whom he remained for a number of years. In 1849 he varied his practice by going down into California on a little seventeen-ton vessel, intent upon claiming a share of the gold for which thousands were striving. He was fairly successful as a miner, his largest find in one place during the course of a day being sixty dollars, and his largest all around find in a day was one hundred dollars.

Upon returning to Oregon Judge Wait became connected with the Cayuse War commission, which up to that time had accomplished practically nothing. His service was marked by extreme fairness to all concerned, and he audited nearly all of the war claims, and every claim he allowed was met precisely as he had made it. The judge practiced under the provisional and territorial laws of Oregon, and was elected to the circuit bench in the fourth judicial district and later served as the first chief justice of Oregon, immediately after the admission of Oregon as a state in 1859. He held many important offices within the gift of his fellow townsmen, practically his only defeat taking place after his nomination to the senate in 1862. From a large legal practice Judge Wait gradually drifted into real-estate speculations, and, as seems natural with so many active men, chose to spend his later life amid the peace and quiet of farming enterprises. In 1876 he removed to his six-hundred-acre farm near Canby, remained there for eight years and then went back to Portland, where he lived until 1897. The same year he returned to the Canby farm, where his death occurred December 13, 1898. He was a very large landowner, had two thousand acres in Jackson county, Oregon, his Canby farm of six hundred acres, and enough other Oregon land to make up five thousand acres. In Washington he owned one thousand acres. No finer type of the gifted and substantial citizen has invaded the ranks of law and agriculture in Oregon, and to none has been accorded more universal esteem or generous appreciation of splendid personal characteristics.

Aaron E. Wait was twice married. In Linn county, Oregon, he wedded Miss Mary Ann Sprenger, who was born in McConnellsville, Ohio, a daughter of a merchant who was born in Germany and came to the United States as a young man, settling in Pennsylvania. From the latter state Mr. Sprenger removed to McConnellsville, Ohio, whence in 1849 he emigrated to Linn county, Oregon, his death eventually occurring on his donation claim at an advanced age. Of the first marriage of Judge Wait three children were born, of whom Charles N. is the only one living. His second marriage was to Catherine M. Quivey, who crossed the plains from Wisconsin in the early '50s with her parents, whose death occurred in Portland. Unto Judge Wait and his second wife were born three children, but only one grew to maturity, Anna Evelyn, the deceased wife of Frank Hanford, of Seattle, Washington.

The education of Charles N. Wait was acquired in the public schools of Portland, which training was supplemented by a course at the Bishop Scott grammar school. His first business experience was as general time-keeper on construction with the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, whose employ he entered in 1880 and with whom he remained for eight years. In 1888 he became chief clerk of the money order department of the Portland postoffice, and, owing to close confinement and consequent effect upon his health, resigned at the end of two years. For the following two years he acted in the capacity of deputy United States marshal under John Myers, after which he entered the law department of the Oregon State University, from which he was duly graduated with honors. In June, 1891, Mr. Wait began to practice in Portland, and for six years was a prominent and successful member of the bar of that city. His removal to Canby in 1897 forced him to discontinue his practice in Portland and, with the exception of occasionally assisting some friend who may call upon him for legal advice, he devotes his entire attention to his real-estate holdings, and the various social and political positions he occupies. In Canby he resides on the old home tract, the greater part of which he has sold in five and ten acre lots to the Canby Irrigation Company. He retained thirty acres of the more valuable part within the city limits for himself and also sold forty acres two years ago to the Clackamas Fire Association.

In 1879 Mr. Wait was married to Miss Laurena J. Marks, a daughter of S. F. Marks, who crossed the plains from Missouri in 1847. She was a native of Clackamas county and died on the 20th of July, 1891, leaving one son and two daughters, as follows: Charles E., who resides in Canby on part of the old homestead property; Mrs. Anna M. Bates, a resident of Los Angeles, California; and Mrs. Myrtle J. Beatty, who resides in Freeman, California. On the 2d of October, 1895, in Washington, Mr. Wait was again married, his second union being with Wilhelmina Woicka, who was born in Portland and whose father, William, a jeweler by trade, was born in Germany. Mr. Woicka came to America as a young man and died in San Francisco, California. Of this union there have been born two sons, Aaron E. and George N., both residing at home and attending school.

In politics Mr. Wait has been an active member of the democratic party and has done much to promote the progress of that party in his state both by accepting offices and by the advice he is so capable of giving because of his keen mind and legal training. For one term he was deputy city attorney of Portland, while during President Cleveland's last term he was secretary of the state democratic committee and at present is secretary of the State Democratic Club. These two positions have brought him into contact with the political leaders of the entire state and with many of national importance, so that his influence has been felt beyond the limits of Oregon. His position in the civic affairs in his immediate district has been quite as important and he has done much toward the development of Canby, among the offices he has held being that of justice of the peace, that of councilman for six years, of city recorder for two years and of mayor for two years. In all of these positions he has shown that public confidence was not misplaced and that in politics, as in private citizenship, he ever favors justice, integrity and progress. Fraternally he is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, of which he is past master; the Warner Grange, of which he is past master; the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks; the Red Men; and the Knights of Pythias.

CAPTAIN MILLARD FILLMORE PARKER, president of the Crater Lake Navigation Company, which owns and operates the Mazama and is doing much to develop water transportation facilities in this part of the state, comes to Oregon from the far off state of New York, his birth having occurred in Scipio, Cayuga county, February 5, 1855.

His parents were Nelson C. and Lucinda A. (Stout) Parker, the former a native of Cayuga county and the latter of Seneca county, New York. The father spent his entire life in the county of his nativity, both he and his wife passing away at Moravia, New York. He was a school teacher in early manhood but after his marriage followed the occupation of farming in order to support his family, consisting of wife and five children. His eldest son, Lee, is living on the old home farm in Cayuga county, the ownership of which has changed but three times since 1801, when Elijah Arnold took up his abode thereon. He died leaving the property to his heirs in 1867. It was then sold to Captain Parker's father and eventually passed into possession of his son Lee. Captain Parker is the second of the family. Stella, the only daughter, was drowned at the age of three years. William Pitt is a hardware merchant of Moravia, New York, living only about six miles from his birthplace. Nelson C. is chief decorator for the Illinois Central Railroad Company and lives in his private car, furnished him by the road.

Captain Parker remained in Cayuga county, New York, until 1877, when he came to the Pacific coast. For a year he engaged in teaching school at Buena Vista, Polk county, Oregon, and for twelve or thirteen years he traveled extensively over the Pacific coast, working at different occupations in various places. He was attracted at various times by gold mining excitements and at other times operated sawmills. He was also district secretary for the Knights of Labor for northern California for five years, and twice went to the east as a delegate for that organization, attending its national meeting in Boston and again in Minneapolis. In 1890 he disposed of his sawmill interests in California and returned home, remaining for six months with his parents.

The following year, or in 1891, Captain Parker was married at Rochester, New York, to Mrs. Hattie Tift Howe, a widow, who had one child. They removed to Ogden, Utah, where they remained for a year, during which time Captain Parker was under the care of a physician. He then removed to Lane county, Oregon, and was the first mayor of the town of Florence, which was incorporated in 1893. In connection with the city council he was instrumental in securing the improvement of Siuslaw harbor. In 1895 he went to Medford, where he lived for a number of years and for two years he conducted the Oregon Monitor in connection with a partner. He was also engaged in the insurance and real-estate business. In 1903 he came to Fort Klamath and for three years was a decorator at the Klamath Indian Agency. He was also identified with the water works and with the building of the water course. He became interested in the navigation of Wood river in Klamath county and about 1906 incorporated the Crater Lake Navigation Company, of which he became president, with J. B. C. Taylor as general manager. Captain Parker has been identified with the navigation of Upper Klamath and Cooster lakes and the Wood river since 1906.

He was the first man to make regular trips on the river running the steamer Mazama, which made regular trips from Mazama Landing to points on the upper lakes and the Wood river valley. In June, 1912, the company launched the present Mazama, the second boat owned by them bearing that name. This part of the state is fast becoming thickly settled, creating a need for transportation facilities, and in the operation of the navigation line Captain Parker is making his work of large worth to the district.

JAMES W. SEAVEY. One of Oregon's important sources of revenue is hop growing. Its trade along this line has reached extensive proportions and one of the prominent representatives of this industry in the northwest is James W. Seavey. His landed possessions are large and his acreage is principally devoted to the growing of hops for which he finds a market throughout the entire world. He was born near Eugene, May 14, 1873, and has, therefore, been a witness of practically the entire growth and development of this city, for it contained only a few hundred inhabitants at the time of his birth. His parents were Alexander and Sarah Ann (Blatehly) Seavey. The father became one of the pioneers of Lane county and devoted his farm of eleven hundred acres near Eugene to the raising of stock and hop culture. He was born in Rockland, Maine, August 1, 1824, and often told, how when playing on the sands of Penobscot bay he had watched the great ships but was much more interested in the outgoing than the incoming vessels, pondering much over their destination and their errand as they sailed across the deep. As he grew older he spent much time in the fishing boats, depending upon the catch for his livelihood, but even the shores of the bay proved too narrow for his constantly broadening dreams and at length he left the sheltering bay and shores upon which his life thus far had been passed, to embark on a sailing vessel engaged in the West Indian trade. The ship was known as the Challenge and he was appointed to the position of mate. It was in 1849 that she started for her destination, but when off the Brazilian coast fire broke out on board and the vessel burned to the water's edge, the crew, however, making their escape in boats. For three days the faithful sailors were upon the open sea, but at length landed on the Brazilian coast, where they remained until the following July, when they took passage on a Scotch vessel, Oughtertyre, from Aberdeen, Scotland. They incurred a great risk in so doing for all of the former crew of this ship, with the exception of the captain and the cook, had died of yellow fever. This Scotch vessel was bound for San Francisco and, rounding Cape Horn, proceeded up the western American coast, reaching its destination after one hundred and seventy-three days, after a voyage greatly impeded by severe storms.

On reaching California Mr. Seavey made his way to the mines of Trinidad and there purchased mules and engaged in business as owner of a pack train. Later he opened a little store on Althouse Creek in Josephine county, Oregon, in partnership with George B. Collins. The little mercantile enterprise met a long felt want in the community and the trade grew rapidly, Mr. Seavey continuing in the business for five years when he sold out to his partner and went on a mining expedition to the Rogue river. In 1855 he came to Lane county and took up one hundred and sixty acres of land in the hills three miles north of Springfield. Upon his farm he placed three hundred and fifty cows and calves and thus embarked extensively in the stock-raising business. The prosperity which crowned his efforts in that connection enabled him to purchase a farm of eleven hundred acres, on which he began raising hops about 1877. He found the soil and climate well adapted to that crop and devoted about twenty-five acres to hop culture. Year by year his success increased as the result of his perseverance and industry, his capable management and his sound business judgment. He became one of the leading residents of Lane county, contributing much to its material progress and his thorough reliability in business matters gained him the high regard, good-will and confidence of all with whom he came in contact.

On October 10, 1858, Alexander C. Seavey was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Ann Blatchly, a daughter of Eben and Susan Blatchly, pioneers in Oregon, and to them were born eight children: William C.; Thomas E.; Sophronia, deceased; Alwilda, who became the wife of Jasper Wilkins, now deceased, and subsequently married Douglas Wassom, of Coburg, Oregon; Anna, the wife of Edwin Bushnell; James W., of this review; John A.; and Jesse. The mother died September 11, 1895, and the death of the father occurred January 29, 1908, and at his passing the community mourned the loss of one whose worth was widely recognized.

James W. Seavey was educated in the public schools of Lane county and spent his youthful days upon his father's farm, where he became familiar with the best methods of cultivating the crops to which he now devotes his energies. As time has passed he has improved upon the methods learned in his boyhood and is a most progressive representative of his line of business. While his father devoted about twenty-five acres to hop growing the son has increased this from time to time until he now has about five hundred and fifty acres planted to hops, producing about three thousand bales annually.

He has thus become one of the foremost producers of the northwest and makes shipments to various points throughout the entire world. His business has thus become one of notable magnitude and while bringing to Mr. Seavey prosperity, it is a source of income to others, furnishing employment to many workmen. Mr. Seavey, however, is also a large dealer in hops, doing business under the name of the J. W. Seavey Hop Company, with offices at 110 Sherlock building, Portland, Oregon, Frank S. Johnson being the partner of Mr. Seavey in this undertaking.

On March 27, 1905, James W. Seavey was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Kelly, a daughter of John Kelly, of Eugene, and they have two children, Alexander and Marcella. In 1905 Mr. Seavey erected a splendid modern residence at the corner of Sixth and Lincoln streets. He belongs to Eugene Lodge, No. 11, F. & A. M., Eugene Chapter, No. 10, R. A. M., Ivanhoe Commandery, No. 2, K. T., and Al Kader Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He also holds membership in Eugene Camp, No. 115, W. O. W. He has many friends in these organizations and is most loyal to the teachings of the societies, which are based upon the universal truth of brotherhood. In business affairs he is far-sighted, energetic and determined and carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes. His opinions concerning hop growing are accepted as authority in this part of the state and he, indeed, occupies a prominent position among the hop raisers of Lane county.

HON. CHRIS P. YATES, of Manning, Oregon, was born in Chautauqua county, New York, June 23, 1835. He enlisted in the First Colorado Cavalry as a private and served through the Civil war, being mustered out as captain and assistant surgeon. He was a member of the first constitutional convention of Colorado. Mr. Yates traveled all through South America as a special correspondent. In 1871 he came to Oregon and was connected with the Portland Telegram, the News and other papers. He was engaged in the music business until 1882, when he located on a farm in Washington county.

Mr. Yates was a delegate to the Multnomah county convention in 1876 and 1878, and the Washington county convention since 1888; he was a delegate to the state convention in 1892 and 1894, and the club meeting of 1895 and 1896. In 1890 he was appointed postmaster at Manning. Mr. Yates was elected to the legislature in Multnomah county in 1878, and in Washington county in 1894.
